So I'm going to just let this one go.

Right now, knowing the meaning of my name isn't that important anyways.

"Alright Kiri Kiri, about the 19th floor then."

Kiri Kiri is still busy licking the empty plate.

I breathe a sigh and purchase one lollipop.

"Kiri kiri, say, ah."

"Ah."

I shove a lollipop into Kiri Kiri's mouth while Kiri Kiri was saying Ah-.

And I snatch away the plate and place it in the inventory.

But since Kiri Kiri got driven away with a lollipop in its mouth, Kiri Kiri didn't seem to mind getting the plate taken away at all.

"I'm going to take that lollipop back if you dare to reply to my questions insincerely again"

"Okay. Okay."

Again, she answers with that careless tone of voice.

It was the usual, but today it was slightly worse than other days.

“So, about the 19th floor.”

“Heh. I’d say it’s better to be concerned about the upcoming floor rather than a floor you’ve already passed.”

“Well, there will be other challenger trying for 19th floor next. So I need some information for them. Plus, I am quite curious myself as well.”

Kiri Kiri smiled awkwardly, and began to talk.

“Let me guess, it’s all because of that new accident that happened right after you cleared the 19th floor, right?”

I nodded.

It’s very convenient to have an advisor who can read my mind.

“Well, even if you remove the curse, or even if you awake the God Mother, there will be absolutely no reward for that. This is completely normal, since the stage has already been cleared.”

“Then what was the point of those installations after the floor was cleared?”

“In order to observe what kind of decisions challenger would end up making even when there is no reward promised for him and to observe what type of movements he would make. It has nothing to do with stage clearing, but these are the things the Gods want to know more about. They want to see the choices challengers make, and want to see if those choices are reflective of their characteristics. They really want to know these things.”

I understand it now.

The reason why Gods oftentimes observe challengers and even gift them certain authorities is to persuade the challengers to become their apostles in the end.

So it would be great to have as many installations as possible to test challengers' characteristics.

There must have been some of those installations present in the past stages as well.

There must have been several installations hidden in each stage.

However for the 19th floor, they must have put the installation specifically to test how the challenger would react in a situation where there is no reward to be achieved.

“Unlike Hojae, other challengers do not get a change to face giant ghost figures before arriving in the village. In fact, the appearance of giant ghost figures had been triggered much earlier than it should have been, all because you were defeating too many of them too quickly. Other challengers only needed to protect Myong Myong and hold up until the God Mother was awakened by the ritual. They can either do that, or they can decide to just run away from them. Guarding Myong Myong with their lives without any promised reward for a long, long time without knowing when it would even end; now that's the objective for after the stage clear.”

“So that was the objective for that stage. I knew it; it was way too easy.”

“Eh?”

“Yeah?”

“Eh?”

“What”

“Well 19th floor was not an easy stage, at all”

Is that so.

It was way easier compared to 17th and 18th floor.

“That’s only because Hojae made the 18th floor much more difficult. And you just immediately passed the 17th floor!”

Well, now that I think about it, Kiri Kiri’s words make sense.

If there were any challenger who passed 17th floor before me, the difficulty level he faced must have been much lower than the difficulty level Lee Hyung-Jin will have to face in the future.

“Um... Then let’s talk about Myoung Myoung on the 19th floor...”

Once I started the sentence, my mind went completely blank and I forgot what I was going to say next.

“Are there any more questions regarding the 19th floor?”

Kiri Kiri’s question perplexed me.

I didn’t really have any questions left; nothing that popped up in my head.

I had no questions regarding the stage clearing strategies either.

“Well.”

“I see, you just want to chat more huh?”

I’ve already said it once, but I will have to say it twice.

It is very convenient to have an advisor who reads minds.

“Yeah. I guess.”

I admitted it.

I want to talk more about Myong Myong and Lala Lila and other people.

I want to know more about them, even though I've already passed them, even though they may not be significant to me at all anymore.

With chocolate cookie and milk laid out on the floor, I chatted with Kiri Kiri for a long while.

* * *

"It's not weird at all that you are unable to control the souls by soul collection skill. It's because soul collection is literally a skill to collect souls. In order to persuade souls, you need to ask them politely, instead of giving them some sort of orders to do certain things for you."

Is that how it is.

Then what, do I need to perform some sort of ancestral ritual with pig's blood?

"Actually that's not a bad idea at all."

Would that really work...

"Or you will have to do something to help release the souls' sorrow, or gift them something they really like, or do something they like..."

After listening to Kiri Kiri's explanation, I have to give up my original plan of actively manipulating the souls completely.

I can't really be bothered to behave like their little slave, just to be able to control some tiny little ghosts which are only good for uselessly screaming things like Kyah- and Oooh-.

"Well if you get to establish deeper friendships with them, they would grow as big as the size of your hand."

"They'd still be hard to use still. Oh well..."

I wanted to skip to next question, but Kiri Kiri stopped me.

“Wait!”

Kiri Kiri raised one hand firmly and gestured ‘stop’ just like traffic police officer, and said.

“There isn’t much quota left now. I will only receive two more important questions.”

This is the third time I have to say it today; it really is pretty damn convenient to have an advisor who can read my mind.

Kiri Kiri knew what question I would be asking next, and decided to tell me to filter them out and only ask the important ones.

“Ahem.”

Kiri Kiri put her chin up, and widened her shoulder.

“Then I would like to ask about the level up rewards. How come there are no more level up rewards, all of a sudden?”

The stats and skill level that we receive as level up rewards have been decreasing from one point, and now there are no rewards given for leveling up at all.

A level up reward was one of the ways to improve stats and skills conveniently along with stage clear rewards. Hence, it was a major issue that there is no more level up reward.

This is my current status screen.

[Lee Ho-Jae (Human)]

Lv. 40

Power : 40

Agility : 58

Health : 41

Magic : 41

Skills : Battle Concentration Lv.20 Will Power Lv.14 Arousal LV.2 Prediction Lv.9 Insight Lv.5 Race Lv.8 Covertness Lv.14 Meditation Lv.12 Detection Lv.7 Chase Lv.13 Natural Healing Lv.12 Revival Lv.5 Strengthening of sensation Lv.14 Sensation Explosion Lv.8 Energy Lv.6 Expansion of Vision Lv.4 Metal Wall Lv.2 Somatosclerosis Lv.3 Shouting of soul Lv.3 Advanced Sword Skill Lv.6 Advanced Shielding Skill Lv.2 Basic Spear Skill Lv. 8 Advanced Desmoplasty Lv.2 Basic Trapezoidectomy Lv.6 Basic Cooking Lv.6 Magical circuit Lv.16 Malice Lv.7 Wind Spirit's Blessing Lv. 5 Spirit Friendliness Lv. 2 Knowledge before Babel Time Lv. 6 Collection of Soul Lv. 9 Immune to Mental Pollution Lv. 5 Tolerance for pain Lv.3 Tolerance for bleeding. Lv. 10 Tolerance for fainting Lv.6 Tolerance for Penetration Lv.4 Tolerance for Poison Lv. 3 Tolerance for Paralysis Lv. 15 Tolerance for Fire Lv. 1 Tolerance for Cold LV. 4 Tolerance for freezing Lv. 3 Tolerance against Curse Lv. 7 Tolerance against rich magic Lv. 6 Tolerance for Nephrogenesis LV. 1 Invincibility Lv. 4 Structure Lv. 2 Ignite of Boju Lv. Max Talaria's Wings Lv. Max Collection of soul Lv. Max Lion Summoning Lv. ???

Others: God of slow has been watching you with great attention.

Ordeal from God of Slow [Achievement: 6/11]

Ordeal from God of Adventure [Achievement: 170/224]

Through training and practicing, I gained strategies to assist my improvement of skills, and which was why I was able to strengthen several skills very quickly.

However, I am unable to strengthen every single one of my skills in such short time.

There are still few skills I haven't really touched on, since it was difficult to strengthen those skills only by repetitive practices.

That's why I needed the level up rewards: in order to strengthen those skills which I haven't really been able to touch on quite yet.

“I will explain it briefly this time.”

Kiri Kiri usually shortens the sentences when she talks about expensive information.

Kiri Kiri explained to me previously that it is so to provide me as much information while using keywords, which uses the limited amount of allowed quota more efficiently.

“They are not completely gone. It’s just that your improvement has already caught up with the systems’ physical layout. But there is no need to feel sad about it. Because it also means that you have already received everything you could possibly receive on your current level. Now you just need to obtain your current status before reaching the next standard, Level 51.”

“Alright, so it means that I won’t be getting any level up rewards before reaching the level 51. Then can I receive them after level 51?”

Kiri Kiri scratched her chin, and pondered.

“In a normal case, yes. When you reached over level 51, you will receive level up rewards ONLY if your standards don’t exceed the next standard line”

The next standard line.

51th level was the first line, so I think the next line must be 101th level.

It is kind of impossible for me to estimate what improvements in my status would happen by that time.

“Alright. Then next question, I need advice on the 20th floor”

After awfully struggling on the 18th floor, I have decided that it’d be a good idea to listen to Kiri Kiri’s advice on the next floors.

Even though I am successfully clearing the stages without confronting any critical danger, there is a huge difference between able to be aware of types of traps that are waiting on the next stage, compared to having absolutely no information at all.

“Even for Hojae, this stage will be quite challenging.”

“Oh, really?”

My heart begun to race faster as soon as I heard the word ‘hard’.

“Because the next stage requires a party play. Maximum 6 players.”

Ohhh!

Oh Oh!

My racing heart has begun to pound harder.

As if my heart was doused in oil, my expectation for 20th floor blew up instantly.

It is a first stage that requires a party play since the 11th floor.

Have I improved enough?

Would I be stuck just like I was on the 6th floor, or would I be able to overcome the barrier? I really can’t control my excitement.

“Heh..... I wasn’t expecting this kind of reaction.”

Kiri Kiri awkwardly smiled.

“My advice for 20th floor is to watch your back. It is not a stage that messes with your head, so don’t worry. And I think it’s time to drink some potions.

* * *

[Welcome to the waiting room of the 20th floor.]

I take the potions out of the inventory and lay them out on the floor as Kiri Kiri advised me to.

Potions that I've received from Juji, potions that I've received as rewards from various competitions, and the potions I've received from the God Mother are laid out in front of me.

Now that I lay it all out, there are quite a lot of potions that I've collected so far.

I am debating between whether I should drink all these potions now immediately, or later on after processing the situation.

I was in such agony for a short while, but then I finally decided to postpone the potions drinking to later.

It may be possible to clear the 20th floor without drinking any potions anyways.

[Kim Min-Hyuk, 30th floor : Yo. Are you alive? Why haven't you texted me?]

[Lee Ho-Jae, 20th floor : Of course I'm alive.]

I received Kim Min-Hyuk's first text in awhile.

The busy schedules in the beginning of each stage must have passed.

We chatted for awhile, since we haven't caught up with each other for such a long time.

[Kim Min-Hyuk, 30th floor : Min has entered the 89th floor.]

Park Min, an Easy level challenger.

Besides Lee Chan-Yong who is dead now, Park Min is the challenger who has reached the highest floor.

Park Min has entered the 89th floor, which Lee Chan-Yon was stuck on.

The 89th floor is an easy level stage that has nothing to do with me; however it felt strangely relevant to me.

There is a resemblance between myself who was stuck on the 6th floor and Lee Chan-Young who was daunted on the 89th floor.

I truly feel sorry for him.

[Kim Min-Hyuk, 30th floor : I am worried. Will everybody be okay?]

[Lee Ho-Jae, 20th floor : Everybody will do great. I hope they will. Please tell them to do well. I'm going to enter the stage now.]

[Kim Min-Hyuk, 30th floor : Okay. Text me later.]

After wishing Park-Min a good luck, I began my new challenge as well.

“Move.”

[Welcome to the 20th stage]

Chapter 142

Tutorial 20th Floor (2)

[Member(s) available for party recruitment (1/1)]

- Lee Ho Jae

[Current Party Member (1/6)]

1. Lee Ho Jae

[Would you like to enter?]

Before entering the 20th stage which requires a 6 man party, a message popped up to confirm my decision once again.

“Yes.”

Why do they even bother to ask? It's just me anyways.

Actually, the decision confirmation message pops up before entering any stage.

However, I feel strangely chagrined when I see a confirmation message before entering a stage that requires a party play.

It's humiliating.

Oh well, but I guess it's okay since it's been awhile anyways.

[Welcome to the 20th floor stage.]

[Trial number 19, Date 16th, Time 15:00]

I entered the 20th stage right at 3 o' clock.

The 20th stage is located at the top of the castle fortress, which was built on top of the mountain.

Recently, stages have been located in areas with fantastic views of natural landscapes.

First of all, this fortress is magnificent.

This fortress contains very firm and tall walls.

And this fortress reminds me of those unrealistic fortresses which are likely to appear in fantasy movies like Lord of the Rings, rather than any actual existing fortresses built on Earth.

Actually, never mind, there wouldn't be any giant fortress built on top of the mountain like this, even in Lord of the Rings.

Who are they kidding? Logically speaking, how can anybody be able to build any castle on top of such high mountain like this?

However, that sort of nonsensical building exists right here.

I don't have any knowledge regarding war strategies or sieges. However, I am able to assume that this fortress was built in order to fight against larger number of enemies easily, even with smaller number of allied forces.

The enemies could easily die climbing the steep mountain, they could die from getting hit by weapons flying around, or they could easily die from stumbling and falling down.

Even if you somehow successfully make your way up until you reach a castle wall, the wall is too high to climb up.

Unless you have the ability to fly, it seems impossible to be able to conquer this fortress with only ground forces.

Second of all, my location is very important.

If I were summoned anywhere near the fortress, then the 20th floor clear objective might have been conquering the fortress.

But I was summoned on top of the fortress wall.

A message popped up.

[The 20th floor gateway begins.]

Explanation: The red mountain where the great Go-Ryoung had lived for a long, long time, no longer has a master.

All that is left in this red mountain is the dwarfs protecting the great Go-Ryoung's only inheritance.

The Trilogy alliance wants to take possession of the great Go-Ryoung's inheritance, in order to gain an advantage over the empire in the war.

However, all thanks to a long-lasting ill-fated relationship between the dwarfs and the Trilogy alliance, the Trilogy alliance decided to attack the fortress and plunder great Go-Ryoung's inheritance instead of convincing the dwarfs to hand it over.

Help the dwarfs and protect Go-Ryoung's inheritance.

The Trilogy alliance's attack will start on the day 2.

[Condition of Stage Clear]

1. Defend Trilogy alliance's attack for 11 days.
2. Protect Go-Ryoung's inheritance from Trilogy alliance.

It's a simple stage.

I like it very much.

Yes, this is it.

This is what every tutorial stage should be.

I activated my magic power to skim through the fortress and its surroundings.

There are no enemies approaching toward the fortress yet.

There are none that could get away without me noticing it, at least.

Then first I shall begin to chat at ease.

I turn my head to the sound of footsteps coming from behind.

It's one of the dwarfs who have been watching me for a while now.

Other dwarfs have been looking at me from far away, yet only one among them walk toward me.

When I first heard the name 'dwarf', I was somewhat imagining a species like hobbits or halflings that appear in fantasy novels.

However, the dwarfs in front of my eyes had something different compared to that of my imagination.

“H.”

“H?”

“...E.”

“What?”

First of all, they are a bit strange.

“...L.”

“...”

“...LO.”

...If I put together all those slowly mumbled words, it becomes ‘Hello’.

The fact that they have successfully spoken a word, even when they only obtain language skill from before the Babel time was truly impressive, more so than the fact that such species that speaks like this exists.

“You...”

“Yes, me what.”

“Too...”

God damn it. They are weirder than I thought.

It's not only that they speak in such weird manner.

It's also that, the dwarf who was speaking in front of me, and all the other dwarfs in my sight share one trait.

They all look exactly the same.

As if they were all identical twins.

And there are more than hundreds of dwarfs in front of my eyes right now.

They can't possibly be all identical twins.

“H...”

I figured it would be at least twenty times more efficient to zone out than to listen carefully to each word they speak slowly.

Not only were their facial appearances identical, but their physical frames were also identical, as if they were some sort of artificial life forms that have been cloned.

To be honest I feel uncomfortable.

I activated my magical power, and observe dwarfs' bodies more carefully.

It was a huge discourtesy; however they don't seem to be offended by it at all.

After a while, I drew a conclusion.

They are all the same person.

Whether they are all one's alter ego, or an artificial robot, or some sort of doll or I don't know what exactly.

Maybe it has something to do with that great Go-Ryoung.

When my train of thought reached that point, the dwarf standing in front of me had spoken quite a lot of words.

When I put all those words together, it becomes the following sentence.

'I am fine. You are fine as well. You speak. Speak about your relationship with Trilogy.'

I couldn't be sure if whether the simplicity of the sentence structure was due to their lack of intellectual capacity, or if it was in order to save some time since they spoke terribly badly.

"I am... Trilogy's..."

"Fas..."

I was speaking in the same manner as the dwarfs, slowly but obviously faster than them, but one dwarf cut me off.

I stopped speaking to listen to him in order to see what sort of important message he was trying to tell me.

“Ter...”

Faster?

“Spe...”

Faster Spe?

“Ak...”

...They are telling me to speak faster.

Well, shit...

Sigh. I will let this one go.

There may be some valid reason behind why they speak so slowly like that anyways.

I decided to speak faster as they've wished.

“I am not connected to Trilogy alli-.”

“if...”

“...I am not connected to Trilogy alliance, and I am their enemy.”

“it's...”

God damn it.

They not only have problems in speaking but also in hearing.

Either that or they had some sort of obsessive-compulsive disorder about completing the sentence that has already begun.

“Oh...”

I feel like something is burning inside of me.

Wow, my mental contamination immunity skill level might advance if I continue to listen to this.

“Kay...”

Okay my ass.

“I am irreverent to Trilogy alliance, and I am their enemy. I will help defend against their attack, and I will protect the inheritance of the great Go-Ryoung.”

I was planning to furtively ask about the inheritance of Go-Ryoung after establishing a deeper friendship with the dwarfs.

If the dwarfs were planning on hiding the existence of the inheritance or something, then there is a chance of my relationship with them going awry.

But because I felt awfully cramped in having this conversation with the dwarfs, I ended up spilling everything I had to say at once.

“T...”

The dwarf began to reply.

I zoned out again, while listening to his reply that will obviously take a long, long time again.

Yet I have no problem understanding his reply at all.

The objective of the 20th floor stage is to protect the Go-Ryoung's inheritance that the dwarves have been protecting against the Trilogy alliance.

I considered the 20th floor stage to be perfectly doable when I learned about the existence of the allies and when I looked at the tall fortress build on top of the mountain.

Of course I still have no idea what the Trilogy alliance is like, not yet.

Therefore I thought it would be okay to engage in this stage without having to drink any potions.

That was my hasty judgment.

I would be much better off drinking potions to carry this whole thing alone by myself, rather than trusting these little things as my allies.

When my thought process reached until this point, the dwarf had made quite some progress.

“Trilogy’s enemy, our friend”

It must mean that the Trilogy’s enemy is their friend.

Since the dwarf didn’t finish his sentence yet, I continued to think about other things.

I will ask them to show me the inheritance of Go-Ryoung as soon as this conversation is over.

After knowing the location of the inheritance and structure of the fortress I shall make a basic defensive plan.

Fortunately the dwarfs don’t seem to have any problems in moving, even though they had some obvious deficiency in communication.

It would be possible to defend to some extent even if they only roll down several stones and rocks from the top of the wall while I fight the Trilogy alliance at the front lines.

In the meantime I really have to drink and absorb the potions.

The plan was neat.

However I had doubts about the feasibility of the plan.

They said that the Trilogy alliance's attack will begin on the day 2.

I was wondering why their attack would begin on the 2nd day, rather than on the first day of stage entrance, but now I know why.

There was no guarantee that I would be able to completely finish conversing with the dwarfs and drink the potions before today is over.

It will take up an entire evening just to talk about Go-Ryoung's inheritance and to have a look around the fortress.

Hah.

A sigh slipped out of my mouth.

If I combine the words that dwarf said up to this point, it becomes a sentence like this.

‘Trilogy's enemy, is our friend. Let's protect the great Go-Ryoung's inheritance together. We welcome your vi.’

They must mean that they welcome my visit.

Convincing the dwarfs was way easier than I thought it would be.

Honestly speaking, I have no clue about why the dwarfs got convinced so easily.

I think it's only logical to be on guard when you see a stranger who appeared in fortress out of nowhere all of a sudden in a sensitive time like this.

Or maybe they are letting it pass without thinking much, simply because they are too dumb.

A man appeared in fortress in the right timing because of the Tutorial's stage. Maybe they are programmed to maintain an amicable relationship with the challengers.

If that's not the case, maybe they have discovered something in me that was trustworthy enough, or they have a substantial clue to be assured that I am not part of Trilogy's alliance.

And if that's not the case either, maybe they're pretending to accept it while planning on stabbing me in the back afterwards.

There are several possibilities.

But for now I lack information regarding the relationship between dwarfs and Trilogy alliance.

Let's come back to this later.

* * *

Things went smoother than I thought it would.

By things, I meant the conversation with the dwarfs.

The dwarfs who welcomed me had stopped talking.

That was a very positive piece of news.

They handed me a bundle of paper instead.

The bundle of paper consisted of a map of surrounding areas and an operational plan in preparation for siege warfare.

The map contained a detailed presentation of the geographic features of the fortress itself and its surrounding areas.

It even contained the location of the Trinity Alliance's camp.

The operational plan explained their organization of forces and structure of the fortress and how to utilize its defensive facilities.

I would have to analyze how they'd be able to defend themselves against the enemy's attack based on this operational plan, and then I would have to assign myself an appropriate role.

They ushered me into a small room inside the fortress after checking those bundles of paper.

The dwarfs led me into the room and told me to use it as my lodging, then disappeared after telling me that they would come pick me up before the dinner time.

Thankfully the dwarfs weren't dumb in the head.

There is a great barrier in communication, but they were acknowledging it themselves, and they were even trying to make up for their defect with other methods.

I must say, it is a very positive thing.

Well, then.

My task from now on is to read the map and operational plan once again very carefully, and to obtain any necessary information, in addition to organizing all the questions I want to ask the dwarfs before the dinner time, and to assign myself an appropriate role for the war that will begin tomorrow.

And last but not least, I need to drink some potions.

That's about it for now.

The first thing for me to do is to drink some potions.

I activated my magical power and activated detection skill.

I sensed a few existences around me, but they weren't close enough to be threatening.

[Collection of Soul]

[Number of Soul Collected : 211659]

I summon thirty souls.

[Kyaak-]

“Hey. Shush.”

Even though one’s scream was only as noisy as a kitten’s purring, when thirty of them begin to scream at the same time it becomes very tumultuous.

“Sorry to ask, but could you possibly protect the environs of this room? Guard against anyone coming inside.”

Of course they didn’t even bother to listen to my words.

“Alright, then how about just protecting the front door?”

Rather than listening to me, the souls were trying to find something while roaming around me.

I know what that behavior indicates.

They are looking for Myong Myong, who is supposed to be nearby me.

Unfortunately, they won’t get to meet Myong Myong around me anymore.

I even pulled out a candle, sundae (pig’s gut), liver and etc. from the inventory and tried praying to them, but they still refused to follow my words at all.

In the end, I gave up and sent the souls back.

I wanted to have more definite security, even though my surroundings were pretty safe, and there is no reason for the dwarfs to be hostile at me.

Because it becomes awfully troublesome if someone were to attack me while I am absorbing potions.

Potion that can force the enhancement of the stat is not a simple nutritional supplement.

Outstanding magic circulation skills and intense concentration is required in order to wholly absorb its entire efficacy.

Even if a marauder were to appear, I can still stop absorbing the potion and deal with them, but that would decrease the efficacy of the potion.

But rather than any attack, the dwarfs' simple visit to say hello would be more unbearable, because I would have to forcefully stop the absorption and stand up.

Even if I don't stand up, I need to open my mouth at least in order to turn the visitor away.

There is only one thing that can secure my safety at this point.

[Summon Soul]

An uncomfortable magical spell swirled up in the room, and a healthy lizard over 2 meters tall was summoned into this tiny room.

With a long spear on its back and a tail that was thicker than my thighs, it made this small room feel even smaller than it already is.

However I was delighted rather than discomforted by it.

Honestly speaking, I was waiting for the right moment to use my soul summoning skill.

For the pretext for using the skill, to be exact.

“Long time no see, Iddy.”

“Kerk. To be honest I have no idea how much time has passed since the last time we saw each other. But hey, long time no see, hubby.”

Chapter 143

Tutorial 20th Floor (3)

After looking around and securing the safety, Iddy said hi.

“Kerk. Long time no see, hubby.”

“I told you not to call me hubby.”

“Kerk, Kerk. I see that you are finally ready to accept me, now that you have summoned me in this tiny room. Thankfully, the bed is large enough. Do you prefer a son or a daughter?”

Instead of going along with Iddy’s word, I aimed for Iddy’s head with Thousand Arms.

Iddy tilted her head, and easily avoided my attack.

“Kerk. Commander, you are still such a shy boy.”

Iddy laughed momentarily, and asked me.

“Commander, is this place safe?”

“For now yes. It’s an ally’s base. Can’t be completely sure yet though.”

“I see. Well, if you have time, I would appreciate a detailed explanation of the situation. Kerk.”

I explained the situation in great detail, as Iddy requested, about detailed setting of this stage and the objective I had to accomplish.

“Do you know about the dwarfs by any chance?”

“Kerk. Dwarf is a broad term any short humanlike race. Are there any other particularly special features?”

Of course, there is one extremely particularly special feature.

I told Iddy about a particular feature of the dwarfs I’ve met.

“Kerk. Kerk. We will end up meeting the breed that is normally very hard to find.”

“You know about those dwarfs?”

“Of course. Kerk. First of all, you mustn’t call them dwarfs in front of them.”

“Yeah? Then what should I call them?”

“Dragon Soldiers.”

Dragon Soldiers?

The dragon soldiers I was familiar with are definitely not one of those dwarfs with speech impediments.

It’s awfully different to what I’ve imagined in my head.

When I told her of my impression, Iddy laughed once again.

“Of course. Dragon soldiers are a great being in its existence itself. There is no way that they would be called the dwarfs.”

Then what the heck are they?

“They are not exactly dragon soldiers, but dragon soldier wannabes?”

“Correct. Essentially, they share identical process of birth with dragon soldiers. Same creator too. Of course they’re only identical in a way that a lizard man and a crow both come out of eggs.”

“Hmm... Then what are they called usually? Ah, like when they are not listening.”

“You said it yourself. They are called the dwarfs.”

Iddy said that “dwarf” is a broad term to indicate any short humanlike race.

So I guess that means those dwarfs don’t even have an exact title for identifying themselves.

Except for the title of ‘dragon soldier,’ which is only used by them.

“Kerk. They are naturally created to serve the dragon. It’s just like one of those electronic cleaning machines or laundry machines that you’ve told me about once in the past.”

[PR Note: I think what the author means is that they are born into serving the dragon race.]

I guess he meant the vacuum cleaner or the washing machine.

I’ve briefly explained modern civilization once; it was a while ago when I was living in the cave with Iddy on the 12th floor.

Especially the ones related to housework.

“Then they must be pretty damn useless in battle.”

“Obviously. Kerk.”

I really have to drink the potions, for real now.

I announced my intention and asked Iddy to protect the room while I’m absorbing the potion.

“Kerk. Got it. But hey, if you planned such a thing, wouldn’t it have been better if you drank it somewhere safer before coming here?”

I silently rolled my eyes.

I didn't know what to say.

"Kerk. Kerk. You've become such a softie, Commander."

I had to agree with her.

Instead of giving some nonsensical excuse, I admitted it.

I have become such a softie; I've become too complacent.

It takes me longer to make a decision when I need to, and those calls are not as good as they used to be.

Even I am aware of it.

* * *

I've spent my afternoon absorbing the potions nonstop and familiarize myself with the new buffs.

"Kerk. Are we finished now?"

"No, not quite yet. Even though I've finished absorbing its power, my body still needs some time. I will be able to adjust the effects by the time the battle starts tomorrow."

"Kerk. Wouldn't it be much better to just completely finish everything before the battle begins?"

"My ability of merit dramatically increases in crisis."

"Kerk. Kerk."

Iddy laughed wildly.

Well, what can I do; it's the truth.

While I was chatting with Iddy in the room, one of the dwarfs opened the door and came in.

Do they not know how to knock?

The dwarf eyes were about to pop out when he saw Iddy, but he started to say something regardless.

“Li.....”

Ah, here it comes again.

“Zar...”

Eddie didn't even bother to let the dwarf finish his sentence and began to reply.

“Kerk. That's right. I am a lizard man. I didn't sneak in; this commander here has summoned me, so don't you worry.”

“D...”

“I am also very pleased to meet one of dragon's descendants. Oh, it's dinner time already.”

“Man.....”

What the heck is happening?

“Iddy, is it really okay to rumble by yourself like that?”

“Kerk. Kerk. I knew it, you are not really able to understand their words because you don't have the interpretation skill. Kerk. It's hard to explain.”

“What do you mean by that?”

“It.....”

“Their first and second syllables usually contain most of the meaning.”

“Is...”

Huh?

“So... does that mean that when he mumbled “Li” at first, it contained the meaning of ‘Oh, it is a Lizard man. What are you doing here? How did you enter here?’”

Iddy affirmed my thoughts.

“That’s correct. Kerk. And the words that come next are usually meaningless ramblings.”

“Din...”

Can someone turn this radio off from rambling!

The slow words the dwarf threw here and there in the middle of my conversation with Iddy were getting on my nerves.

“So the first syllabus contains all the meaning, and the rest has no meaning at all, but I’ve been interpreting it incorrectly by putting all the syllables together to form one sentence?”

“Ner...”

“That’s correct. You understand things very quickly, commander. Kerk. Kerk.”

“But how come they use such inefficient way of speaking?”

“Me.....”

“The language of dragons usually functions like that.”

“The language of dragons... I see... they copy the language of dragons.”

Now it's completely understandable why the 'knowledge before the time of Babel' skill is unable to interpret the dragon language properly and got confused instead.

I am not sure if it's due to my low skill level concerning the knowledge before Babel time, or if it's due to the limitation of the skill itself. Despite its fancy name, it is actually completely impractical at all.

First of all, it's unable to understand language of Lune, which is considered a very basic language of magic, and there were lots of words among ancient languages that 16th floor castle guard was saying that I couldn't quite guess the meaning.

I was unable to interpret any dialect or slang the guard was using in the conversation.

"Al..."

"Then, how come you are able to understand them?"

"Kerk. I am a Lizard man. Of course I know some basics of dragon language."

Alright, I see some relevance here.

Dragon or Lizard man or Lizard... Well they're all similar to each other so it makes sense.

"Is..."

"Commander, do you know the location of the dining room?"

I nodded.

I've confirmed the location of the dining room on the fortress' internal map.

"Then, let's head to the dining room. They say the dinner is ready and they're waiting for you.”

“Rea...”

So that's what the dwarf has been constantly babbling about.

“Sure. Let's go.”

We got out of the room to head toward the dining room, while the dwarf followed us from behind.

“Dy...”

Of course he didn't forget to continue rambling.

* * *

If there is a language hell on earth, this place is it.

Any linguists with their right minds will agree with me; there are no doubts about that.

The big dining room where about two hundreds of dwarfs were dining was literally chaos.

“Li... Za...”

“By...”

“Rd... Man...”

“The...”

“Long..... Time..... No...”

“Way...”

A bunch of them were speaking like that in the same place at the same time, and I couldn't understand any of their ramblings.

Even worse, a few of them were babbling inconsistently while eating, I had no clue of what they were trying to say.

So I gave up trying to have a conversation, and let Iddy take care of it, while I only focused on my meal.

Dwarfs' food consisted mainly of vegetables.

It wasn't tasty.

"Wouldn't dragons get upset if this kind of food was being served to them?"

I whispered to Iddy's ear while she was chatting with the dwarfs.

Just in case the dwarfs gets angry by hearing this.

"Kerk. Dragon doesn't eat food. I heard there's no problem even if they don't ingest any food."

Having no problems without eating food is different from being unable to eat.

I bet the dragon refuses to eat it, since they serve this kind of food.

I didn't say it out loud, not even to Iddy.

Just in case the dwarf overhear, since there's a high chance they'll get very angry.

"Kerk. And they have decided to show us the inheritance of Go-Ryoung, after we finish our meal."

"Oh, Yes. Good to hear."

"And I've told them that you absolutely love today's dinner very much."

That was such an unnecessary thing to do.

“They were asking me what was wrong, since you were menacingly scowling, so I told them you usually make that kind of face when you eat delicious food.”

Damn...

I had nothing to say to that, since it was my fault for making such a facial expression while they served the food in the first place.

* * *

After finishing dinner, we followed the dwarfs to check out the inheritance of Go-Ryoung.

Since all the dwarfs looked identical, I couldn't tell the difference between one and another, but the one who is leading us right now is apparently the one who chatted with me this morning.

Well, I had nothing to comment on that really.

“That...”

The dwarf started to babble about something again, but I didn't have to be bothered to care since Iddy could take care of it.

Even the dwarfs seem to feel more comfortable communicating with Iddy instead of me.

I see that it has been a fabulous decision to summon Iddy; thanks to her, interpreting has become so much easier.

When I told her this, Iddy scolded at me.

“Kerk. You finally find the justification for summoning me, just now?”

Oh well.

I was surprised by her reaction, which was sharper than I expected.

“Kerk. Kerk. I like you but you are too slow-witted.”

Just like how she said how I’m slow witted, I couldn’t figure out why I felt offended by her words.

So I just kept my mouth shut, unable to say anything.

We reached the back side of the fortress after walking silently for awhile.

There was a small hall hidden behind the castle wall.

There was a necklace floating in the air in the middle of the empty hall.

Is that some sort of ancient sorcery?

“That must be the inheritance from the dragon?”

“Kerk. It seems like it. They say they cannot reveal the detailed history behind that necklace though.”

I don’t think it matters that much to know the effects or the necklace’s worth anyways.

I only need to protect it from Trilogy alliance.

“Then, Iddy, could you ask them if you could stay here and protect the necklace?”

“Me? Wouldn’t it be better if I fight at the front lines?”

“No, because I was informed to watch my back. Our priority is protecting that necklace. Since there is a possibility of marauders coming from the back side, I want you to protect it.”

The dwarfs readily approved of it.

They said, besides Iddy, they would place bunch of other dwarfs there to strengthen its defenses.

Of course, Iddy translated their words for me.

After finishing the tasks that for the day, I returned to my lodging.

I sat on the edge of my bed, and organized my thoughts.

There was nothing that seemed unstable, or which seemed like a trap.

The defense plan was very thorough, and there was no discord with the dwarfs.

This stage seems to purely be a stage where I defend an object.

However, I thought the fact that the dwarfs have been showing such complete trust toward me and Iddy were a little odd.

I mean, Iddy can be persuasive since she is related to them in terms of genealogy, but it was a bit suspicious that they trusted me so easily.

“What’s your thought on this?”

“Kerk. I don’t know. To be honest how should I know what kind of people the dwarfs of dragon are? I only know that they are dragon soldier wannabes, and that they refuse to accept what they were assigned at birth to become. Moreover, since I have no knowledge about the Trilogy alliance, I won’t be able to suspect anything.”

“I see.”

“Just don’t lower you guard, and let’s collect more information. Kerk. When the battle begins tomorrow, we’ll be able to figure something out after knowing more about the Trilogy.”

In the end, Iddy offered the exact same conclusion as the one I drew in the morning by myself.

Even though it was a same conclusion, somehow Eddie's words gave me more confidence.

I felt relieved.

I spent the night chatting about things with Iddy, instead of getting a good night's sleep.

Iddy and I are both unable to sleep easily in places where our safety isn't guaranteed.

We chatted mostly about what happened to me during my journey from the 13th floor to the 20th floor, after we had our farewells.

While I was Iddy telling stories, I got to uncover some thoughts I was unaware of.

While Iddy listened to me, she often complimented me, or she quietly comforted me.

Iddy makes me feel like I'm home.

Chapter 144

Tutorial 20th Floor (4)

[Trial 19th, Date 17, Time 10:10]

The second day's morning sun has just risen.

I've just spent the whole entire night chatting with Idy all night long; we ended up watching the sunrise through the window this morning.

We had a simple breakfast in our room.

Of course, Idy didn't cook; we just ate whatever leftover food I could find in my inventory.

It tasted way better than the shitty food the dwarfs served us last night anyway.

And I could enjoy the food even more this time since I could eat it in a quiet room with Idy, rather than in a noisy dining room full of dwarfs babbling endlessly.

Minutes after we just finished our breakfast, one of the dwarfs entered the room.

“Cas...”

“They are watching the Trilogy's advance from the castle wall. We better go now, commander.”

“Alright, let's go.”

* * *

Just like message said, on the second day morning, the Trilogy finally showed themselves as they approached the castle to attack.

I went to the fortress wall with Idy to take a look.

The dwarfs were all lined up by the castle's battlements.

I could see quite an enormous number of dwarfs; there were more than I thought there were.

It seems like there are at least five hundred of them.

Idy started a conversation with a dwarf in a commander uniform, and while they were talking, I took a look down the castle wall.

There was nothing down there.

I even activated my magic power, but I couldn't sense a single enemy standing nearby.

Idy had just finished the conversation with the dwarf as she made her way towards me.

"There is nothing! And it doesn't seem like anyone is hiding at all either," I said to Idy.

"Keruk. Keruk. Commander, you're looking at the wrong place. Of course they're not near the castle wall. Right there, take a look there."

Idy pointed to a flat field in the valleys.

The field was filled with... something.

When I looked more carefully, I began to realize that what I thought was just a plain flat field was in fact slowly inching forward, little by little.

Since it was very far away from where we were and it occupied such a large area, I misperceived it to be just a normal, flat field.

There were two good things about this.

“Well, at least it will take them quite a long time until they finally reach up here.”

This fortress was built on the peak of an extremely high mountain.

They will take at least one or two hours for them to climb up the steep terrain.

“Keruk. It takes the dwarfs 4 full days with their walking speed apparently. But they told me that they don’t know much about the enemy’s walking speed.”

The next good point was this.

“Have you been notified of their numbers?”

“Keruk. Even the dwarfs don’t know that. It’s easier to assume that it’s almost infinite.”

It was just as the dwarfs had said.

They had a ridiculously large army that even I had mistaken as a field, or at least that’s how they look from this fortress on top of the mountain.

It would be easier to assume that an endless amount of army is coming towards us, rather than attempting to estimate their exact numbers.

Not too bad.

Actually, it’s very good.

“Keruk. Don’t smile like that. The dwarfs are whispering now that you’ve just lost your shit because you got too scared.”

Lost my shit? That’s hella funny.

I don't care about the dwarfs' opinion.

The only thing that matters to me now is my bubbling excitement for the arrival of the massive army.

"All that's left for me to figure out is about what kind of 'things' they are."

Since it was too far away, I couldn't quite observe it with my eyes.

It will take me a while until they come in close enough for me to personally scrutinize them.

"Keruk. Here you are, commander. This is a telescope the dwarfs gave me."

It seems like the dwarfs are very technically advanced.

I didn't expect them to have such advanced technology.

The telescope Idy handed over to me was slightly longer than a meter.

And this telescope was of a very high quality.

Maybe even too high quality.

I should not say a single word regarding their technology ever again.

I could adjust my field of vision by using my mana to zoom in or out; it was a very easy and simple telescope to operate, surprisingly so.

When I maximized my output of magical power, I could finally see each one of the enemies walking through the mountains in surprising detail.

The appearance of the enemy that was finally revealed to my eyes was much more bizarre than I expected it to be.

"Keruk. I feel like my breakfast is coming back up."

Idy mumbled after looking at the enemies' appearances with the telescope.

Honestly though, they do have a look that could make Idy's breakfast travel back up her throat.

I couldn't find a single one that had normal body parts, no matter how hard I looked for it.

Their body reminded me of a collection of rags on the verge of falling apart. Their bodies consisted of randomly mismatched body parts placed in the strangest of places.

Their facial features were distributed unevenly and bizarrely, their inner organs were sticking out of their bodies and actively pumping, and some were walking with hands attached to their lower body instead of legs. They were even holding weapons with their legs, which were attached to their shoulder, instead of hands.

And there were few that had actual human heads.

The others mostly had animal or monster.

Maybe they took those inner organs or body parts away from other monsters and attached it to themselves.

Only one name popped up in my head at first glance.

"Chimera?"

"Keruk. That's right. They're chimeras. Now I understand what they meant by the name 'Trilogy', Keruk."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Dark, Red, and Blue; the three moons."

What the heck is that is what I'm asking.

“It is a symbol for the worst of the worst dark magicians that existed in earth history. Three different-colored moons symbolize the three evils that granted them the ability to use dark magic and taught them how to use it. They were like the death guards of dark magicians.

“Wr...”

One dwarf cut us off.

“Hmm... I see.”

Idy mumbled after hearing unexpected words from the dwarf.

“Commander, the dwarfs had just told me that they are not black magicians; they’re just an army of monsters created by the black magicians. Apparently, the black magicians who created them were executed by the empire more than 100 years ago. I guess that’s a relief for us, knowing that there is no magician among them.”

“But there are too many of them to believe that the magicians do not even exist any longer. That must mean that they have been maintaining that number since over 100 years ago without their creators.”

“Tha...”

“...According to this dwarf... Umm...”

“What is it?”

“The chimeras have a special function allowing them to reproduce. And at a frightening rate too.”

I guess the black magicians who were executed by the empire have left not only just artificial monsters behind, but a rare achievement on earth’s history before they died.

I wasn’t an expert on black magic, but even I could tell that their piece of work was truly extraordinary.

Reproduction, huh.

I mean, look at them; they don't look like they could have genitals, not to mention a sex drive.

It's impressive how they've been increasing their numbers independently without the black magicians' orders.

That must mean that they possess intellect to some extent.

I guess that's why they're invading our territory to steal the dragons' inheritance.

The black magicians' inheritances are surviving by increasing their numbers through reproduction and are now trying to steal dragon's inheritance.

It's an interesting setting.

“Keruk. Keruk.”

Idy laughed awkwardly beside me.

It really did look like her breakfast was climbing back up her throat.

“...Truly disgusting indeed. Keruk.”

I agree.

Their appearances are truly gruesome.

And it's such a pity that this is their normal and healthy appearance.

I could sympathize to that.

I have witnessed something terrible.

Idy's facial expression was full of aversion, disgust and dismay.

Well, I couldn't sympathize to that.

Of course, those chimeras are such beings that trigger sadness and pity just simply through their disgusting appearance.

I get that.

That's why I could understand if anyone were to feel horrible just by taking a look at their appearance, or feel pity or compassion towards them having such sad life.

But Idy's expression showed something more than that.

"I'd rather throw up. It's the first time ever in my life I have had to see such dirty creatures. Keruk. And that number, oh my gosh."

I looked again.

"Dir..."

"Fu..."

"T... Y..."

"Ck..."

"Ki... Me..."

I witnessed the Dwarfs swearing at chimeras.

I couldn't find any significant difference between the Dwarfs and chimera.

To me, I harbored the same feelings of pity and aversion towards them.

Of course they were notably different on the outside.

The dwarfs were short, but they all had normal human face.

They were completely different with chimeras, whose body were parts dangling around all over the place along with the blood stains on the skins.

But really, you shouldn't badmouth someone based on how they look on the outside, just because they happen to have many scars and some deep blood stains.

At least, I cannot do that.

If that's the case, there wouldn't be any creature any more hideous than myself.

If it weren't for the Elixir potion and the waiting room's healing effect, I would have ended up with an appearance and facial features like the chimeras.

Moreover, the bloods, the inner organs, the cut body parts flying around were something that felt very familiar to me at this point, to the point where they can't bother me anymore.

I guess that's why I don't find the chimeras' appearances to be too shocking for me.

And if I put the obvious visual defects aside, it's very hard for me to significantly differentiate the chimeras and the dwarfs.

It seems to me that the dwarfs, who all share the same face, same physical frame, same magical ability, same behavior, and the same characteristics, are a more uncomfortable creature to be around than the chimeras.

Lacking individuality is a greater fault than lacking body parts.

I wonder how they interpret the definition of self-esteem.

As my thoughts trailed on, I heard a loud noise echoing from somewhere far below me.

Millions of chimeras had begun to run towards the mountaintop.

Their heavy footsteps sounded like a ferocious thunderstorm.

Finally, the battle was about to officially begin; all my distracting thoughts disappeared into a smoke, left only with anticipation for the battle.

I wonder how long this battle will take.

I personally want it to last all day long, and even all through the night.

I have a feeling that those chimeras won't complain about darkness in the night at all, after all.

I assumed their vision would be equally bad in the bright daylight anyway.

“Are you going already?”

“Yes. I want to get a feel of the field until the enemies finally reach anywhere near the fortress.”

Even though the chimeras were climbing the mountain at an extraordinary speed, it still seemed like it will take them at least few hours.

The chimeras were running in a straight line towards the fortress, crossing very steep mountain hills.

It would be extremely convenient for me if I could kill them all by myself before they reached the fortress, but it would be an unrealistic goal since they have such huge army.

I better think of some other strategy to reduce their numbers.

“Keruk. Then I better head to the back side.”

“Alright. See you after the battle ends.”

“Keruk. Keruk. Just don’t get hurt, commander.”

After hearing Idy’s farewell, I jumped off from the fortress wall.

[Talaria’s Wings]

I spread my wings and began to fly.

After a short flight, I deactivated Talaria’s Wings and dropped to the ground.

The dwarfs had told me that it takes them 3 days to climb up the mountain by foot.

However, it would only take me 10 minutes to fly over to where chimeras are right now.

In such viciously hilly terrain like this, my mobility skills reach their peak potential.

Now, if I have such outstanding mobility, do I really need to wait until they come to me while I stand here?

No. Of course not. I have to go annoy them to hell.

* * *

The chimeras were a lot noisier when I was closer to them.

“Kooooehhahhgak!”

I stared at the chimera that was running towards me, shrieking horrifically.

It was about 3 meters tall.

It had 4 shoulders.

It only two arms on each side though.

I assumed my battle posture while holding two hammered-shaped Thousand Arms on both my hands.

Like a baseball bat striking a ball away, I struck that chimera away with my hammer.

It's a bumpy and steep uphill road.

The chimera that was struck away by my hammer started to roll down the hill.

After rolling and rolling, it tried to stop itself by grabbing onto something.

However, he ended up grabbing other chimeras who were only trying to make their way up.

Now the other chimeras, which were grabbed by this chimera, all lost their balance and started rolling down the steep hill. And those chimeras bumped into few other chimeras while rolling down, so now the number of chimeras falling and rolling down increased exponentially.

Here and there, there were chimeras who were attempting to stop themselves by grabbing onto some trees or stones, but it was a useless attempt since they were rolling down at such a velocity that it was impossible.

Their attempts to save themselves only caused more mayhem, as the trees and stone they grabbed onto were uprooted from ground and were now tumbling down along with them.

Chimeras continued to tumble further and further down.

It was like a domino effect; by striking away one chimera, now all of them were rolling down the hill. There they were.

Just like how a small snowball becomes bigger and bigger when you roll it, the amount of chimeras rolling down were exponentially expanding.

Since I can't quite call them a snow ball... let me just call it a chimera ball.

The chimera ball has rolled down and down the slopes, now they have returned to the flat field where they've started.

The chimera ball was now as big as a house.

And I can guess that the pressure they're adding onto each other's bodies must be quite heavy, not to mention how painful it would be when their massive bodies are thrown heavily against each other.

Even though their bodies are solid as rocks, it must hurt.

[Level up!]

They won't resist death.

Considering the fact that I leveled up right before clearing the 19th floor stage, and I leveled up just now by in one single attack, this is an unbelievable achievement.

Of course it didn't mean that I have completely stopped all of their attacks.

The chimeras were climbing up the whole mountain in all directions.

The horde that was rolled off the hill was only a small portion of their army.

But, now I've figured a very good method for hunting.

I had to reach level 51 in order to be eligible for the level up reward anyways.

My new objective has been set: I will aim to go beyond level 51 before I clear the 20th floor stage.

Chapter 145

Tutorial 20th Floor (5)

Drinking the potions was definitely a good choice. I could clearly experience the effect.

I drank a few potions including the ones that strengthened my power and agility stats, in addition to two other tonic-type potions which are supposedly beneficial for my health.

It didn't look like much of a difference when I looked at my final stats.

I only became a little bit faster, and a little stronger.

But those tiny enhancements have enabled me to bring the most important plan in this battle to realization: to attack before attempting to defend, and to stay clear of the enemies' attack before making a move.

The attack that would have missed the enemy now spears through their vital points.

Including these results, the absorption of potions has made this battle much easier and convenient for me.

“Phew.”

I breathed a sigh while watching the giant chimera ball rolling down the steep hill.

I was dealing with them pretty easily since I took advantage of the steep hill and the fact that the enemies were standing very close to one other; it just made the whole chimera ball thing a lot easier, in addition to the potion's effects streamlining my movements.

I killed at least a million chimeras in just the first three hours.

I think it's a pretty impressive record.

I have already exceeded my initial expectations, which was only to annoy them to hell and slow them down before they could even arrive at the front of the fortress.

But it seemed like the fun, easy chimera hunting was over now.

The chimeras had completely stopped marching towards me.

I assume they've finally figured out that it's much more efficient to deal with me first than to indiscriminately charge the fortress.

Not bad at all.

My objective is to prevent them from conquering the fortress for 10 days exactly, no less and no more: exactly ten days.

If they decide to create a battlefield here with me in a place far, far away from the fortress, then it will be in my favor.

The chimeras stopped marching, but they didn't immediately attack me.

Instead, they took a step back, moving farther away from me.

They are surrounding me in big circle while maintaining a certain distance away from me.

It's approximately 200 meters.

And then they distanced themselves from each other, and lowered their posture.

"What the heck is going on now, huh?"

Nobody answered my mumbling, of course.

The chimeras kept on doing whatever they were doing.

I guess they finally learned their lesson and were trying to prevent themselves from rolling down the steep hills this time.

If they're maintaining that large of a space between each other, even if the front line falls off, the back line would be able to catch them and set them upright.

Since their muscle strength is unbelievably strong, they'd be able to catch anyone easily even if I hit them off really hard.

And if that's the case, the next thing they'd bring to me is-.

'Boom!'

One giant chimera jumped over all the other chimeras, occupying my field of vision.

I knew it. If they've created a circular ring, the next thing to appear is obviously a player.

This black chimera has a beast's head.

His head, arms and legs, and whole body were all black.

It wasn't painted; the skin itself was just naturally black colored.

His head and body figure reminded me of a black jaguar.

If it weren't for the sewing marks and uneven body parts, I would've mistakenly thought he was beastman, and not a chimera.

Indeed, this chimera was very well-made.

"I knew something was up, they suddenly wised up and reacted to my attack wisely," I murmured to myself. "Definitely a commander nearby."

“Human.”

This one talks.

“Human. What is a human doing in a place like this? There is no way a soldier of empire would have come to this mountain already.”

Well, he speaks well.

Let me try to communicate.

I needed some information anyways; plus I’m sort of really curious.

“I don’t belong to the empire’s army. I just happen to be here by coincidence.”

“Then. Then may I ask why you are here?”

Wow, he is awfully polite; that’s totally unexpected.

And he talks in a far better manner than the dwarfs.

He seems to stutter a little when he talks, but his method of speech is good enough.

Unlike the other chimeras, who seem like they are only half-way to their completed form, this one has one completed figure, and seems to possess great intellect as well.

“To temporarily protect the dragon’s inheritance.”

The jaguar Chimera was silently deep in thought for a while.

“For how long are you planning on protecting the dragon’s inheritance?”

“For exactly 10 days.”

“No, No good. The army of the empire would be here by then. Could you please open the way for us? I beg of you.”

This is unbelievably surprising.

When I first saw chimeras, I didn't expect us to be able to converse like this.

And he wasn't even threatening me; he was asking in a very polite and gentle manner.

“Could you tell me why you want that damn inheritance?”

“If, if I tell you, would you give it to us?”

“Nope.”

The jaguar chimera's facial expression had hardened into a grim expression.

The black pupil of his beastly yellow eye's narrowed like an angry bull.

I slightly switched my foot position, and prepared for a fight that could happen any second.

“Then, then why are you asking me that question?”

The reason was quite simple.

“I am curious.”

The jaguar chimera's face turned even more frightening.

I didn't know it was possible for his face to frown to a greater degree it already was.

Impressive.

One more thing that surprised me was the fact that he eventually answered me even though he was growling at me.

“To get our, our humanity back.”

Humanity?

“We are human.”

“Dude, your joke isn’t funny at all.”

At this point his face was thoroughly contorted.

* * *

The jaguar chimera began to speak his story.

He told me how they were originally human, but unfortunately got kidnapped by black magicians and transformed into hideous-looking monsters.

And he also told me about what kind of life they were forced to live on as monsters.

He told me all about that painful past, and its sorrow.

He told me that now there are only few Chimeras including himself who still remember their former lives.

He said that the other Chimeras have completely forgotten about their past now and they only thoughtlessly follow his orders.

He also mentioned the fact that even though the black magicians are all executed now, they’ve left such a grave curse on the chimeras; chimeras that don’t have self-awareness are now indiscreetly expanding their numbers through meaningless reproduction.

And he said that he’d finally made up his mind, after seeing the monstrous-looking offspring endlessly coming to life.

He said he decided to end it all.

He said he decided to take the dragon's inheritance in order to become a human, and abandon their hideous monster-like selves.

He said that was his final decision.

That was his side of the story.

I felt one thing, after listening to his long life story.

I felt like this story was something he'd been waiting to tell somebody for a long time.

I could tell that he thought through about how to tell this story to someone over and over.

He wanted to tell somebody, somebody who was not a chimera.

I can't imagine how much he wanted to justify himself, and to be comforted by someone.

I'm not so sure about any of this anymore.

That was all I felt.

Nothing else really.

"That's entertaining."

"What, what is?"

"So after the dragon died, the dwarfs seem to want to become dragon soldiers by using the dragon's inheritance. They don't seem to realize that even if they successfully become dragon soldiers, the dragon that they devoted themselves to has already died and gone."

"That's right, right. They dream of something meaningless."

“And for you chimeras, when the empire killed all the black magicians, you started dreaming of becoming a human again by using the dragon’s inheritance, even though the other chimeras have gone too far from being able to return to normal human lives.”

Now the jaguar Chimera’s eyes were becoming bloodshot.

I wondered why they didn’t choose to commit suicide instead while I was staring at the jaguar chimera that was low-key growling at me.

They could’ve committed suicide after killing all of the brethren who aren’t self-aware anymore.

If they did it then, they might have been able to realize that they have a hint of humanity left in themselves, and that they have some dignity left as well. Then, they would’ve been able to rest in peace.

People often talk about suicide as if it’s some sort of an escape designed for weak cowards.

They talk as if it’s the act of giving up every possible future opportunity just because you are unable to handle a tiny bit of temporary pressure.

But in reality, death offers a great rest for someone whose life has been put through horrifying conditions.

A person whose life has been put in those terrible conditions can’t shake themselves of the temptation of ending life and becoming free easily.

Surviving in a meaningless and equally worthless life is more anguishing than any temporary pain, and even the pain that comes through and after death.

I know this because I am a survivor myself who is still alive despite harming myself on multiple occasions.

Keeping yourself from committing suicide is not an easy thing to do.

Maybe that's the reason why the chimeras have created one definite goal to achieve instead, and started to become overly obsessive about it.

They are obsessed with their long-lost, now nonexistent humanity.

They must have put their lives on the line to achieve their dream.

That objective must be the one and only reason why they're still alive and breathing.

But humanity is something that is hard to maintain, even as a human.

Even though they somehow gain the ownership of the necklace and awaken its hidden powers, that wouldn't be enough to fully transform them back into humans.

The chimeras might think that the necklace will solve all their lives' problems and set them free, but I definitely do not agree with that.

Not even a God can do such thing for them; what makes them think a necklace can accomplish it?

They might gain some sort of human features on the outside, but they'd still be a monster hiding under imitation human skin.

Just like what the jaguar chimera has just said about the dwarfs, they themselves also carry a very meaningless desire.

"Wha, Wha, Why?"

"Why what?"

"Are we that disgusting? Do you despise us that much? Why are you humiliating us with such cruel words with such conviction, when you have just met us and barely even know who we are?"

I remained silent for a while after hearing this from the jaguar chimera.

And I had to admit it.

It was true that I disliked the chimeras and the dwarves equally.

It's because they shared one thing in common.

They both wanted to change who they were and how much they were worth, just through ownership over a dragon's inheritance.

Another thing they shared in common was the fact that their creator has set their limitation by birth, which limits their purposes in life as well.

The chimeras were created by black magicians to be used for warfare and destruction.

The dwarfs had been created by the dragon to do tedious work as minor laborers.

Now I've finally figured out why I highly dislike them, especially the dwarfs.

I stopped thinking.

I stopped myself from being distracted by all these irrelevant thoughts, clearing my mind.

Now is not the time to think about these unimportant things. I've got a battle to fight.

These are inappropriate thoughts to have right before the beginning of the battle.

"Name. What is your name. Human."

"Lee Ho-Jae."

Will he laugh at my name too?

Since he has a jaguar head, maybe he might laugh too.

Thankfully, he didn't.

Instead, he screeched with a voice loud enough to be echoed through the whole mountain like thunder.

“Lee Ho-Jae! I won't forget your god damn name! The name of a heartless human who humiliated us all!”

I almost lost my hearing, oh my gosh.

My ears were ringing.

Especially because I was paying him more attention to listen to what he was about to say.

“We will kill you, AND we will get our humanity back!”

Followed by his scream, millions of other Chimeras started to chant at the same time.

I felt the ground shaking as they were chanting.

As tension increased, I became more excited as well.

Their yelling and screaming weren't only meant to stir up their fervor for battle.

They actually created some sort of magical buff effect.

The jaguar chimera has furtively disappeared from the sight.

He no longer had such angry facial expression; instead, he seemed like he somehow managed to find his calm.

Among the chimeras that were forming the circle ring, the front line began attacking me.

The back line chimeras took one step forward, and stayed still in their positions.

I guess they were not just any normal monsters, but monsters designed specifically for warfare.

Either that or they were specifically trained to function in this way.

I activated my Soul Steal skill, Indomitability skill, coercion skills and changed each Thousand Arms into a long sword and a shield. I fought against the frontline chimeras that were readying their attacks.

While I was killing the Chimeras one by one very calmly, the second row of chimeras began their attack.

As soon as the second row started their attacks, the third row chimeras took one step forward, made another ring, and stayed in their positions until they were ready to jump at me.

I guess they're trying to attack me row by row, like this.

I guess it's not bad.

I like it like this as well.

The advantage of this fighting strategy was the fact that I can manipulate time to tire them out slowly without giving them time to rest; this way, I become closer to winning this battle.

“Kiiiiiiiiiek!”

One chimera jumped at me with his cut-up arms, I gave his head a nice slice.

The chimera lost its head and its balance, collapsing onto the ground motionlessly.

That's when I activated my Soul Steal skill.

If I activate this skill, my health and vitality will recharge back to normal.

As long as I have my soul steal skill and its health regeneration effect and plenty of enemies that I can cut into pieces, I won't be the one that dies of exhaustion first.

The chimeras continued to execute their enveloping attack seamlessly like well-trained war soldiers.

I need to draw a very clear perimeter.

I need to ensure that I have a wide enough perimeter to act in.

I need a perimeter I can protect myself in.

After continuing this battle for a while, the enemies had begun to grasp vague line I've set.

And then they had nevertheless begun to cross over that line daringly.

I mustn't prioritize certain enemies over others.

If I were to make moves against the ones who've crossed the line and are hesitantly stand and wait for me to come at them first, they will look for the moment I am defenseless and attack me in the moment.

So, I need to make a smart move.

I need to analyze their unique characteristics, skills, and objectives.

I need to be aware of each and every one of them and their movements; I need to fight against them all at the same time.

In the correct order.

I need to make quick decisions about who to defend myself against first, which one to stay away from first, and which ones to attack first.

I am trying to solve a problem without giving a wrong answer, not even once.

That's why it's very crucial to stay extremely focused on the battle around me, rather than focusing on maintaining an unscratched body.

And of course, I need to be wise enough to be able to save my mana and energy efficiently while battling them.

I am quite confident in a battle like this.

Very. Confident.

There was an incident once when I let one of the enemies successfully jump onto me.

In the past, there were several incidents where I wasn't able to completely defeat the enemy.

There were other incidents where my health was too low and I had to hide away momentarily.

But never have I ever, lost in a battle.

I am the living proof that such a defeat has never happened, not even once.

I swung my sword.

I slit the throat of one of the chimeras standing slightly outside my mental perimeter.

He was attempting to attack my blind side, but I killed him before he could do anything to me.

Someone was swinging an axe behind me.

Instead of turning my body backward to block the hammer, I opened Talaria's Wings and dodged the axe's swing.

At the same time, I sliced a chimera's body into two parts.

There was another axe coming from my right side.

I ignored that attack and positioned by shield to cover my left side.

Using my momentum from swinging my sword, I did a half-spin to greet the next chimera.

Blood spat out from the body of the chimera which I had just cut in half in a blink of an eye.

The giant chimeras began to collapse onto the ground one by one.

They became an obstacle that blocked the other chimeras from running towards me directly.

And an increased number of dead corpses laying around me became some sort of a trench for me unintentionally.

I was able to kill them one by one much more smoothly now that I had a trench that protected me from Chimeras vigorously jumping onto me from my blind side.

If they slow down their running speed in order not to stumble upon those corpses, I can jump on them before they can jump on me.

At one point, they finally began to realize their disadvantage, and finally stopped themselves from drawing any attacks all together.

“Keeeeeeeeek!”

“Kiiiiiek!”

They were only screeching weirdly now, outside of my attack range.

Are they waiting for their commanders' new order?

I screamed right back at them.

“AHHHHHHHHH!”

[Soul Cry]

I completely ignored the fact that my skill effect was dismantling the scrum, and I started laughing joyously at the chimeras, which began to jump at me again.

[PR: For all the people that are not fans of American football or rugby, a “scrum” is basically describing the line of players before they smash into each other.]

* * *

After the sunset, the chimeras had made their way back to their base, away from the mountain.

I sat down on the ground, watching them march back toward their base wherever it was.

My bum got wet.

It was mostly because of the blood of dead chimeras, but it was also mixed with some of my blood.

I opened a bottle of Elixir potion with shaking hands, and drank it all.

My body was full of wounds.

After I killed more than a thousand chimeras, their method of attack changed.

Their immature formation or traps didn't work on me as long as I had the Soul Cry skill.

Their new attacking method was to continue attacking without giving me a second to relax, while placing a few outstandingly talented fighters here and there.

Since they were hard to distinguish, I faced several near-death scenarios.

I stood up after the Elixir potion's healing took effect, and I was able to move my legs again finally.

I walked toward the mountain top, and as I stepped onto the dead corpses, they tumbled down.

The corpses rolled down to the bottom of the mountain, making a loud rolling stone noise.

Instead of stepping onto any more corpses, which would only destabilize the mountain of corpses and create unnecessarily loud noises, I decided to fly with Talaria's Wings.

When we look at today's result, it seems like I had unilaterally slaughtered them all, but that's not entirely true.

I experienced my limits today.

No, I was pushed over my limits.

I really had very close calls with death; I could've died, for real.

The enemies must have been able to analyze my power and strength fully today.

They will prepare a new battle plan for tomorrow.

And they still have so many chimeras left.

The number of chimeras is way beyond my prediction.

The battle tomorrow will be much more dangerous.

But I decided to look at this situation in a positive light.

What I felt while fighting against them wasn't a lack of improvement on my part.

I only felt like I was lacking on some aspects, but only because I haven't been put into rigorous battles in the past stages and for that reason I wasn't completely used to battlefields anymore.

But I felt it all coming back very quickly, all thanks to this fierce battle against the chimeras.

Tomorrow's battle will definitely be more dangerous than today's, but I trust myself to overcome it as well.

Regardless, I can make this defense into guerrilla war anytime if I feel like I am not good enough.

I could return back to the fortress in a better mood.

I was very happy, since I faced and overcame such critical and dangerous situations. I was so proud of myself and it felt great indeed.

As soon as I got back to the fortress, one dwarf attempted to communicate with me, instantly ruining my mood.

“Big...”

“Big?”

“Pro...”

I waited patiently.

I waited patiently until the dwarf had managed to say until “Big problem. Liza-“ before I realized that it was about the lizardman, Iddy.

“D...”

“Idy what! What happened to...”

“Man...”

God damn it, please talk faster, please.

“Is...”

F this shit.

Chapter 146

Tutorial 20th Floor (6)

[TL Note: We're going to change up a few of the terms and we'd like to know whether or not we should keep the new terms or go back to the old ones. The new skill name will appear first and the term previously used will be in parentheses. Let us know in our Discord or in the comments section.]

Changed Dragon Soldier --> Dragon Troopers*

Changed Soul Steal --> Siphon Soul*

Dead Summoning --> Summon Dead]*

"Da..."

Damn it.

I listened to the Dwarves until the end but it would have been better if I had just found out myself.

I flew with Talaria's Wings once more.

I spread my mana aggressively and located Idy.

First, I searched the graveyard that contained the Dragon's Inheritance, which Idy had been guarding.

Fortunately, Idy was in the vicinity.

I flew towards her after I ascertained her location.

A large group of dwarves was gathered at the entrance of the graveyard.

I pushed them out of my way, one by one, and went into the graveyard. In a corner of the cemetery, I saw a few dwarves whisper and lay out some thick gruel.

The runts had only been tasked with being on watch, so they were becoming impatient.

I used my Overpower (Coercion) skill.

The once bustling cemetery became silent as the dwarves fell onto the floor face down.

Now it was quiet, since the dwarves were on the floor. At least above the knees.

I could finally check on Idy.

She had a warm dressing tied onto her body and there were signs of medicine being applied here and there.

"Keruk. Captain, you're finally here?" Idy said.

"What... how did this happen?" I said, examining the area around the wound.

"Keruk, keruk. This is... I'm embarrassed."

After I finished looking over her injury, Idy told me the source of her embarrassment.

I lifted the bandage slightly and I saw a black "something" squirming around the wound.

A squirming black energy.

It was something I'd seen several times on the 9th, 10, and 12th floors.

This was Idy's skill.

"I guess if I were to give you an excuse, it'd be that I had too much on my mind. Keruk. Plus, the chimeras look repulsive. It was strange that they had four limbs, but they also used strange weapons as well."

"Strange weapons?"

"Keruk. They should be buried under Chimeras' bodies. Be careful if you have to fight them later. Keruk."

Amongst the Chimeras I had fought today, I hadn't encountered any that used unusual weapons.

The Chimeras mostly charged in barehanded or they simply used standard weapons.

The Elite Chimeras that appeared occasionally likewise did the same, even though they had superior skills

Seriously, I'm really exhausted. This wasn't really a battle, but an ambush.

"And..."

"And?"

"Keruk."

"Idy?"

"They said that they wouldn't have to live like beasts anymore if they get that necklace. I don't know if that's actually true, but that's what the Chimeras said. And... they said they were humanity's enemy. When I heard that... my hands slowed. Keruk."

So it was complicated.

At the same time, I felt dizzy.

They had hurt Idy this much over such a trifling issue.

By piecing together the Dragon Troops' complicated story, I figured out that the Chimeras and dwarves sought the necklace because it had the ability to evolve them.

However, that method was a problem.

It wouldn't simply grant superior strength, but advance their species to a higher level.

If that was possible...

What would a Dwarf, which had a higher class existence than a Chimera look like?

What would a Dragon Trooper, which had a lower class existence than a human look like?

Would they simply change into the form that they desired?

No, it was a pointless assumption.

They may gain even greater strength, deeper wisdom, or even a remarkable physical appearance, but in the end, their identity wouldn't change so easily.

Let's assume that a chimera regains their human body and blends into society.

It works at their appointed workplace and live a normal life, so nobody would be able to tell that that person used to be a chimera.

Everyone except for themselves.

They'll remember, deep down, that they used to be a Chimera and their own words will act as a painful reminder.

It's a task too difficult for one person to do, yet they claim that they'll accomplish the task tens of millions cannot?

That's impossible.

There are only two solutions.

They either accept that they're not monsters or they kill themselves.

The Chimeras laughed at the dwarves' desire to become Dragon Troopers.

It was pointless.

Even I agreed with them.

However, was there really a difference between the dwarves and the chimeras? One side wanted to become Dragon Troopers, while the other sought to become human.

If a god saw them, how would we he feel?

If a dragon saw the dwarves, it would likewise feel indifferent.

"Because of that, I got stabbed like an idiot. Maybe I saw myself in them," Idy said.

I restrained myself from saying what I really wanted to say.

Instead, I asked a different question.

"It's a skill, right?"

"Yep. Keruk."

I momentarily cleared my head.

"I'll remove the bandage now. I'll need to... examine it a bit."

I wrapped my fingertips with mana and cut off the bandage. I carefully took it off but Idy seemed to be in pain and groaned.

After that...

What do I do now?

First, I took out a bottle of elixir.

"Keruk. Keruk. Captain."

"What?"

"Isn't that expensive? Don't waste it," she said, embarrassed.

I felt like I had hit rock bottom.

This was Idy, who had first appeared on the 5th floor.

I had summoned her to the 20th floor and given her an important job because I trusted her.

If I were to give another reason, it would be because I wanted to see her.

She was with me from the start to the end of the stage. The person who was always with me was Idy.

I had cleared several stages with her and I had grown considerably since the 5th floor.

Although the 20th floor was extremely difficult, I thought Idy easily be able to deal with it easily.

Honestly, when she was on the 12th floor, she was pretty relaxed.

Idy had two skills.

One of them she used on the 5th floor; it changed her body into smoke, allowing her to avoid an enemy's attacks.

The other skill was one couldn't use on the 5th floor, though it was an attack that she could use on the 9th, 10th, and 12th floors.

She would be enclosed by a black, death energy that would attack her opponent.

However, there was a problem: if the death energy stuck to the body, there was nothing one could do.

While it had its limitations and it took some time compared to the nearly-invincible evasion skill, it had the potential to inflict fatal wounds.

I thought I would continue to get help from Idy even on the higher floors, not just the 20th floor.

But she had been hurt by her own skill.

Idy had already tested it on the 12th floor.

She cut her fingertip and the death energy remained in it.

Elixirs were useless.

I had to cut my own finger to shake off the death energy, but I drank an elixir and my finger grew back.

It might've been possible to treat Idy the same way, but it wasn't her fingertip this time.

She had a long injury that stretched from her heart to her stomach. The wound had definitely reached her inner organs as well.

I raised my hand and took a closer look.

The wound was too deep.

Even if the death energy wasn't there, it would still be a fatal injury.

An incision wasn't possible.

"Keruk.No matter how I look at it, there's no hope," Idy said.

That's also how I saw it.

I shook my head and cast out the thoughts deep in my head.

Some time ago, I began to think of only one thing when someone was dying.

Excessive bleeding, shock, difficulty breathing, ruptured inner organs. When I saw those symptoms, I knew the person was simply a corpse.

They'll die soon, they're nothing more than a corpse.

Get up and leave. There's nothing you can do, they're a corpse.

I swallowed down those thoughts from the depths of my mind.

As I stifled those thoughts, something else came out.

I roughly wiped my tears.

"Does it... hurt?" I asked.

"Keruk. Keruk. Are you worried? You know that this skill doesn't deliver any pain. I just feel the pain from the cut."

I went silent for a moment.

I opened my mouth to speak but nothing came out.

"Keruk. Anyway, there're always risks on the battlefield. It was fatal for me to get hit by my own ability like an idiot, but I have a lot of other injuries. It was really close. Then again, if that were true, I would've been able to get treatment. But starting tomorrow, I won't be of much help in the battle."

'Then again, if that were true, I would've been able to get treatment,' she had said.

I didn't just call Idy to fight.

Honestly, calling her for help was just an excuse.

It's just... when I came back, I thought it would be nice to have someone to eat with and talk to. That's all I really wanted.

"Keruk. Keruk. Actually, it went well."

I hid my shaking hands behind me.

"Idy... Idy. Don't worry too much. I'll immediately summon you..." I rambled.

Suddenly, my head turned to the side.

When I got ahold of myself, I saw Idy's rustling tail on the side of my face.

"Keruk. Get ahold of yourself, Captain. I can't help but worry."

Although I got smacked by Idy's tail, I couldn't understand her intentions.

"Captain. Why are you worrying about me?"

"...What?"

"Captain, are you possibly afraid of me dying?"

I was silent once again.

"Captain, don't you already know? We sometimes avoided the subject but it doesn't change the facts."

I remained silent.

"Captain, I'm already dead."

I really couldn't do anything but stay silent.

"How do you feel, Captain?"

* * *

During the long silence, Idy began speaking again.

"Keruk. First, take the unconscious dwarves outside. If we leave them like that, they might suffocate."

Just like she said, I moved the unconscious dwarves outside.

"I moved them all."

"Keruk. Come back after you put a blanket on the unconscious ones, at the bare minimum."

Like she said, I draped a blanket over the unconscious ones and laid them outside the cemetery before coming back.

"Keruk. Keruk."

"I'm done."

"Good job, Captain. Now... shall we talk? Also, I'll leave behind a request and some advice at the end of the talk. It looks like I don't have much time left, so let's start now."

I nodded.

"Keruk. How should I start... I kept thinking about it, but it's a difficult topic."

Idy 'keruked' for a moment, thought about it, and then began to speak.

"Let's continue our discussion. Keruk. I'm already dead."

Idy spoke calmly but her words slowly pierced my heart.

"One life, one soul. It's something that is said in our tribe. However, what about me? I have only one soul but I have many lives. Maybe I don't have a life or a soul. Keruk."

"Idy..."

"Captain, you always regretted killing me, even though I told you not to. Keruk. I never died to you. My death happened before then. Keruk."

It was something she had once talked about on the 10th floor.

"Of course, I don't know how I died. However, that..."

Idy's face froze.

Her face went blank.

The system disapproved of her words.

She grinded her teeth and bit on her blood.

"Keruk. I'll have to pass over that. Hoo."

She took a deep breath and continued.

"Captain, I know that you treat everything you meet in the Tutorial as if it were real. You even treat lifeless beings as if they were real and just brush past everything to clear, as if you were in a play. It's as if this has become the real world to you and we've become real people to you. That's why you feel happiness and sadness from the people you meet here. You feel anguished when you have to kill an enemy. Keruk. But if you were to challenge them again, they'd look exactly the same. Keruk."

I was silent.

Idy, too, was silent for a moment.

It persisted to the point where we became self-aware of how much time had passed in silence. Then, Idy continued.

"It'll be easier if you ignore it all. They're not real, so don't think. Just cut them down, and pass them. It'll be easier for you. But you don't do that, do you, Captain? You feel uneasy, don't you? Keruk. Captain, you think that, just like us, you might have died, and only your soul is left roaming around."

She's right.

As time passed, my suspicions lessened somewhat, but lately, my suspicions have returned.

I also feel like I'm a puppet in some kind of play.

"I'll have the change the topic of discussion first. Keruk."

Idy raised her hand and grabbed mine.

My hands were still shaking a little.

"Keruk. Captain, I'm sorry to say this but you have to look at reality. I'm just an item."

An item.

When I heard that, I thought of the unconscious dwarves outside.

"The only Idy you know is me. But how many Idaltarus, who are killing challengers and conversely getting killed, do you think there are on the 5th floor, Captain?"

[PR Note: Just a reminder that Idaltaru is Idy's real name, or at least the name the system identifies her with. "Idaltarus" is the plural form referring to multiple "hers."]

I knew.

I thought about it countless times but it was a subject that troubled me.

Idy's face went blank again.

She would intentionally say things that were restricted and when she was reprimanded by the system, she would experience a piercing headache.

However, Idy didn't suppress her feelings.

"I was lucky, wasn't I? Because of you, Captain, I became self-aware of my condition and I was able to spend my time happily with you. I'm really thankful to you, Captain."

She let go of my hand and raised her own.

She wiped my tears as she 'keruked', and laughed.

"I'm sorry, but this is the end. It's really too bad that I can't talk to you anymore. Keruk."

The gods and the system didn't want her to talk anymore.

Idy couldn't even talk about the subject indirectly and couldn't remind me about it.

The only thing left for me to do is to find out what she wanted to say.

"Now it's time for me to be a bit shameless, huh. Keruk." She candidly laughed.

"Captain," she called.

"What?"

"Captain, I like you."

She 'keruked' and laughed.

"You probably do too. Though it might be a different form of affection, at least you like me as a friend, as a comrade."

I think of you as family.

"I have a request and some advice. It would seem like... I'll give you some advice first. I heard about your growth yesterday."

I nodded.

"Keruk. I think that your growth is lacking. Actually, I think it's being repressed."

"What?"

"Keruk. Keruk. Don't compare yourself to others, Captain. The only one that can compare to you is yourself. Do you think that your growth at its best right now?"

My growth rate is extremely fast.

It's to the point that the system can't keep up.

From the very beginning, I couldn't even be compared to the other challengers. I was at a level that they couldn't even comprehend.

However, I listened to Idy's words attentively.

Last night, I had told Idy, in fair detail, about the progress of my growth.

If she was the one saying my growth was lacking, it was definitely lacking.

"Next up is my request. Keruk."

"Ask me anything," I spoke calmly, after I had relaxed a bit.

"Sorry about this, but I have two."

"Don't be sorry. It's fine if there're more."

"Keruk.Keruk."

I didn't feel burdened by her requests. Rather, I hated the fact that she felt embarrassed about her requests.

"How many more times can you use the Summon Dead skill?"
(Summoning Dead)

"2 more times."

"You had less remaining than I thought. It looks like my request will be more shameless than I thought. Keruk."

"What's wrong?"

"Don't summon me anymore, Captain."

I've been shocked a lot today but nothing could've prepared me for this.

I couldn't help but ask. What did she mean?

"Idy. What are you talking about?"

Her eyes spun and she bowed her head furtively.

"Idy!"

"Instead, instead... When I become a single Idy, rather than those countless Idaltarus... When I'm freed of all my restraints. When I can exist as just me, as just "Idy", can you summon me then?"

Now I could finally read her expression.

Due to the shape of their head, when a lizardman bows, it doesn't hide their face at first.

"Of course, I know it's impossible. I also know how useful the Summon Dead skill can be..." Idy rambled.

"I got it, Idy. I'll do as you ask. Don't worry," I replied.

Idy cleared her throat and stared at the plain ceiling.

"Keruk. Keruk. I'm not worried. I trust you. You'll definitely succeed. The only thing you needed, Captain was... No. no, it's nothing."

"What is it?"

Idy continuously moved her head side to side and slowly turned her head, avoiding my eyes.

She was really embarrassed.

Now that I think about it, it's the first time since the 5th floor she's asked me for a favor.

She had told me all about her tribe's characteristics, so it was definitely a rare case.

"Keruk. Keruk. I knew that my time was tight, but I still have a little bit of time left. My heart rate is slowing down, though. Captain."

"What?"

"Have you calmed down a bit?"

"Yeah."

"You sure are a strange boss. Keruk. So how about talking some more with the time I have left?

"All right, what do you want to talk about?"

"Keruk. Keruk. What do you mean? Anything. Do you not want to?"

"Sounds good."

It'd be great if we could talk while eating, but Idy wasn't capable of eating anything in her current condition.

It didn't matter.

Eating wasn't important right now.

* * *

It wasn't hard to figure out what Idy had wanted to say.

Because in the end, she had told me everything she wanted to.

It was obvious what Idy wanted.

Her condition to summon her again...

I needed to get her out of the tutorial system completely and free her of her restraints before I could summon her again.

She didn't simply want me to summon her after clearing the Tutorial.

If I did, then I'd just be summoning an Idaltaru from the 5th floor who was under the Tutorial's jurisdiction.

I had to completely pull her out of the system. If that doesn't work, I'll just have to free everyone in this Tutorial. With that, I satisfy all of her conditions.

But I don't know how to do it.

There's far too much I don't know about the system.

Even if I learned all I could about the system, I still wouldn't be even be able to comprehend the basics of the system and how it works.

But now, I knew the path that I needed to take.

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

Idy said my growth was lacking.

My growth certainly isn't lacking.

I had already surpassed the system's guidelines and I didn't face many difficulties in the party stages.

It's probably going to be easy to clear the Tutorial.

However, if I want more, then my growth is definitely lacking.

I expected nothing less of Idy. She knew me well.

Idy's trial was much more interesting than the Tutorial.

I saw the necklace floating in the center of the cemetery.

I snatched the floating necklace and put it around my neck.

I didn't have any reason to hide the necklace or face off against any enemies right now.

Besides, it's safest here. After all, I'm here.

If I take the necklace, I won't have to continue the mission. I won't have to split the single necklace and I can draw out the remaining chimeras.

When I went outside, I was met with the confused faces of the dwarves.

As always, I don't like them.

But when I put myself in their shoes, I don't feel unpleasant anymore.

I've been told many times as to why the gods brought me here.

To become a disciple of a god.

That was all.

That wasn't my intent.

I was reborn here.

The tutorial revitalized me and brought me new life.

It was a misfortune but at the same time, it brought me happiness.

I was thankful for the Tutorial.

I didn't worry about getting out quickly. Rather, I worried about what I would do after I got out.

I secretly wished that the Tutorial would go on forever.

I hadn't become self-aware until I had my talk with Idy.

Now there was another common feature between the dwarves and me.

But there was also a clear difference now.

Instead of listening to the dwarves' stuttering, I flew around with Talaria's Wings.

I flew away from the mountains and towards the plains.

I flew above the chimeras that filled up the plains.

I wonder how many there are...

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

I received a message from the gods and descended onto the ground.

I fell towards the ground at full speed.

I don't know what my full power is.

I've never tested it before.

That's why I've always felt so uneasy, like I was suffocating.

I never met a suitable opponent and I've never been able to wield my full strength.

However, I could gauge my strength in a different way.

[Indomitable]

[Iron wall]

[Heightened Senses]

[Battle Concentration]

I used my skills and drew out mana to protect my body.

Kwang!

When I crashed onto the ground, the landscape around me erupted in a cloud of dirt.

I monitored the situation.

My arms and legs, head, inner organs, and magic circuits were all functioning optimally.

Even the durable Talaria's Wings in my body felt a shock when I exceeded its max speed.

The chimeras around the impact point looked as though they were about to faint from shock.

The other chimeras further away from the impact point couldn't get a hold of themselves and merely looked on vacantly.

We can't have that, now can we?

"Uah!"

[Soul Cry]

[Siphon Soul] (Soul Steal)

[Overpower] (Coercion)

Soul Cry aggravated the half-awake chimeras and they started to dash towards me.

Of course, they wouldn't be able to tell how dangerous I was.

I coated my sword with the largest amount of aura I was capable of.

It was two times longer than even a swordmaster's aura.

I surrounded my shield and armor with aura as well.

I should discard my previous fighting style.

I fiercely dashed forward.

The chimeras crashed against my shield.

The chimeras attacked me one after another and I was pushed back.

I swung my sword in the largest, longest arcs possible.

I formed an Aura on my longsword three to four times longer than before and immediately severed the chimeras' huge bodies.

I advanced forward. Only forward.

The chimeras charged at me and I followed suit.

I should save as much mana and stamina as possible and calmly and carefully maintain my distance... I threw away this approach.

I charged boldly without holding back.

I had already prepared plenty of defensive measures.

There's no way that I'd run out of mana or stamina.

As long as I dealt with my enemies, Siphon Soul would allow me to recover faster than I would expend my mana and stamina.

"Uah!"

I relentlessly used Soul Cry in order to call all the chimeras towards me.

Blood spurted out.

The highly compressed Aura at the edge of my armor and my sword started to swell.

The aura blazed on my bloodied sword.

The burnt smell of flesh stunk.

Amidst the horrid stench of blood and the enemy's screams of agony...

"Uah!"

...I'm still alive.

* * *

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 20th Floor, Clear.]

[All status effects and injuries are healed.]

[You have received 4000 points for clearing the floor.]

[You have received 4000 points for being the first to clear the floor.]

[Many gods react positively to you. You have received 3700 points.]

[Many gods react negatively to you. 6300 points have been deducted.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

[The God of Slowness is satisfied.]

[The God of Adventure is cheering for you.]

[The God of Dueling is satisfied.]

[The God of Death is pleased.]

[The God of Devotion pities someone.]

[The God of Life is displeased with you.]

[The God of Pain is delighted.]

[The God of the Sky is disgusted by you.]

[Based on your play records, additional rewards will be given.]

[The God of Dueling would like to gift you some of his power instead of an additional reward. Would you like to accept?]

[The God of Dueling would like you to become his disciple.]

[The God of Adventure is worried.]

* * *

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 21th Floor, Perfect Clear.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

[The God of Death would like you to become his disciple.]

[The God of Adventure is panicking.]

[The God of Slowness is making fun of someone.]

* * *

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 22th Floor, Perfect Clear.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

[The God of the Sky is showing an interest in you.]

[The God of Balance is looking at you again.]

[The God of Adventure is really panicking.]

[The God of Slowness snorted.]

* * *

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 23th Floor, Clear.]

* * *

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 24th Floor, Perfect Clear.]

[Many gods react positively to you. You have received 9400 points.]

[Many gods show a react negatively to you. 600 points have been deducted.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple have agreed to a few promises regarding you.]

[The God of Adventure is restless.]

[The God of Slowness is slightly anxious.]

Chapter 147

Tutorial 60th Floor (12)

In the kitchen preparing dinner, the plates rattle and clatter. At the front of the door, the bell goes jingle, jingle," Yong Yong hummed while he sat in front of a floor table.

When did I teach him that song again?

I don't remember.

Maybe that clone bastard taught him.

Yong Yong continued to hum the tune and color on drawing paper with a crayon.

Not too long ago, I sketched Disney animation characters on some drawing paper and made a coloring book for Yong Yong.

Since I had finished teaching Yong Yong magic, I'd teach him whatever he wanted now.

Yong Yong likes coloring books.

He really likes coloring princess characters like the Little Mermaid or Cinderella.

Also, he uses the pink crayon a lot.

I secretly felt anxious, even while petting his head.

You're a boy, Yong Yong.

I checked everything.

I changed my mind.

It doesn't matter what my son's tastes are.

Yong Yong is my son regardless of his tastes.

Don't become as uptight as your dad.

I lifted the newspaper instead of groaning and moaning about my problems alone.

This month, the newspaper was shocking starting from the first page.

[Lee Joon Seok has been judged as the first G-Rank Awakened.]

It's definitely been a long time since Lee Joon Seok got out, but it likewise took just as long to decide his rank.

He finally received a G-Rank designation.

It must be considerably shocking even to the outside.

No, it's just as shocking on the inside since the community's making a fuss.

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: Does this make any sense? Was this fabricated?]

[Lee Gook , 99th floor: This is a ranking from the Association. What do you mean by fabricated? Say something that makes sense. Seriously.]

[Jung So Rim, 85th floor: What level was he when he came out, to be G-Rank? From what I remember, the highest Awakened rank is SSS-Rank.]

Nowadays, the Awakened's rank is generally determined by level.

In the beginning, clear difficulty determined ranks.

However, as the difference between the highest Normal-Difficulty Awakened and the lowest Hard-Difficulty Awakened continued to narrow, one's rank would be readjusted based on the Awakened's individual ability.

So now, the Awakeneds' abilities vary continuously. Though it may be difficult to distinguish between the ranks, that's how it is now.

When I was consulted by the government, I also agreed to it.

Truthfully, the Tutorial System also uses levels as its standard and adjusts the difficulty based on level.

The average level of Normal and Hard Difficulty Awakened who make it out of the Tutorial is 40 - 50. Awakened who are level 40 - 50 are considered S-Rank.

If they pass level 51, they're recognized as SS-Rank.

The prominent members of the Hard Difficulty were all SS-Rank.

Amongst the members of the Hard Difficulty, there was a small special minority.

They progressed through the same stages and would perhaps discover a Hidden Piece. They were people with a strange fate.

These people were born with exceptional abilities.

Only those minority were assigned SSS-Rank.

You become SSS-Rank at level 101.

But people widely believed that it was impossible to cross over the wall to SSS-Rank.

There were many people who were SS-Rank, since it encompassed a wide level range of 51 - 91. However, the problem was that you had to start from level 100 for SSS-Rank.

Of course, there was no one who was above level 110 amongst them.

Of course, there'd sometimes be people who expected me to break it when I clear the Hell Difficulty.

However, in the midst of all that, a monster from the Hard Difficulty showed up.

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: They say he's level 201.]

[Kim Myung Min, 90th floor: Did you... say level 201? Is he human?]

[Jung So Rim, 85th floor: That's crazy.]

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: I told you that I don't make things up.]

[Park Joon, 90th floor: In any case, I've decided to leave next year. Even if I leave this year, I'm still old news.]

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: What's your level right now?]

[Park Joon, 90th floor: Me? Well, I guess I'm level 93.]

If you're level 93, say that you're level 93. What the hell do you mean by, 'I guess'.

In the community, Hard Difficulty challengers would converse amongst themselves regarding this or that.

Challengers who were at similar levels usually left the Tutorial at the same time and were typically friendly with one another.

Hard Difficulty, in particular, felt like a club.

[Kim Myung Min, 90th floor: What level was Ho Jae back in day? It might have been several years ago but I think he was over level 200.]

[Lee Gook, 99th floor:... I thought you were just making stuff up but I feel like you're telling the truth.]

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: What level was he? Why haven't I heard about this?]

[Jung So Rim, 85th floor: I remember.]

[Choi Min Hwan, 81st floor: I also remember that he was over level 200.]

[Lee Cheol Joong, 94th floor: Even if there's a difference, aren't those two on a similar level? They're both over level 200.]

[Choi Min Hwan, 81st floor: But that was several years ago.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: I'm level 351 right now, kids.]

I drove the community into chaos and let them go at it.

Now that I think about, I remember telling the community that I was level 251.

Lee Joon Seok might've made that his goal. I don't know.

If that 'monster' to level 201 without leveling up but by modifying his level, it meant his actual level was around level 250.

I thought they might've caught up by now.

Until they heard my level.

They were more shocked than Lee Joon Seok thought.

Even so, there's nothing I can do about it.

Let's just finish reading the newspaper.

The next headline was about Lee Joon Seok.

He had joined up with Kim Min Hyuk's clan.

It looks like Korea will go crazy over this.

Kim Min Hyuk is acting contrary to my expectations.

I didn't expect him to enter politics.

Yeah... I'm sure he'll do fine.

There's nothing that a person can do inside but stay still and wait, even if there's something massive happening on the outside.

On the contrary, there was something outside the 60th floor. Its' presence was even stronger this time.

I felt a small hand poke my side.

It was Yong Yong.

"Hm? What's wrong, Yong Yong?"

At some point, he had finished coloring and covered up his drawing paper.

Yong Yong looked at me, lifted my arm, and snuggled into my chest. He sat on one side of my lap and hugged me.

"What's wrong?"

"Dad, when will uncle come back?"

He was talking about my clone bastard.

That guy went to the 61th floor, running away from home like a little girl, and still hadn't come back.

"I wonder. Shouldn't he be back soon?"

Although there hadn't been any word yet, I wasn't really concerned.

In any case, I created that bastard using myself as a model.

He was in the process of developing his own personality, so he was different from me and liked different things, but his very nature didn't change.

I soothed Yong Yong but I detected a strong magical shockwave.

Someone was trying to enter the 60th floor against my will.

An unwelcome guest.

It's really surprising.

Lee Yeon Hee hasn't even come close yet.

Most of the Gods can't enter inside the Tutorial.

The Gods were shackled by several restraints, so they couldn't just do whatever they wanted with the Tutorial.

If one of them wanted to act directly, they'd need the consent of all 100 Gods.

Not too long ago, the Earth Server had over 3000 Gods watching over it.

But now, no God could thoughtlessly take part in the Earth's server.

Therefore, the uninvited guest wasn't a God or their disciples.

There was only one thing it could possibly be.

"Let's go, Yong Yong. I think your uncle is back."

"Really?"

I carried Yong Yong and arrived in the vicinity of the portal.

When I got near, the space started to distort.

My defense mechanisms and my clone bastard's strength were clashing.

You shitty bastard.

I told you to train your magic.

It looks like Yong Yong will catch up soon.

I drew on my magic and lifted some of the barriers.

The distortion in the room ceased and the portal began to activate.

"Uncle!"

My clone bastard appeared above the portal.

He seemed like he was the same as he always was.

Anyway, now I know why the barriers activated.

What could he have been doing until now? He came covered with the Gods' power.

My clone bastard didn't even greet or say anything to Yong Yong. He just strutted over.

I'm feeling uneasy.

That guy's not just some normal crazy bastard.

In the future, I expect a grave situation to occur.

I wondered whether I should block Yong Yong's eyes and ears or whether I should stop my clone bastard from walking.

In the end, I couldn't come to any decision and the clone bastard stopped right in front of Yong Yong and me.

Since his uncle didn't respond, Yong Yong looked taken aback and looked back and forth between me and the clone.

The clone bastard looked a little flushed.

His eye were shining brightly, so it looks what I had feared had come to pass.

"I felt the sunlight on my ears until sunset, a joyous trip"

You crazy fucking bastard.

That's what you say when you're parting ways.

"...C'mon, just do it.They're my favorites lines. "

I should've covered Yong Yong's ears earlier.

Damn it. Damn it. Damn it.

Hey, do you really need to do this?

[Please.]

"...I laughed and with a smile just like when I had departed, I returned and found peace."

...I felt like my organs had just been gouged out.

Truthfully, I had already experienced it a few times, so I knew exactly what it felt like.

My mood soured while the clone bastard rejoiced.

"Did you really want to try that that badly?"

The clone bastard nodded and took Yong Yong, who was nestled in my arm, and lifted him up.

"Yong Yong, were you well?"

"Yep!"

I left them to converse between them.

I confirmed that the gods' lingering presence couldn't communicate through the 60th floor.

You have to be meticulous in situations like this.

Also...

"Hey, what could you have possibly been doing in the 61st floor that you'd be so thickly covered with the gods' power?"

I wanted to let him have some more alone time with Yong Yong but I couldn't help asking him.

The way the clone bastard laughed was far too triumphant.

It rubs me the wrong way.

"Well, not much happened."

"Put down Yong Yong for a minute."

I want to sock him once.

Rather than putting him down, he cuddled him instead.

"Nothing really happened. Yep. As soon as I got to the 61st floor, they all began to observe me."

"Watching you? It shouldn't be possible since you're not a challenger."

"Well, I got a message that they seemed to be in agreement on something and it seems that even I could see it."

"And?"

"And it seemed like I had gained the rights of a challenger, and I went in front of the Boss Room and checked."

"What was the result?"

"I didn't."

"...You aren't even a challenger, but they sent you a message that they're curious?"

"Yeah. I don't have any idea either."

I had something that I had to have Park Jung-Ah figure out.

Could a non-challenger progress this way?

Could it be a unique case?

"Also, well... Since they were interested, I took a little bit of their power. I moved silently and nabbed some. That's why I was bit late. Hoohoo."

"How much?"

"1263."

I was momentarily speechless and stared at the clone bastard.

This guy said that he'd messed with over 1200 gods?

"What did they want?"

"They wanted me to become their disciple."

There was no way the clone bastard would accept their request.

I said this before, but his nature is similar to mine.

He rejected my offer to become my disciple so there was no way he'd become a disciple some other God.

"I did well, right? Right? Say something. Main body bastard! Hurry up and bow your head and say thank you."

You did well.

Congratulations on becoming a cosmic swindler.

"Louder. Even sweeter! Say it out loud!"

"Good job, Lee Ho Chi."

The man whose face looked like a blooming flower was no more... Lee Ho Chi's face turned dark.

[If you call me that name again...]

"Let's go."

I ignored his warning and walked back.

For a while, the clone bastard droned on about something and followed behind me.

"Where are we going?"

"What do you mean by 'where'? We're going to the lab."

A god's power isn't simply a high-ranking skill.

Through the process of becoming a God, they gain an 'authority.'

Their authority is their identity as well as their core.

Just by digging them up one by one, I can raise greatly raise my level.

I had already dissected the authority skills and I succeeded in modifying them.

That's why, the general magic I created had been able to advance to the next level.

However, I can't create authorities on my own yet.

My limit was modifying authorities that already existed.

When I was blocked by a wall, I needed new ideas or new materials and the clone bastard had brought me some materials just in time.

There were more than 1200 authorities inside.

Therefore, we obviously had to go to the lab.

"Hey, I just came back. Can't we start tomorrow?"

"Nope. We're working through the night starting today."

Chapter 148

Author's Notes

< Author's Words >

Finally the second part has finished.

Second part had total of 91 episodes; from episode 56 to episode 147.

Part 1 was about how Lee Ho Jae has survived the tutorial, and his journey through all the tutorial stages, just as it was mentioned on 60th floor where Lee Ho Jae is mentioning something about the past-on the part 1, end of second episode.

And unlike the part 1 which was focused on stage clearance and adventures, part 2 talked more about Lee Ho Jae's inner personal changes.

In more details, Part 1 was all about new adventure and survival, and Part 2 was about the adaptation and the life in Tutorials.

Lee Ho Jae used to be a person who only drank water and ate beef jerky while putting all his energy into creating stage clear strategies for survivor, has now changed ever since he entered a solo stages.

Since Ho Jae has been able to ensure his survival through his past progressive processes and achievements, he turns his eyes onto something else other than just stage clearing strategies.

Ho Jae who has started a new life in Tutorial has begun to blend in to the life of Tutorial itself while meeting many new relationships.

And he changes little by little through his new life, and feels various happiness here and there.

Of course in the end... yes, something bad happens. But he is happy until the middle part.

Well to be honest I tried to fill in the blank hole existing inside Ho Jae.

Lee Ho Jae who was slowly dying in his small room had always desired a new life filled with exciting tasks and achievements, but he also wanted a happy and not lonely life at the same time.

That's why Lee Ho Jae is clinging onto his relationships, unlike before. And he even began to chat with the enemies.

Whenever he confronts a new enemy, instead of going right into the battle, he tries to communicate first.

And he suffers from new loneliness and self destructing thoughts which he never felt before the Part 2.

But in the end of Part 2, Ho Jae starts to be thirsty for new stimulation.

And since Idy realized this, Idy has assigned him a new thrilling task, and ends the part 2, bringing the part 3 into the picture.

Now that I look at it, Part 2 has started with Idy and ended with Idy.

When I first started writing this story I didn't expect myself to come this far.

Not to mention the paid chapters, but I thought if I could write up to 20 episodes, that'd be enough for me and my goal.

Maybe that's why it all feels unreal to me still, even after finishing the Part 2.

Fortunately I could finish the part 2 as I've planned originally, and I'm really thankful for that.

If I were to pick something I was very dissatisfied with, was the episode where it had the second competition.

I ended up skipping the half of the final part.

If I could excuse myself a little,

There were lots of reasons why, but it was mainly because I wanted to emphasize Ho Jae's emotions that he felt when he returned to the waiting room after finishing the competition.

I wanted all of you to sympathize with the feeling that he felt when he finally returned home from a long long journey, to an empty room without lights, that loneliness, that emptiness, I wanted to convey that feelings to you guys.

If possible, I want you all to feel 'wow, it was a really long journey, but I've finally made my way back here' this sort of returning home feeling.

That's why I purposely extended the length of the story.

Yes. It wasn't a nice try to perform on paid chapters.

Maybe it would've worked if I had written them more entertainingly.

Part 3 will feel something in between Part 1 and 2.

To be exact, it will be more similar to Part 1.

In the meantime,

I wanted to do Q&A.

There seem to be lots of parts that caused your curiosity.

And since it was always in first person's perspective, there were lots of stuff that got overlooked or got skipped.

But there are lots of other stuff that's coming soon, and since I don't want to spoil them, I won't be able to answer any questions that requires me to include the spoilers.

If there's anything you want to ask regarding any matters from the past chapters, comment below.

I'll try my best to answer them without spoiling anything.

Lastly, thank you all for reading Tutorial up until now.

Also thanks to all readers who've not read my novel yet, but decided to read this. Thanks for your interest.

PbF by: traitor/SEN

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 6 -

-AUTHOR-
Gandara

[Light Novel Bastion]

GANDARA 퓨전 판타지 장편소설

튜토리얼이 너무어렵다

Chapter 149

Tutorial 25th Floor

[Round 22, 2nd day. 12:20]

I heard the sonorous sound of trumpets and saw humans from afar, appearing as ants from a distance, lining up and preparing their battle formations.

In the vast plains, the two opposing armies prepare for their battle at noon.

It looks like it's finally begun.

The 25th floor was the first solo stage in the last five stages.

The theme revolved around choosing between two armies of similar strength and attaining victory for the army of your choice.

You would have to not only battle, but command, interact with the army, and exert your influence on them.

You'd need the ability to grasp people's' hearts, whether it be by a silver tongue or through acting.

They're skills I don't have.

They're skills I never really needed.

I went to the two armies and rather than get involved, I chose one and sat atop the rocky mountains that had a great view of the plains and passed time.

Even if I'm not there, the two armies will clash anyway.

The two armies each had a flag: a blue and a red flag.

The two conflicting colors divided the two armies and I just arbitrarily chose the red flag.

I heard the sound of the trumpets once more and the sound of rolling drums followed by battle cries.

The two armies' battle lines began to move.

Since the plains were so vast, it seemed like they would need more time before they fully began their conflict.

Rather than pointlessly watching them, I answered a message.

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Hey, why won't you respond? If you're busy, should I contact you later?]

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: No. What's wrong?]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Amongst the newbies that just entered this round, one of them had some interesting info.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: What kind of information?]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: There're 3 people in China who have cleared the Tutorial. 3.]

It certainly was interesting.

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: What floor is Park Min on?]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: 90th floor.]

In the Korean server, Park Min was the challenger who had reached the highest floor on the Easy Difficulty.

In order to clear safely, he had intentionally delayed his progression, so he still had more than 10 floors left.

[Kang Min Hyuk, 30th floor: To be honest, there's no proof that those people have cleared the Tutorial yet. It's just that apparently, three supermen appeared that fought barehanded against monsters in China. But yeah... I heard a bit of the interview. After hearing them talk about their weapons or their tips about hunting monsters, it seems like they really were challengers who cleared the Tutorial. It looks like the Chinese government is treating them like war heroes and using them for propaganda.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: They're lucky, it seems like they got the government to acknowledge them. Normally, they'd fly to straight to either a torture chamber or a lab.]

There may be challengers in other countries who have cleared the tutorial. We don't know.

They just weren't apparent at a moment's glance or perhaps the country is hiding them.

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: Well, it's not bad. Now there's less work for us to do.]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Yeah. Since we became the second movers, we don't have to explain the role of the Tutorial anymore.]

Through competition, we became aware of the existence of foreign servers, but people expected the first graduates of the Tutorial to come out of Korea.

Korea's progress, compared to other countries, was overwhelming, and since the beginning, Korea had created a stable system that would allow challengers to develop more quickly.

I thought we were definitely ahead compared to challengers from other countries.

That might be true.

Even before I had cleared the 12th floor, the Order of Vigilance had already been preparing for the Tutorial's aftermath.

They made plans to persuade the Korean government and they were collecting letters to send to their families.

The Order of Vigilance had supported Lee Chan Yong, who had been the top player at the time. However, in the meantime, his clear speed had been conversely getting slower compared to other challengers.

Lee Chan Yong was resolute in clearing the Tutorial so the Order of Vigilance had wanted to get him out quickly. Even if the other challengers' progress was somewhat slow, the Order of Vigilance wanted them to clear safely.

At the same time, several people wanted to clear the Tutorial and go back to the outside world.

In many ways, it wasn't a bad plan and the plan seemed to be progressing smoothly.

However, within a few rounds, Lee Chan Yong, the one they expected to clear the Tutorial, just stopped and their plan went awry.

There were a lot of Easy difficulty challengers who could replace Lee Chan Yong. These challengers only lagged behind him by around 10 floors.

What's worse, because of Lee Chan Yong's disastrous failure, his clear speed slowed exponentially.

Because of that, the other top player, Park Min also remained on the 90th floor.

[Kang Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Now that it's become like this, they'll just wait for the challengers behind them to catch up to the 90th floor and they'll all work together to clear it and get out together.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: That'd probably be good. Well, do you as please.]

I listened closely, but it wasn't something I could decide on from the start.

Honestly, it wasn't really the kind of talk I would be interested in...

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor:... I will do as I please. How about you? When do you think you'll clear the 25th floor?]

[Lee Ho Jae, 25th floor: Today.]

* * *

The infantry clashed as arrows and magic flew above their heads.

I could see the cavalry tearing through the battlefield.

Although the battle was far away, I could feel its intensity from here.

I could hear their battle cries and their feet tapping on the ground from this faraway on the summit of the rocky mountain.

[Soul Siphon]

[Overpower] (Coercion)

It was enough for me to just use these two skills.

I invoked Soul Siphon across a wide area and the enemy soldiers' physical prowess declined.

They experienced a feeling of helplessness and they cowered.

It's easy to think about how deadly this skill is when I see the scene in front of me.

The front line is collapsing.

Even though the soldiers had similar abilities, the red soldiers won one-sidedly when they were pitted against the blue soldiers...

This phenomena was simultaneously occurring all over the battlefield.

[PR Note: "Coercion" skill will now be known as "Overpower"].

Plus, I'm also using the Overpower skill.

Unlike the Soul Siphon skill, Overpower uses my mana, though the enemies afflicted by Soul Siphon were quickly dying off anyway.

In this large scale battle, I'll never run out of mana.

[Talaria's Wings]

Since I'm already using two skills, one more wouldn't hurt.

Talaria's Wings doesn't simply afflict enemies. It was the God of Adventure's skill that affected allies and synergistically improved their fighting abilities.

Moreover, the red flag soldiers were fighting against a weakened and intimidated enemy, cutting them down with greater ease than before.

They wouldn't even need to capture the battle line. Soon enough, the battle line started to crumble.

I could roughly see that before a single red flag soldier went down, they took at least 5 blue flag soldiers with them.

Even from afar, I could clearly see the front line collapsing.

It looked like the red army commander was authenticating it as well, since both of the armies were huge.

But there's no commander in the world that wouldn't want to ensure his victory, especially when the balance had abnormally tipped like now.

He watched their movements and turned his attention to the sword in his hand.

Kiri Kiri had once said that if my level reaches a certain point, I'll be able to get rewarded with level ups again.

However, Kiri Kiri withdrew her advice.

Due to my growth rate, she said that I wouldn't be able to get any level-up rewards from now on.

Also, she told me to stop being interested in levels and just concentrate on my own growth.

My methods of growth are limited.

First, I can raise my resistances.

It's something I've done up till now.

The other is to study and master what I don't know.

One example is magic.

However, Kiri Kiri said I'd have to be at least at the 30th floor before I get anything regarding magic.

Therefore, I started train myself in swordsmanship.

My swordsmanship was definitely a limiting factor to my combat style.

Up till now, I had used my extreme speed and reflexes to cut down my opponents but technically, there weren't many strong opponents.

If I exclude my fights with fellow challengers, my weapon skills always lagged behind my opponents.

The fact that I got my sword skills to the intermediate level without any sort of study is amazing.

Even when comparing myself to the community, there aren't a lot of people with intermediate-level swordsmanship.

And there wasn't anyone with a higher swordsmanship level than me.

However, now I could see the limit to my swordsmanship.

Should I say that I see a wall?

Similar to how I didn't have a definite form for my swordsmanship, I also didn't know how to improve my swordsmanship itself. Based on the situation and on my condition, I would slightly alter my swordsmanship style during battle.

It could become an advantage, but there was certainly a limit to it because I couldn't progress any further with that style.

Therefore, I diligently studied the swordsmanship of the knight from the 16th floor.

It was a passive style designed for defense.

It occasionally employed feints but the feints were simply used to buy time for the final deathblow.

The young knight's swordsmanship was definitely untried in real combat.

That's how I assessed his swordsmanship.

Even so, there were a few useful things, like the three moves leading up to the final lethal technique.

Because of that, I was able to learn the method of storing my mana into my sword and ejecting it out in front of me. I also learned how to handle aura.

As I got better at handling aura, I decided that there was nothing more that I could learn from the knight's swordsmanship.

However, on the 19th floor, when I just mindlessly tried the techniques, I realized they were fairly useful techniques.

My sword skill level improved to a higher level.

Perhaps I just hadn't realized the true value of this swordsmanship until now.

Whenever I thought that way, I would practice my swordsmanship diligently.

I swung my Thousand Arms in the form of a longsword, and started with the basic movements.

Of course, it was a defensive style that didn't match my style at all.

Whenever I practiced the knight's swordsmanship, I didn't feel like my skill improved. Rather, I just felt that I wouldn't be able to use his swordsmanship in a real fight.

In no time at all, the battle was finishing up.

The red flag army was now one-sidedly slaughtering the enemy.

Unusually, the quickly crumbling blue flag army wasn't retreating but still holding their positions.

Of course, because they were being pushed back, there were a lot of deserters breaking away from the battlefield but the army's military headquarters stayed in the same place.

Also, in front of those headquarters, an iron giant rose.

Guoh.

The giant's horrible shriek echoed all the way to the mountains.

The attacking red flag army simply stopped.

Even if I catch a glimpse from here, it was big enough to be over five or six meters tall.

It wasn't something that could be taken on by just normal soldiers.

Based on Kiri Kiri's information, she said the that golem, no matter what side the challenger chooses, appears on the side that the challenger didn't pick.

Then, that golem might be the actual challenge for the 25th floor.

I flew with Talaria's wings.

I flew with my maximum speed towards the golem and thought.

The style of swordsmanship I learned from the knight had a finishing move that ended at the sequence of three corresponding moves.

The final three moves could be called the core of the style, but the actual explanation on the final technique was far too general.

Because of that, I fumbled through his teachings and I hadn't been able to properly manifest aura, and sometimes my mana would even wildly eject from my sword.

I thought that the final technique was to simply manifest an aura blade and that I just needed to swing my sword at the right timing.

Because of that, I heard about the 11-19 forms related to the three final forms from the knight, but I hadn't listened attentively.

I just thought he was just telling me the method to use aura.

Since it had splendid movements and had really technical names.

That was what I thought when I saw the knight try to act all cool.

But I could trust the knight now.

The several techniques he had taught me were all in preparation for the final technique. Future swordsmen would have to use their own methods to interpret the skills in a way appropriate for them.

It was really a relief, because even though I told the talkative swordsman that I didn't need to hear his explanation, he still told me all about the techniques in detail.

At some point, I had flown into the vicinity of the golem.

Seeing the battlefield up close, it felt a bit different from when I looked at it from the mountaintop.

I had seen this many times; people tangled in a war, fighting on the battlefield.

There would always be chaos in the center of the battlefield but this was a first.

The majority of the two armies remained and continued to fight. I guess I just had to accept that this was really happening.

There wasn't anything really unusual.

The red flag soldiers that had advanced towards the golem were quickly being torn down.

The blue flag soldiers, at some point, had reorganized their ranks and matched the golem's steps and slowly advanced forward.

I didn't slow down my flight speed and rotated vertically, aiming for the golem's head.

Before I collided with it, I swung my sword.

It wasn't difficult.

There wasn't much of a difference from the moment I swung my sword and the moments my blows landed, light glinting off its edges.

Fire blazed along the trajectory of my sword but a protective coating formed on the golem, blocking my sword.

However, the protective coating couldn't slow my sword for even a second.

My sword split the protective coating, and fell upon the golem's head unimpeded.

I adjusted my falling speed and cut straight down from the head down to the its abdomen.

I cut the golem into a smooth cross section like I was cutting tofu, and the golem crumbled as both of its pieces collapsed onto the ground.

When the enormous golem fell, it let out a deafening roar along with a huge dust cloud from the impact of the collapsed parts on the earth...

The two armies retreated quickly so they wouldn't be buried by its remains.

During that time, I examined the golem's body.

Tiny flames were stuck to the cross-section.

I relaxed a bit after I scrutinized the flames on the surface of the metal golem.

Still, I had gotten a lot better.

It felt like I had been rewarded for my hard work for weeks.

I felt lighthearted and turned my head, to meet the dazed faces of the blue flag soldiers.

* * *

It was simple to take care of the remnants.

Before the golem appeared, the blue flag army was being helplessly pushed back.

As soon as I entered the battlefield, the golem was split into 2 pieces and the golem collapsed just like that.

Rather, it took longer to finish off the deserters from the beginning of the battle.

I took care of the last soldier hiding under a corpse and a message appeared.

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 25th Floor, Clear.]

[All status effects and injuries are healed.]

[You have received 5000 points for clearing the floor.]

[You have received 5000 points for being the first to clear the floor.]

[Many gods react positively to you. You have received 2300 points.]

[Many gods react negatively to you. 700 points have been deducted.]

[Based on your play records, additional rewards will be given.]

[You have acquired the skill, Time Confinement Lv. Max.]

[Battle Concentration Lv. 28 and Time Confinement Lv. Max have been integrated.]

This stage was much easier than I had expected.

Perhaps because of that, there weren't many extreme reactions from the gods.

From the start, from the mountaintop alone, I practiced my swordsmanship and then I swung my sword a few times before the stage ended.

The unusual point was the skill I had received from the clear.

Time Confinement.

Looking at the level of the skill, it was a skill given to me by the gods.

Let's take a look.

[Time Confinement (Lv. Max)]

Explanation: A god who wouldn't say his/her name has given you this skill as a present.

If you don't figure out her name, she may get angry at you.

This is a skill from the God of Slowness.

She didn't explain how the skill works, but it said that she'd get angry or something, so it was definitely her.

The God of Slowness had given me a skill on the 2nd floor and had offered an opportunity for me to become her disciple on the 6th floor. Including this, she had given me two skills as presents.

The God of Slowness had used all her chances to give a challenger a skill, so it looked like she had used a trick and hid her name to give me an extra skill.

Whenever a god showed interest in me, the God of Slowness would sometimes get anxious. I bet I'm right.

This skill is, just as the name implies, based on time.

If we look at the fact that Battle Concentration was integrated into it, it looks like it has a connection to my level of focus.

I'll ask Kiri Kiri for a more in-depth explanation.

[The God of Slowness is satisfied.]

It looks like it was definitely a skill gifted to me by the God of Slowness.

In any case, I attained another skill from a god.

You're the best, God of Slowness.

[The God of Adventure grumbled.]

Besides the sound of someone grumbling, a portal appeared from the ground and I stepped onto the portal.

“Transport.”

From a loud and chaotic battlefield, I was transported to a quiet and peaceful field.

I saw Kiri Kiri squatting down in the middle of the green field.

Unlike the usual Kiri Kiri, she turned her back halfway towards me and was sitting down.

Kiri Kiri turned her head and stared at me.

She looked like she was sulking.

“Heng!”

Kiri Kiri, who momentarily locked her gaze with mine, snorted and turned her head around.

Chapter 150

Tutorial 26th Floor (1)

“Kiri Kiri.”

“What?” Kiri Kiri asked curtly, with her back turned.

Her response was quite terse, cold, and sharp.

But how sharp could Kiri Kiri's voice be? I mean, c'mon, it's Kiri Kiri.

It just sounds like a little kid sulking at me.

That's actually how it is anyway.

“How many days did you say it would take to clear the 25th floor again?” I asked, turning her body to face me and looking squarely at her face.

Kiri Kiri and I made a simple bet.

It didn't really have much meaning behind it.

But there was a problem: what we bet.

If Kiri Kiri won, I would buy her as many cakes as she wanted.

Conversely, if I won, I wouldn't buy her anything.

“5 days.”

“How many days have passed since? From the day that I started 25th floor?”

“2 days! Heung!”

When she finished speaking, she turned her head away from me.

Doesn't your neck hurt?

I moved in front of her and she once again turned her back on me.

She turned away again, so instead of speaking to her face, I just spoke to her back.

“How long do you think the next floor will take? Let's try and get it right this time.”

“Heng. The next floor should be tough for Hooooojae. It should take at least more than a month. 33 days,” she said, laughing sardonically.

33 days, huh...

One round will pass after 30 days.

“Starting from the 26th floor, even if one round passes, you won't fail the stage. It's just that when the round is over, you'll be forced back into the waiting room, and you'll start off at the place where you ended the last round.”

To put it simply, you don't start over when the round is over, but you continue from where you left off.

“Exactly.”

It looks like the difficulty went up.

When the round is over, you wouldn't start all the way from the beginning. So it wasn't bad from the challenger's perspective.

I had experienced the past rounds and now, I could conquer these stages more safely and comfortably.

Of course, starting over from the beginning of the round was annoying, but in the Tutorial, safety was paramount.

What would it be like if it truly was like that, where when the round finishes, the next round starts up where you left off?

If you're conquering the stage with relatively little difficulty, then you can just continue on in the same way.

However, what if you messed up?

You wouldn't get a chance to go back from the beginning and you'd have to continue the chosen route.

There's never a reset, so there's a chance that you could be stuck on one stage forever.

That danger had already been proven by Lee Chan Yong.

You won't be able to fix the mistakes of your attempt and you'll fall into hell.

“Is it a party stage?”

“The 25th floor is normal. Even if you gathered the 25 challengers, it would take about 2-3 months. There's no way you can clear it within 33 days,” Kiri Kiri finished, laughing.

She laughed like a childish Disney villain.

She looked happy; it's probably because she doesn't expect me to clear the stage on time, so she'll get free cake from the bet.

“I won't be able to buy you any cakes for about a month then, huh?”

Her back turned, the sitting shoulders of Kiri Kiri's flinched.

[Welcome to the 26th floor waiting room.]

[Round 22, Day 2. 10:20 P.M. (22:20)]

I got information on the next stage and information on my Time Confinement skill from Kiri Kiri, and went into the waiting room.

Kiri Kiri was distressed because if my clear time was too slow, she wouldn't be able to eat cake during that long period of time I was on the stage, but if I was too fast in clearing the stage, she still wouldn't be able to eat cake because of the bet.

However, in the end, she was swayed by my sweet talk and she affably explained the next stage.

I also actually gave her some candy.

Now, let's look at the explanation for my Time Confinement skill.

[Time Confinement (Lv.Max)]

Explanation: Stops the flow of time.

During the frozen time, only the user's thoughts can move freely.

The speed at which thoughts are processed depends on the user's ability.

A god who wouldn't say her name has given you this skill as a present.

If you don't figure out her name, she may get angry at you.

It wasn't a really detailed explanation but I got the gist of it.

It stops time, and during that time, only the user's thoughts can act.

Also, during the paused time, how fast the thoughts are processed depends on the user's concentration.

If you lack concentration, you may not even be cognizant during the frozen time.

Even though it's a skill that doesn't require the caster's mana or stamina, it stresses the user's natural ability.

I remembered something that Kiri Kiri had said about the God of Slowness some time ago.

Then, let's test the skill first.

I transformed the Thousand Arms into a sphere and threw the Thousand Arms as high as the eye could see.

When the Thousand Arms began to descend to the ground, I watched the Thousand Arms closely and activated my skill.

[Time Confinement]

When I activated the skill, the Thousands Arms stopped in place.

Rather than just slowing down time, it actually froze time.

I calmly surveyed the area for any signs of movement and then...

1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6...

* * *

10832. 10833. 108...

While I was counting, I heard a ringing noise in my head, and the frozen Thousand Arms resumed falling.

I quickly positioned my hands and caught the falling Thousand Arms.

10800 seconds.

If we take into account the margin of error, the Time Confinement skill can last for roughly 3 hours.

Next up, I needed to see if the Thousand Arms actually moved.

While Time Confinement was active, the Thousand Arms wasn't still.

It moved little by little.

Within 3 hours, the Thousand Arms fell by 1 cm.

It seemed like it didn't move at all, but it wasn't a complete freezing of time.

Three hours...

Hm...

In the past, Kiri Kiri said that a human shouldn't become a disciple to the God of Slowness.

Now I understand that statement a little.

How could it be 3 hours...

Honestly, this skill was closer to an instrument of torture.

Time stop.

What an attractive term.

The problem is, that even I would be frozen in that stopped world.

Only my thoughts would remain, and I would be locked in the frozen world.

I suffered immensely on the 13th floor, so I knew exactly the fearsome power this skill contained.

Someone who is losing their mind wouldn't be able to last for three hours under this skill. You even lose your sense of time and only your thoughts would be able to scream out in the frozen world.

If a human being is locked away in solitary confinement for even a few days, they'd go crazy.

The Time Confinement skill, if used carelessly, wouldn't simply leave you with one or two mental diseases, but could even drive you to attempt suicide.

Of course, this is the case for the average human.

For me, it's a pretty good skill.

During the three hours of the skill, I could maintain my concentration.

I could match the timing of the skill, starting my next move right as the Time Confinement skill ends.

I got a really good skill.

Lately, my concentration has improved immensely, to the point where the Battle Concentration skill was meaningless to me now.

Even if I didn't use the skill, I could maintain the same level of concentration that the skill granted whenever I wanted.

If I wanted to, I could concentrate on a higher level than with the Battle Concentration skill activated.

However, it wasn't on the level of the Time Confinement skill.

The fact that I could use the Time Confinement skill to artificially stop time and allow me to process my thoughts during a pressing battle was a tremendous advantage.

[The God of Adventure is grumbling.]

I got the skill from the God of Slowness, so why do I keep getting messages from the God of Adventure?

I turned the Thousand Arms in my hand back into the form of a longsword.

The Time Confinement skill seemed not only useful as a tool for combat but also useful as a tool for training.

Actually, the skill isn't really different from the Hyperbolic Time Chamber.

Though I can't move my body, I can improve my abilities with just my thoughts.

What's worse, since it's a god skill, it doesn't cost any mana or or anything else, for the matter.

[Time Confinement]

* * *

[Round 22, Day 6. 3:30 (15:30)]

[Welcome to the 26th floor stage.]

I spent a few days using Time Confinement to finish off my training and proceeded to the 26th floor stage.

I could've spent some more time on my training but I thought it was more important to attempt the stage and grow.

During my attempt on the stage, I could also use Time Confinement to train too.

I passed through a room with a bonfire. The stage was quite a bit different compared to the usual stages.

Lights shined in front of my eyes.

I looked at the ceiling and saw a giant chandelier up on the high ceiling.

I haven't even seen a chandelier that large in the outside world.

The interior of the building was made of marble.

From the ceiling, to the walls, the columns, and even the floor.

The interior stuck out since it was decorated here and there with gold and jewels.

There was a soft, red carpet over the floor.

Besides me, there were more than 100 men gathered and standing on the carpet.

Each of them had sparkling weapons and armor readied.

On both sides of the carpet, soldiers wearing armor were lined up. Beyond them, I saw old men wearing long, baggy clothes.

I turned around.

There was a giant gate at the end of the carpet. It looked like it was the entrance to the building. The gate was large enough such that the 25th floor golem could pass through it.

I turned around, looking at the direction opposite of the gate.

The carpet continued on towards a platform.

At the top of the platform, there was a splendid throne.

Also, a man, wearing clothes of the same splendor as the throne, sat upon it.

He's either a king or an emperor. Well, he must be one of the two.

He looked like one of those kind old men who ran the neighborhood bakery.

Firstly, there were a lot of people in my surroundings, but there wasn't any signs of danger.

There wasn't any killing intent or fighting spirit; plus, there wasn't anyone strong enough to post a threat to me.

I was quietly analyzing out the situation and waited for the message that would tell me the stage's objective, but I saw the old bakery man looking embarrassed.

[PR Note: If you haven't noticed, Hojae adopts the emperor's name as the "old bakery man."]

"You... why were you summoned alone?"

Summoned?

The surrounding whispers got louder after he asked his question.

It looks like they're talking about me.

A mix of the words "warrior," "summoning," "failure," "god," "qualification," and "demon king" from the surrounding crowd were overpowering my ears.

Ah, I see what they're talking about.

It's that.

It's this world's story of the hero versus the demon king.

This world's natives would summon a warrior to oppose the demon king, requesting for him to defeat the Demon King. That kind of cliché.

It was palace so grand and magnificent that I could spend spend all the wealth I wanted to and still have money to spare, but what was actually important was that they would summon completely unrelated people to solve their problems.

After they kill the Demon King, they'll try to kill the hero or he'll be married to some unimportant, alienated princess to end their agreement. It was that kind of story.

It might be different if the princess was at least pretty, but if the hero didn't like the princess, the hero, from the reader's perspective, would've been nothing but a scapegoat; someone who they push all their problems to.

It was so cliché that I could figure out this situation immediately.

I could even understand why the 100 people were gathered below the platform.

The stage recommended a 25-person party, so it seems like it was set up so that 25 warriors were summoned in order to form a party.

“Wa-Warrior. Where are your colleagues? Were you truly the only one summoned?”

I wanted to say something back to the old man who kept repeating himself, but a message popped up in front of my eyes.

[The 26th floor challenge is starting.]

Explanation: Half of the Heiog continent has been conquered by the demons, and it has been 35 years since the Humans declared war on them.

Sometimes, the demons would acquire victory, and sometimes the humans would.

The long, protracted war has devastated the continent as both human and demon casualties rose astronomically.

2 years ago, the demons found a way to end the war.

They summoned a being their distant ancestors worshipped: the one who rules hell, the Demon King.

Because the ceremony had been active over the past two years, there isn't much time until the Demon King descends on the world.

The empire would take care of the Demon King, but in order for them to defeat the demons, they summoned a warrior from another world.

Of the summoned warriors, only the qualified individual may awaken the sealed holy sword and use its power to defeat the Demon King.

Warrior.

As a warrior that will save this world, prove your worthiness, and lift the holy sword's seal.

Only that way, can you defeat the Demon King.

[Clear conditions]

1. Acquire the unsealed Holy Sword.

2. Defeat the Demon King.

“Open your mouth. Say something, Warrior. Were you truly summoned by yourself?”

Chapter 151

Tutorial 26th Floor (2)

[They ignored me because I'm a woman, or they laughed in front of my face. I couldn't believe it. Was it the same for you, mister?]

[I wonder. I don't really remember that kind of thing that well. Rather, regarding the Demon King that emerges on that stage...]

[You're really just ignoring me. You're making me feel bad by just differentiating treatment of the trivial things like your accommodations or your food.]

[I see, so that's how it was. So about that Demon King.]

[Mister, do you know what happened just a moment ago? You see, I...]

[...]

* * *

“Warrior, were you truly summoned by yourself?”

“Yeah, so?”

I roughly answered the old man's persistent question that he'd been asking me for some time.

So where's the holy sword?

It doesn't look like it's here in this brilliant place.

The conditions for clearing the 26th floor were to acquire the holy sword and defeat the Demon King.

The prerequisites for defeating the Demon King aren't complete just by acquiring the holy sword.

In any case, I need to acquire the holy sword to defeat the Demon King, and then I'll be able to clear the stage.

However, there's been a continuous uproar in the background.

As I look at my surroundings, I saw the flushed faces of the old men on the two ends, asking each other 'what happened'.

They weren't women and they were really old grandpas, yet their faces were so flushed that it wasn't really a good sight for my eyes.

Let's ask them why they're acting like that.

“Even though he's a summoned warrior, to be so rude and flippant...”

“There was definitely an issue with the summoning. If that wasn't the case, there's no way that only one person would be summoned. In fact, he looks like a troublemaker...”

Yep. I don't need to hear this.

It would be best if I just ignore them and find the holy sword.

Firstly, it doesn't look like it's in this palace.

I'll disperse a little bit of my mana and see if I can detect the holy sword.

With that thought in mind, I drew out some of my mana.

“Look here, enough of that.”

While I was activating my magic circuits, someone to my side spoke to me.

He was 190 cm tall, had a greatsword tied to his back, and wore armor from head to toe. He also had a great deal of mana in his body.

Considering that he's also standing atop the carpet like me, he must also be one of the summoned warriors.

"If you recklessly draw out your mana here, then..."

Kwang!

I ignored the man's words and continued to spread my mana, creating an explosive sound from the ground.

A faint, bright magic circle activated but suddenly stopped.

So it seems there was a magic circle drawn on the floor that suppressed the activation of magic.

Though, it was a pretty poor magic circle.

I spread out my mana and waited for a minute, and was able to determine the holy sword's location.

It was located deep beneath the castle, where the palace was located on top of.

It's there.

The holy sword was easy to find since it not only emitted powerful mana, but I could also feel the distinct presence of a god's power.

Whatever the case, I succeeded in finding the location of the holy sword.

I felt proud since I could sense improvement in my handling of mana.

I liked that I had achieved my primary objective, but I felt like the surrounding mood had changed a little.

The old men, who had been yelling for some time, all together closed their mouths, and the soldiers on the sides of the carpet put their hands to their swords, and advanced one step forward.

Also, the summoned warriors, who were standing atop the carpet, paled in fear.

All their attention was on me.

What is this?

“Why? What's wrong?”

I asked the man who had warned me just a moment ago.

I had only asked him since he was the closest one to me, but the man shook his head and stepped back.

“No, no, it's nothing.”

At the end of his words, a heavy silence dropped onto the palace.

I felt bad because I realized too late that they were silent because I had destroyed the magic circle below my feet.

I was just awkwardly standing there and the old man rose from his throne.

“Warrior, thank you for accepting the empire's summon. I welcome you as the representative of the empire. We had originally intended to summon 25 warriors, but because you were summoned alone, there was a brief error. I apologize for not trusting you immediately. However, in this palace of the sky, the rule is that all use of magic is forbidden. Please refrain from using magic here.”

I responded to the old man who had sincerely apologized first.

“Yes. Thank you for welcoming me. I apologize for hastily using magic here. Although it was defective, I destroyed the installed magic circle, so I apologize.”

“...There's no way that that magic circle was defective but...” he trailed off and cleared his throat.

The old man put strength in his stomach and began speaking in a resounding voice.

“The five groups of heroes have finally been summoned here, to this Kuranubus. I am this empire's Emperor and as the sole ruler of this continent, I once again, welcome you. Just today, the great god accepted our desperate request from all the citizens of our empire and responded to us here, in the center of the empire, Kuranubus. Not for those barbaric, crafty demons, but for the empire's righteous cause...”

In contrast to his loud voice, he had an odd accent, and spoke very slowly.

Old man... No, the emperor. As I stood still and listened to the emperor, I felt a sense of déjà vu.

“I solemnly declare under the azure sky. The evil demons and the demon (Demon King) that they summoned, will fall to the holy sword which contains the great god's will. This is because the empire's will is the same as the god's will...”

That's strange. This sounds like something I've heard before.

His self-indulgence was written all over his face.

It wasn't any different from a principal's speech.

It seemed like he was talking about something really important, but the contents didn't go into my head, and his speech made me tired for no special reason.

He kept on delivering a list of pointless words.

Instead of continuing to listen to him ramble on, I sent a message to Park Jung Ah.

[Lee Ho Jae, 26th floor: What's up?]

[Park Jung Ah, 47th floor: Clearing now.]

Clearing?

[Park Jung Ah, 47th floor: I'm in the middle of clearing a floor.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 26th floor: Ah, I see. I'll talk to you later then.]

[Park Jung Ah, 47th floor: Ok.]

It looks like she's busy.

Seeing as how she hung up, she might've actually been in the middle of a fight.

If that's truly the case, she didn't really need to respond to my message immediately.

She must be busy with her work with the Order of Vigilance, but Park Jung Ah is also clearing the Tutorial at the same time.

Currently, she's gotten up to the 47th floor.

If we consider the fact that she allots most of her time to her work for the Order of Vigilance, Park Jung Ah and her party member's speed in clearing the Tutorial is on the faster side.

“From the castle in the sky, past the oceans and to the barren desert, all the citizens of the empire who live on this world...”

His speech is still going on.

It's kind of uncomfortable.

Is it because I continually used Time Confinement to train for a few days?

I had trained whilst maintaining a high degree of concentration, yet I had been alone.

There was nothing moving in my surroundings besides me and I pretty much couldn't move either.

But now, since I've come to such a bright, populated, and very noisy place, I felt uncomfortable and my attention was scattered.

What's worse is that even if I pay attention, the only thing I can hear is a useless speech.

“Once again, to all the warriors who accepted the empire's summons...”

“If it's the holy sword that contains the great god's power, even that wicked Demon King's plans...”

His speech still didn't end.

So... when exactly are you going to give us the holy sword?

* * *

After the boring speech in the palace, there was an even more tedious declaration ceremony that followed.

The summoned warriors altogether recited their script and repeatedly said how they received the blessing from the god.

The bestowment ceremony was next.

They conferred upon me a weird post and a medal, pointlessly wasting valuable time. Next, I received clothes befitting my new post and was told that I got some territory somewhere on this continent.

After I attentively listened to the long history of that land, they declared that I would be conferred the aforementioned land, and soon it was time to express thanks for the land.

The more-than 100 warriors all finished the conferment ceremony and it quickly became very late in the afternoon.

After the emperor announced the end of the bestowment ceremony, I read my schedule and it said that it was now time for a simple dinner, accompanied by a social party for grandiose events.

Aristocratic-looking people began endlessly pouring into the palace from somewhere, and I got sick and tired of them, so I escaped to the outside of the palace.

I, who had escaped outside, was guided to my lodgings inside of the castle.

It was already late at night, so we would proceed with the rest of the events in my schedule tomorrow.

Would tomorrow's schedule be similar to today's? I felt really anxious.

I was guided to my lodging, a separate three floor building which resided inside the castle.

Perhaps it was meant as a place to stay for the group of 25 warriors, because it was far too big for me to use by myself.

I momentarily stopped in front of the main door.

I don't really like spaces like this that are humongous while also completely empty.

I'd have preferred it if they had given me a small single room instead.

While I thought that, I heard a knock from behind me and the doors opened.

“Excuse me.”

The person who had entered was an armorclad woman.

“Hello, how are you? I am Seregia Cromwell, head of the Kunon Knight Order.”

“Yes. I am Lee Ho Jae. Nice to meet you.”

“You can speak more comfortably around me, Warrior.”

“Yes. Of course.”

It would still be kind of strange to speak so informally with her.

She had introduced herself as the head of the knight order, and she looked a few years older than me.

“From now on, our Kunon Knight Order will be responsible for guiding and protecting you, Warrior. Until the day your mission is over, Warrior, we'll work together with you. If you're perhaps curious about something or have something you need, just tell me anytime.”

Listening to her, it sounded like she would act like a manager for me.

She would be responsible for both guiding me and protecting me.

It would also double as keeping a close eye on me.

“Then about that Kulon Knight Order.”

“It's the Kunon Knight Order, Warrior.”

“How many knights of the Kunon Knight Order are responsible for me?”

“Just me.”

How strange.

Just a moment ago, Seregia, the female knight, had introduced herself as the head of the Kunon Knight Order.

So only she, the head of the knight order, is responsible for me?

And of all the things she was assigned to do, she had to clean up after me?

Seregia must've seen doubt on my face so she followed up with an explanation.

“The truth is... The only member of the Kunon Knight Order is me.”

So what you're saying is that you're the only member of the Kunon Knight Order and at the same time, you're its leader.

I wondered whether they could really attach the word 'order' to 'knight' when there was only one member.

“...Can you still call that an order of knights?”

“Yes, I can.”

Seregia replied firmly.

It was a little ridiculous that she responded so confidently.

“I wasn't alone at the beginning. After the previous head of the knight order passed away, the ranks remained empty, that's all.”

Wait a minute. Then you're saying that the entire knight order only consisted of you and the previous head?

So this knight order was a lot more amazing than I thought.

“So how did the previous knight leader die?”

“He passed away from old age.”

“...That's unfortunate.”

“He was over 90 years old when he died. That's quite the luxury.”

“Yes. You're right.”

Strangely, it seems like all the knights I've met all have a screw loose somewhere.

Is this a coincidence?

“No, I don't have a loose screw somewhere.”

Seregia said, clearly and proudly.

So why are you responding so confidently?

I don't understand at all.

Honestly, the fact that she's the only one in the Kunon Knight Order is good news for me.

It means that there's only one piece of baggage that I have to lug around.

“Usually, the number of knights responsible for the group of warriors is at minimum, over 30. However, in your case, Warrior, because you were uniquely summoned alone, it looks like I was assigned to you. Because of you, Warrior, I have gotten my first mission since entering the knight order. It's truly an honor.”

What? Did you just say your first mission?

“...Pardon me, but when did you first join the knight order?

“I joined four years ago.”

“...If you didn't do anything for four years, it sounds like rather than being a knight, you were closer to being unemployed.”

“I think so too.”

That was when I started thinking that Seregia might be hurting under all that outward confidence.

I set aside my questions about the solitary knight order that she belonged to and rather, decided to ask her about more important matters.

“Then... For now, please tell me about my future schedule.”

“Yes. I understand.”

* * *

“So what you're saying is that from now on, for three days continuously, I have pretty much the same schedule as today, and then we start our real work?”

“Yes. Beginning on the fourth day, you will start your mission in earnest. Also, of the ten missions, the Warrior with the highest results will become the representative of the warrior group. They will be preferentially granted the qualification to be able to go through the holy sword's test.”

“What's the holy sword's test?”

“Yes. There is a legend that not just anyone can draw the holy sword. Pulling out the sword barehanded is the holy sword's test.”

If it's a holy sword, that's naturally the kind of test it would be.

“Then, in order to be tested by the holy sword, what about the missions that we have to carry out?”

“I also do not know the details. Perhaps the missions haven't been decided yet, but it is probably a mission related to the war with the demons, suppressing the monsters in our territory, or perhaps it will be a mission about pursuing the witches' forces.

So, the empire is going to first make us do this and that in order to suck us dry while taking all credit.

If they were to just pick the strongest warrior, there wouldn't be a need to do the inconvenient ten tasks.

They could just use duels or a competition in order to pick the strongest.

I don't like it at all.

You want me to just do as I'm told, but it's too much of a hassle.

Chapter 152

Tutorial 26th Floor (3)

No matter how I plan it, there's no way I'll move according to the schedule Seregia told me about. It was cumbersome and it took too long, but that wasn't the main problem. I just wouldn't be able to take it.

Before the three days are up, I'll explode and start arguing with someone or I might even run away somewhere.

Ultimately, even when the mission starts, there would be no guarantee that it doesn't include empty formalities.

“Do you have a map?”

“Did you need a map? There should be one here. Please, come this way.”

I followed Seregia, and we reached the living quarters. There was a huge map stuck to the wall.

This place seems to be a conference room, since there's a huge table in front of the wall with chairs arranged around it.

“Please wait for a moment. I need to first light a candle...”

I could see the map without light, but Seregia wouldn't be able to.

I heard her rummage for something in the dim room, so she must be looking for flint or a magical tool with similar uses.

But it's never easy to find something in the dark, especially when you didn't know where it was to begin with.

I spoke to Seregia, who was hurriedly looking through the drawer.

“It's fine. I'll do it.”

I went up to the candle and used my magic.

“Fire.”

I brought my finger that was emitting a tiny flame to the wick of the candle and lit it.

I lit up around five candles and managed to illuminate the room.

“So you could use magic as well. You're truly amazing,” Seregia complimented, with a somewhat embarrassed expression.

I've been steadily practicing magic, so I can use a little bit now.

I've only gotten to the point of using Fire, and Wind Arrow, but I'll only be able to master the rest once I get past the 30th floor and receive a new book about magic.

“Yes, well, that's how it is.”

Honestly speaking, it felt great to be complimented but I acted indifferent.

“I didn't think you would be a Magic Swordsman. I heard that in order to become a Magic Swordsman, you need to be naturally talented and put in a lot of effort...”

“Wait. One second, please.”

Seregia stopped and I asked.

“How did you know I was an swordsman?”

“Are you not?” she replied.

“You're right.”

Seregia just inadvertently revealed that I was a swordsman. But how? There's nothing sticking out that says 'I'm an swordsman!'.

I don't have a sword. I don't have a sheath or a sword rack either. Besides my light armor, I'm completely unarmed.

After seeing my appearance and my magic just now, she should've assumed that I was a Magician, rather than a Magic Swordsman.

Even after I pointed that out, I stubbornly asked how she knew that I was an swordsman.

“Yes... well, I just knew. I knew when I saw the magic at your fingertips, and even by just looking at how your hands hang normally. You're right-handed, right? With a longsword about yay big,” Seregia explained, stretching out her arms to indicate her assumed length of his longsword.

It was the length of the Thousand Arms longsword form that I often used.

“How do you know the length of my sword?” I asked.

“I saw it in the palace,” Seregia said.

I don't remember drawing my sword in the palace.

“Could you please explain in greater detail?”

“I was also in the palace, so I was able to observe you, Warrior. I realized that you have three ‘intervals.’”

[PR Note: These “intervals” are actually attack ranges or the distance between him and his enemies. Think about 3 concentric circles with Ho Jae at the center. The three different “zones” represent his attack “intervals.” Depending on which ring the enemy is in, Ho Jae’s reaction will differ. slightly.]

“What ‘intervals’ are you talking about?”

“I'm talking about the intervals of your attack ranges. Firstly, from this short distance, within that interval, when another warrior has closed in, you would have immediately reacted. As your left foot stepped back this way, you would be able to react immediately. The next interval is about the distance between me and you right now. Say another warrior is about this far away. I'd say it's a range where you would be able to swing your sword after taking a single step. Then, based on your stance and the fact that you're right-handed, it'd be a sword, about this long.”

After I listened to Seregia's in-depth explanation, I saw her differently.

When we had first entered the estate, she had conversed with me but had never once stepped into the range of my sword.

She had accurately measured my effective range and she had always maintained a half-step away from it. Even now, she kept her distance.

She's a genius.

Seregia's physical strength or her mana capacity may fall short to the warriors in the palace, but the level of her natural ability wasn't lacking compared to theirs; it might actually be far superior.

Her genius-like ability wasn't something just anyone could attain.

She was born with that ability.

It doesn't simply end with a detective-like observational ability.

That ability could be used on herself as well as against an opponent that she's fighting against.

“Okay, then what is my third effective range?” I asked.

“I felt it when you spread out your mana, Warrior. Because I'm not strong enough, I don't know for certain, but it easily includes everything within the Emperor's vicinity at the bare minimum.”

I thought she'd just be a burden, but it turns out she has abilities.

“You're quite amazing,” I said.

* * *

“This mountaintop will be the place where the Demon King awakens,” Seregia said.

“How long will it take to go from here to the top of the mountain?” I asked.

“Even if we go by horseback, it should take at least four months.”

It was much farther than I thought.

“Once you acquire the holy sword, you should be able to use the teleport magic circle to travel to the Bulut Fort. The Bulut Fortress is close to the frontlines and is also the closest teleportable location from here.”

“Then how long will it take if we go from the fort?”

“It should take a bit more than half a month.”

Kiri Kiri had assured me that I would never be able to clear the 26th floor within a month. Now I understood why. There were too many empty formalities and procedures to go through.

The stage's setting was much too large.

I didn't think it would take this much time just getting there.

“Can I freely use that teleportation circle?”

“Yes, you can, but it's not in your schedule.”

So I can use it.

It seems like I'll have to skip parts of the story.

Supposedly, I'll acquire the holy sword after I finish the missions, and defeat the Demon King. Yeah, no. Rather than following that storyline, I'll just defeat the Demon King myself. Yeah, that'd be better.

Acquiring the holy sword and defeating the Demon King should be enough to clear the stage.

"Knight Leader," I said.

"You can use my name," Seregia said.

"Then may I call you the Lady Cromwell?"

"You can call me Seri."

"...Lady Seregia."

"Yes, Warrior?"

It's strangely difficult to maintain a conversation with this woman. She's fickle and she oddly seems to miss the point.

"For the next few days, I really don't think I'll need my schedule," I said.

"Yes, I agree," Seregia replied.

"So for the next three days, I'll visit the Bulut Fort. I'll go reconnoiter our enemies and prepare for the upcoming battle. I believe that would be more useful to us."

"Yes, I understand. Then I'll prepare the teleportation magic circle for you. Will you leave tomorrow morning?" she responded naturally, maintaining her characteristic poker face.

I was a bit taken aback since she was so straightforward.

Strangely, there were a lot of events that agitated me today.

“Isn't it against the rules to go off-schedule?”

“Of course it's not allowed.”

“Then shouldn't you be stopping me, Lady Seregia?”

I had thought she would stop me, so I had formulated various excuses and I had even thought about threatening her if that didn't work out, but...

“I'll report that I had tried my best to stop you, but that I failed,” Seregia said.

“...Ok, do as you wish.”

It turned out for the best. Her actions wouldn't harm me, either.

She said she would make the preparations herself, so what is there to complain about?

Although it felt awkward, I decided to ask for another favor.

She said she would fulfill all of my requests, so let's see if she was telling the truth.

“Lady Seregia, then can you teach me some swordsmanship?” I asked.

“Did you say swordsmanship?”

“Yes, I'd like to see this world's swordsmanship.”

Seregia briefly pondered on it before responding.

“I'm sorry, but I don't think I can. Because the Kunon Knight Order belongs to the royal family, it is forbidden for me to teach an outsider our swordsmanship,” Seregia replied.

I recollected the knight on the 16th floor.

The knight had eagerly taught him the essence of the royal swordsmanship as if he was passing out snacks.

“Teaching our swordsmanship to outsiders is such a grave offense that if others were to find out, there would be severe punishments, like being exiled to the Kunon Knight Order. Since I'm the only member of the Kunon Knight Order, they may confiscate my wealth, so it would be difficult to just hand over the kingdom's swordsmanship.”

[PR Note: Apparently, being sent to the Kunon Knight Order is implied as a PUNISHMENT.]

...Were you exiled to the Kunon Knight Order?

I didn't think it was such a severe punishment.

Since I gave her an unreasonable request, I apologized.

Also, I thought that it was quite unfortunate that she had been exiled to the Kunon Knight Order.

“It's alright. I get paid each month.”

“I see... Then I'll see you tomorrow morning?”

“Yes. I'll finish the preparations and come pick you up tomorrow morning. Good night.”

Seregia finished her goodbyes and left the residence.

She was a complex person in many ways. That had been our confounding first encounter.

* * *

After I had parted with Seregia, I used my Sneak skill and left the residence.

There didn't seem to be anyone with the ability to sense my presence in the vicinity.

Plus, I had used my Sneak skill, so I wasn't worried that anyone would find me.

I arrived in the castle's basement without interference. The castle's basement contained the sleeping holy sword.

There were soldiers guarding the center passageway, but when they briefly turned their attention elsewhere, I seized the opportunity and passed by them.

The holy sword was at the end of the passageway. It was stuck inside of a magic circle on the floor.

It was wildly spurting out mana and within that mana, I could feel a small trace of a God. It was definitely the holy sword.

As I got close, the holy sword hummed and began vibrating. The surrounding mana vibrated as well.

It's just a sword... how could this be happening?

I felt an overwhelming amount of mana coming from the sword.

If this was a person rather than a sword, I wouldn't think twice before fighting him.

I grabbed the continuously humming holy sword with my right hand and drew it.

It didn't really feel like a holy sword and I just drew it from the floor.

I think I passed the holy sword's test?

[Warrior.]

A voice rang out in my head. It was the voice of a big, middle-aged man. He sounded like a narrator from a documentary.

[Warrior, can you hear me?]

It must be this sword's voice.

[Warrior, can you hear me?]

The dignified, middle-aged voice continuously asked.

If it could talk, they should've made it a girl's voice.

[Warrior, please listen to me. Please. Please...]

“I'm listening.”

[Oh! Dear God, thank you very much! Warrior, why didn't you respond immediately? Did you know how surprised I was?]

What a talkative sword. Should I say that it's a sword with an ego?

“You're the holy sword, right?”

[Yes, of course. I am truly the holy sword. To be exact, I am a magic sword imbued with the sword spirit, Ahoubuch. I am a sword with a blessing from the great god of the blue skies. Wow. It feels great to talk after such a long time!]

“Ahoubuch?”

[That's my name, Warrior. You have my respect, Warrior. I love you, Warrior.]

It was quite the affable sword.

It did have one flaw, though.

It said it loved me with a man's voice... when I heard that, I felt goosebumps.

“By the way, don't most of the spirits in swords have a female voice?”

[...My apologies. When I was still a human, I was born as a man.]

So he was a human before.

I wonder how he became a sword spirit.

[I'll try harder, Warrior. Like this, or like this. Shall I try to make my voice cuter?]

“No, don't, before I stick you back into the ground.”

[Yes. I'm sorry, Warrior. Please don't put me back, Warrior. This is the first time I'm speaking to someone in 200 years, Warrior. Please.]

It seems like he wasn't normal even when he was a human.

The holy sword suddenly became serious, speaking calmly.

[Warrior, could you please tell me your name?]

“Lee Ho Jae.”

[Yes. Warrior Lee Ho Jae, you should now be able to handle the holy sword's power. If we're together, we can defeat any wicked foe. Normally, whenever you're in danger, I'm supposed to tell you my hidden abilities one by one, but since you're the warrior who pulled me out after no less than 200 years, I'll specially tell you all my abilities from the start. First...”

While the holy sword told me about its abilities, I thought about the stage's difficulty.

The first mission, acquiring the holy sword was so... boring.

Perhaps acquiring the holy sword is supposed to be difficult.

If that's true, it's somewhat regrettable that I passed the mission this easily.

[...Next, justice! Love! Friendship! Cry out those words and I will shine light. With that, the magic will be invoked.]

“What would happen to an unqualified person who tried to draw you?” I asked, cutting off the holy sword.

[I'm sorry? An unqualified person? They just wouldn't be able to pull me out. And they would feel a little pain in their grip. That's all.]

“How do you determine who's qualified?”

[I determine who is qualified by their fundamental abilities. You must also be acknowledged by many gods and you must be able to handle your mana in various ways. That's because I'm fundamentally a magic sword. Of course, you must also have a certain mastery of swordsmanship.]

They're terribly specific conditions: basic abilities, being acknowledged by the gods, handling mana, and swordsmanship.

The holy sword had somewhat explained the criteria for drawing it, but it couldn't be that simple.

All those skills must be extraordinary.

Amongst them, the most difficult condition was knowing swordsmanship.

What if a challenger for the 26th floor didn't know how to use a sword? What are they supposed to do?

Of course, it's supposed to be a party stage with a 25 person party, so at least one of them should be able to handle a sword. Maybe it's purposely set up like that.

But using common sense...

How the hell are 25 people going to get up to the 26th floor on Hell Difficulty?

The next challenger will definitely have to take on the 26th floor alone.

And if they're not proficient with a sword, they'll have to stay on the 26th floor and practice their swordsmanship.

What's worse, there's no reset on this stage.

Seriously, the difficulty is way too damn high.

Lee Hyung Jin only focuses on daggers, so even if I wanted to warn him now...

He might barely be able to use swords, but a dagger was his main weapon.

I'll tell him to start practicing with a longsword starting tomorrow.

The holy sword's conditions were terribly specific, so it wasn't easy to get its approval. The ten missions were even worse.

The difficulty was certainly hard enough.

Next, let's think about taking down the Demon King.

[Warrior? May I continue explaining?]

“No, let me organize my thoughts.”

[Yes. I understand, Warrior. Take your time.]

The holy sword is definitely really powerful.

If I take into account the sword's magic spells, I'll become even stronger. If I master those and use them well, I'll be able to exert overwhelming power.

Also, the warrior who holds the holy sword becomes the leader of the five groups of warriors, and plays a pivotal role in defeating the demon king.

Theoretically, the five groups of warriors should number 125. Add to that the Empire's knights.

When we attack the Demon King, they'll probably send soldiers as well.

I tried to estimate the Demon King's strength.

“It sounds like fun.”

[I'm sorry? Shall I continue explaining, Warrior?]

“No, I'm really sorry, but I think I'll have to put you back. Since it'd be theft if I just took you. I'll take down the Demon King first and then I'll come back.”

I'd finally found a strong opponent, so I didn't want to borrow the sword's strength to take on the Demon King.

I want to test my growing strength.

I'll fight him once and if it doesn't work out, it wouldn't be too late to fight him with the holy sword after.

[What are you... Warrior? Warrior, please don't. Please.]

The holy sword pleaded, but I flipped the holy sword around and stuck it into the ground.

[Warrior, please. You can just keep me with you. Don't put me back into the ground... Warrior, wait a moment. Seriously, just wait a minute!]

I put the sword deep into the ground.

[Seriously, give me a minute... You asshole...!]

I pushed the sword all the way down until I couldn't hear the sword's voice anymore.

Its last words sounded like curses directed at me.

Was I imagining it?

Chapter 153

Tutorial 26th Floor (4)

The next morning, I followed Seregia, who came by the lodge to pick me up, and we went to the magic circle located within the castle.

There were several magicians at the location of the magic circle as well as dozens of guards, but when she showed them some sort of identification, they authorized the use of the magic circle without much fuss.

“Please take this, Warrior,” Seregia said, giving me a paper bag.

“This is for you to throw up into.”

“Throw up into this?”

“Yes. If you use the teleportation magic circle to travel, you'll lose your sense of balance and feel extremely dizzy. At that time, if you feel nauseous, vomit into this.”

I didn't think I'd feel dizzy and vomit, but I said that I understood.

In the past, on a trip on a cruise ship, they had given me a plastic bag. It was the same kind of feeling.

It just so happened to have rained that day, accompanied by high waves, so there was the ceaseless sound of vomiting in the auditorium.

My nephew had held onto his plastic bag and vomited like crazy.

Because of the unpleasantly sour smell filling the cruise ship, I had almost gotten motion sickness...

Let's stop it with the nauseating thoughts.

“Please don't be so tense and do not resist against it by drawing from your mana pool.”

Seregia's additional request was simultaneously accompanied by the activation of the magic circle.

The mana started to move, shone, and I was transported.

It wasn't much different from the portal in the stage's waiting room.

It was a little different in terms of comfort, but it was a feeling I had become accustomed to.

The transported location's weather was a bit gloomy.

It was a complete contrast to the clear and bright weather from before.

Also...

Retch.

Seregia was vomiting heavily.

She had turned her head, but the vomiting sounds that she was making were so graphic that I could picture them in my head.

I felt a few goosebumps.

After Seregia had calmed down a little and gargled some water in her mouth, she approached me and started talking.

“Hoo, I heard that citrus tea definitely helps with motion sickness.”

That was the first time I had heard something like that.

“Those are groundless rumors,” I said.

Of course, that's probably the case.

“As a result, I got to see the sparsely dappled white citron flowers mixed in the yellow gastric fluid. It was really unpleasant.”

“Why exactly are you explaining that to me?”

“Let's, let's go, Warrior. It's this way.”

I followed Seregia's lead.

Beyond the walls, there was a battle going on, so it was noisy; inside of the walls, there were soldiers busily running around while we were going towards the watchtower, but no one restrained Seregia.

“You seem to know the geography of the area quite well.”

Seregia hadn't stopped even once, hadn't wavered, and continued walking.

“Yes. That's because when I was on vacation, I would occasionally come here.”

“Why would you come here?”

“I came to watch the battle.”

She talked about it like she was going to the movie theaters on the weekend.

“Because of that, we were permitted to use the teleportation magic circle without any misgivings. The soldiers probably won't even bat an eye if they see me,” Seregia said, laughing amusingly.

I felt that her words were odd.

So she didn't make a formal request to come here.

“Ah, in your case, Warrior, I will just tell them that you're my valet, so they will let you pass easily. Of course, there's no way that someone of the Kunon Knight Order would have a valet, but people don't know much about the Kunon Knight Order.”

“Is that so? Rather, don't they know well that the Kunon Knight Order is a peculiar knight order?”

“No. In general, they aren't even aware of its existence. My identification only has a mark stating that I am a knight belonging to the royal family, but there's no mark for the Kunon Knight Order. The Kunon Knight Order is pretty much an invisible man socially.”

“I suppose. Depending on the situation that can be an advantage.”

She meant that nobody paid attention to them and nobody would touch them. Although they were considered invisible men, for some reason, I felt completely fine with that.

“Yes. As long as we don't make any noticeable mistakes, nobody will care about what we do. Because of that, my wallet is always full.”

Yes... how nice.

It was the same when she had talked about her wealth being seized, but Seregia looks like she doesn't have any interest in worldly affairs and seems quite snobbish.

Seregia had led me through the fortress, arriving at the watchtower above the rampart.

Seregia spoke whilst hanging up a 'no trespassing' sign at the entrance of the watchtower.

“This is my secret spot. The watchtower isn't used because it's far too forward and it's within range of enemy magicians. The entrance is also in a corner. It's just the thing for looking around unnoticed.”

The watchtower does indeed have a panoramic view of the surrounding area.

The battle was in full swing beyond the walls.

“I didn't know a battle was going on. Should we go and help?”

“It's fine, Warrior. You see our forces over there? Those are all golems.”

Taking a closer look, the soldiers on the walls that were fighting the demons weren't humans, but golems.

The golems were around 2 meters tall and had sturdy builds. Although their movements looked a bit slow, they wouldn't stop moving until they were completely destroyed.

Although the Demons' soldiers seemed both wild and ferocious, the golems weren't pushed back and continued to hold their own.

“Those golems are summoned and managed by magicians. We don't lose much if they're destroyed, so you don't have to worry about it too much.”

So, they aren't guarding the fort from atop the wall, but rather, they're summoning and controlling the golems from up there.

“They don't normally get pushed back to the front of the fort. But in the case that that happens, we cannot stay in this watchtower, since it would be dangerous.”

Seregia finished explaining and took something out from under the platform in the corner.

They were snacks.

“Would you like some?”

Seregia calmly offered the hidden snacks to me.

I have a hunch that she might've hidden alcohol somewhere too.

“...No, I'll just continue to watch.”

After I refused her offer, Seregia calmly started to eat her snacks alone.

What an unusual person.

It might be strange for me of all people to call her that, but Seregia was really strange.

The battle was progressing smoothly.

The golems were on the offensive, but they were being noticeably pushed back. After hearing that it wasn't much of a loss even if they were destroyed, I saw the progress of the battle differently.

At any rate, the humans with mana to spare used it to hold back the enemy.

With that much, I could say that it was an effective harassment.

While the golems put up a good fight against the Demons' soldiers, they were being steadily brought down one by one.

“Do they not have any defense against magic?”

“Yes. Since they're golems, even if the enemy magicians only cast Dispel on them, the golems will easily crumble. They're also weak to large-scale magic. However, from the start, magicians can't be too far from the golems, and they'll eventually turn back into a pile of rocks when their time is up. They're just low-rank golems, so I think they're doing plenty enough.”

But if you just intercept the magicians, I think you'll have much more significant results.

The Demons' soldiers alone wouldn't be able to take on the golems and they'll be pushed back. Then, they'll naturally have to abandon their position and they might even have to retreat.

I don't know much about the battle, but their retreat would definitely be a favorable outcome.

I organized my thoughts and called the snack-eating Seregia.

“Lady Seregia, could you explain to me where the Demon King is located again, please?”

Seregia took out a map from her bag and started explaining.

“There is a ceremony being performed to summon the Demon King at the top of this mountain. It's west of here, so... it's that mountain over there.”

There was a ghastly energy surging into the sky from the mountaintop that Seregia had mentioned.

It would be difficult to notice it immediately since it was so far away, but once I concentrated I could feel that ominous energy.

“This is the fort's current location. And here and here are the strategic points for the Demons. And here, there's an occupied fort. Also, beyond that fort, there are the plains where we've gotten reports that several new villages have been created. There are at least 20 of them.”

Seregia briefly caught her breath and continued her explanation.

“The Demons' reproductive rate is extremely fast. That's why they're capable of doing something crazy like summoning the Demon King. There are probably soldiers that have just been birthed from those new villages stationed around here. We haven't gotten any reports on their exact location, so we don't really know. Also, if you follow this river, there might be a few guard posts. We haven't gotten any reports, but I think I heard that they're transporting their supplies down the river.”

Seregia explained the important points around the fort and the mountains using the map.

While I only honestly needed to know where the mountaintop where the Demon King was being summoned was, the contents were very detailed so I listened attentively.

Although I felt bad for Seregia, I didn't come here to sight-see.

I think I should just take care of the Demon King while I'm here.

And take care of all the demons that get in my way.

“Lady Seregia.”

I stood up and called for Seregia.

“Yes. Do you want some snacks?”

“...No. I'm sorry, but please wait here, Lady Seregia.”

“Where are you going?”

“I'm going up to the mountaintop where the Demon King is being summoned.”

“That's reckless.”

She left the crevice in the watchtower and responded.

“I personally don't think so.”

I launched myself out of the watchtower and dropped to the ground.

On the way, I activated my Talaria's Wings and flew towards the battlefield.

Originally, I had planned to use Soul Cry to gather up all the enemies in the surrounding area and killing them before heading to the Demon King.

However, contrary to my expectations, Seregia had, without any prior notice, brought me here.

In this situation, if I used Soul Cry rashly, allies would be caught in it as well.

Invoking the Soul Cry, Soul Siphon, Talaria's Wings, and Indomitable skills had one weakness: they didn't differentiate between friend and foe.

Soul Cry affects who I perceive as my enemy and the person who perceives me as an enemy. If I used it improperly, the commander here might send his troops to attack me.

So, there were two methods available for me to use all my strength.

One was using Seregia to tell the commander about my existence.

This seems like it'd be a real hassle.

He'd start with asking why I'm here and then he'd lecture me about how I'd messed with the schedule and talk about how I can't move arbitrarily or maybe even talk about how I can't just secretly hide in the watchtower.

That plan had more than just one or two problems.

It would waste a lot of time too.

The second method was much simpler.

Just make all the battlefield's commanders and soldiers aware of me, that I'm on their side.

At the very least, that I'm an enemy of the Demons.

I flew in the air and I verified the Demon Magicians' location.

They still hadn't noticed me flying above them.

When one of the magicians uttered an incantation, I quickly descended and tore through him.

My fingertips had pierced through his chest, killing him, and I leapt back into the air once more.

I found my next target and ambushed him.

This time, while I was flying around, I struck the side of a magician's face.

The magician's head violently twisted, breaking his neck, and killing him.

I flew back into the sky again.

I repeated this a few times and cut down their numbers one by one, so the enemy should notice me soon.

I descended again and aimed for my next target.

Perhaps the enemy commander became aware of me since the magic flew towards me all at once.

However, the magic projectiles weren't really that fast.

There weren't that many of them either.

I easily evaded them one by one and approached my target.

“Flame Strike.”

The magician right in front of me cast his magic.

Since we were really close, instead of evading it, I roughly blocked it with my wings. After, I reached my hand out and grabbed his neck.

I once again flew up into the air.

The Demons' soldiers attempted to catch me, their magic constantly flying at me.

I stopped rising up into the air when I got out of the range of their magic.

I broke the neck of the magician I was holding onto and dropped his body to the ground.

This should be enough.

The magicians, which were the ones deciding the battle, were no more.

I killed the enemy's key force, their magicians, the ones deciding the battle.

In just a short time, I had killed 10 enemy magicians.

It's definitely a result that could turn the tides of the battle.

Also, there was the magic that the enemy magicians had fired at me simultaneously to intercept me.

I had definitely caught both sides' soldiers attention.

Above the fortress, the commanders on the human side who were watching over the battlefield must've seen the magicians.

Now, rather than them perhaps seeing me as an enemy, they will no longer be caught up in my skills.

I felt that this too was bothersome but it turned out better than I had expected.

Against the large amount of enemies, I continuously dropped from the sky and attacked like a bird of prey. Picking off their forces from a long-distance was a totally new experience.

However, now it was time for my style.

The ceremonies from yesterday morning to now were just one day but it was difficult to endure.

I descended once more.

This time, I didn't aim for the magician. I simply landed onto the ground.

As I landed, Demon soldiers from all around crowded around me.

“Uah!”

[Soul Cry]

I used Soul Cry and started the fight.

My destination: the mountaintop where the Demon King is being summoned.

My target: everything around the Demon King's location.

Chapter 154

Tutorial 26th Floor (5)

I sat atop a pile of rocks to briefly catch my breath.

I didn't really need to take a break, though.

Due to corpses strewn around and the accompanying blood scattered throughout the surrounding area, the pile of rocks looked like a tiny island in the sea.

While I sat upon the pile of rocks, I gazed at the sky and heard rustling footsteps in the distance.

I saw a shadow cast by the sun's light amongst the trees.

I waited quietly.

There weren't any remaining enemies in my vicinity.

The only ones still alive were Seregia and I.

Seregia avoided the strewn corpses and walked towards the mound of rocks... No, she crawled over to me.

Wheeze.

I can easily discern her condition just by hearing her heavy breathing.

It was obvious when one considered the distance we had travelled today.

“That's why I told you to stay at the fort. Why did you follow me?” I asked.

“Just a minute, I... Pant. My breath. I need a second to catch... my breath... Hoo. I'm a little dizzy.”

“Yes. Please catch your breath.”

Seregia climbed up the pile of rocks. I briefly waited so that Seregia could catch her breath.

I wonder why she had followed me this far?

That was the question.

It would've been fine if she had just stayed at the fort.

Of course, she could choose to follow me.

She might have followed me due to her sense of responsibility, or even because of her curiosity.

Or perhaps there was an entirely different reason that I'm unaware of.

However, she had to witness countless people die right before her eyes. Someone who disregards all that death and recklessly follows someone isn't normal. At least, it's not something a normal human would do.

Most people would turn back. They would run away.

After Seregia had calmed down a bit, I asked her again.

I asked her why she had followed me.

“I'm regretting it right now.”

Of course you are.

Her hair was disheveled and her sweat had caused her clothes and hair to stick, so she seemed quite uncomfortable.

Her lungs wheezed, her breath emitted a stuffy smell, and her legs trembled.

Her clothes and her shoes were stained with blood and her hands and face were dusty.

It would be difficult to traverse that distance even if she had a horse, yet she had just chased after me with her own two legs; it was obvious that she would be tired.

What's worse, she had followed me through the recesses of the dark mountain.

“Hoo. I thought I was going to die. I couldn't get any closer no matter how fast I ran. Plus, the mountain's getting more and more rugged. And there's the bodies scattered beneath my feet. The smell is disgusting as well. Not to mention, there's the occasional attack from the Demon soldiers.”

There was one thing that she said that was bothering me.

“What do you mean by demon attacks? There shouldn't be any demons left.”

I had definitely drawn all of the enemies in the area to me and killed them.

And there weren't any remaining enemies on the route I was on.

“Yes. That was a lie,” Seregia said confidently, with her peculiar outspokenness.

Once again, I felt like her confidence was absurd.

“Why are you going so far as to lie?”

“I just wanted to try bluffing. Do you have a problem with that?” she said bitterly.

“...No. Well.”

Seregia quickly apologized for her bitter response.

“I'm sorry. It's become a habit.”

“A habit?”

“Yes. Everyone I meet and talk to just say 'yes, yes' and agree to everything I say. I don't know when it started, but maybe that's why I started to get into the habit of bluffing.”

“Ah... I see. Even so, please don't do that.”

“Yes. I understand.”

Even so, I appreciated that she was honest, even here.

Somehow, I think I've started to understand her situation, especially since it was a type of problem that I had experienced.

In general, differences in status can create a gap in communication.

She's shunned within the royal family's knight order.

It's likely that most of the people around her ignore her and ostracize her, so the only people she can talk to are people who occupy a lower status than her.

She couldn't even look someone directly in the eye, unlike most knights who belonged to the royal family.

It seems like that's the situation she's in.

She's isolated from other people.

She might not even have family or friends.

In cases like hers, a close friend would be really beneficial to her.

I wanted to ask her if she had a friend, but if she really didn't have any it would end up as an extremely rude question.

“Ah. Then by any chance, was your analysis of my swordsmanship also a bluff?”

“In part. I predicted that you would be to handle a sword, Warrior.”

“How?”

“If you want to wield the holy sword, you have to be a swordsman.”

Ah... that's right.

In general, the warriors are summoned in groups of twenty-five, but in my case, I was summoned alone.

It was highly likely that a warrior that was summoned alone would have the capabilities of a swordsman, since they needed to be able to wield the holy sword.

“But my statements regarding the ‘intervals’ of your sword weren't lies.”

I knew that.

She had already proven her talent by correctly identifying the ‘intervals’ of my swordsmanship.

Although she had deduced things in a somewhat backwards manner, even so, it was still enough to say that her innate abilities were amazing.

I relayed my appreciation, and told her not to worry about it.

Also, I told her once again that she was amazing.

Seregia laughed awkwardly.

“Thank you.”

When I had complimented her inside of my lodgings, she had laughed with the same awkward expression.

Seregia's face wouldn't change with most work, so I found her current expression to be quite unusual.

“I'm very happy,” Seregia added.

She hadn't calmed down yet, so she caught her breath before opening her mouth again.

“I don't know how you'll take this, but you're the strongest person that I've ever seen, Warrior.”

“Yes. That sounds about right,” I responded, speaking in a way similar to Sergia's.

That's obvious.

There's no way you've seen someone stronger than me.

“Maybe that's why I feel like I'm being rewarded as time passes. I'm talking about when you first complimented me, saying that I was amazing. I was truly happy... and I was really touched.”

Seregia's talking for a long time.

It's unlike her.

She's reacting differently from when I had complimented her the other day.

It was easy to understand why.

It's because she had been fiercely exercising continuously for a long time, so she's secreting hormones.

TL Note: He's basically saying that she's not in her right mind, and is being overly specific as to why he thinks this. He's socially inept, remember?

Right now, it must feel as though her brain is slightly tipsy.

I'll say it again, but this isn't very different from a drunken confession.

It wasn't bad.

Since I had also wanted to hear what she had to say.

It seems like Seregia had been much happier than I had thought from that small praise.

That might be why she decided to bring me to the fort without asking any questions.

Maybe that's why she followed me up until now too.

“So is that why you followed me?”

I might've been wrong, but I just wanted to hear her reason for following me.

“At first, I came with you because I thought you might get lost. At the time, I had thought you would fight in the area for about one or two hours. After that, I tried to stop you to tell you that it was dangerous. However, I couldn't catch you with my own two feet.”

In any case, she's just saying that she was worried, so she followed me.

Rather, I appreciated her intentions.

“Warrior, I didn't think you would come this far. Are you truly planning on going all the way up to the summit where the Demon King is being summoned?”

“Yes. That's why I came here.”

“Without the holy sword?”

“Yes.”

“That's reckless. The holy sword is not a normal sword. Of course, I've seen how amazing you are, Warrior. I've seen you kill plenty of Demons today to know that. However, the power of the holy sword isn't simply at the level of a mere precious sword. Also, if you don't have the power of the holy sword, you cannot repel the Demon King. It's too reckless.”

“That's what I'd like to say to you, Lady Seregia. Now, what would you like to do? I'm going to start moving again,” I said, standing up from my spot.

“How about we turn back?”

“If I was going to do that, I wouldn't have come this far.”

“Go back and at least get the holy sword. Warrior, you should have more than enough qualifications to wield the holy sword.”

“I don't want a holy sword that groans in a man's voice.”

“I'm sorry?”

I dusted off my pants.

Before I continued, I stretched and warmed up.

“I think I have to set off now.”

“...Shouldn't you rest a little more before you go? While you're at it, what about leaving after the morning sun comes up?”

“I've rested enough.”

“What about eating some snacks before you go?” she said, taking off the bag from her back and pulling out some snacks.

The snacks were all crushed.

I giggled after seeing her forlorn expression.

“Unfortunately, there aren't any snacks to eat.”

“Warrior,” Seregia sighed.

“Yes.”

“How far are you going to go?”

“As I said, I'm going all the way up to the summit where the Demon King is being summoned.”

“No. That's not what I'm saying... Where are you planning to rest tomorrow?”

To be honest, my plan was to just to burst straight to the place where the Demon King is being summoned without any rest.

There's no way I'd lack the stamina to get there and I couldn't even sleep due to my insomnia.

However, Seregia stuck onto me.

[TL Note: The literal translation is as follows: The luggage known as Seregia stuck onto me.]

“Ok... Then, shall we rest at that fort you see over there? Like we're doing right now.”

“...It'll take a couple of days to get to that fort.”

“Eh, if we go fast, we can get there by tomorrow afternoon.”

“The route will be swarming with demons.”

“That's exactly what I want.”

After saying that, I dashed forward.

It wasn't really running, rather it was more like I was an arrow that was piercing through the air.

I wonder what decision Seregia will make, in that deserted place behind me.

I sensed that Seregia had stood up.

Would she decide to follow me again?

It was a really quick break.

That girl should need to eat and sleep...

Does she really plan to follow me?

The more deeply I advanced into enemy territory, the more demons appeared.

The demons that weren't in range of my skill might ambush Seregia.

There was no need for any calculations; it was certain that she'd face danger on her journey.

I sensed Seregia moving behind me.

* * *

“Why are you doing this?”

I put a wet towel over my face and asked Seregia, who was sprawled on the earthen floor.

She really followed me, though she looked like she was dying.

She looked like a marathon runner who had overexerted herself. It seemed like it had been too much for her heart.

Thus, she had arrived at the fort before sunset.

“...Pardon?”

“Why are you risking your life to follow me?”

“...Really, I'd like to say the same to you. Please answer me first.”

I had insisted that I had asked her first, but I pondered the subject briefly and changed my mind. I would answer her first.

“It's to defeat the Demon King.”

Seregia flinched slightly.

It was unfortunate that I couldn't see her expression because of the wet towel.

I wonder what kind of expression she has on right now?

“Then my reason is to watch you defeat the Demon King, Warrior.”

I had to think about what she said for a second.

And I accepted it.

I couldn't figure out the reason she followed me.

“Is there a reason you want to do that?”

“Assisting you, Warrior, is the first mission I received. If it's possible, I want to complete my mission properly. Also, if by any chance you defeat the Demon King by yourself, shouldn't I at least be there to watch you accomplish that great feat?"

I felt as though her reason was based on her sense of responsibility, but that's only if I ignore that one thing that's missing.

Seregia hadn't even mentioned anything regarding her own safety.

"It's dangerous. You could die."

"Couldn't I say the same to you, Warrior?"

No.

It's not dangerous for me.

I won't even die.

"If that's not the case, then I won't die as well."

I couldn't understand her as always, so I gave up talking to her.

Also, after fifteen minutes, I revised my schedule to depart immediately.

If I maintain this speed, Seregia will die of either exhaustion or a heart attack.

"Please drink this. It's a potion."

"Yes. Thank you."

I took out a health potion from my inventory and gave it to Seregia.

Seregia didn't reject the potion and drank it wholeheartedly.

After she drank the health potion, she stood up, and examined the surrounding area.

“Are you perhaps departing immediately again?”

“No. I'm thinking of staying for a couple of hours before leaving.”

“A couple of hours... I should take that as a relief. Warrior. Did you perhaps pack any food? If you don't have any, should I find something to eat in the storehouse?”

Truthfully, food didn't really have much of an effect on my body anymore.

If you don't eat for too long, there'll definitely be some issues. However, when I cleared a past stage and returned to the waiting room, I was fine without eating.

That's why I haven't purchased any food lately.

I thought that there might be something to eat in my inventory, and I looked around.

There was some beef jerky.

I took out the beef jerky and some bottled water, and shared it with Seregia.

“Thank you. This is great because it has its own flavor.”

“The beef jerky we're eating inside of a fort filled with bodies?”

“Yes,” Seregia said firmly, and roughly tore the beef jerky.

It's hard to tell who's the Warrior when she's like this.

“Ah, Lady Seregia. Would it be rude of me to ask about your life before you were exiled to the knight order?”

“Not at all. There's not much to talk about.”

“Then, can you tell me about it?”

“Yes. Before I joined the knight order, I was an academy instructor. I was a swordsmanship instructor.”

“You were an instructor?”

“Yes. The story is kind of long. If I were to shortly sum it up, an academy graduate whose family had been ruined decided to take up a position as an academy instructor rather than go back to her hometown.”

I think you've summed it up far too simply.

She acts like it wasn't a big deal, but since she didn't seem to want to talk about it in detail and only told me the simplified version, I decided to move on.

“Then how were you exiled to the knight order?”

“It wasn't exile. Rather, I joined the knight order, Warrior. That too, isn't a big deal. I just entered a swordsmanship competition that was hosted by the royal family using my qualifications as an academy instructor. Thanks to my refined swordsmanship, I won the competition.”

“You won the competition, but you were exiled?”

“Yes. There were several reasons. I'm a commoner, my family was ruined, I'm a woman, and I was an instructor, even though I wasn't a knight. There were a few trifling problems. But when I think about them one by one, there are actually quite a lot of them.”

I sketched a picture in my head.

As I thought, the conversation didn't have a bright atmosphere.

“You're still amazing. You won the swordsmanship competition that even knights enter.”

Seregia briefly smiled bashfully, but suddenly straightened her face and spoke.

“Of course. I was the best at swordsmanship.”

It seemed like she actually did have some pride in her abilities.

She was a swordsmanship instructor, huh... She's exactly the person I need.

“Then how was my swordsmanship?”

“Your swordsmanship, Warrior?”

“Yes. You saw me fight from afar, didn't you? I'm simply curious.”

Seregia pondered briefly and responded.

“Honestly, I could only see flashing lights and the death of the swarming enemies from afar. There weren't many traces on the enemies' bodies, either. Ah, but there is something that comes to mind.”

“Something that comes to mind?”

“Yes. I'm talking about the bodies that occasionally look burnt. I've seen traces like that in the past. I remember that the previous head of the knight order had shown me a fallen kingdom's swordsmanship known as arcane swordsmanship.

A kingdom's arcane swordsmanship.

That phrase briefly reminded me of a man's face.

“Lady Seregia. Who was the previous head of the knight order?”

“Based on what I've heard, he was forced to enter the knight order because of a mistake he made in the past.”

“A past mistake?”

“Yes. It's likely that an illegitimate child showed up.”

“Ah, I see... Lady Seregia. Was he by any chance a really talkative person?”

“No. He was a taciturn person who would barely speak one or two words a day.”

I guess not.

Chapter 155

Tutorial 26th Floor (6)

“What do you plan on doing now?”

Seregia and I were hiding on the mountainside, watching the summoning process proceed at the top of the mountain.

I had departed from the fort only five days ago and had arrived here six days after entering the stage.

And right before my very eyes, I saw the scene of a demon killing other demons.

“What exactly are they doing over there?”

“It seems to be a living sacrifice for the summoning ceremony.”

I didn't know that this Demon King summoning thing involved living sacrifices.

It was entirely reasonable, cause of the Demons having a quick reproduction rate.

But it was pretty uncomfortable to watch.

I had killed around the same amount of demons that they're using as living sacrifices, so it's not something that I of all people should say.

It was ironic.

“I don't believe that it's usually this kind of ceremony. However...”

“However?”

“They may be rushing the ceremony because of you, Warrior.”

There is some truth in that.

The condition for clearing the 26th floor stage was to defeat the Demon King.

When you start the stage, the Demon King wouldn't have been completely summoned yet, so the clear conditions would usually be to defeat the Demon King or to interfere with the summoning ritual.

However, the fact that the clear conditions showed up as defeating the Demon King may mean that no matter when I got here, the Demon King would be summoned without fail.

“However such a haphazard method will certainly have side effects.”

“What kind of side effects?”

“For example, the summoned object may be unable to fully cross over, or it may restrict the Demon King. Those kind of side effects.”

It may be a modification for someone like me who discarded the holy sword and rushed here as fast as I could.

You didn't have to.

“You seem to know quite a bit.”

I hadn't expected Seregia to know about something like a summoning ceremony.

“It's on the level of common sense.”

After the brief explanation, Seregia called me again.

“Warrior, I asked you this before. No, I had already asked you this several times on the way here, but what do you plan on doing now?” Seregia asked, sounding slightly annoyed.

I was really surprised about her annoyance.

An ominous mana surged wildly at the site of the living sacrifices.

Furthermore, the Demon King will be summoned here soon.

Yet, Seregia didn't feel fear or dread. Instead, she was concerned about the fact that I was ignoring her.

Does she have a few extra lives or something?

“I wonder. Shall we wait a little? It looks like the ceremony will wrap up soon. Now that it's already like this, let's wait a little longer, and then take down the Demon King.”

Seregia responded with rapidly changing expressions.

Her expressions changed constantly from this to that; Seregia looked to be pondering something and after sighing, said, “Fine. Do you as wish.”

Rather than say 'ok, I understand', she seemed to have resigned herself.

I took out some beef jerky from my inventory.

“Would you like some?”

“Of course.”

Seregia took the beef jerky as if it were the obvious thing to do.

How could she be so calm?

It was strange.

“It is strange,” Seregia said, chewing on the beef jerky.

I was shocked for a moment; Seregia's sudden response made it seem like she could hear what I was thinking...

"I can't believe you thought of eating beef jerky in a place like this. The enemy will swarm us if they notice us. Aren't you worried at all?"

You're the one who's eating the beef jerky.

"Honestly, our enemies have already noticed us," I said.

"I'm sorry?"

"A few of them have already noticed that we're hiding here," I said.

Hearing this, Seregia furrowed her eyebrows.

"Should we run away? Or should we prepare for battle?"

"You just need to eat the beef jerky. It seems like they won't move an inch because of the summoning ceremony. As long as we don't provoke them, nothing should happen."

If I fight, it'll definitely cause enough of a disturbance to disrupt the summoning ceremony.

Our enemies knew that fact well.

They also knew that they wouldn't be able to stop me, nor would they be able to catch me.

If I decide to act, enemies from all sides will probably attack me. But if they don't, the battle will end as they watch.

Probably.

I was bored since I was sitting still, just chewing on beef jerky.

It would be nice if I could swing my sword.

For the past few days, Seregia had taught me swordplay.

Seregia had said that she couldn't reveal to me her own style of swordsmanship. However, she said that there wasn't much of a problem if she observed my swordsmanship and gave me tips or pointed out flaws.

Therefore, on the way here, I would demonstrate my style of swordsmanship in order to get some advice.

When she inspected my swordsmanship, she didn't actually teach me but discussed it with me.

She would grasp the intent behind each of my movements, one by one, and told me to figure out how to better accomplish the goal behind the action.

Seregia was definitely the most knowledgeable person on the subject of swordsmanship that I had ever met.

She was especially talented in the theoretical side of things.

Seregia scrutinized and interpreted my sword techniques one by one, as if she were solving a math problem.

She dissected my strokes breath by breath and pondered on whether there was anything I could improve on.

This had been a helpful experience for me, since it had been the first time I had ever analyzed my formless swordsmanship.

That's why I didn't feel like coming here together with her was a waste of my time.

“Lady Seregia.”

The words came out before my mind had even processed them, probably because I was bored.

I didn't really have anything to say, so I just started off by calling her.

“Yes, Warrior?”

What should I say?

“What will you do, Lady Seregia, when I defeat the Demon King?”

“I'm curious as to why you ask, Warrior. Are you asking me what I'll do after you defeat the Demon King and I barely survive?”

“No. I'm talking about when you return to the capital.”

“I'll disappear or I'll prepare for my exile.”

“...I'm sorry?”

“It'd definitely be a great ending if you defeat the Demon King and safely return. They'll probably ignore the minor mistakes I've committed because of it. Even so...”

“Even so?”

“It'll really become troublesome. You're an outsider Warrior, while I'm affiliated with the royal family. When the news spreads that we defeated the Demon King by ourselves, it'll become a great story. Rather than be a spectacle, it'd be better to get the reward and disappear.”

I watched as the expressionless Seregia spoke, but as per usual, I couldn't tell whether she was being serious or if she was joking.

I briefly displayed a vacant expression, but then I felt mana starting to run amok from the top of the mountain.

“Just as you wanted, it seems like the Demon King is being summoned, Warrior. Hm... this is... a little... serious. I had expected it, but...”

Just as Seregia said, it was indeed quite severe.

On the mountaintop, the space above the altar ripped apart, and out came an entity with a seriously nonsensical amount of mana.

Rather than a single entity, it felt like nature itself was moving.

It was like if you compressed a huge mountain of mana into a walking three-meter-tall person.

The Demon King was slightly shorter than three meters.

He had giant bat wings behind his back, and an ominous energy lingered within the glare of his red eyes.

There was one other thing that was peculiar. That guy had already noticed me.

When the summoning ceremony was completed, and the Demon King had fully crossed over to this world, he looked like he would immediately dash over to me.

His fighting spirit and his killing intent plainly revealed his desire.

I stood up.

I transformed one of my Thousand Arms into a long sword and grasped it in my right hand. I transformed my other Thousand Arms into a dagger and strapped it onto my belt.

As I stretched my body, I asked Seregia, “What are my chances against the Demon King?”

“It looks like you have around a 2% chance.”

You're too stingy.

I wanted to fly over to the Demon King, who was yet to be fully summoned, but Seregia spoke from behind me.

“Warrior. If at all possible, please don't die.”

If at all possible.

As always, she chose some new words.

“Yes. Please don't move and wait here, Lady Seregia. I'll put on a good show for you.”

* * *

I could accurately measure my enemy's strength.

Indomitable was a skill that would increase my strength based on how strong my opponent is. With this skill's effect, I could easily tell gauge my opponent's strength.

Right now, my Indomitable skill was enhancing my strength more than ever before.

What's worse, that buff was constantly getting stronger.

I felt an empowering feeling surge within my body, and at the same time, I felt a feeling of satisfaction.

After the Godmother from the 19th floor, this is my strongest foe yet.

After the 20th floor, most of the enemies that appeared fought while relying on their overwhelming numbers.

This was probably because they were stages that required 5 or 10 people parties, rather than solo play.

However, the 26th floor required a party of 25.

They call it party play, but with 25 party members it's more like a raid.

Also, there was an adversary that the group of 25 challengers had to defeat in order to clear the stage. That single entity was right in front of me.

There was no way I wouldn't be excited.

I activated my Talaria's Wings and soared into the sky, watching the Demon King's summoning.

I smirked.

As soon as the Demon King's summoning was complete, and he had fully crossed over to this world, he roared at the sky.

[.....!!]

I didn't hear it.

A loud noise had definitely rung in my ears, but I couldn't hear the exact sound.

That's strange.

Next, the Demon King, who had screamed into the sky, watched me.

Then, he yelled again.

[.....!]

Simultaneously, the Demon King discharged a black energy at me.

Is it a type of magic attack?

I enveloped my long sword in mana and hurled it forward.

It instantly flew onward.

The Demon King's magic and my mana clashed right before my eyes and exploded.

I used the flight ability of Talaria's Wings and fluttered the wings.

Talara's Wing's doesn't "fly" by physically fluttering the wings.

They just work.

Although there had been an explosion, I ignored it and maintained my speed, flying forward.

Due to the explosion, I was hit by a sizable wave of fire, and was shaken because of the swirling mana.

As soon as I made it out of the explosion radius, I used my magic.

"Wind Arrow."

When compared to the Demon King's magic, it was a weak, trifling magic.

The Demon King didn't even need to evade it and raised his hand, negligently defending against it.

The Wind Arrow was deflected with the back of his hand and was helplessly destroyed.

That was all it needed to do.

I targeted the Demon King's chest right under his raised arm.

[Blink]

I had continuously used this skill in the past, and I had never found its strength lacking: Blink Slash.

I slashed downwards with the added speed of my blink, and the Demon King's body spurted blood.

However, that was it.

I had precisely cut through the left side of his chest, but my attack had ended with only a little bit of blood flowing from his sturdy body.

I had already attacked, so now it was the Demon King's turn.

The Demon King's eyes shined red.

I urgently turned, and escaped to the periphery of the Demon King's sight.

The Demon King immediately shot a beam where I had been standing.

After I dodged the beam, I had closed the distance in order to counterattack, but the Demon King's attack wasn't finished.

I had narrowly dodged the Demon King's fist that was enveloped with black energy.

As soon as I dodged his fist, magic flew at me.

If I dodged his magic, he would attack with his arms or his legs next.

Without any warning, he would either shoot beams out of his eyes or use his magic, so it was extremely difficult to take back the initiative to attack.

The Demon King just kept on attacking me continuously.

He definitely had greater mana and stamina than me, and I would lose the fight if it kept going on like this.

I dodged the unexpected spear-like objects that shot out from behind me.

Behind the Demon King's back, a tail unexpectedly shot out like a spear. I dodged the Demon King's tail attack and the Demon King used magic again.

A black magic flew right toward my face.

If I dodge this, I give up my opportunity to attack to the Demon King.

I transformed the Thousand Arms in my right hand and altered my long sword into an explosion sword.

[PR Note: This explosion sword thing is more like a flaming sword that causes explosions when the blade comes into contact with the enemy/ other blades. It is further explained later in the text.]

And rather than unreasonably trying to dodge the magic, I quickly shielded myself with Talaria's Wings and let the magic collide.

Before I could even see the strength of his magic, I blinked from my position.

I prevented myself from flying backwards from the magic by using Blink's effect to erase the kinetic energy.

The force of the magic would've certainly crushed my body.

However, in exchange, I took advantage of the opening between the Demon King's attacks.

I pierced the Demon King's chest with the explosion sword that I had transformed the Thousands Arms into.

It was like I was cutting through metal rather than flesh; the sword couldn't pierce deeply into the Demon King's chest.

It could pierce a depth as deep as the length of a single finger.

However, that much was enough.

I had figured out more of the Thousand Arms transformations through Park Jung Ah's help. One of them was the explosion sword.

The explosion sword, as the name might imply, explodes.

The blade of the explosion sword lodged in the Demon King's chest, exploded.

The force of the explosion sword's explosion wasn't that great.

The fire probably wouldn't do any damage to the Demon King's heart.

However, the only thing that I had wanted from the explosion sword was to deepen the already-open wound in the Demon King's chest.

And the explosion sword had delivered on my expectations.

Next, the Demon King's attack flew towards me.

His right hand, enclosed with a blackish-red energy, flew towards me.

His forearm, and even his nails were covered in that heinous energy.

I can't evade this.

I had stabbed the Demon King with my explosion sword and detonated the blade, but I had used up more time than the gap allocated.

I went for that unreasonable attack even though it hadn't been my turn to attack. Rather, it had been the Demon King's turn.

From the start, the time that I had to attack was too short.

Along with that, I had sustained a lot of injuries from his magic attacks in order to create that opportunity.

I have to make a decision.

Right now, the Demon King's attacks are flying towards me by the moment.

From the start, it was an unfavorable fight.

The difference is huge in our fundamental stats.

Even though I had attacked the Demon King in the same spot several times, he wasn't really damaged much.

But the single attack that I had endured was a severe wound.

There's also a difference between the range of our attacks.

I had to continuously close in on him in order to attack, even if it was risky.

However, there was something even more fatal than that: the order of our attacks. The Demon King could attack whenever.

If the Demon King started to attack, he wouldn't give me an opportunity to counterattack.

Through his magic, his beam, his wings, his tail, or other methods of attack that he hasn't shown yet, he dictates the flow of battle by ceaselessly attacking me.

However, when I attack, he would have several opportunities to counterattack.

I have to make a decision.

Amongst the things that I had gained from discussing swordsmanship with Seregia, the most valuable had definitely been this.

A new idea.

Seregia's swordsmanship was based on theory.

It was delicate and systematic, but it also had its fair share of weaknesses.

Amongst those, there was a fatal weakness.

Since it focused so much on theory, it would underperform in a real fight.

For example, sacrificing an arm in order to secure temporary dominance or in order to secure an advantageous space or position.

It's a method that someone would come up with from a desk.

It sounded like crap, but Seregia had insisted that this could theoretically work.

[TL and PR Note: The next part is kind of like a list. There wasn't really a good way to rephrase these in complete sentences without heavily adjusting the style, so there are only minor edits in the following section.]

Even if you give up an arm, if you maintain your mobility, and occupy a superior position.

And you can perfectly ignore the enemy's attack and the pain. And if you have the mental capacity to continue the battle.

And if you have the ability to judge when it's right to give up an arm for the sake of getting an upper hand in the battle.

Lastly, if you have the skills to apply all this so that the chance that you've painstakingly made doesn't go to waste.

I made my decision.

Scarlet blood spurted out and my right shoulder flew up into the air.

In exchange, I got another chance to attack.

Chapter 156

Tutorial 26th Floor (7)

By sacrificing an arm, I created an opportunity to attack.

If I don't take advantage of this opportunity, it'll spell my defeat.

My life rests on this single strike.

I have to land the finishing blow with that attack.

I have to pierce through the Demon King's maelstrom of mana, as well as his sturdy body.

However, I'm confident.

I'm confident that I can pierce through the Demon King's defense.

I drew the dagger that was strapped onto my belt.

I was more familiar with a shorter weapon than a longsword-styled weapon, even more so when considering that my left hand was relatively clumsy compared to my right hand.

I raised my left hand that grasped the dagger and the dagger flew towards the Demon King's left chest, the area of his injury.

The dagger instantly pierced through the Demon King's protective barrier and the blade continued to fly, unperturbed by any obstacles.

On the 16th floor, the knight had taught me a key factor to his swordsmanship that led to a killing blow: the finishing blow wasn't a technique that required the sword or the feet to move.

Instead, you would manipulate your mana to manifest an explosive aura.

That was the finishing move of his swordsmanship.

Immediately after I had lost my right arm, I took an ambiguous stance.

There was only a moment of time to attack.

Everything was unfavorable for me, but I succeeded.

The blade of my dagger which was filled with my blazing aura, precisely lodged itself into the prior wound on the Demon King's left chest.

It only went as deep as finger.

However, that was enough.

It had been a injury that I had dug deeper into, bit by bit; it had all been for this one opportunity.

The dagger definitely pierced the Demon King's heart.

After I confirmed the sensation that I felt in my hand, I used my skill.

[Blink]

I used my blink to move backwards and widen the distance.

I saw the Demon King's beam as well as an attack from his tail pass by the space I had previously occupied.

Along with my dagger that had lodged into the Demon King's left chest, the standing Demon King's appearance was...

The Demon King's chest was on fire.

I don't know how much resistance to the fire attribute the Demon King has, but the injury was definitely fatal.

Since the dagger, the source of those flames, should have pierced all the way to the central part of the Demon King's heart.

[.....!!]

I heard the Demon King's inaudible scream and confirmed once more.

I won.

* * *

I lifted my right arm that had dropped onto the ground.

I roughly put it to my shoulder.

I swallowed down the elixir that I had held in my mouth.

I wonder how long it will take before it all reattaches.

It shouldn't take longer than a minute.

I looked at the enemies in the surroundings that had been watching the fight between myself and the Demon King.

Seregia was still hiding in the same place.

Conversely, the demons were descending the mountain.

I was pondering whether I should chase the monsters that were scared out of their wits.

I decided not to.

I turned my head and looked at the Demon King.

The Demon King was dying whilst standing.

The dagger was still lodged inside his left chest and from there, the flames were burning the Demon King's body and slowly spreading.

Despite that, the Demon King didn't look like he was stricken with grief.

Is he thinking that he'll just be unsummoned?

Since he'd received plenty of living sacrifices already, he had a peaceful attitude.

[...]

The Demon King suddenly opened his mouth and said something.

I didn't hear anything in my ears this time either.

However, the Demon King continued to move its mouth.

“Human.”

The Demon King said.

“What?”

I responded flatly.

“Why are you feeling malice right now?”

“Did you say malice?”

“I can feel a human's emotions. Since the energy from their emotions is great raw energy. However, I can feel dark emotions right now.”

Is that so.

That may be the case.

“It was right after you defeated this body, and achieved a heroic deed. To feel malice at that very moment, I'm surprised. Human. Shall I tell you the reason? The reason that you're frustrated?”

Frustration you say.

I don't think it's to the point of frustration.

“It's definitely towards the human bastards with their unique and dirty competition for positions. They will praise you but also be envious of you. They will create and cover the streets with false stories in order to defame you. It'll probably be accompanied by threats as well. With your strength, you'll be free, but what about the people around you?”

The Demon King was talking excitingly.

This bastard doesn't just fight with martial arts; he's the type of demon that deceives others through words, a type common in fairy tale books.

“Hoh. You seem to be feeling a bit better. It's really just as I say. Human. Hehehehe.”

“It's not, though.”

Of course, I did feel disappointed.

“It's not, you say? If that's the case, then why are you feeling so down? Go ahead and speak. Speak out that reason and deny my words, Human.”

“Compared to my expectations, this was kind of boring.”

“...What?”

“I'm saying you were too weak. You were spoon-fed so many live sacrifices. Don't you feel sorry for all the demons who sacrificed themselves for you?”

After I finished speaking, I rotated my right shoulder.

It's fully attached.

As expected of a high-rank elixir.

It was expensive, so its effects were top-notch.

I picked up the Thousand Arms in the form of a longsword from the ground.

My shoulder's fully attached, so let's finish this and go.

“Human.”

“What?”

“Human!”

“Ah, what is it?”

“You mere dirty and vulgar human! You dare look down upon me!”

Oh, he's mad, he's really mad.

Is he starting to reveal his hot-bloodedness?

Is this the part where the villain provokes the protagonist despicably and the furious protagonist awakens?

Keep it up.

“You were lucky to escape with your life, you fly! You don't even know your place!”

His monologue is long.

Normally, this is the part where the protagonist awakens in one go.

While the Demon King continues to talk on and on.

From the villain's perspective, a sense of crisis would be felt, which might make them wish to immediately kill the protagonist.

I briefly ignored the Demon King's chatter.

I scratched the back of my neck with the blade of my longsword and waited; the Demon King suddenly put up a serious expression, and spoke in calm voice.

“Human.”

“What?”

“Run away.”

“What?”

“Run away and live! I'll give you a day! Within that time, try to run as far away from me as you can! I'll chase you and burn everything on this continent; I'll definitely catch you and show you hell right before your very eyes!”

When he was done talking, the Demon King lifted his head towards the sky and yelled loudly.

“I, as Sacrifice [.....], [...], offer up all of my kin under my control to the God of Harvest in exchange for bringing out my full power here!”

The Demon King announced to the sky and suddenly the Demon King's body was engulfed in black smoke.

And I started to feel a tremendous concentration of mana from the smoke.

The Demon King had a tremendous amount of mana before, but right now, the amount of mana I felt from inside the smoke was almost incomparable.

This is the start of the 2nd phase.

My fingers quivered with anticipation for the second time.

My heart throbbed and my body became hot.

“Wind Arrow.”

I tried launching my magic at the black smoke, but the wind arrow just pierced through the smoke.

Is it an attack nullifier?

It seemed like it had a similar effect to Idy's skill.

I briefly closed my eyes and I focused on sensing the mana.

My body trembled just from feeling the mana inside that smoke.

Motionlessly, I felt it.

They're completing one bowl.

[TL Note: It's a Korean expression meaning that they're combining to create one thing.]

It's not simply drawing up mana.

Something's being consolidated.

I had to guess the time when that thing would be finished.

The Demon King said he would give me a day.

However, based on the mana I feel, it seemed like it would only take a few minutes until the Demon King's completely regained his strength rather than one day.

I opened my eyes and opened my inventory.

I started to drink all of the strengthening medicine I had.

I didn't need to drink them until now and whenever Kiri Kiri had recommended that I get them, I would buy and collect them one by one; and now, I'm drinking the ability strengthening medicine.

Next, I brought my longsword forward and concentrated.

[Designate Opponent]

It was the skill that the God of Dueling had gifted to me in his offer to become his disciple.

The effect would be that it would designate my foe.

Also, when I confront that foe, it would sharpen my combat abilities and my concentration.

The enhancement would fluctuate based on how strong my opponent was, as well as how threatening the enemy is to me.

Enemy targeting will change according to how I define the concept of an 'enemy'.

Therefore, it was a skill I hadn't been able to use until now.

That's because I hadn't met someone that I truly considered an enemy until now.

I used both Indomitable and Designate Opponent simultaneously because their effects stacked.

I started to feel strength surge into my body.

The excessive mana oozed from my body and shook my surroundings.

I felt like I could destroy everything with just a shake of my hand.

Once I got control over it, it wasn't easy to sit still and wait with all of this power ready.

Kiri Kiri had explained Designate Opponent like this.

It was a really useful skill for me.

Also, amongst its abilities, she said the most useful one was the fact that it would increase my concentration on the enemy.

I didn't understand it back then, but after using it, I think I understand it now.

I was fully concentrating into that black smoke.

My growth, the stage, clearing, or even other people or the gods instantly became irrelevant.

It would erase all those distracting thoughts and I would focus entirely and solely on the Demon King.

With my mind entirely focused on the Demon King, I waited for him to finish.

I also used my other skills, which not only included Talaria's Wings, which would complement my combat abilities, but also Soul Siphon and all the other skills that I could currently use.

[Time Confinement]

After a small amount of time passed, I used Time Confinement.

I confirmed it within the world that seemed frozen.

Just as I had predicted, the moment the duration of Time Confinement is over, the Demon King's transformation will be complete.

If that's the case, what I need to do is simple.

I need to match that timing and prepare my best attack.

The knight on the 16th floor had revealed several possibilities for me.

Originally, the knight had tried to tell me about the fundamentals of the swordsmanship, to a really high degree at that.

However, from what I listened to, his stories were the most valuable.

They told of his swordsmanship and the tales of the knight's past.

The connecting link between his tales that were like a children's story and the swordsmanship that the knight self-taught himself.

That was what was most valuable.

The knight's swordsmanship was defensive.

You would move less than your opponent and use less mana than them.

As you continued, you would aim at the opponent's blind spot and manifest your aura, turning things around and attaining victory at the last moment possible.

This straightforward strategy was studied and developed for centuries by the swordsmen of that world.

Also, the great swordsmen who left their names in history each possessed unique skills.

Everyone could share the defensive method of fighting, but each person's manifestation of aura would appear differently.

The techniques that manifested aura all had grandiose names.

They were filled with jargon and old names that couldn't be interpreted even with the knowledge of the time before Babel.

If you literally translate them, they generally have this kind of meaning:

Sun fall. Flame that starts from the ground and touches the sky. Lava rain that covers the sky. The flames of hell that won't extinguish for 7 days and nights.

Just by listening to them, you could tell how cringy the names were.

Also, the knight told me about those cringy techniques.

The knight himself didn't know how to use those techniques but he told me about their forms, their features, and their destructive power.

He also told me what the knights who created these techniques were like.

Using his stories as a foundation, I tried to recreate those techniques one by one.

And I had discovered a common point amongst all these techniques.

This simple swordsmanship that those great swordsmen had made, the thing that they had studied for centuries was the very thing that they couldn't complete.

The feat that the person who first invented the swordsmanship had performed was a sword that when swung once saved the empire and when swung a second time, saved the world, based on what the talkative knight said.

In his later years, when he swung his sword for the third time, a mere human was able to move a god and became a disciple to that god. The sword of that legendary swordsman.

The records had become too unreliable so no one earnestly believed in them and only the great swordsmen who had reached the stage of swordmaster obsessed over that delusion of that sword.

At the end of my long concentration, I felt my Time Confinement being undone.

Perfect timing. To add to that, I'm in perfect condition.

At this moment, I'm in the perfect position.

As soon as the Time Confinement was released, I stepped one step forward and pulled my sword back.

At the next moment, I stabbed with my sword with the entirety of my strength.

I thought it was difficult for even I, who had swung the sword, to cope with the strength that had been thrust forward.

No great swordsman could've even imitated it and ultimately, I succeeded in perfectly recreating that lost swordsmanship.

Light Sword, Type 1. Pierce.

Following the sword's straightforward movement, the world was illuminated.

The sudden thunderous sound burst forth, making my ears ring briefly before silence enveloped me.

I could barely narrow my eyes from the light piercing them, but I endured it.

With this much light, even if you close your eyelids, you'd go blind.

Rather than close my eyes, I kept my eyes open until the end, and watched as my attack struck.

It plowed through the black smoke and the blade was aimed straight at the Demon King; the blade stretched forth and towards the end, my sight which was completely focused on the blade went white.

My hearing, my sight, and my sense of touch were paralyzed, and thanks to that, I couldn't even witness the aftermath of my attack.

In my surroundings, the mana that I had discharged was still jolting around, so I couldn't even use a sensing skill to check anything.

I pushed down my curiosity regarding the state of the Demon King and myself and fainted peacefully.

[The God of Light is moved by you.]

[All the Gods of the White Holy Temple are watching you.]

Chapter 157

Tutorial 26th Floor (8)

[The God of Light is really moved by you.]

[The God of Light seems to be favoring you.]

[The God of the Sky acknowledges you.]

[The God of Harvest is flustered.]

I regained consciousness.

I don't know when I regained consciousness.

This is a problem that happens when your senses become dulled.

Everything was hazy, as if I was submerged in water.

First, I need to check if my senses have remained intact.

I rubbed my fingertips together.

My senses weren't all dead.

Plus, I could move my hands and arms.

Only the left side, however.

'Inventory.'

I had always had a high opinion of it; the inventory is definitely a great function.

It was comparable to a god's skill.

Because of its accessibility, even though my sight and my hearing were destroyed, I could pull out what I wanted.

I roughly popped off the top of the elixir bottle.

And I poured it about where I believed my mouth would be.

If my neck hasn't been twisted in a strange way, it should've gone down properly.

I poured down the entire bottle that way and waited.

I could feel all the senses in my body returning to normal.

Fortunately, the elixir had properly gone into my mouth.

About half of the elixir had spilled from the corners of my mouth, though.

I took out another elixir from my inventory and drank it.

This time, I drank it without spilling a single drop.

My ears, which hadn't been able to hear anything until now, started to pick up a ringing sound.

Beyond the ringing that sounded as if glass was being scratched, there followed a humming sound of something great.

My eyes, which had been blinded by the strong light, were also restored.

Beyond my closed eyelids, I saw a red light.

As I waited a little longer, I became fully aware of the state of my body.

I tried moving my arms and legs, and I probed every nook and cranny of my joints and muscles.

After I was certain that I was okay, now I opened my eyes.

I felt a slight pain in my eyes.

There wasn't anything that I saw with my hazy eyes that would give me a clue to my circumstances.

I waited a little longer for my vision to clarify.

My surroundings were burning.

The flames lingered on the barren ground and blazed on.

I felt a strong heat coming from the ground.

Flames also lingered on my body and armor as well.

I roughly stubbed the fire out.

The Demon King's summoning altar had disappeared without a trace.

The entire surrounding mountain area had transformed into a flat plateau.

Also, the landscape's changes only reached as far as his attack traveled.

It looked as if the landscape had been artificially erased over by an eraser.

The Light Sword had been so powerful that the aftermath managed to decimate the previous topography.

I had done it. There was a renewed sense of amazement.

I felt proud of my accomplishment.

The Demon King was definitely dead.

There were two reasons for that:

First, my attack had destroyed this entire area and the Demon King had been defenselessly exposed, so I don't think he would've been able to withstand my attack.

I had definitely sensed a tremendous amount of strength coming from the Demon King, but he wasn't so strong that he would be able to survive the aftermath of the Light Sword.

The next reason was a little more clear-cut.

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

I received five levels at the same time.

Recently, it has been difficult to level up even once in a single round.

It was an amount of experience points that I wouldn't have been able to attain if I hadn't defeated the Demon King.

Ah, now that I think about it.

I should be over level 51 now.

I opened my status window and checked.

[Lee Ho Jae (Human)]

Lv. 52

I had definitely surpassed level 51.

However, there was no visible growth in my stats or my skills.

It meant that I won't be rewarded for my level ups, even though I had surpassed level 51.

As things are I won't be able to receive level up rewards until at least level 101.

Looking at my current growth rate, it was highly likely that I wouldn't be able to get rewards even after level 101.

As Kiri Kiri said, it would be for the best to forget about level up rewards now.

After I finished checking my status, I analyzed my circumstances.

The Demon King was dead.

His ominous mana was drifting into the air, but it was just a vestige of the skill he had used.

The demons were... it seems like there was some sort of accident.

I don't know for sure, but as they urgently stampeded down the mountain slope, it seems that the group had tumbled down.

The aftermath of my technique might've created a landslide.

Lastly, I looked at Seregia.

She was dying.

That was surprising.

My back was facing her.

Also, I had aimed my technique in front of me and it thundered straight forward.

She, who had been in the rear, wasn't at a distance where she should be so seriously wounded.

I approached the girl that was collapsed on the ground.

I got close.

The woods that she had hid in had been so thoroughly incinerated that I hadn't noticed immediately.

She was at a much closer place than her original hiding place.

At last, I understood why she was hurt.

Before I had used my technique, that girl had been approaching me.

Since she had closed the distance by that much, she had become incredibly vulnerable to my technique.

She had moved hastily, so she couldn't even protect her body.

It was that kind of reason.

Seregia's whole body was speckled with burns.

The flames had even permeated through her body.

Because of that, the mana inside of her body was also a mess.

Her breathing was erratic and a part of her limbs twitched spasmodically. The other part was like a corpse or a block of wood; it didn't seem like there was any life in it.

To repeat, it was right before she would die.

I took out another elixir bottle from my inventory and poured it down her lips.

I'm using a lot of elixirs today, though I still have a lot left over.

While I waited for her to wake up, I took out a burn ointment and applied it to her face.

I didn't save any and used the entire container.

It was medicine that I wouldn't use any more and scars might form on her face from this experience; I wanted to prevent that.

As I finished the treatment, I felt pressed by hunger.

I took out beef jerky from my inventory and chewed on it.

It has been a really long time since I'd eaten something due to hunger.

I definitely couldn't use the 'Light Sword' technique freely yet.

I have the skill to use it, but I didn't have the strength to handle it.

It was the same for the Demon King who possessed a tremendous amount of strength, but it was a strong technique that had destroyed the mountain and the altar in an instant.

It had destroyed the mountain and the altar, as well as the Demon King who wielded tremendous strength just like that. It may have been a strong technique, but I'm also at its mercy as well.

If I didn't have a stupidly sturdy body and strong willpower, as well as a tolerance to fire, I wouldn't be able to call it a Light Sword attack; rather, it would be a suicidal attack.

Compared to the Demon King's strength, if it weren't for the likes of the skills Designate Opponent, Indomitable, and Talaria's Wings boosting my strength, I wouldn't have been able to endure it.

Rather than enduring the technique, I might've not even been able to successfully pull it off.

[The God of Dueling is proud.]

[The God of Adventure is happy.]

[The God of Slowness is disappointed.]

Ah, the skill that the God of Slowness gifted me, Time Confinement, also played a huge role in this fight.

[The God of Slowness snorted.]

She's sulking.

The God of Slowness also sulks more than I had expected.

If there was something that differentiated her from the God of Adventure, it would be that the God of Adventure lets things go easily while the God of Slowness holds on to her feelings for awhile.

Is it because she's the God of Slowness?

In any case, I set aside my thoughts on the timid gods and continued to ruminate about my Light Sword technique.

The first time I had attempted the Light Sword was in the 24th floor waiting room.

At the time, I had failed at performing the Light Sword and my right arm, as well as my abdomen had ruptured violently.

If I hadn't been inside the waiting room, I may have just died right there.

This time too, it had been plenty dangerous.

When I had used the technique, I had an abundance of confidence and my mind had become feverish, so I had used it without any hesitation. However, when I think back on it, it had been an excessively dangerous course of action.

Let's reflect on it.

No matter how loosely in regards to how I hold my life, I can't afford to die.

That would also mean my defeat.

It seems that I had been overly excited from the Demon King's strength.

During that time, I moved at full speed beating down all I could that I encountered.

However, he was the first enemy that even if I gave everything I had, I didn't know if I could win.

Before I had used the Light Sword, the strength that I had sensed from the Demon King had been double that of the Great Mother that I met on the 19th floor.

[TL and PR Note: M (the previous translator) translated it as the "Great Mother" but it's not the way I would interpret it. I would translate it as "godmother" and have confirmed it with other translators as well. It would make even more sense considering that it's the literal translation of the word and she was also something like a deity. Pyrenose thinks its more towards English sensibilities, but we're just going to go with the previous translation to avoid confusion.]

That's why I had been excited.

On the contrary, right now, I was more calm than usual.

It's as if... it was a wise man's time.

[PR Note: A “wise man’s time” is a Japanese and Korean saying referring to the period after an orgasm when a man is free from sexual desire and is able to think clearly. Sort of like having an epiphany after sex.

After a giant feeling of satisfaction, I felt a sense of calmness, mixed with a little bit of shame and regret.

I still have a long way to go.

Thinking that way, I felt a little bitter.

She looked completely recovered now, so I checked Seregia once again.

She's breathing evenly now.

Her pulse is also normal.

No abnormalities in her brain.

Her mana is circulating normally.

She seems to have just fallen asleep though.

I just sighed before lifting Seregia and carrying her on my back.

And I descended the now-deserted mountain.

* * *

I returned slowly on purpose.

There wasn't really any reason to rush back.

I had already defeated the Demon King and it would be over once I return to the castle and acquire the holy sword.

There was still a lot of time left before the 33 days that Kiri Kiri had bet were up.

Also, if you were to ask if I really had a reason to return slowly, I did.

The Light Sword that I had used to defeat the Demon King.

It hadn't been very long since I'd successfully used that Light Sword, so I wanted to make it completely my own.

I couldn't withstand the technique yet, but I wanted to be able to freely use the technique.

I would continue to maintain my senses after using the Light Sword, and I would repeatedly recollect that memory to improve upon myself in order to use it a little more easily as well as more efficiently.

Occasionally, after I ate, I would sit down on the road and I would repeatedly meditate for a few hours at a time.

Since I had Time Confinement, if I gave up just five minutes I could calmly meditate for several hours.

Three days passed that way before Seregia woke up.

At that time, I was sitting in the middle of a field, eating beef jerky and chocolate.

In general, I don't eat this often, but since I had consumed so much stamina in the battle the other day, I had to ingest food periodically.

Because the stamina potions didn't properly treat my fatigue, I would stop walking once every few hours and eat and rest.

What's worse, I was still exhausted even after leveling up.

I might have ended up using that life force or whatever they call it in wuxia novels.

It felt something like that.

I decided to ask Kiri Kiri about it later.

While I had those thoughts, the laid down Seregia regained consciousness.

I told Seregia, who had regained consciousness, what had happened until now.

I had defeated the Demon King, descended the mountain, and was on my way back to the Empire's fort.

Seregia, who had listened to my explanation, abruptly kneeled down.

“Please take me as your disciple,” Seregia expressionlessly requested with her peculiar confidence.

And I obviously rejected her.

“I don't want to.”

“Why?”

“That's my line. Why?”

“I saw that sword, so it's obvious. I want to see that sword, even if it's just once more in my lifetime.”

“...So you can be caught in it again and almost die?”

“Once. No, if I can see it twice more, it's alright if I die.”

Seregia spoke so confidently, as if it were obvious that she'd be alright with dying and I was getting a little tired of it.

The world is vast and crazy... well in any case, that's what she said.

“Rather than that, why did you not stay put in your place and approach so closely? Lady Seregia, do you know you were really close to death?”

“At the start, I noticed that the Demon King's strength was unusual, so I was going to take you with me and run, Warrior. It looked like you were going to continue fighting, so I tried to stop you.”

“...Is that so? What about what happened next?”

“I judged that there was no reason to stop you when I saw the power that you had gathered in your sword. Instead, I stealthily got closer in order to see it from up close.”

“And because of that, you almost died.”

“As a result, I saw that sword up close and I also survived, so it paid off.”

A payoff. What are you talking about?

If I think about the cost of the consumed elixir, it's definitely a loss.

I sighed and raised my head.

Seregia, who was by my side, peeked her head forward.

“Warrior, your reaction seems a bit strange.”

“What about it?”

“Were you perhaps moved?”

“I'm sorry?”

“Were you moved by my words that I was worried about you so I had tried to go to you, Warrior?”

No.

That's definitely not it.

I'm at the point where all of my feelings of empathy are dissolving.

“If you by any chance, were moved by that, please take me as your disciple.”

“I really don't want to.”

“Why? I don't want much, Warrior. You just need to give me a chance to see your sword within your vicinity, Warrior. In exchange, I'll do anything I can for you.”

I had nothing to say in response to Seregia's shameless reason.

What do you mean by 'why'?

You obviously can't.

Since she can't leave this stage.

“I'm good at doing the laundry and cleaning, Warrior.”

“What about cooking?”

“...If I try my best, won't I get better someday?”

It seems like she can't cook.

I stood up.

“It seems that your body's well again, so let's slowly depart. Lady Seregia.”

“Is it truly impossible?”

“Yes.”

“May I ask the reason why?”

“I'll leave this place shortly and it wouldn't be possible to bring you with me at that time, Lady Seregia.”

I moved my legs and started to walk.

Soon, the sun went down and the stars glittered in the black sky.

Those countless worlds that are spread out through the cosmos.

The Tutorial System that uses the vestiges of those worlds as a stage.

My feelings were strange.

I knew there were new worlds beyond the cosmos and that those worlds are roaming around out there, so whenever I see the night sky on Earth, I would have a completely different feeling.

“Lady Seregia, so long as you don't die, it's impossible.”

I muttered something unnecessarily and advanced forward.

Chapter 158

Tutorial 26th Floor (9)

“Then rather than warriors, they're more like mercenaries.”

“Yes. That's true. They're closer to mercenaries, who move between dimensions, and some among them hide behind the righteous mask of the Warrior group.”

TL Note: The Warrior group is comprised of mercenaries that the Empire just calls 'Warriors'.

So that's how it was.

I had thought that the Empire thoughtlessly giving them tasks for this and that was abnormal after summoning them. Instead, in exchange for their summons, the Empire would promise to pay the mercenaries upon the request's completion.

I can understand why they were so flustered when I was summoned by myself.

Since the 'ordered' item had been incorrectly sent.

“Then why does the empire cover them up under the position of a Warrior? Can't they just work as mercenaries?”

It seemed that Seregia herself didn't really understand and scratched her head.

“I also don't understand, but it probably has something to do with honor or fame. Wouldn't the royal family which makes the request, just do it to look admirable? These kinds of stories remain as legends or tales and are passed down to the future generations. If they complete their task well, they'll be given plenty of hospitable treatment and they'll be given a heavy responsibility by the Empire or they'll get the support of the subjects in the capital that may even involve a parade. If you're the type of person that likes that sort of thing..."

I thought it was likely that they'd do something like that, but I couldn't relate to it.

If you wanted to do that, you should be a celebrity instead.

Ah, would celebrities in this world not be given preferential treatment?

I conversed with Seregia about this and that along our way back to the fort that we used the portal to travel to.

It was valuable time where I could learn about this world's sensibilities and knowledge.

I also learned a lot more regarding swordsmanship.

Seregia voluntarily revealed the movements she used as well as her stances in theory and explained them to me, maybe because it would just be more comfortable or maybe because it would be better.

She explained why they were efficient, what were their pros and cons, and also in what situations you could apply them to.

It wasn't the way I trained my swordsmanship but this was also of great help to me.

From the start, I was also confident in studying theory.

Except, I just never had the opportunity to study combat theory before.

Seregia even explained the contents of what she taught to the academy students.

Since she had been a teacher in the past, I could learn some points even from the most basic content.

“Here you move swing your sword diagonally and take a step back. Then, you just need to swing your sword, stopping it right beside their waist. The reason for this movement is...”

[TL Note: To visualize, she's explaining a technique where you slash with your sword. You actually take a step back with her style; normally, you'd take a step forward, putting your weight on the front leg.]

“Then, the opponent will push into you, aiming for that gap after a large movement, so they'll rob you of the time spent on the diagonal sword swing. But in the next moment, you'd respond with a stabbing attack or you would take another step back.”

“Yes. You're right. The movements are just as you see and it looks like there's nothing special to it, but this style's distinct feature is its footwork.”

“Are you talking about the steps?”

“No. Honestly, the steps aren't special either. It's just your foot should be aimed in this direction. It's unusual, isn't it?”

“Yes it is. Normally, the stance makes the foot in front bear the weight as the center of balance. That's more efficient and more comfortable. Even if you thoughtlessly land and stand in this direction...”

“Yes, that's normally the case, but if you turn your foot in this direction...”

“It seems you'd be able to kick the enemy who's pushed in and prepared for a sword strike. You may fall, but if you push them enough with your kick, even if you fall, it seems that you'd have bought enough time to stand before they can rush back at you again.”

“Yes, you're correct.”

In my case, I wouldn't fall after pushing them away with a kick.

It's definitely great.

“But it's not normally a technique that the knights use.”

The move itself was devised under the assumption that they're being attacked from both sides and while countering this, they must roll on the floor.

“Yes. I studied existing swordsmanship as a basis to create it. But I've honestly never tested it in actual combat.”

“If they're at this level, these movements can definitely be used in actual combat. You're amazing.”

Of course, I couldn't just apply her teachings directly into my fights.

I, as well as my opponents, weren't fooled by normal swordsmanship that fit inside a mold.

However, if I theoretically understand the process and the result, the cause and the effect, I could utilize its techniques into other fights or other situations as much as I want to.

It was a worthwhile experience.

At the same time, it was also pretty fun.

At least, our personalities didn't clash and since our area of interest coincided, our trip back to the fort was both valuable and fun.

That's how one week passed and we had arrived in front of the fort.

* * *

Kwang!!

I heard a deafening sound before me and I muttered when I saw the fortress gate close.

“They must have caught onto the fact that you were illicitly accumulating money, Lady Seregia.”

[TL Note: Remember how she said earlier that her pockets were always full? Yeah, it's probably that.]

“No way. I don't take more than my fair share, Warrior.”

So you're saying you did do it.

If they hadn't uncovered Seregia's past crimes, why are the fort's soldiers so hostile?

Just a little while ago, the soldiers that had seen us approach the fortress gate exchanged words noisily and hurriedly entered inside the fort.

Now, suddenly the fortress gate had been closed.

No matter how I think about it, it looks like they're denying our entrance.

Of course, there were a lot of things that stuck out.

Seregia and I had left unannounced and our arrival to the fort was no different.

In the process, we had even secretly used the magic teleportation circle.

We had hid in the fort, watched the battle unfold, and I had even trespassed into the battlefield.

However, I don't think those are issues that they'd lock the fortress gate over.

“What do you think?”

“I also don't really know what's going on. It seems like the commander's up there, so let's hear what he has to say.”

Like Seregia said, there was a man wearing a fancy military uniform above the fortress gate.

The man who looked to be the commander yelled at his soldiers.

“Open the gate!”

Just as he ordered, the closed gates started to reopen.

“It seems like there was some sort of mistake, Warrior.”

“It seems that way.”

It seemed that it was some sort of mistake, but just as I had my hopes up the commander shouted again.

“Get him! Catch the thief who tried to steal the holy sword and failed!”

Huh? A thief?

Soldiers were pouring out of the reopened gate.

Seregia saw that sight and calmly asked, “Warrior. Did you try to steal the holy sword and fail?”

“No. I pulled it out and then put it back into the ground.”

“Why did you try to pull out the sword?”

“I was just... curious.”

To be exact, I used the holy sword's power to take a peek at the difficulty of the stage and estimate the Demon King's strength.

There was a little bit of curiosity mixed in there as well.

Seregia seemed to look at me, dumbfounded.

And rather than admonish me with that expression, she asked, “When did you draw the holy sword?”

“The morning of my first day here.”

“Did you receive permission before you drew it?”

“I obviously just snuck in.”

“I see. Did you take care of the surveillance crystal?”

“What's a surveillance crystal?”

“It's a magic crystal that allows someone to observe a restricted space from another location.”

It seems like a magical tool that has a similar function to a CCTV camera.

I didn't even think they'd have something like that.

“No.”

“So that was the problem. When you commit a crime, you have to first think about destroying evidence first, Warrior.”

“Yes. I'll keep that in mind next time. Do you think it'll be alright if I just say that I had drawn it out of curiosity and put it back?”

“Probably not. Just the fact that you trespassed into the room that seals the holy sword is a serious offense. Above all, if you want to convince them with your words, you'll be arrested and have to go all the way to the capital to meet the ruling authority. And then the transfer and imprisonment process will be considerably rough. You made a mistake, so obediently following them may be correct, but I don't want to.”

“Then?”

“Let's just run away. I had already considered disappearing, so everything works out in the end.”

It doesn't seem like everything will work out in the end.

I wonder what I should do.

In any case, I have to attain the holy sword in order to clear the stage.

Should I just go right through them?

Just blindly charging through them requires the magic teleportation circle.

I don't know how to use it.

I also don't really know the location of the capital, so I can't just fly there.

While I was pondering, the soldiers that had been rushing towards me stopped in their place.

The stopped soldiers split into two columns and opened up the path.

There appeared some faces that I thought I'd seen before in that gap.

A group of around a hundred men, wearing fancy armor and equipped with weapons that looked like ornaments approached.

“Hoo hoo. We meet again,” the man at the head said.

It seems they are people I've seen somewhere before, considering that he's saying that we're meeting again.

“Lady Seregia. Do you know who they are?”

“They're the warriors, Warrior.”

Ah? Ahhh. They're the guys I met on the first day.

It seems that the warrior in front was the one nearby me back then.

There were two points that were surprising.

“You tried to steal the holy sword and failed, and ran away. Aren't you ashamed to be called a Warrior? Lee Ho Jae?” the leading warrior asked.

The number of surprising points went up to three.

“Lady Seregia. How do you think they know my name?”

“During the ceremony, there was a time you told us your name, Warrior. Don't you remember?”

“Did I?”

Since I had just solved one of those surprising points, it's gone back down to two.

“Hm. So what's a fugitive doing at this fortress? Did you perhaps know that we would be coming? Our glorious Warrior group has finished all the Emperor's tests and we're on our way to defeat the Demon King that is being summoned on that mountain range.”

The first surprising point was that the guy who calls himself a warrior has the holy sword.

Just because you have the holy sword, it doesn't make you a warrior.

“If you're thinking of asking for forgiveness and taking a spot within our group, then give up. We've already finished all our preparations to defeat the Demon King and we don't need help from the likes of you. Though you showed something at the capital that day...”

The second surprising point was that the prattling Warrior had acquired the holy sword and had appeared here in only fourteen days since the stage started.

It had only taken fourteen days for the contest for the holy sword to be over.

That's surprising.

I had thought it would take around the 33 days like Kiri Kiri had mentioned.

It might've finished quicker because I, the challenger wasn't there.

Let's sort this out.

I had confirmed that the next challenger would have around two weeks to become qualified to wield the holy sword and acquire it.

Also, the entire group dispatched to defeat the Demon King numbered a little over one hundred warriors.

And the holy sword was over there.

The holy sword definitely possessed a tremendous amount of power.

It had enough power to rival the Demon King.

However, drawing out that power depended on the competence of the wielder.

That's how weapons are.

Also, if we combine the holy sword's and that warrior's strength...

It's nowhere near enough.

All the members of the warrior group would be annihilated by the Demon King.

Of course, they're supposed to be supplemented by the challengers' strength but... it still looked like it would be tough.

I summarized all the organized contents in my head and came to a conclusion.

[PR and TL Note: The next few sentences are written in fragments as is the author's style; there are few minor edits.]

The key tasks to clearing the 26th floor are as follows:

Acquire the holy sword within 14 days.

Have a talented swordsman included in the group.

Fight the Demon King on the assumption that the Warrior group and the Empire won't be helpful.

Don't provoke the Demon King and when he's being unsummoned, send him off graciously.

Is this enough?

If socializing is a challenger's forte, they may get along with the Warrior group or may draw the Empire's support, but it won't be of much help.

I finished sorting my thoughts and Seregia was dragging the collar of my hand.

I followed Seregia's line of sight and when I turned my gaze, I saw the reddened faces of the warriors.

Behind them, the other warriors seemed to be uncomfortable as well.

Ah. I had been organizing my thoughts so I hadn't realized that I had been ignoring them this entire time.

“Sorry. I didn't hear you since I was thinking about something else.

What were you saying?”

The Warrior panted and started to say something.

Come to think of it, their clothes have changed.

I guess I can understand how I couldn't identify them right away.

In a few days, they had gotten a bit fatter and their faces looked smoother.

In the case of the female warriors, their skin looked visibly milky-white.

It seems that they were supervised in the capital.

They were summoned as Warriors, so they probably received a warm welcome.

Looking at it this way, I know why the stage doesn't reset even when the round ends.

If it reset, the challengers would intentionally not clear and enjoy their thirty days in luxury and repeat without clearing.

“You, you impudent bastard! You ignore me even to the end...”

I got a hold of myself when I heard the sound of his angry yelling.

I took out a Thousand Arms from my inventory and immediately dashed towards him.

I hadn't rushed into combat because of the Warrior's yelling.

It was because the Warrior had lifted the hilt of the holy sword with his right hand.

If he had just brandished a normal sword at me, I wouldn't pay much attention to him.

Of course, it would worsen my mood.

However, that holy sword was different.

It was a weapon that could easily endanger my life with just a rough swing.

Simultaneously, I considered the Warrior who had the holy sword strapped onto his waist as an 'enemy'.

As soon as I approached the Warrior, I plunged my longsword-shaped Thousand Arms into his chest.

When the Thousand Arms collided with the Warrior's armor, the sword snapped into two pieces.

Although I was flustered from my weapon suddenly breaking, aside from that, I calmly prepared myself.

I discarded the broken Thousand Arms and turned my body to the side, evading the course of his sword draw.

At the same time, I yanked the Warrior's wrist.

The Warrior urgently put strength in his grip so he wouldn't lose the holy sword.

Rather than unreasonably stealing the hilt of the holy sword, I manifested a sharp aura within my left palm and cut off the Warrior's wrist.

After I wrenched the stolen holy sword from his hand, the other warriors behind him dashed towards me.

Taking the holy sword from the Warrior had really only taken an instant.

Despite that, seeing as how the Warrior's colleagues that had been behind him are rushing me simultaneously, I could tell that they also weren't amateurs.

At least, compared to what I had thought.

When I saw them running towards me immediately, I stepped back and slashed diagonally with the holy sword.

No, I tried to slash downwards with the holy sword.

[Hello, Warrior. It's truly an honor to meet you again. Since I'm in your hands again, rather than that half-wit, I feel a lot better. Normally, you'd have to learn the spell, but I'll give you a special service this time.]

While the sword chattered, it flung a wave of energy from the blade.

[PR Note: For reference, it's like Excalibur's Exalted Blade from Warframe.]

I was surprised by the strength and the attack that had been aimed at the warriors. The warriors were surprised by that strength and the trajectory of the sword that had been aimed at the warriors suddenly turned upwards.

The sword attack flew not at the warriors, but to the rampart behind them.

And as if it were slicing through tofu, a part of the rampart was cleanly sliced off and started to collapse just like that.

The soldiers atop the rampart and the soldiers that had left the fortress gate to capture Seregia and I could do nothing but be swept away.

I saw the soldiers being buried under the collapsing rampart and couldn't help but mutter.

[Hahahaha. How is it, Warrior? I'm the best, right? Right? Would there be another sword like me in the entire world? Now, you'll go without throwing me away, right?]

“...No, this isn't a holy sword. It's a demonic sword.”

Chapter 159

Tutorial 26th Floor (10)

[How is it, Warrior? I'm the best, right? Right? I'm the best, right?]

This crazy...

I lifted the chattering holy sword and briefly stood in confusion.

To think it could release this power irrespective of its wielder's will.

What's worse, the intellect behind its will seems to be sharp.

[As I thought, you'd prefer a woman's voice over my performance, Warrior? Please don't worry, Warrior. Until now, whenever I had a chance, I have been practicing. Ah, ah. Tee-hee.]

[TL Note: I omitted the "tee-hee" thing in a previous chapter. He only said it once in that chapter. At the time, I didn't really find a good way to depict his attempt at cutesy speech.]

It didn't have the intelligence of a human, but rather was at the level of an orangutan whose head was hit by a rock.

It also talks.

Though it mostly spewed out mumbo-jumbo.

I can't use this weapon however I wish, so it wouldn't fit into the category of a normal weapon.

If I mishandle it, or if there's discord between us, I could hurt myself with it; but how would anyone be able to use this thing in the first place?

However, despite that...

Rumble-

The lofty rampart is collapsing.

The soldiers under the collapsing rampart were buried under a mound of rubble and wordlessly crushed to death.

After the primary damage caused by the falling rocks, the small hill of debris surged towards the surrounding soldiers like a landslide and likewise crushed them.

The warriors hurriedly moved from their positions, so that they wouldn't be buried as well.

I heard the screams and moans from the warrior whose hand I sliced off, as well as from the soldiers who had lost their comrades.

[Tee-hee?]

This crazy...

You're saying that this is a holy sword?

I feel like it's something that I have to throw into the pits of Mount Doom.

[PR Note: Mount Doom is a Lord of the Rings reference. It's a big scary volcano with a lava pit at its peak.]

However, I still have a reason to not roughly throw this sword away.

Bzzzt. Bzzzzz.

I examined the sword that rang out with a sound similar to purring.

I regret that this sword had settled in and found its rightful place in my hands.

I'd like to immediately throw away the sword in my hand.

However, this sword would definitely split even the sky as a result.

The warrior who had lost his hand and was crying...

I now know why the warrior who had lost his hand and was crying had been so confident.

Also, I understood why he was so easily worked up and when he became agitated, why his hand went to the hilt of the sword.

If you were to suddenly acquire this strength overnight, you'd definitely be like that.

If I were to think about that Warrior's level, he must've felt like he had become a god overnight.

“It's definitely a demonic sword.”

[I'm disappointed, Warrior. I really am a holy sword. In fact, I've received a blessing from the God of the Sky.]

I have no idea what the God of the Sky was thinking.

The god's blessing may have enhanced the sword's power, but this sword is definitely not a sacred sword.

It was a sword that drove its wielder to his death.

I felt that it was fortunate that this sword had been sealed in the basement of the capital.

If this sword had been dropped in the middle of the continent, there would be a countless number of deaths in that region.

The Empire might've summoned the warriors because they didn't want to give this sword to one of its knights.

It was an absent minded notion , but when I thought of it that way I really felt that it was truly how things were.

[I love you, Warrior. I'm not just saying this because I'm in your hand. When I was in that half-wit's hand, do you know how much I tried to reach you? Tut. That half-wit wouldn't listen to a word I said.]

“What did you do then?”

[Uh, Oh? Hahaha. It's a secret. I love you. Warrior.]

Looking at how this guy talks, it seems like he urged that Warrior to fight with me.

I really should throw it into a volcano; I feel like this sword is fit to be dropped into lava.

That's what I thought.

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty 26h floor, perfect clear.]

[All status effects and injuries are healed.]

[You have received 5000 points for clearing the floor.]

[You have received 5000 points for being the first to clear the floor.]

[Many gods react positively to you. You have received 9000 points.]

[Many gods react negatively to you. 300 points have been deducted.]

[All of the Gods of the Temple of the Hundred Gods are watching you.]

[TL Note: Changed White Holy Temple to this. White Holy Temple was an incorrect translation, but I got lazy and copy-pasted the original translation. I'm really unsure when I should change terms that people are so used to, but this one REALLY bothered me. I try not to change the previous translators' translations.]

[The God of the Sky would like to gift you a divine item instead of an additional reward. Would you like to accept?]

[Live Voting Results: 20 For. 19 Against.]

[The God of Light would like you to become his disciple.]

[Would you like to undergo the test to prove your worthiness to become a disciple?]

Messages started to appear tumultuously.

A perfect clear.

The Demon King had drawn out his true power, but I had defeated him alone.

In the process of getting the holy sword, not only did I not receive the trial of the holy sword, but it cornered the original owner into a deadly situation as well in order to be owned by me.

They were definitely conditions for a perfect clear.

The next thing I have to check is... the bonus rewards and the disciple offer.

First I'll check out the bonus rewards.

"I accept."

[The Holy Sword of the Sky, Ahoubuch has been acquired.]

...Holy sword?

The message appeared and at the same time, the holy sword in my hands disappeared.

I opened my inventory.

It was there.

The holy sword was in my inventory.

[The Holy Sword of the Sky, Ahoubuch]

Explanation: The God of the Sky, in order to punish arrogant humans, gifted this sword to the most arrogant of humans, the Empire's Emperor. The Emperor who had received the present, and the next representing Emperor, and the next representing Emperor, and the next representing Emperor were all swallowed up in a series of incidents caused by the holy sword and died.

As I thought, it's a holy sword in name only.

Its actual effect wasn't very different from the biblical story of God's flood that punished humans.

To have killed four generations of Emperors, what exactly did this sword do?

While that was happening, the Empire could neither discard the sword nor break it.

I don't know if it was due to the sword's overwhelming power or that they didn't want to anger the god, but this sword is definitely a demonic sword.

I should just shove this into my inventory and leave it.

Aside from the sword's heinousness, this sword has an excessively high degree of power.

If I use it immediately, tremendous results would be shown, but I won't have the opportunity to grow for quite some time.

Of course, if it were a normal challenger, they'll just think of it as a tremendous reward.

I think that the gods fixed the balance so that twenty five people would proceed through the stage.

However, if I draw out the maximum strength of this sword, I won't be able to face any danger that's actually dangerous for quite some time.

It's an excessive reward for me.

The next thing I had to check was the disciple offer.

The God of Light had offered me to become his disciple.

I pondered briefly and after I made my decision, I put it off.

I hadn't replied to the God of Death's offer to become a disciple yet.

I'll get some advice from Kiri Kiri and carefully make my decision.

Of course, in order to get advice about the gods, as well as information on them, I'll have to wait a long time though.

Rather than lacking in strength right now, I'm actually overflowing with power.

The stage had increased in difficulty and that's what I had wanted, but I didn't have a reason to obsess over possibly getting a new god skill.

I would first have to improve my own abilities.

Then, I can just receive the authorities after that.

[TL Note: The author uses the term "authority" to differentiate between his normal skills and the skills that gods give him; it also refers to their (gods') power. Sometimes, the author refers to them as "authority skills" as well. I believe previous translators just translated them as "skills". As per my editors' recommendation, I've kept it as authorities. I had compromised and used "god skill" before. I let my editors change it to whatever they thought best, so long as the general meaning is conveyed.]

I finished sorting everything out and saw the portal.

Should I depart immediately?

“Warrior.”

Behind me, I heard a voice I hadn't been thinking about.

It was Seregia.

“Ah, Lady Seregia. You have worked hard all this time. Thank you for taking care of me.”

“I'm sorry?”

“I think I'm going to head out now. It seems like this is where we part ways.”

Seregia, who had been behind me, stood in front of me, and said, “Can't you take me with you?”

“Yes. That's a little...”

“Warrior.”

“Yes?”

Seregia spoke with a serious expression.

It seemed that she had her usual expressionless face, but after seeing it several times, I could tell the differences between them.

“You said last time that so long as I don't die, you can't take me with you.”

“Yes... I did say that but...”

That's a bad habit.

It might've been because I've spent so much time alone, but after all the tension is gone, my thoughts just spew out sometimes.

Talking to myself was bad in various ways.

Let's fix that soon.

“If that's really the case, I'll die and follow you.”

“...Lady Seregia.”

“Warrior, look at that.”

The moment I was going to try to convince the insisting Seregia, Seregia pointed behind her.

The fortress had collapsed and the soldiers were dying.

Using the pretext of helping the soldiers, the warriors were running away from us.

Rather than saving the soldiers, it looked like they were running away from me no matter who saw it.

“You said that if I wanted to follow you, I had to die, Warrior, but even if I don't follow you, I'll die. Even if I somehow escape from here, I'll be chased.”

That's probably the case.

If Seregia is left alone like this, she will be pursued by the Empire.

Also, she'll harbor the crime of destroying the fortress and stealing the holy sword all by herself.

She'll definitely die, 100%.

I was scratching my head and Seregia took out a dagger from her chest.

“As I said, I'll die and follow you.”

And she forcefully stabbed her chest.

Blood spurted out from her chest.

I sighed.

I thought she would die because she was so bold.

Seregia didn't die.

Although it may look like it, the dagger hadn't pierced her heart.

I didn't need to use my elixir. If Seregia just uses the health potion that she has, she can sufficiently treat the wound.

Of course, if she just left it alone like that for a long time, she could die from excessive bleeding.

“Warrior.”

Seregia may have thought about it like this:

My path is too dangerous and that I couldn't bring her along.

So, if she didn't have the resolve to die, I couldn't bring her with me.

So she showed that she was prepared to die if need be.

However, that's not it.

I really can't take her with me unless she dies.

“Lady Seregia. Are you really prepared to die?” I asked abruptly.

Honestly, I didn't think it'd be much of a problem.

Personally, there was only a faint boundary between life and death.

Whether that line actually existed was the question.

That's why I was ready to take her with me if she wanted to.

That's why I could ask her so easily.

If she would really die.

“As I had said, even if I stay here, I'll die.”

So that I could progress the conversation quicker, I gave her a clear explanation.

“Lady Seregia. If you go with me, it won't be that it'll be so dangerous that you'll die. For starters, if you want to go with me, you have to die.”

“...Is it necromancy?”

“No. Rather than that, it's closer to the art of death.”

[TL Note: Korean doesn't really have a lot of proper “fantasy” words, so they borrow terms from other languages. In the previous sentence, the author uses the borrowed Korean term for necromancy while in Seregia's dialogue, ‘necromancy’ is spelled out how it would be pronounced in English.]

Seregia briefly stood wordlessly, all the while the dagger was still lodged in her chest.

“Think about it slowly. I can at least give you enough time to think about it.”

While Seregia was thinking about it, I also thought about it.

About what decision she'd make.

She'd probably stab herself.

If I were her, that's what I'd do.

With a soft squelch, the dagger lodged in her chest wedged all the way in until the hilt.

She pierced her heart.

[Soul Siphon]

I wanted to reduce her pain at least a little so I activated Soul Siphon.

After she had pierced her heart, Seregia was exposed to Soul Siphon and quickly died.

[Soul Collect]

I verified that Seregia's soul had been collected and I tried summoning her soul.

Seregia's form appeared in midair.

Compared to the other small palm-sized souls, Seregia's soul was as big as a forearm.

If we exclude the fact that she looks slightly blurry, she looked exactly like she did when she was alive.

“How do you feel?”

[I feel great. If I had known it would be like this, I wouldn't have hesitated and I would've died sooner.]

Seregia moved her body here and there and started to drift around as if she were swimming.

She adapted really quickly.

I looked at Seregia, who was muttering some nonsense while flying around her surroundings, and stepped atop the portal.

“Teleport.”

I left the 26th floor stage and moved to Kiri Kiri's field.

As usual, it was a peaceful and beautiful field, but there a few things that caught my attention.

To be exact, two things.

The first was that Seregia, who had been floating in the air beside me, disappeared.

The second was that I didn't see Kiri Kiri.

Chapter 160

Tutorial 26th Floor (11)

After I moved to Kiri Kiri's field, it wasn't that surprising to me that Seregia disappeared.

Something like this had happened before.

The same thing happened when Idy, who had been summoned through the Summon Dead skill, had visited here.

Kiri Kiri said that only I, the challenger, would be invited into this field, and Idy was temporarily unsummoned.

If I go back to the waiting room, I should be able to summon Seregia again.

Rather, not seeing Kiri Kiri was more surprising.

I think that this has never happened before.

Kiri Kiri had other things to do besides sunbathe in this field.

She definitely had work to do.

Also, she felt that that work was quite important.

Kiri Kiri didn't seem to be the type that would shirk her responsibilities without a reason.

I can think of two reasons.

The first possibility is this.

Kiri Kiri ran into a problem.

It was a problem big enough that she shied away from her responsibilities.

The second possibility was this.

Kiri Kiri is here.

It's just that she's hiding.

If it's the second possibility, it's not hard to get Kiri Kiri to show herself.

Without pondering further, I decided to test it.

I didn't need to draw the Seal of Solomon and bought a few cakes from the store window.

[TL and PR Note: Literally translates as the Star of David, but we thought Seal of Solomon made more sense. The Star of David has nothing to do with summoning. He doesn't need an elaborate pattern to summon her, he just needs cake.]

I spread out a mat on the floor and laid out the cakes I bought.

And I briefly waited.

If Kiri Kiri is hiding, she should be right in front of me.

Drooling.

“Kiri Kiri.”

“Uh, yeah?”

I heard a voice in the air.

As I expected, she's easy to read.

Like usual, I couldn't see her or detect her presence.

“Do you want to eat some cake?”

“Can I? But I lost the bet...”

[TL Note: I have no idea how to translate her “cutesy” speech. It has no real English equivalent and it makes the words sound weird. Besides stretching Ho Jae’s name, she also tends to speak in a cute way, kind of like how some Koreans write their cell phone messages.]

“You can eat it. If not, then well... If you don't then that's fine. You don't want any?”

“I want some!”

I heard a sonorous voice in the air and a slice of cake flew into the air.

After the cake shot up into the air, the number of cakes I laid out started to decrease.

It seemed that the pieces of cake that disappeared by the moment were going into Kiri Kiri's mouth.

“Kiri Kiri. I can't see you.”

As soon as I finished speaking, I began to be able to make out Kiri Kiri's form.

As I had thought, Kiri Kiri was picking up a cake and ferociously stuffing the cake into her mouth.

You'll have an upset stomach if you keep eating like that.

What reason would I have for bullying Kiri Kiri by not buying her cakes?

The bet was just a way to kill time and there was no reason to make her sulk.

The cakes are a bit expensive, but Kiri Kiri always more than makes up for their price.

With information, that is.

It was also cute seeing her eat.

“Yeah!”

What do you mean by 'yeah' all of a sudden?

“It's great to eat!”

What are you talking about out of the blue.

That doesn't add up at all.

“Yeah, go ahead and eat a lot.”

“Yeah!”

I watched as Kiri Kiri gobbled up the cakes and waited for her to finish.

Contrary to the other floors where I didn't really have any pending questions to ask, I was full of questions about the recent developments.

I reviewed the list of questions in my head and organized my thoughts.

* * *

“Now you'll answer my questions sincerely, right?”

Kiri Kiri vigorously nodded her head.

She took out a handkerchief and with a beaming smile, wiped her mouth and said, "Ask anything!"

Kiri Kiri folded her arms and responded confidently.

Before the buff effect of the cakes wore off, it'd be best to ask her my questions quickly.

"For the last few days, my exhaustion won't go away."

"Heng. That's natural."

"It's natural? I also drank an elixir, leveled up, drank a health potion, and recovered via the clear reward, but my fatigue isn't going away, even in this field."

"That's because it's not simply fatigue. It can't be helped."

"Can you explain it in detail?"

"Yeah. Strictly speaking, what you're feeling right now, Hoooooujae, isn't physical exhaustion."

"Then?"

"It's closer to mental fatigue."

"Are you talking about stress?"

Kiri Kiri fiddled with her long ears and said, "You're not wrong, but it's more correct to say that excessive concentration has strained your brain."

"My brain? Due to my concentration?"

"Yeah."

That's a surprise.

Honestly, I was really confident in my ability to concentrate.

I didn't think I'd lack focus and have these kinds of side effects.

“Rather than lacking focus, it's better to say that you focused too much. If you're human, you would never maintain even a moment of such an extremely tense state throughout your entire life; however, you maintained that extremely tense state for several days, and for several hours at a time.”

“It's that bad? Is this by any chance really severe? Or incurable?”

“It's not to that point. It'd be simpler to think of it as muscle pain.”

Muscle pain, huh.

I overtaxed my brain cells.

“You really overworked them. Even if you drive out the exhaustion through a healing effect, your brain will remember it. That overload is because you're overtaxing your brain. No healing method has a memory-erasing effect.”

“Can this be healed?”

“Nope. The best solution is to just empty your head for a few days and rest completely.”

“And after I rest, the exhaustion will disappear?”

“Yeah.”

It's alright.

I'll rest for a few days and practice swordsmanship with Seregia.

“Heng. You'll have to figure out for yourself if you can really call that resting. It doesn't seem like you'll listen to me, either.”

Let's move on to the next question.

“About the level up rewards...”

“Like I said before, don't worry about those anymore.”

“No, aside from the stats and skills rewards, even the level up recovery effect is gone. What's going on here?”

Usually when you level up, your overall condition is restored to perfect health.

However, when I was covered in wounds in the aftermath of the Light Sword, I didn't realize that I had leveled up until after I drank the elixirs and recovered from my wounds.

Basically, I didn't get the healing effect from my level ups.

“Ah... that.”

Kiri Kiri didn't immediately respond to my question.

That's a big deal.

In most cases, Kiri Kiri immediately answers me.

“We're in the middle of voting.”

“Voting?”

“Yeah. I'll tell you about it later. Even if I were to tell you about it, it really wouldn't be all that useful to you and it's just expensive information. The only thing I can tell you for sure is that you shouldn't be worried about level ups from now on.”

I briefly paused my questioning and thought about it, but nothing came to mind.

I didn't know anything about it, so there's no point in making blind guesses.

As Kiri Kiri said, it'd be better to hear it from her next time.

"I got it. Next, I have a question about disciples. I don't know if my allowance is enough for information though."

"The God of Light?"

"Yeah."

"I recommend saving up some more. Since you still haven't heard about the God of Death yet."

"Yeah. Then let's move on the next question."

Unconcerned, I moved to a new subject.

From the start, I hadn't expected to hear information regarding the gods or disciples this time.

I had also thought about accepting the God of Death's and the God of Light's offers blindly.

However, I didn't really need to do that.

What I need right now isn't a skill from a god.

I was already struggling with developing my current abilities.

The difficulty was far easier than I expected.

The Demon King that appeared on the 26th floor was quite strong.

No, he honestly was much stronger than me.

His appearance was like rain after a drought.

However, I couldn't be sure that a formidable opponent like the Demon King would appear on the upcoming stages.

Of course, it would be nice if they did.

What's worse, even that Demon King was in the category of opponents that I was confident I could definitely beat.

From here, if I gain a few more god skills, my growth may stagnate for a while.

Perhaps I would delay accepting their offer to become their disciple even after receiving advice from Kiri Kiri regarding the gods.

[The God of Adventure is happy.]

[The God of Light hates someone.]

[The God of Death is bored.]

“Next is the holy sword. About the holy sword that the God of the Sky gifted to me. If I had used that, I think the stage would've been too easy. Did they give me the wrong item?”

“You're right. That's true.”

“What? They gave me the wrong item?”

“No. Not that. Honestly, even now the stage is easy for you.”

“That's true.”

“That's probably why they gave it to you. They thought that they'd never see you struggle in a stage, so instead they probably wanted to see how you would act if they gave you a weapon. That's probably what the gods who voted for it were thinking. Honestly, most gods aren't concerned about the difficulty setup or how fair it is for the challengers. There's something else that's important."

I brooded on Kiri Kiri's words and thought about them.

When I had acquired the holy sword, I saw this kind of explanation.

It was a punishment sent by the God of the Sky, in order to punish the arrogant humans.

Would it have been given to me for a similar reason?

"Then why would the gods have been against it?"

"Eh. They probably all had their separate reasons. They might've not wanted you to attain the holy sword, Hoooooujae, or they didn't want you to get influenced by it, or they didn't want you to accept the God of the Sky's present, or they might've just hated the God of the Sky."

Influence, huh.

If we exclude the gods that have a bad relationship with the God of the Sky, all of them have reasons to oppose the present based on the influence of the holy sword or a connection to it.

It's certainly a demonic sword that could influence me.

"Or they might just hate you, Hoooooujae."

"...That can happen?"

"Yeah. There are gods that continue to hate you. Hehe."

When Kiri Kiri was finished talking, she was laughing contently to the side.

What's so funny?

I'm being hated by gods.

Some of the gods definitely hate me all the time.

For example, the God of Nature.

The God of Life and the God of the Sky among them too, but it seems like after what happened, the God of the Sky changed his mind.

No, seeing as how he gave me the holy sword, he might actually harbor a malevolent attitude towards me.

Apart from them, there were a few gods that didn't respond much but occasionally appeared and would exhibit a negative reaction.

I'm hated by gods.

How should I think about this?

“Kiri Kiri.”

“Yeah, they can't.”

“Huh?”

“You tried asking me this on the 4th floor, right? To what extent the gods can meddle with you.”

“Yeah.”

“They can't interfere with you. Unless all the gods of the Temple of the Hundred Gods agree to that interference. However, that probably won't happen.”

[TL and PR Note: Just a reminder. White Holy Temple was incorrect and will now be translated as “Temple of the Hundred Gods” (100 God Temple), denoting that there are one hundred gods watching over Hojae.]

“Are you sure?” I asked again, after hearing Kiri Kiri's confident tone.

“I'm sure. Also, if that happens, nothing bad will happen to you, Hoooooujae. The god's interference is limited to just that.”

[TL and PR Note: The author is really ambiguous about a lot of things. “That” refers to their interference and seems to be limited to things like giving items, skills, etc.]

So that's how it is.

Hm...

It's good information.

It's valuable information.

However, as I heard this information, my level of anxiety actually heightened.

I had asked about this information a few times in the past.

The response back then was that the information was too expensive and she couldn't tell me.

This was especially precious information.

“Kiri Kiri. How much more until I meet my quota?”

“You've pretty much used it all up.”

Damn it.

I had mostly spent my quota that I had saved up to ask about the God of Death.

I had been saving it since the 21st floor too.

“Heh.”

I wanted to wring the nose of the jubilantly-laughing Kiri Kiri but I did my best to hold back.

There was definitely a reason that Kiri Kiri had explained this information to me at this time, even if I had to spend most of my saved quota.

Even if I had to wait on listening to an explanation about the God of Death and the God of Light; there was a reason why I had to hear it.

That's what I thought as I passed onto the next subject.

“Kiri Kiri. Then, can you tell me about the abilities of the holy sword with the rest of my allowance?”

“I can. But are you going to use that holy sword?”

“No. For now, I'm thinking of just stashing it in my inventory.”

However, I needed to know the holy sword's powers, so I can use it if need be.

“I got it. You just need to check your inventory when you go back to the waiting room.”

Now I had asked roughly everything I had wanted to ask.

I thought for a moment if there was something I missed.

The Thousand Arms.

I forgot to ask her about the Thousand Arms that smashed into the Warrior's armor and split into two.

I asked Kiri Kiri why the Thousand Arms was suddenly destroyed upon impact.

“It broke because of the excessive concentration of mana.”

“The concentration of mana?”

Is she talking about the Light Sword?

I'd definitely thought back then that the amount of mana I'd gathered was outrageous.

“Yeah. That. Since the Thousand Arms is closer to a magical tool than a weapon, it's weak to the concentration of mana. Also.”

“Also?”

“Before the collision, the deciding factor was the holy sword's Dispel, which cancelled the built-in durability magic. Moreover, its durability had already declined and the built-in support magic disappeared, so it immediately broke.”

...The holy sword cast Dispel on the Thousand Arms?

If by any chance, the Thousand Arms was destroyed, did the holy sword think that I'd use it instead?

It was really a demonic sword that I wanted to throw into lava.

“You probably won't be able to use the Thousand Arms that's in pieces. The waiting room's effect won't restore it. It also won't change into other shapes. You have another one, so you can just use that.”

I sighed.

I didn't think that one of my Thousand Arms would be damaged this quickly.

The crucial problem was that my Light Sword had greatly diminished the durability of the Thousand Arms, irregardless of the holy sword casting Dispel.

If I use my Light Sword often with such a high concentration of mana...

I probably won't be able to use my Thousand Arms anymore.

The Thousand Arms isn't just a weapon since it can be used as a shield, gear, props, or a magical tool.

Rather than use the last remaining Thousand Arms as a sword, I thought it'd be better to obtain a new weapon.

“Kiri Kiri. I'm thinking of buying a new sword. What do you think?”

Chapter 161

Tutorial 27th Floor (Waiting Room)

[Kilimanshatu's Soul Sword]

Explanation: This is the soul sword found in the Kilimanshatu Dungeon. The materials used for this sword and the method its manufacturing are unknown, but this sword is capable of housing a soul. Based on the records found in the Kilimanshatu Dungeon, a certain king in an ancient kingdom placed his soul inside this sword and dreamt of eternal life.

A sword that can house a soul, you say.

“Heh.”

Seeing as how Kiri Kiri is beaming and laughing, I can be absolutely sure.

She had recommended this sword because of Seregia.

So I can put her soul into this sword and travel together with her.

For now, that was enough of a reason for me to buy this sword.

However, I looked around meticulously in case they had any other long swords.

The item that Kiri Kiri had recommended and passed to me was peculiar in various ways.

It wasn't just because of its ability to infuse a soul within itself.

“What exactly is this sword made of? It doesn't seem like it's made of metal but rock.”

I felt the blade with my fingers and was met with the rough texture of a rock.

It wasn't a sword made of a refined metal.

“You're right! It wasn't refined. Because of that, the edge is a little dull. I'm saying this just in case, but don't try to sharpen the blade yourself. Since it won't sharpen.”

“Because it's too tough?”

“Yeah.”

“If that's the case, in exchange for having a blunt edge, it shouldn't break or chip.”

Kiri Kiri kept nodding her head.

Due to its unusually strong density, it was a sword that even I couldn't sharpen.

I guess I should be relieved that they managed to mold it into the shape of a sword.

I touched the end of the sword.

The blade that should've been sharp was smooth.

Rather than a sword, it was closer to a thin yet sturdy club.

If it's a sword where slashing and stabbing are impossible, then I have to use it like a blunt weapon regardless of its shape.

“Heng. Look a little closer.”

Just as Kiri Kiri said, I examined the sword on a closer level.

Its size and weight wasn't much different from the Thousand Arm's in its long sword form.

It was at a weight that would be difficult for normal people to lift, but this weight is just right for me.

Next I infused my mana into the sword.

And then I understood why Kiri Kiri had recommended this sword.

I only infused a small quantity of mana, but gleaming blue mana formed around the sword's edge.

The sword possessed an extremely high level of mana conductivity.

Certainly, if there had been a sword this specialized for mana, there wouldn't be any reason for me to try to sharpen the edge.

“I'll choose this.”

The sale was finalized and I paid with my points.

A considerable amount of points were just spent in one go, but I thought that the sword was worth it.

“Good choice. It's the best sword amongst the ones you can buy, so you shouldn't have to swap it out for a while.”

Definitely.

That's also how I feel as the one holding this sword in my hands.

It's different from the holy sword that can unleash magical effects, but this is plenty good enough.

I enveloped my sword with aura and closed my eyes.

“Eh? What are you trying to do?”

When I swung the holy sword on the 26th floor, the holy sword passed through space and slashed the distant rampart.

Without any resistance.

The blade drew a line in the sky and just like it had cut through the air, split apart the distant rampart.

I wonder how that was possible?

This wasn't as if the aura had instantly extended by several meters and slashed through the rampart.

It also wasn't as if the aura was shot over a long distance.

It's not the kind of skill that closes distances like Blink Strike.

The holy sword just cut through space and also just cut through the rampart in its path.

I threw the Thousand Arms that had broken into two pieces into the air.

The doppelganger Magician had said this.

Magic's inconvenient magic formulas, trigger words, hand seals and incantations were essentially all set-up for the same goal.

They unveiled and demonstrated the method to using and manipulating the miraculous tool known as magic.

I threw the Thousand Arms up into the air and it soon dropped to the ground in an arc.

I'm trying to better understand this natural phenomenon and also demonstrate the change that I desire.

For example, if it were a type of flying magic, it would explain the phenomenon of how the Thousand Arms drew a parabola in the air.

And in that incantation, the miraculous tool of mana would be put into it.

The incantation that's filled with mana is based on the user's will and will activate in accordance with the structured magical formula.

This is the main foundation of basic magic.

In short, the important things are mana and intent.

Aura was also the same.

Following the magic circuits, mana would be transferred to the sword and would just flow into the blade itself.

Of course, just with that the sword should become a bit more durable.

The mana that coats the skin makes the body healthier and sturdier.

The muscles that are suffused with mana are also stronger and allow for faster movements.

However, that's all.

That mana must embody a swordsman's firm will in order to manifest aura for the first time.

Also, the next step was to give that manifested aura a special characteristic.

In order to give it a special characteristic, the first thing you need to do is imagine in your head what you want to manifest.

What would be the image most similar to the effect desired?

The Light Sword was friction.

Through friction, I would create an explosive light and heat.

That force in its entirety would be placed into the sword and I would transfer that energy in the direction I release it.

That was the foundation of the Light Sword.

If that's the case, what would be the key word for the technique that the holy sword had shown?

Amplification, leap, throw, illusion. There are probably a lot of possibilities.

I couldn't ask someone for the details nor could I learn about it, so I couldn't be sure.

The only thing I could do is use my senses to try to figure it out.

What I thought of was conveyed.

I cut the open space, and my will to cut traveled further and materialized in a distant area.

The Thousand Arms that I had thrown into the air started to fall to the ground.

I waited a little longer.

It was within a range that I could reach, my usual attack range.

No, it was closer than that.

The range that my will could reach was about the length of my arm.

I slowly lowered my soul sword that was over my head.

Slowly.

Like a petal softly falling in the wind.

I forlornly dropped my sword down.

I locked the whirling power into my grip and my sword, though I looked like I was at peace from the outside.

When the soul sword that had descended at a slow speed stopped in place, simultaneously...

Ting.

The Thousand Arms that had been dropping on my left side seemed like it was hit by something and slightly rose up.

Would it really not work?

[TL Note: The author isn't very clear about this, but he's attempting to replicate the space slash that the holy sword had performed.]

I had attempted it because I felt like I could do it.

For some reason, it seems that I couldn't live up to my expectations; it just felt awkward.

“...If a swordsman that was training for that saw you, they wouldn't just let you go.”

“Well, I failed though.”

“Heng. They'd try to kill you.”

* * *

“Do you want to drink an elixir?”

“It won't help.”

What did she say?

I was laying on the floor and stretched my exhausted body.

I pointlessly overdid it.

I'm really tired.

“Of course you are. How long has it been since I've told you not to overdo it and rest; then you go and do something crazy.”

Kiri Kiri's voice was a little sharp.

What do you mean by something crazy?

“I'm in the middle of regretting it so stop nagging me.”

Kiri Kiri, who was crouching over my head, slapped my forehead.

“If you keep going on like that, you'll really die.”

“I'll die?”

“Yeah. Your body will explode and you'll die.”

Are you serious?

“Are you serious?”

“I'm serious. Until now, you've grown in that manner and it's more strange that you haven't contracted any side effects. If you go on like this, your magic circuits may get blocked, or you'll have holes poked somewhere, or you'll get twisted around somewhere and you'll die. If that happens, you can't even treat it. Even if you're in the waiting room, it'll just prolong your life and if you go outside, there's a high possibility of instant death. Even if you don't die instantly, you'd die soon.”

So it's like destroying myself.

“Yeah. Just like that.”

I should be careful.

Just like there's a push to every pull , there's an equal and opposite reaction to my growth.

That's what I think.

If I train my muscles, muscular pain follows.

If I exercise, the time spent exercising as well as the muscular pain results in an increase in muscular mass.

The more I grow, the faster I grow, and as I develop further, that price will increase.

Also, if my body can't handle that price in its entirety, that excessive growth speed could become poisonous to me.

“Am I right?” I asked Kiri Kiri.

“Yeah,” Kiri Kiri affirmed.

From now on, I should also focus on increasing my body's durability.

Rather than using self-injury to increase my resistance skills, my entire body itself has to become stronger.

Blowing myself up when using the Light Sword technique alone, or my body not keeping up when I reach a new stage are situations that cannot happen.

[TL Note: New stage/level of strength, not necessarily a new tutorial stage.]

My body has already reached a level where it's difficult to see me as human, but there's still room for growth.

Let's try a variety of methods.

If I don't have any success with it, I'll just ask Kiri Kiri in the next stage for a more concrete method.

Now my planning is done.

Since it feels like I've rested as much as I need to, let's go to the waiting room already.

I dusted off my pants and stood up.

“Ah, about the next floor,” Kiri Kiri said abruptly.

“Oh. The next floor. I forgot to listen to your tips about the next floor. Is there anything that I should keep in mind?”

“Yeah. You have to pick the right guide. That's it.”

Considering how meager the tips were, it didn't seem like the next floor would be that difficult.

I felt unnecessarily dejected and walked atop the portal.

“Take care. You have to come back soon!”

Kiri Kiri scampered around and said goodbye.

I haven't heard a goodbye in a long time.

When we were betting, she hadn't said anything about coming back soon.

“Yeah, I'll come back soon and buy you some cake.”

I saw Kiri Kiri's beaming face as I was transported out of the waiting room.

“How are you? Are you dizzy, Lady Seregia?” I asked Seregia.

To be precise, I asked Seregia who was inside my soul sword.

[I feel great, Warrior. Would you like to try it out with some moves right now?]

As Seregia suggested, I slowly swung my sword.

While I swung my sword, Seregia spoke softly and kept muttering the same thing repeatedly.

“What did you say?”

[I'm happy.]

“I'm sorry?”

[If I knew it would be like this, if I was born as a sword, I think I would've been happier.]

That's a little... Is that normal?

It seems that she likes the feeling of being a soul inside the sword.

[Maybe it's because I don't have to rely on my eyes, nose, or lips, but my peripheral vision has greatly expanded. I can also see both yours and the sword's movements, Warrior. Really.]

That's a relief.

As I had thought, Seregia could just observe my movements when I'm fighting.

Sort of like a black box.

After the battle, using her observations, she should be able to give me more detailed and precise feedback.

It was unlike her, but Seregia spoke a bit quicker.

[I really like it!]

“...Is that so?”

[Warrior. From this point on, let's make our goal to reach the peak of swordsmanship. This sword that I'm in, if even for an instant I can reach the ultimate peak of swordsmanship, then even if I die, I'll have no regrets.]

But Lady Seregia, you're already dead.

[No, I've already died. Let me correct myself. After I'm reborn, I'll have no regrets even if I die again.]

She was so positive and bright that I couldn't get used to it.

“Lady Seregia. Do you really not feel regret or sadness? Still, you were born as a human and died once.”

[I'm a little sad that I can't eat snacks anymore, but I feel like I'll be happier living as a sword. Since my goal from the beginning was to follow you and see that swordsmanship. Of course, if I had become a common soldier's sword, then I would've been far more anguished than I am now.]

Seregia looked like she was really enjoying this.

Like she said, it seemed that she enjoyed it more than being alive.

I could even tell from the way she was speaking.

The speed at which she spoke hastened and above all, she spoke more.

[I wonder if this sword can handle that technique that you displayed on the summit of the mountain? Also, will I be able to endure it? If I can, I wouldn't have to worry about my sight being burned away and I should be able to clearly see that process. Wow! I'm so happy!]

She's a completely different person... Her personality has changed.

Does everyone become like this when they become a sword spirit?

I took out my other sword with an ego from my inventory.

As soon as I took out the demonic sword that used the moniker of a holy sword, it started to whine.

[Warrior, Warrior, Warrior, Warrior. Oh, Warrior. Why did you do that?]

“What's with you again?”

[Please don't lock me up in there again, Warrior. Please. I beg of you. I love you, Warrior.]

“My inventory?”

[Yes! There's no notion of time in that damn subspace! Warrior, if you lock me up in there again, I may go crazy.]

Are you like a Pikachu that doesn't want to go into a Pokeball?

Why don't you just threaten me?

It's become difficult.

I fundamentally store all my items inside my inventory.

However, if I can't put the holy sword into my inventory... that means I have to keep it with me all the time.

What's worse, I may have to carry around the soul sword that Seregia is in all the time.

“Is it that bad?”

[Yes! If you make a mistake I might be damaged, Warrior.]

I don't think it can be helped.

Even if I don't plan to use the holy sword, I can't just let the holy sword break.

There may be a time where there is an urgent need to use it.

Also, after I've reached a sufficiently high stage, I may start using the holy sword.

I took out the Thousand Arms from my inventory.

Between the two Thousand Arms, one of them was broken, but the other was still unscathed.

[Cough. Warrior. Please just throw away that crude toy! I'm a much better sword. Really. I was even blessed by the God of the Sky.]

It may have thought that I'd use the Thousand Arms instead of the holy sword, and the holy sword hastily responded.

[I-If you want to know how much strength I possess, Warrior. One moment. Please don't put me back into the inventory yet. I'll explain everything!]

You don't need to.

I asked Kiri Kiri and already got the explanation.

[The Holy Sword of the Sky, Ahoubuch]

Explanation: The God of the Sky, in order to punish the arrogant humans, gifted this divine item to them.

The sword would pull the surrounding people, including the owner into a bloody, desperate battle, with him at the center.

An owner who is exposed to its power for a long time would become extremely arrogant or they may exhibit perpetual bloodthirst.

Aside from the owner's will, there was a sword spirit called Ahoubuch dwelling inside of the blade.

Damage Prevention Magic is infused.

Hardness Reinforcement Magic is infused.

Sharpness Reinforcement Magic is infused.

Dispel Magic is infused.

Magic Shield Magic is infused.

Rapid Mana Recharge Magic is infused.

Magic Amplification Magic is infused.

Floating Magic is infused.

Flying Magic is infused.

Cleanliness Magic is infused.

The sword spirit can use the holy sword's magic at its own discretion.

The sword spirit is capable of casting all magics requiring less than three circles, including the stored magic.

The sword spirit can cast the holy spells of the cult of the sky god without any cost.

The sword spirit can manifest aura around the sword using its own will.

If the possessor is acknowledged by the God of the Sky, the sword can act as a conduit for him to receive the god's blessing.

I can only say that these specs are really crazy.

There was a tremendous amount of mana equipped to the holy sword itself, and the holy sword's performance that could handle that mana was even greater.

That's why even if there's a strange sword spirit within, I can't just thoughtlessly discard it.

I turned my Thousand Arms into the form of a sheath.

And I put the holy sword into that sheath.

The Thousand Arms matched the holy sword's length and width by adjusting its size.

“There, it's fine if I just carry you around like this, right?”

[Yes! Warrior!]

“In exchange, you have to promise me a few things. You cannot thoughtlessly use your power. If you are to use your power, you need to get my permission beforehand. Also, for a while, your role won't be to cut down my enemies, but while in that sheath, it'll be fine to just talk about swordsmanship. And don't be so disappointed, too.”

[Yes, I understand. Warrior.]

He certainly responds properly.

Well, that's that.

“I'm not a warrior anymore, so you don't have to call me a warrior anymore.”

[I'm sorry? You weren't a Warrior?]

“Yeah.”

[Then what should I call you?]

“I wonder.”

When I really think about it, there's no fitting name that comes up.

[Then... Master? Shall I call you master? Master?]

“...No. Don't.”

Since he called me master with an old man's voice, it's kind of... you know.

Besides, I felt a certain freakish degree of cuteness in his voice, so I was even more disgusted.

Why is he mixing a nasally voice with a baritone voice?

[Yes. I won't do that.]

The mood became awkward.

I briefly turned my attention away from the holy sword and talked to Seregia, who was within the soul sword.

“Lady Seregia.”

[Yes.]

“Would you like to try saying master once?”

[I don't want to.]

Seregia instantly returned to her old manner of speaking and spoke coldly.

Chapter 162

Tutorial 27th Floor (1)

[So you got that as a reward? Wow. Gods are also shameless. Shouldn't you get a different reward in exchange for being entrusted with the holy sword?]

[That's what I'm saying.]

[So how long have you had that holy sword?]

[TL Note: I assume he's talking to the girl who's currently going through Hell Difficulty.]

* * *

[Rather than that, wouldn't it be better to slash downwards more heavily?]

“Maybe. If I consider the next motion, I think it'd be better to swing lightly.”

Seregia acknowledged my opinion.

Therefore, our three opinions were divided 2:1.

However, the holy sword wouldn't accept it.

[Just slash downwards with all your might. Everything will be taken care of if I use my Barrier Magic. Summoning a Fire Wall or a Wind Wall to block their approach works too. If not, then even if you just shoot a lightweight magic like Magic Missile, you'll be able to block the enemies that are trying to aim for your weak spot. Of course, you have to wield a magic sword that can do that first. Hoo hoo. However, where would you find another magic sword as great as me in the world? Haha.]

He really is a natural at getting caught up in his own boasting.

I got irritated every time I heard the holy sword bragging.

This guy would boast all the time.

He's at the level of a narcissist.

[Warrior, you've been extremely lucky. There's not another sword like me in this world. Hahaha.]

I can't snap at him in times like this.

I realized that in the past few days.

If I say something, the holy sword wouldn't accept it and we'd start arguing.

And that argument would usually be sprinkled with the holy sword's boasts.

If I didn't want to hear that, the answer was to just ignore him.

So I just stayed silent.

Seregia stayed silent for the same reason.

[...Huh?]

Nobody responded, so when I heard the holy sword's flustered voice, I felt a little more cheerful.

I stood up.

“I think I've rested enough, so shall we go?”

[Yes. I believe three days' rest was enough. Let's depart.]

After Seregia calmly spoke, the holy sword, whose humility had reached its limit, spoke.

[At last, this is the start of a new journey. Warrior! Adventure! Friendship! Love! Justice! New bonds in a new world! And those new bonds will create a new legend of the holy sword! Ah... these are words from my early childhood, travelling here and there on the continent was my hobby.]

Damn it.

I want to sew his mouth shut and throw it away.

Ah, that guy doesn't have a mouth, does he?

I want to infuse the Thousand Arms sheath with a Silence Magic.

In truth, I had checked the store to see if there was anything like that.

If the holy sword didn't have a Dispel Magic function, I definitely would've bought it.

I ignored the holy sword that refused to stop boasting and stood atop the portal.

I passed a bonfire room and was transported to the stage.

I explained to Seregia and the holy sword that I travelled between dimensions and that like the mercenaries who worked as Warriors, I would travel to this or that world, and my job was to accomplish a specific goal.

Because of that, the title of Warrior was quickly discarded.

Also, I told Seregia to use my name and speak informally.

In truth, it didn't matter if they disregarded my title, but since Seregia personally insisted that she was more comfortable with the title, we just decided to keep it as is.

The holy sword had also told me to call it by its name Ahoubuch, or whatever, but it was hard to pronounce so I just decided to call it the holy sword.

The holy sword was disappointed as expected, but I ignored him.

Other than that, Seregia and the holy sword couldn't perceive the portal, the waiting room, or the Tutorial at all.

They could only understand to the extent that they were a means of transportation and safe lodging.

It was unfortunate, but since they can't even perceive it, I did not pity them as much.

[Welcome to the 27th floor stage.]

There was a village built in front of a large cave on the 27th floor.

No, I should call it a town instead.

There was a fairly large number of people walking around and I also saw a lot of buildings compacted together.

But from just a glimpse, it was a town so squalid that it seemed to be more of a village for natives of a jungle.

[Warrior, what is your objective here?] Seregia asked.

The holy sword maintained his silence.

The holy sword had to be alert when he went outside, so I told him to talk as little as possible.

Maybe it's because I stressed it several times, but the holy sword was silent just as he promised.

Honestly, it was because of this that in this round I canceled my plan to rest and hurried into the stage instead.

I don't know how long the holy sword will be silent and keep his promise, but it was a relief he was well-behaved, even if it was for only a short while.

“I'm not sure. Let's wait for a little bit.”

I couldn't immediately respond to Seregia's question, since I don't know yet.

I briefly stood at the center of the town and waited.

[The 27th floor's challenge is starting.]

Explanation: To the east of Gravia , there are two trade routes to the western continent. The first route is the sea route, crossing the sea between the continents, and the second is via the enormous subterranean cave beneath the ocean. This subterranean cave that is well-known as Gravia's underground dungeon, is made up of three stairways. Also, there is an existence that is occupying the lowest floor alone. In the lowest floor of Gravia's underground dungeon, please vanquish the ruler of the lowest floor and seize the earthworm's treasure.

You will need a special guide in order to reach the lowest floor of Gravia's dungeon.

Please enter the building made of red bricks and obtain a guide.

[Clear conditions]

1. Defeat the earthworm.
2. Acquire the earthworm's treasure.

It was a fairly comprehensible stage.

So I attack the underground dungeon and defeat the boss mob.

Plus, I also have to acquire the boss mob's loot.

The clear condition concerning the existence of the earthworm caught my attention more than the stage's concept.

An earthworm, huh.

But “an earthworm” normally refers to an actual worm.

However, if it were just the average earthworm, there would be no way it would have a treasure worthy of being the stage's clear condition.

In any case, isn't it a dragon?

[TL Note: The previous section is the author's wordplay. The Korean word for “earthworm” can be taken apart and literally translated to mean “earth (dust) dragon,” though it is not usually used this way. This is Ho Jae's perception of the term, not what the clear condition actually says.]

Didn't it say that it was on the lowest floor of the underground dungeon?

Didn't it say that it's occupying the lowest floor alone?

Perhaps exactly as its written, it's a dragon living underground?

I was a little excited.

Seregia and the holy sword had also learned of the clear condition through the message.

[I'm looking forward to it. If possible, I hope that there will be a lot of enemies on the path leading to the lowest floor.]

[To defeat a wicked evil dragon...]

Seregia also showed her anticipation.

In the holy sword's case, it was excited about something and started talking, but when I gripped the hilt, it immediately stopped talking.

[Um... Warrior.]

The holy sword that had been briefly silent spoke furtively.

“What?”

[Can't I just speak casually with you as well? I won't be too noisy.]

“You can't. I don't trust you.”

[You're too much. Isn't this favoritism?]

It is favoritism.

“If you don't like it, then you can go back into the inventory.”

[Yes. I'll remain quiet. I love you, Warrior. You know that I always respect you, right?]

What are you talking about?

After we finished our conversation, I walked towards the red building.

I didn't walk that far before I reached the front of the buildings made of red bricks.

It should be sufficient to simply pick a guide from here and travel to the dungeon.

Kiri Kiri had advised me to pick my guide carefully.

However, what did she mean by ‘pick carefully’?

I have no idea.

I confidently shoved the door open and entered without much thought.

The scenery inside the building was typical.

An adventurer's guild inside of a game would look exactly like this.

They were selling alcohol and plain food and the people sitting at the tables all looked like vagrants.

There was a large wooden block situated in the middle of the building's interior, pinned with information notices and advertisements regarding this and that.

[It's a noisy place.] Seregia commented.

It was actually really noisy inside the building.

[It also reeks.]

After she said that, the holy sword beside me commented as well.

I have no idea how the holy sword could smell it when he didn't have a nose, but this place honestly reeked of a disgusting smell.

I briefly looked around the building and found a person who looked to be the front-desk clerk or a worker.

She was a fairly old-looking middle-aged woman.

She was sitting at the counter and either telling people about this and that or diligently writing something down on paper.

No matter how I look at it, she didn't act like a customer at all.

If I were to point out a peculiar point, it was just that she had a red eye tattooed on her forehead.

I approached the middle-aged woman at the counter and asked outright.

“I'm looking for a guide that can guide me through the dungeon.”

“You're that dual-wielding swordsman that I saw talking to himself over there.”

“I'm sorry?”

“It's nothing. You said you were looking for a guide?”

It seems like she had seen me talking to my swords outside the building a little while ago.

Then again, it must've looked a little strange.

If you just look at me, I carried around two conspicuous swords and I had stood in the middle of the street muttering to myself.

“What is your destination?”

“The lowest floor.”

“Are you by chance looking for a spot to kill yourself?”

“No.”

Her voice that abruptly asked whether I was going to kill myself was sad, but I calmly responded.

“I'm visiting.”

Immediately after I had told her that I wanted to go to the lowest floor, the woman began furrowing her eyebrows right in front of me.

If I had told her that I was going to kill the dragon, it seemed like she would call it a bluff and chase me out of the building.

“As you may know, even if we can guide you there, we cannot guarantee your safety. That is...”

“I don't need it.”

When I bluntly told her that, the woman retained her crumpled face and pondered for a long while.

Then she pointed to a corner of the building and said, “Ask that child over there. That child's probably the only one who will guide you.”

I saw a kid that didn't even look ten in the corner that she pointed at.

“Are there no other guides?”

“I'm not sure. That child's probably the only guide who needs to make money today or else he'll die tomorrow.”

I had no choice but to accept this guide considering the circumstances.

I roughly said my goodbyes and I approached the child squatting in the corner.

Right when I was about to introduce myself and raise the child up, the child abruptly stood up.

“Hello, Swordsman. Did you say you were going all the way down to the lowest floor? Woah, you're an amazing person. You're manly, you've got courage, and moreover, you have a couple of swords. You don't have to worry too much about the lowest floor. Especially since the scary rumors regarding the lowest floor were made up by all sorts of people. But for a swordsman like you who's the real deal, it won't be a very dangerous place for you. Haha.”

Perhaps he was listening to my conversation with the middle-aged woman, but the child already knew about my destination.

Because of that, it seemed like I wouldn't have to separately explain it to him.

Strangely, the child had a red eye tattooed on his forehead just like the middle-aged woman.

[In his first meeting with you he's smoothly flattering you; he's an unusually rude little kid.]

The holy sword muttered.

Look who's talking.

[Rather than flattery, I also hear it as sarcasm.]

It was just as Seregia said.

That's how I heard it.

This little kid wasn't sincerely being sarcastic with me.

That's just how I heard it.

Since I heard the kid's words that way, it seems like his expression was hugely affected.

His thin voice that hadn't yet gone through puberty was also probably disturbed as well.

This young dirty kid revealed his white teeth and was smiling brightly.

However, his smile only formed on the sides of his mouth.

He bowed his forehead slightly and the eyes that looked up at me weren't smiling at all.

He was repeatedly rotating between observing my facial expression, my clothes, and my weapons.

Seeing as how he's repeatedly looking at the places he's observed before, I could tell that the child's mental state was extremely anxious.

[He's a child without much attentiveness. His focus is also terrible.]

Seregia criticized.

I agreed with everything she said.

[If he wielded a sword, he'd die outside of his home within a month.]

This time, the holy sword commented.

It was a little uncertain, but I agreed.

The child seemed to be an existence that exhibited all the habits or peculiarities that you can't have as a swordsman or a warrior.

His intentions are written all over his face.

His attentiveness and his focus are lacking, and he wasn't even sure of what he had seen himself.

He looked around carefully for other people's gazes, but he turned his eyes towards too many things, and he couldn't identify what was most important.

For example, my eyes that are looking straight down at the kid.

His breathing was so erratic that he may as well have had tuberculosis, and his standing posture was terrible.

Even if you look at his build from the outside, it's terrible; the space between his legs when he steps is erratic.

No, the angle that his feet are touching the ground is strange.

There may be some kind of problem with his feet.

[Warrior. I maintained my ego for a considerably long time, but this is my first time seeing such an untalented human in the world.]

The holy sword didn't drop its criticism.

This kid isn't even a swordsman, so why do his talents matter?

It's fine as long as he guides me well.

[Yes. He really does have the worst ability. Even in the academy where numerous students gather, there wasn't anyone that bad. He's still young and he doesn't seem to have been given any particular education nor has he been trained. Even if we consider his malnourished and unhealthy state, it's really hard to find a human like that. He's a dunce sent by heaven.]

Seregia supplemented.

The holy sword's and Seregia's criticism combination was too cruel that even I, the one listening, felt sorry for the kid.

“Swordsman? Is there any problem...?”

“No, there's none. Then, can you give me an explanation regarding the dungeon? I need to test whether you have enough knowledge as a guide.”

“Yes. First, please sit over there. I'll explain after you sit down.”

I had thought of this before, but it came up again.

Kiri Kiri had advised that I need to pick my guide well.

I don't really understand the meaning behind that.

The only option I had was this kid.

Chapter 163

Tutorial 27th Floor (2)

The kid continued his explanation for a while.

It seemed like I wouldn't have to be dubious of his knowledge of the dungeon.

But I still couldn't believe him.

This kid said it'd be best if I stayed in this building's quarters on the 2nd floor and departed tomorrow morning.

It was a good plan.

In various ways.

“Fine, let's do it like that. Here, give me your hand.”

I took out a subspace bag from my inventory and the kid obediently stuck out his hand as I instructed.

I pulled out a few gems that I had prepared in advance from the subspace bag.

“Here, this should be enough for a down payment. Exchange it for money as you wish.”

I placed the gems into the kid's dirty palms.

It seemed like the kid was in disbelief at the gems that had been placed in his hand; his mouth gaped wide open and remained still.

“Like you said, I'll stay in this inn today, and we'll depart tomorrow.

Come pick me up here tomorrow morning.”

After I finished speaking, I left the stunned kid and the corner; I went towards the counter with the middle-aged woman.

“A room?” the woman immediately asked as I approached.

“Yes. You have good hearing.”

It wasn't easy to listen to my conversation with the kid in the corner inside of this noisy building.

What's worse, she shouldn't have been able to see us as we were cleverly hidden behind a column.

“What do you mean, good hearing. I just guessed. The dungeon's also quite far, so rather than departing at such an ambiguous time, it'd probably be better to depart in the morning. If you were going to depart immediately, you wouldn't have left that child over there and came here by yourself.”

Now that you mention it, you have a point.

She definitely could've guessed that I was going to ask for a room.

However, I was certain.

This middle-aged lady could hear my conversation with the kid.

Since that kid had also heard the conversation between the middle-aged lady and I.

“Then you're even more amazing.”

As I said that, I placed a single gem on the counter.

“This should be enough, right? I don't need the change.”

“It's enough.”

The middle-aged lady hurriedly grabbed the gem, hiding it in her bosom, and said, "How about being a bit more careful, especially if you don't want to be robbed in the middle of the night?"

She's an amusing old lady.

The old lady should also be well aware that I'm not concerned about things like that.

Even if I hadn't taken out the gem, I knew.

Compared to the people around me with their disheveled appearances, I wore clean, trimmed clothing and I had two expensive-looking sword hilts strapped to my waist.

Also, the woman should be well aware that I don't mind attracting the attention of other people.

However, I wonder why she's pretending like she doesn't know.

This old lady, after I had entered this building and started conversing with her, has been maintaining a consistent attitude.

Whether I'm thinking about my own power or this woman's ability to gauge my level of strength, it's not the right attitude for her to take.

"Auntie, do you have any interest in being a guide? I think you'd do well."

"Not everyone can be a guide."

After she was finished, she shut her mouth.

However, I didn't stand up and stared closely at her.

The old lady showed a variety of expressions after that for a short time.

After she had cycled through several emotions on her face, the final emotion she revealed was hostility.

It was a vivid, clear killing intent to the point that I could feel it.

When I didn't react at all to her hostility, the woman quickly dispersed her energy.

And muttered.

“I have no intentions of going on a trip with a monster whose intentions I don't know.”

That was an interesting statement.

“Your room's on the 2nd floor. Your room number is written on this key here. Go up.”

After she said that, the old lady left the counter and went outside the building.

Rather than following her, I decided to go up to the building's 2nd floor.

I found the room number that was written on the key and as I entered the room, I thought.

She had no intentions of going on a trip with a monster.

If she had regarded me as that dangerous of a person, I had to rethink what she had said.

Her warning about the lowest floor... Did she say that it's dangerous despite taking a peek at my strength?

If that's not it, was that also just an act?

I ought to reassess the kid.

The assessment that the kid needed to work if he didn't want to die immediately tomorrow.

Did that old lady think that that kid would go down to the lowest floor despite the risk of death, or if not, did she think that the kid would die because he was going with me?

It could be both.

I entered the room and roughly tossed the subspace bag atop the bed.

Shall I meditate until tomorrow morning?

[Warrior.] Seregia said.

“What?”

[I believe that there's a high possibility that the young child from before won't return in the morning. I cannot be sure, but that's what I think.]

“That's also what I think.”

He'd probably disappear somewhere with the down payment of gems.

If the lowest floor is that dangerous, and he didn't want to work together with a dangerous person who carelessly takes out gems in this squalid place...

[Then why did you give that child...]

“In the event he doesn't come, I just need to find a different guide.”

[Didn't you hear that that child's the only guide available?]

“No. She just said that that kid's the only one willing to guide me on such a dangerous path.”

There are definitely at least two guides.

Kiri Kiri told me that I had to pick my guide well.

Plus, the young guide also had a strange tattoo engraved onto his forehead.

That meant that I could easily make an inference.

What I needed to worry about right now is the woman who had recommended the boy, who had ran away with my gems.

How do I use this excuse to convince her?

The fact that she's excessively hostile towards me will be a variable.

If convincing her isn't possible, I think I'd need to threaten her.

[I think differently, Warrior. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo.]

While I was in the midst of organizing my thoughts, the holy sword cut in.

“If you're going to talk gibberish again, I'll put you into the inventory immediately.”

[No, it's not that. It's not that, Warrior. Please trust me! When have I ever spoken nonsense for you to say that! Please trust me!]

How can I trust you?

[I'm telling you this because neither the great and courageous Warrior nor the cute and shy Miss Seregia seem to have encountered a lot of people. If you don't have experience in cases like this, it's something you wouldn't know well.]

[...Ugh.]

Seregia groaned at his flattery of our cute such and such.

I really should put him into my inventory after all.

I opened my inventory and was about to put it in when the holy sword hurriedly yelled.

[That child will return tomorrow!]

“What did you say?”

The holy sword hadn't given up, yelling something, and once I put the holy sword into my inventory, I started to meditate.

Only one ego sword had disappeared, but I started to take in the silent and calm mood of the room.

[I think like I can live now.]

I agreed with Seregia's half-muttered sigh.

* * *

“Good morning, Warrior. Then, shall we immediately go to the dungeon?”

[See that. I was right, wasn't I?]

[...]

Seregia and I couldn't refute the annoying holy sword's statement.

Because the kid had appeared with a much cleaner appearance than yesterday.

Perhaps the kid washed his hair this morning, since it was clean and tidy; even his clothes looked much better than yesterday.

His clothes were clean, but they weren't new.

He had exchanged the gems that I had given him into currency and rather than buy new clothes, it seemed like he had come wearing his best clothes.

Plus, he was wearing a large backpack on his back.

It looked bloated even from the outside and I was certain that it was packed full of miscellaneous items.

“Yeah, let's go. Take me there.”

I didn't refuse and just told him to go.

I could tell why the child had turned up even without the holy sword explaining the reason.

Amongst the kid's various flaws, his most fatal flaw was that he would diligently observe someone, but he wouldn't realize that the very person was also observing him.

The next fatal flaw was that his gaze and his expression were like an open book.

I had heard these words before.

A person's greed knows no end, and they would repeat their mistakes.

Where did I hear this again?

That's not what's important.

What's important right now is that this kid is repeating his many mistakes excessively.

I nonchalantly slung my subspace bag over my shoulder which contained my bed and left my room.

Based on the movements of my bag, the kid...

The kid's eyes were following the movements of my bag and it was only after I got right in front of him that his rapidly-moving eyes paused.

“Yes. I'll take you there.”

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. What did I tell you?]

I just silently listened to the holy sword's annoying condescension.

Now I could read the bare greed within this dirty kid's eyes, though I ignored the dissatisfaction I saw.

Even after I had gone home and thought about it calmly, I couldn't fathom a desperation worth gambling his life on.

It's been a while since my abilities were lacking.

Also, this was the type of ability I cannot be lacking in.

Though I'm clumsy when it comes to situations regarding tact, I was confident when it came to reading my opponent's intent.

When I was a pro gamer, I remember saying that I didn't know what the difference was between my two team members.

I don't know why it is that I can so easily grasp an enemy's intent, yet I don't even have the slightest idea of what other people usually want.

However, I definitely felt something different.

Also, I had failed to discern the kid's intent yesterday.

Even though it was such a clearly-exposed intent.

Was it because I took this kid too lightly due to his lacking strength, or if not, would it be because of a different reason?

It was troublesome work.

Because of that reason, I didn't obstinately plug the holy sword's mouth and left the town.

And we approached the cave's entrance, no, the dungeon's entrance...

They say that the dungeon that looks relatively close by is actually much farther than your eyes can see.

It would take around six hours to get there, walking.

When I was in the town, it didn't feel like it would take that long, but after I left the town and starting walking through the woods, I could definitely feel it.

The dungeon looked as if it were right in front of you, yet the true distance hardly lessened.

The path between the dungeon and the town was tranquil.

There would occasionally be some adventurers or merchants who passed by and I matched the kid's slow strides, but in no time I had walked far ahead of him.

The kid's gait was on the slower side.

Even if you consider his still short legs, he was still slow.

And it was tough for the kid to even walk this slowly.

Pant. Pant.

If you listened to him, you wouldn't be able to call it pathetic; it was to the point that even I, who was walking beside him pited his breathing.

“Let's rest here for a little bit.”

“Yes... Thank you.”

I helped the kid lower his backpack and we leaned our backs against a wooden column.

I also dropped my subspace backpack from my shoulder and put it on my lap.

We were sitting under a tree like this, which reminded me of Myong Myong again.

Is he living well?

It made me uncomfortable that even in this peaceful memory, several things weighed on my mind.

Indeed, what kind of condition would mean 'living well'?

And whatever the condition, can I say that Myong Myong is living well?

Is the Myong Myong I'm even talking about that Myong Myong?

What's the difference between that Myong Myong and the other Myong Myongs.

Let's say that all the Myong Myongs found their happy ending. Does that mean they're living well?

Kiri Kiri had, in a roundabout way, referred to the tutorial and challengers as places that aren't Earth.

There should definitely be some challengers who reached the 19th floor besides me.

These civilizations that exist in the cosmos and the tutorial that possibly exists within them.

Also, in the face of all those possibilities, there is a possibility that Myong Myong isn't unhappy.

The more I recollect it, the more sad I get.

When I was together with Myong Myong, if I hadn't deliberately tried to ignore this fact, would I be able to laugh together with Myong Myong?

If I had left Myong Myong in front of the closed-off town's gate; what kind of choice would I have made?

It was suffocating.

It was the exact same back then.

Still, the reason I hadn't completely ignored it was because Idy had suggested a path that would enable me to resolve this suffocating feeling.

I brought my unproductive thoughts to a close and focused on the here and now.

After I had organized my thoughts, I asked the two ego's swords' opinions.

What do you think?

Rather than using my voice to speak like usual, I transmitted my intent through voice transmission.

Seregia and the holy sword both agreed with my opinion.

[I agree.]

[I also agree, Warrior. For things like this, you need to tidy things up beforehand so that there's no trouble down the road.]

I confirmed their opinions.

I'll confirm it one more time and then take care of it.

I took out some bread and water from my subspace bag and passed it to the kid.

“Eat it while you rest.”

The kid saw the objects protruding out of the subspace bag and was astonished.

“This is that magic bag, right?” the child asked excitedly, and the sound of his breathing had quickly calmed down.

“That's right.”

To be exact, it was a subspace bag, but well, I guess it's the same thing as a magic bag.

“Do you have other items in there besides food?”

I decided to answer the kid's excited questions and say it like it was.

“Of course. I also took out and gave you the gems from here yesterday.”

The kid was in awe, saying 'woah', and I waited briefly for the kid to eat his bread.

When the kid started eating the bread, I took out a short sword from my bag.

“It also has weapons!”

“Of course. It contains various weapons.”

In truth, this short sword was the only weapon inside the bag.

It was the gladius that I had bought after clearing the 4th floor.

According to the holy sword's logic, which was strapped to my waist, the gladius was a treasure that could be called a holy sword thanks to the god's blessing it had received.

It wasn't fancy and it was actually rather plain, but possessed a high quality aura on the outside.

I raised that short sword and threw it towards a tree that was a bit far away.

Just as I had intended, the short sword lodged into the center of the tree trunk.

And I concentrated, moving my mana.

Due to my mana, the short sword pulled out of the tree column, flying into the air before returning to my hand.

Beside me, the kid was exclaiming.

“Is it a magic sword!?”

“Yeah. It's a magic sword.”

To be honest, I had just idiotically pulled out the faraway short sword with my mana.

It wasn't as if I had used mana's special characteristic or displayed its absorbent power.

I had just used my mana to embed the short sword in the tree trunk, pull it out, and raise it up before it flew to the front of my hand.

Even compared to normal people, this kid's magic circuits were tightly blocked and he wouldn't be able to notice what I had done.

I threw my short sword again, towards the tree column.

And using my mana again, I brought the short sword back to my hand.

As he saw my acrobatics, the kid who had been exclaiming with all he had bashfully asked.

Upon his red flushed face, his eyes gleamed, and his fingertips were slightly shaking.

“May I also try once?”

Sure, of course you can.

Chapter 164

Tutorial 27th Floor (3)

I offered the short sword to the kid.

The kid's hand reached out towards the short sword's handle.

With an unusually quick speed.

Sharply.

It didn't look like the movements of a kid who was weak and couldn't even walk right.

Even so, it was still the movements of a little kid.

With this, I think I've given him several chances.

If it were possible, I'd like to roughly turn him in.

Still, isn't this too much of a dead end?

[I don't know what you mean by a 'dead end', but I also think that way. Warrior.]

The holy sword chattered.

Why would you agree on something when you don't know what it is?

It doesn't matter.

Whether the holy sword agrees with my opinion or not, won't affect my decision.

When the kid's hand touched the short sword's hilt, he touched the edges with his fingers, and rotated it.

As I saw the embarrassed kid's expression, the reverse grip short sword stabbed into his chest.

“AH!”

[TL Note: Changed Korean groaning/moaning sounds. They make no sense in English because they're sounds made in Korean.]

After he cried out briefly, he fell flat on his face.

He didn't die.

No matter how bad his motor skills are, it wasn't to the point that he would mishandle the short sword.

“Hey, kid.”

“Ugh... ah...”

The kid couldn't respond to my words and just groaned in agony.

“Hey, kid. Say something.”

[I would just kill him discreetly, and find a new guide.]

The holy sword chattered again.

I wonder what kind of ego this guy has to call himself a holy sword?

“Hey, kid, you'll die from excessive bleeding like that. Say something.”

The kid couldn't respond.

It seemed like the kid couldn't think out of fear and confusion, rather than the pain.

He wasn't in the kind of condition where I could bully him into speaking.

“Don't worry so much. You won't immediately die from getting stabbed. You see, I haven't just been stabbed only once or twice.”

It hadn't reached his inner organs and blood wasn't gushing out of the wound.

Of course, if the bleeding continued on like this, he would die from the bleeding. And there had been the possibility that he would've died from shock when he first stabbed his chest with the short sword.

I took out a potion bottle from my subspace bag, dangling it from my hand.

It wasn't an elixir, but it would be able to heal that kind of injury with ease.

“Here, I even have a potion. You don't have to be concerned about dying.”

The kid's look changed.

That's probably the look of a traveler in the desert when they discover an oasis.

When this kid had seen my short sword, when he had seen my subspace bag, when he had seen my gems, when he had first seen my clothes, and when he saw the swords at my waist, he had shown the same expression throughout.

I have no intention of blaming this kid.

I could understand him, and I could even sympathize with him.

I just have to tell him.

I slapped the kid's outstretched hand away with my hand holding the potion bottle before swinging back my hand holding the potion bottle.

The bottle shattered against the kid's head with a loud kish!, splashing the potion onto him.

In the midst of the sharply breaking glass shards, the kid briefly clutched his head and groaned.

Then, he soon realized that the pain coming from his head wasn't important.

The kid tried to gather the scattered potion on the earthen floor into his hands, but the thin potion instantly soaked into the ground.

For the first time, the kid's eyes bore at mine.

Finally.

It was a gaze of extreme desperation and confusion.

Only when he was in this position did he look into my eyes for the first time.

Because it seemed like he had only looked into my eyes for the first time due to the position he was in, it felt a little pitiful.

I took out another potion from my subspace bag.

The kid attempted to reflexively raise his body, but when I moved my hand and gripped the potion upside down, his body waned.

And he begged.

“Please... Please. Please give me the potion... I'll do whatever you ask. Please, I beg of you.”

As I looked at the kid begging with watery eyes and a runny nose, I realized that he wasn't that dumb.

If you sink into a state of panic in this kind of a situation, your head doesn't work; people who repeatedly make stupid decisions are not uncommon.

However, the kid read my reaction and quickly realized that he was powerless.

“You don't need to do anything.”

The child's eyes became more and more haggard.

“I only want one thing from you.”

I decided to only go this far for now.

If we waste more time, this feeble kid might just die on the ground.

“Here, I'll just give you the potion.”

And I put the potion bottle into the kid's hand.

The kid hesitated momentarily before he removed the lid of the bottle and started drinking the potion.

Since his hands were shaking so much, most of the potion dripped down his chin.

I had to take out another potion.

I fed him the potion myself because he couldn't properly drink the potion. I even separately rubbed some onto the surface of his wounds.

[TL Note: It doesn't specify what Ho Jae rubbed onto his wounds, but it's assumed to be either the potion or a separate ointment/medicine.]

It took about 15 minutes for the kid to calm down.

He was still in light shock, but he had stabilized enough for him to listen to me talk.

Fear over gratitude.

You shouldn't have been so greedy, kid.

“Here, take it.”

I threw the subspace bag onto his chest.

And I said to the quizzical child.

“Now I'll add this to my down payment of gems. I'll give you this bag.”

“I'm sorry?”

“And if my work ends well, I'll add the short sword to that, and I'll give you more gems too.”

It seemed like the kid didn't understand the situation very well, because he gazed at me with a vacant expression.

I asked the kid.

“Now, let's go back to the previous conversation. I said that I only wanted one thing from you, right? What do you think that one thing is?”

Even while he was flustered, he quickly found the right answer.

“G-Guiding you to the lowest floor.”

“That's right.”

I grabbed the back of the kid's neck and propped him up.

I hit his back hard enough to make a clapping sound, and said.

“Then let's go. Towards the dungeon's lowest floor.”

I followed behind the kid who clambered on his feet, holding the subspace bag at his chest.

The kid was soon able to walk without much problem.

He had a hole in his shirt, but he was actually walking faster than before.

It was to the point where it would be quite an unmanageable speed for a normal person.

I satisfyingly followed behind the kid as I sorted out the characteristics of those guys called “guides.”

Firstly, they have acute senses.

I'm sure that they have more sensitive hearing and eyesight than normal humans.

Even among their senses, their hearing is really outstanding.

They don't simply hear the smallest sounds; even when it's noisy, they can precisely discern what they're looking for.

To add to that, their leg and arm muscles are superb.

With that kid's poor amount of muscle, he wouldn't ever be able to display such speed or endurance.

That was one of the reasons that the kid planned to attack me.

If he acted like a lanky kid and suddenly attacked in a burst of speed, most people wouldn't be able to deal with it.

If it was a normal human, you would think that they would have mana to make up for their lack of muscular strength, but that kid was different.

That kid has no connection to mana.

It just looked like a problem with his blood.

I thought that he may be a different species similar to humans.

Next, the guides are good at acting.

It's not just at the level of spewing a few good lies, but they would be able to create a separate persona for their employer.

It could be a common point that was linked to either blood or a tribal tradition, or it could also be nothing more than a professional characteristic.

Lastly, if we're also talking about that kid's characteristics, it'd just be that he's really talentless.

If you had a body that was blessed with those muscles, it'd be really hard to be talentless.

It's still the same regardless of how little he eats or how lanky he is, or even if you consider that he hasn't received any training or education.

This should be enough, right?

Assuming that the kid will deliver me to the lowest floor well, his guidance would be useless information after.

There really isn't any reason to delve more deeply into my thoughts here.

[Warrior.] Seregia said.

She must be asking for the reason.

[Could you please explain?]

Seregia interrogated me regarding my previous behavior.

She doesn't want to affect my decision, but she wants me to justify my past behavior.

[Let's summarize that kid's two problems.]

[Though it's not just one or two problems.]

[Still, there are two things that are problematic. First is his greed. Everyone has greed. And you can be swung around by your own greed here and there. It's just that that kid was excessively greedy. When he had received the gems, that kid, rather than being satisfied with them, wanted more. The reason that this could become an issue is that I don't know where his greed ends.]

One might say that the kid's payment was overboard, but even so, the kid's greed hadn't been sated.

If I could guess where his greed would end, I would have solved the matter by just giving him the treasure that he wanted.

Inside this tutorial, whether it be gems or anything else, all the items I possess are just points.

Also, I had no intention of treasuring those gems that were nothing more than points.

If it allowed me to clear a stage easily, I would give that kid enough gems to buy the entire town that we had passed.

However, even after receiving that many gems, I wasn't sure that the kid would be satisfied.

[That's why I gave them to him so easily. I also gave him the subspace bag that drew his attention, and even added more gems and the magic short sword on top of that.]

[However, that wouldn't solve the problem. Even after receiving those, you don't know if that child would want even more.]

[That's why I gave them to him so easily. Whether it be gems or magical tools, I needed to show him that all of those held no meaning to me. I don't know how much time I'll spend with that kid in the future, but I'll imply it.]

[What are you talking about?]

[That if he asks me directly, I can give him as much as he wants.]

Seregia was momentarily silent.

Seregia assented with my reasoning and I walked through the forest, listening to the birds call.

After a little time passed like that, Seregia spoke.

[That must be your solution to the second problem.]

[Yeah. The kid's second problem was that he was going to attack me in order to satiate his greed. That's why I let him know. That there was a better method.]

[However, Warrior. I think that there are still two problems remaining.]

Two problems, you say.

Rather than pondering, I just asked Seregia.

[First, it's if the child's greed still isn't fulfilled until the end.]

[That's why I used a slightly violent method. I want to give him the impression that I can give him as much as he wants, but he could die if he makes the wrong choice.]

[Yes. The child will attempt to walk on a tightrope. However, the idea that that child will be moved by his greed until the end still remains.]

I don't think so.

Fear will overshadow his greed.

Fear would stimulate a human's most basic desire: the will to live.

The faint Seregia probably won't be able to understand that.

At least right now, the kid that's walking in front of me isn't guiding me to satisfy his greed.

He's just doing as he's told because he's scared.

For the time being, I should be able to control him with fear.

And as time passes, when that fear fades, I can inversely take advantage of the kid's greed.

Finally, that fear would fade, but would still remain; that fear will curb that kid's excessive greed.

[What about the second problem?]

[There's a possibility that this kid may bear a grudge because of this.]

* * *

I followed the kid's lead and arrived at the dungeon; the dungeon's entrance looked a bit different than what I had expected.

I had expected the cave entrance to be dreary and ominous, but this was just a marketplace.

I wasn't saying that it was as noisy as a marketplace, but that it was a literal marketplace.

There were stalls here and there, surrounded by people soliciting those passing by.

Whether it was the surroundings of the dungeon's entrance, or a passage beyond the entrance, it was all the same.

It was noisy and boisterous and there were too many people.

There were seriously too many people.

I grabbed the wrist of a man who bumped into my shoulder before trying to pass by.

And I gripped it and twisted it.

Crunch.

They either tried to rummage through my pockets or tried to steal the swords at my waist; the number of pickpockets who had their wrists and elbows shattered already numbered over ten.

The pickpocket's agonized scream had been buried by the bustling market; the collapsed, screaming pickpocket was drowned in the crowd and left my sight.

“Is this place normally like this?”

“Yes, Swordsman. It's always like this because there's only one entrance. If you go inside, it'll be a bit better. Until then, be careful of pickpockets.”

Hey kid, there already aren't any pickpockets remaining that can continue their business in my vicinity.

Chapter 165

Tutorial 27th Floor (4)

When we reached the passageway leading to the middle floor past the upper floor of the dungeon, I was finally able to get away from the chaos.

The people using the intercontinental underground passageway, the adventurers who look for medicinal herbs or monster corpses, and mercenaries generally only use the upper floor.

Because of that, it's only been two days since we've entered the dungeon and today, we enjoyed silence and were able to walk casually.

“How long will it take until we reach the middle floor?”

“It'll take around three days.”

That's long.

It's just the passageway between the upper floor and the middle floor, yet it'll take three days?

“Be that as it may, it'll take too long.”

“That's because it's not just a simple passageway. It's not a literal title; rather than calling this place a passageway, you can call this the upper-middle floor.”

The upper-middle floor, you say.

When the kid described the dungeon beforehand, I hadn't heard anything regarding the upper-middle floor.

Now that I think about it, he didn't explain the middle floor either.

When I think back, now that I've entered the dungeon, the information that the kid gave back then didn't have any worthwhile information.

“What's in the upper-middle floor?”

“Rather than an intercontinental passageway, the upper-middle floor is generally used as a refuge. There are a few refugee towns composed of criminals and cursed people.”

It's as big as a town...?

“It seems like it's a lot bigger than I thought.”

“Yes. It's actually larger than the upper floor. However, since we're going to use a crossroad that leads directly to the middle floor, we should be able to pass through it in three days.”

Contrary to his explanation in the town, it was fairly informational.

I didn't know how precise and substantial the contents of his explanation were.

“Toll.”

I saw the thieves occupying the crossroads and asking for money as if it were obvious and briefly pondered.

Should I just give them the money and pass through?

[It's been a while, so what do you think about tidying them up, Warrior?]

Just shut up a bit, you psychopathic demon sword.

I looked at the kid, but he just looked back at me as if paying the toll was expected.

And it didn't seem like he had any intention of paying the toll with the down payment I gave him yesterday.

[Warrior, we don't have any change right now. We have to pay with the gems, but if they accept those gems, they won't let us go; rather, they'll try to extort us even further.]

They probably would.

But you never know, so I decided to pay the toll fee.

If there are any surveillance crystals stuck somewhere, things will become troublesome.

This is the cave passageway.

If this lively bunch in the surrounding area become my enemies, they could even tear down the passage and bury us.

I took out a gem from my inventory and threw it to him.

“This should be enough, right?”

The thief boss, who had received the gem, briefly pondered, and asked, “May I ask you where your destination is?”

Seregia's prediction was wrong.

He spoke much more submissively than I expected.

“The middle floor,” the child beside me said abruptly.

The man glanced at the boy and said, “So, you were a guide, huh.”

“Yes.”

The man turned his head towards me again, and asked, “You have no business in the upper-middle floor?”

“No. We’re planning on going straight down to the middle floor,” the kid said again.

“Then may we guide you?”

“Yes. Of course.”

The kid accepted their leader’s request.

I didn't know anyone here, so I decided to stay quiet.

After the kid exchanged a few more words with the thieves, we started to move again.

One thief was added to our party of the kid and me, so we moved as three.

“Explain to me what happened back there,” I asked the kid, after around thirty minutes of walking.

The kid glanced back at the thief following behind to see if he was watching, and started to explain.

“I told you that the people in the upper-middle floor formed a town and gathered, right?”

“Yeah. You did say that.”

“There's something like an ongoing conflict within that group. That's why when someone that looks strong like you appears, Swordsman, they're probably concerned that you'll join the other side. Normally, rather than just letting you pass, they'll ask you to join them or often take you with them against your will...”

Rather than that, it meant that they were comfortable with the fact that I was clearly going down to the middle floor.

“That man back there had better sense than you.”

I had sated my curiosity and continued to walk forward.

Together with the awkward kid.

* * *

“Starting from here, this is the middle floor.”

The man who had said that he would guide us but actually followed us to spy on us had already left.

The kid explained that this was the entrance of the middle floor and his face expressed an anxiousness that he didn't have before.

“Really dangerous monsters appear in the middle floor. Plus, there aren't any light stones embedded in the walls... And...”

“Right, I know it's dangerous, so let's hurry and get going.”

“...And... starting from the middle floor, if you don't have a guide, you'll never be able to return outside.”

“Ok. If it becomes dangerous, protecting you is my top priority.”

It seemed like the kid wasn't relieved even after hearing my response.

When I looked at the hesitant kid, I thought.

If I want this kid to guide me to the lowest floor, what should I use to convince him: gems or violence?

It seems like I was leaning towards the latter.

In any case, if I take away the gems, and I want to convince him, it'll inevitably be accompanied by a coercive atmosphere.

Fortunately, the kid started to move before I was finished thinking.

First, he took out and raised a short wand from the large backpack that was strapped onto his back.

And he started to walk forward.

I followed behind the kid and as I went down the middle floor, I could see the remarkably different landscape.

Contrary to the upper passageway that seemed well-built, the middle floor was a dark and uneven underground tunnel.

It was such a narrow tunnel that a single adult could barely pass through it.

“This is way too cramped.”

“If you go farther, it'll become wider. Narrow passageways and large clearings show up repeatedly in the middle floor. They each have a different size, and they say that there are some empty lots the size of a town, but there are also passageways so narrow that it's even difficult to crawl.”

If the passageway is that small, it'll be a bit uncomfortable.

After he finished talking, he seemed to be tense, trembling with every step.

It seems like this is the first time that this kid has come to the middle floor.

Both his words as well as his behavior indicated this.

Will we really be able to go all the way to the lowest floor?

[Warrior, I have a hunch that that child won't be of much help.]
Seregia said.

No, it seems like that child will be helpful.

I replied to Seregia.

Honestly, I'm relieved.

Before we got inside the dungeon, I was considering two things while I was bringing the kid.

It was late, but I was thinking about going back to the town and getting a new guide...

Or going into the dungeon alone without a guide.

However, I ultimately discarded the first option because it was a hassle and discarded the second as well because you never know what could happen.

It was truly a relief.

If I came all the way here by myself, I would've had to go back to the town in order to get a different guide.

[It's already been hundreds of years since I became a holy sword, but this kind of feeling is a first. What should I call it? Hm...]

The holy sword muttered in a slightly quiet voice.

[I feel like I'm going to vomit.]

Me too.

[Is that so? I don't feel any different.]

Seregia's like that because she can't consciously spread mana.

It was the special characteristic of this dungeon's middle floor.

The mana that I had spread in order to grasp my surroundings quivered dizzily.

The mana that had been wandering in the air couldn't escape my periphery and dissipated just like that.

I may be jumping to conclusions, but using your mana to survey your surroundings or to find a path is impossible.

And this middle floor is really vast and also narrow; and if that winding path had forked roads like a maze, it would be impossible to get out of here by yourself.

Just like the kid had said.

[Perception Degradation Magic, Mana Diffusion Magic, and it also seems like there's some other types of suppression magic that I'm not familiar with... There are several mixed together. I cannot dispel it with my abilities, and it's also at a level that I cannot grasp its true nature.]

Since the holy sword is going that far and saying that, it seems like it'll be difficult for me to escape this situation on my own.

Fortunately, the kid walking in front of me should have a method for finding the right path.

When the man we had met in the upper-middle floor had heard that we were going to the middle floor, he looked at the kid and noted that he was a guide.

The old lady that I met in the town recommended this kid as a guide to get me to the lowest floor.

This kid definitely has a way to find the right path.

And that way is probably related to the wand he had taken out.

I sorted my thoughts and took out a luminescent stone from my inventory, silently walking and following behind the kid.

It wasn't difficult for me to walk in the darkness, but it's probably difficult for the kid.

I have to at least be considerate of his needs.

Since his senses were outstanding, he could probably walk through the darkness without much trouble, but in this narrow underground tunnel, the walls were thick and rugged, so he could easily be injured.

The kid was concerned that the light would draw and gather the monsters, but I insisted that it would be ok.

Drawing the monsters with the light was killing two birds with one stone.

* * *

Shriek-

While gazing at the beheaded monster's corpse, I asked the kid, "Are all the monsters in the middle floor like this?"

"Yes... well... yes... most of the monsters are at that level..."

What a disappointment.

All the monsters in this dungeon were the type that would hide themselves in the darkness to suddenly burst out and ambush me.

After that, they would just follow their instincts, utilizing their quick and agile movement to use their sharp talons or teeth to attack.

That was it.

Of course, they were really fast and were powerful, but that was it.

I shoved the luminescent stone back into my bag.

If the monsters that lived in the dungeon's middle floor were all just monsters like this, I didn't really want to go so far as to lure them in order to kill them.

[Are you not really satisfied, Warrior? Even though you haven't seen blood in a while? It's hot, fishy, and red blood! Yoo-hoo! Warrior, won't you swing me and use me to fight next time? Yes? I'll even beg you like this. Tee-hee?]

This crazy bastard.

The holy sword is exposing its bloodthirst now.

[It's boring. Now that I've become and started living as a sword, I wanted to cut down an opponent who knows swordsmanship. Even if they don't know swordsmanship, it would've been nice if they were at least intelligent.]

Seregia's response also wasn't really desirable, but I agreed with her opinion.

The IQ of the monsters here was way too low.

“That monster just now... It's a species called cave clock. If we consider that it's in the middle floor then... it was... a Class 2 risk... This isn't a monster that you can normally kill in one stroke...”

The kid had quickly taken out an illustrated book out of his bag and rummaged through it, and spoke.

Even though the luminescent stone was in my bag.

Considering that he could read the book aloud even though the luminescent stone was off, it seemed like the dark wasn't much of a problem for him.

When you consider the speed of the monster that I had just taken care of, as well as the durability of its hide, it was a really dangerous opponent.

I said this before, but it was just too dumb.

“Where do we have to go next?”

There was a forked road behind the monster's corpse, which was collapsing down onto the floor.

The kid raised his wand in front of the forked road, gripped it tightly, and concentrated.

That's what he did whenever we came across a forked road.

After about five minutes had passed, the kid opened his eyes.

I matched him and opened my eyes.

"It's the left-most path. This way."

* * *

It's already been two days and we still haven't been able to get out of the middle floor.

First, I gave up on drawing a map inside my head using my sense of direction within the first six hours of the first day.

Even if I go back the same direction to the place I was before and followed the forked road, something I'd never seen before would show up.

When I asked the kid, he said that the place was different from the one before.

The location seems the same, but he said that that was the lower floor.

When I asked him why we're going further up, he said that while he was looking for the path that went down, he ended up going up instead.

Then, when I asked why he didn't find that path when we were on the upper floors, he said that there was no crossroad that directly connected to that path on the upper floors.

When I thought about my journey inside the dungeon, I felt tired.

I wasn't physically fatigued, but it was narrow, dark, repetitive, and emitted a strange smell; we also didn't know where we were going and regularly walked in circles, which was mentally draining in itself.

After walking around in circles for two days, I abandoned the map inside my head as well as everything else.

Instead, whenever the kid came across a forked road, I concentrated whenever the kid raised his wand and gathered his focus.

5 forks in the road.

Two of the paths led up, while three led down.

However, that's just the direction of the forked road; you don't know what way the forked road leads until you actually walk through it.

However, the kid, without being blocked or without hesitation, picked one of the paths of the forked road.

We had stayed in the middle floor for two days, not because the kid couldn't find the path and was wandering around, but because this middle floor was excessively vast.

The kid had said that he had memorized the geography of this place, but that was a lie.

This wasn't at the level you could memorize and go through.

I wonder how you could go through the forked roads without memorization?

You couldn't even spread your mana and look ahead with it.

Did he create a map in his head and pick the right path?

That's impossible.

Is there a sign that only guides can identify for forked roads?

Throughout the two days, I had thoroughly observed for a sign in vain.

Is it simply using decision-making and prediction?

Likewise, that's impossible.

If this kid is using his own knowledge and wisdom in order to find the right path, that's close to predicting the future.

The last thing I could think of was obvious, but it was that wand.

The wand was acting as a navigator.

I have my doubts again here.

If that was the case, then that wand is some sort of magic tool; but how could it find the right path?

This dungeon was characterized by mana obstruction that was extensively pinning us down.

The kid closed his eyes.

I also closed my eyes.

The kid, in front of the forked road, acted as if he were concentrating and secretly pet the lower part of the wand's handle.

In the next moment, the wand emitted mana.

That mana doesn't spread towards the forked road.

It just roamed about the surrounding area and transiently dissipated.

Just like my mana.

The kid opened his eyes.

I also opened my eyes.

“It's the second path from the right. This way.”

* * *

The kid stopped walking before the four forked roads without an up or down.

As he had done before, he tightly gripped his wand.

He closed his eyes.

I also closed my eyes.

It wasn't the first one.

It also wasn't the third one.

The fourth one was... a bit ambiguous.

[I have absolutely no idea.]

[It seems like the third one, Warrior.]

It's not the third one.

It doesn't seem like the fourth one either.

It's the second one.

Now, let's see if I've picked the right path.

This kid opened his eyes.

I also opened my eyes.

“It's the second path from the left. This way.”

Chapter 166

Tutorial 27th Floor (5)

“This way.”

I followed the kid's lead and it soon became three days of wandering around in the middle floor...

Right about now, I was able to make a inference regarding the role of these so called guides.

They can lead you to the right path without depending on their sense of direction, their mana, or magic lamps in this middle floor.

I had thought it was just their top-notch senses and physical abilities, but they had a much more peculiar kind of ability.

When you seek a guide for the middle floor, they'll probably be a strong individual that the client wouldn't easily meet.

It wasn't just this kid; the old lady that I had met in town was also at a level where you couldn't deal with her easily.

That's why these guys are generally of a lower social class.

It's a bit awkward for them to refuse a request outright, and their workplace is extremely dangerous.

In addition, they may be abused in some way once they get inside the dungeon.

Therefore, I thought that this job as a guide was the most dangerous, difficult and dirty; the most extreme of the 3Ds job.

However.

The kid who had been silently walking through the passage stopped.

There was a new forked road in front of him.

Once they had departed the town, passed the entrance of the dungeon, gotten through the upper floor and the upper-middle floor, and reached this middle floor, they gained a greater social status.

The kid took out a small clock from his chest and checked the time, saying, "It's taken exactly three days."

It's been three days since we've entered the middle floor.

"Yeah."

"There are thousands of people who unfortunately suffer an accident in the dungeons; no, it may actually be tens of thousands. It could also be even more than that."

The kid started talking.

If it were possible, I wish he'd speed up the conversation a bit more.

"However, even amongst them, there's a famous story. Do you know of it? Of the story of the swordmaster Eheram?"

"No."

"I'm talking about the story regarding Eheram, considered the strongest swordmaster of the continent, starving and dying in this dungeon's middle floor. Eheram and a guide had entered this dungeon together, but three days after entering, he argued with his guide."

That was obvious.

I'd really like to skip this conversation, though.

"After their argument, the furious guide left Eheram and exited the dungeon first. They say that when Eheram saw his guide do so, he screamed at him. That he could get out on his own. Eheram was left alone like that in the middle floor and they say that they found his skeleton two years later.”

[It's finally time to kill him! Yoo-hoo! Warrior, have you killed a lot of children before?]

[Warrior. My mood is worsening to the point that it's slowly becoming unbearable. If it's at all possible, could you please put that magic sword on the other side of your waist? I want to be as far as possible from that thing.]

...I got it.

I moved the holy sword, which had been attached to the left side of my waist with the soul sword, to the right side of my waist.

It seemed as if the child thought my actions were dangerous.

“Why don't you go ahead and try to kill me? You won't be able to get out of here without me!” he desperately lashed out.

“It doesn't really matter much if I die here. After all, my life is in the gutters, so dying here isn't very different from dying outside. However, it's different for someone with a lot to lose like you, right, Swordsman?”

I wonder what that kid wants?

More money? The holy sword and the soul sword? If not those, then an apology for the violence from before?

I had already directly and indirectly conveyed my intent to the kid several times.

That if he had something he wanted to just say it.

That if it's proper, I'll just give it to him.

However, that kid's the one who ignored my intent.

“If you're by chance planning to steal my wand, you should just give up. This wand can only be used by my kin. If you're not a person with our kin's blood, this wand won't activate.”

Yeah, I'm sure that's how it is.

Since it would only activate by blood offerings, he would prick his finger with the awl at the end of the wand.

I had thought that it would have that kind of condition.

And I could easily guess that the wand had that kind of limitation when I saw the kid use that wand so confidently in front of me.

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. My blade is crying out!]

[Warrior, please just shove it into the subspace.]

Just as Seregia suggested, I shoved the holy sword into my inventory.

And I raised my hand, spreading my mana.

I briefly observed the dissipating mana.

There were three forked roads in front of my eyes.

The mana that flowed from my fingertips chaotically roamed the air and dissipated.

Before it dissipated, the mana's movement was extremely erratic.

However, after spreading my mana for three days and frequently observing it, I figured out that there was a pattern there.

This middle floor's maze is special.

It had several special points, but the most unique aspect was the mana obstruction magic.

And that this wasn't a spontaneous phenomenon.

Someone was deliberately casting this large-scale magic.

Semi-permanently at that.

The magic's purpose was clear-cut: to make it difficult to find the right path.

However, the right path certainly exists here.

The path that leads to the lowest floor.

Using the few clues I had, I made a deduction about the caster of the magic.

Two speculations were possible.

If it was a spell used in order to imprison someone, then the caster is in the upper floor; in other words, they must've used their magic from the exit of the dungeon.

In this case, the goal of the magic would be to make it impossible to find the path that leads to the exit.

If so, I just need to spread mana in the direction we came from.

Because we came from the exit.

Since I knew the correct answer, I should be able to figure out the pattern with a few tries.

However, that wasn't it.

The next possible assumption is this:

This magic was being cast from the dungeon's lowest floor in order to prevent you from recklessly entering the dungeon's lowest floor.

When I think about this stage's mission about the Earth Dragon and the Earth Dragon's treasure, the second assumption is much more plausible.

It was a large-scale magic that obstructed the path towards the dragon's lair.

It's entirely possible.

If, based on my second assumption, this obstruction magic's goal is to block my way to the lowest floor...

Then I had to add an additional assumption here.

In what manner did the caster of the magic cast it?

It wasn't easy to disperse the mana within a specific area with magic.

No, it's impossible.

In casting magic, the most important things are the conditions and the medium.

When the kid was walking, he had suddenly said that starting here was the middle floor.

He had also said that the middle floor's terrain consisted of narrow passageways and clearings.

The passageway's ceiling, walls, floor, and from the front... The fact that there was a mana obstruction effect...

And the limitation on the technique known as magic...

If I substitute in those few conditions, I could easily tell what the caster of the magic is using as a medium.

It's the passageway.

And even amongst all those forked roads, the right path.

In the deepest depths of the dungeon, he was using the passageway leading straight to the exit of the dungeon as a medium.

The passageway that acts as the medium spreads throughout the middle floor and exerts its influence.

I spread my mana once again.

Due to the force that was pulling at my mana from all directions, my mana loomed in the air here and there and disappeared.

However, the pulling force was coming from a strange place.

But it was impossible to grasp the direction it was in.

Because the mana dissipated instantaneously.

However, this second dissipating mana was different.

I memorized the pattern of the dissipating mana and I willed my mana into that shape.

The pulling force pulled, but I added my strength and pulled back harder.

The mana thread was pulled on both ends and easily snapped.

However, if only one side pulled, it would simply move to one side.

I pulled the mana that was facing the first passageway, but it dissipated.

The first passageway is the correct answer.

[I have absolutely no idea.]

This way of manipulating mana with your hands would be impossible for Seregia.

The holy sword that I had shoved and discarded into my inventory also wouldn't be able to do it.

In a short time, I had observed the pattern, and I had to memorize that pattern.

And you'd have to subtly manipulate your mana according to that erratic-looking pattern.

Finally, you'd have to grasp where the mana is going in that split second before your mana dissipates.

If you weren't an extremely exceptional magician, it would be difficult to do.

Though I could do it.

“About this wand. Our ancestors invented this wand...”

The kid was still describing the wand.

He was explaining its value and it seemed like he wanted to seize the initiative.

Just like before, he still didn't tell me what he wanted.

“You spread your mana, and you read the pattern in the split second of your mana dissipating. It's probably like some kind of calculator.”

It wasn't hard to guess the wand's function.

Just by looking at the exterior, I could tell that wand had only two abilities.

It just spreads mana into the air.

And then it would film the sight of that mana dissipating.

That was all.

The mana would randomly roam in the air and dissipate; the sight was extremely erratic and chaotic.

It would change that irregularity into a pattern.

And it would compare it to all of the patterns that were built into the wand and tell you the right answer.

I wasn't completely sure, but the likelihood of it was over 70%.

It was an efficient magic tool.

Honestly, the abilities in and of itself aren't bad.

Because filming the volatile movement of mana was difficult.

I don't know who it was, but whoever invented that was probably at the level of an Archmage.

“Get out of the way. And don't block my path.”

I shoved aside the kid who seemed flustered and went inside the first passageway.

“W-Without me, you won't be able to find the right path!” the kid yelled, following behind me.

“I found it, didn't I?”

* * *

“That's impossible...”

The kid followed behind me and mumbled.

The kid had followed me, confident that I would never be able to find the right path.

However, I had repeatedly chosen the right path five times; his face paled about half way through.

[Are you just going to leave him like that?]

Yeah.

[Wouldn't it be better to dispose of him?]

It's fine. There's no need.

I don't think I need to kill him just because he became useless.

In any case, that kid wouldn't be able to leave here alive, so I didn't need to get blood on my hands.

The kid continued to follow behind me.

The kid probably couldn't help it as well.

The kid couldn't deal with the monsters in this middle floor that hid their bodies and lived in the darkness.

There were also dangerous individuals who lived in the upper-middle floor and wanted sacrifices.

If he didn't have someone to protect him, they would take everything he had and capture him.

Therefore, the kid had no choice other than to follow me.

Even now, when he is seized by the fear that I could turn around at any time and kill him because he had threatened me.

The kid couldn't separate himself from me.

It was quite unfortunate.

“Just a moment... Swordsman. Please just wait a moment.”

Even while panting because he couldn't keep up with me.

The kid couldn't afford to lag behind.

“Please... Please. Please let me live, Swordsman.”

They're words that I had heard some time ago.

Just a little while ago.

“...Swordsman. Swordsman.”

His voice sounded as if it was echoing, so he must've been quite far behind me.

“The gems. I'll return the gems as well as the bag! I'll give you everything that I have!”

The kid stopped walking and started shouting after me.

Rather than following me and convincing me, he stayed in place to catch his breath and yelled at me. He might've been trying to get me to stop walking.

“I-If I'm capable of doing it, I'll do anything! Swordsman! Please!”

[How unfortunate.]

What is?

[Humans.]

That's not what I think.

Behind my back, the kid's cries shifted from anger to desperation.

He was so far away that he couldn't even see my back and it seemed like he had sunk into a panic; he was just spitting out any words he could muster.

He was cursing me, and he was also cursing the world too.

As I listened to those words, I could understand why the kid was so obsessed with money and why he was so greedy.

He was considerably unfortunate to the point of being interesting and had a long story, but he wasn't able to stop me from walking.

“Swordsman, I'm actually a girl!”

This time, I had no choice but to stop my stride.

Because it was so absurd.

What exactly do you want me to do?

“I know!”

I yelled behind me and started walking again.

I knew that she wore a bandana, cut her hair short, wore male attire, deliberately changed her voice to sound like a man, used her dirtiness and her smelliness in order to hide her pretty face; I knew she was afraid of revealing that she was a woman.

From the day that I first met her.

However, does that really matter?

I asked myself.

It didn't matter at all.

The only thing that mattered right now was that there was an Earth Dragon waiting for me in the lowest floor.

The word “earth worm” wasn't another name for a worm.

There's no such worm in any novel that can use this kind of high-rank magic.

The one occupying the bottom of this dungeon was a dragon.

I continued to walk forward as my heart fluttered.

Chapter 167

Tutorial 27th Floor (6)

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. This will be the start of a new legend of the holy sword as well as the title of Dragon Slayer!]

What are you going on about?

“If I kill the dragon, the Dragon Slayer title is mine. Why do you get that title?”

[That's because my blade will pierce the dragon's heart!]

“Nope. I'm not going to use you.”

The holy sword radiated and threw a tantrum.

He wanted me to use him to kill the dragon.

[Warrior, could you please just shove that thing back into the subspace?]

[...]

Seregia said, and the holy sword returned to being quiet.

The holy sword really hated entering the inventory, so whenever someone said anything about putting him inside of it, he'd immediately behave himself.

I honestly had no plans of taking out the holy sword from my inventory before I parted ways with the guide kid.

But I was concerned that if I just left the holy sword inside my inventory while I was taking care of the dragon, he would whine like there was no tomorrow.

If by chance the holy sword refused to cooperate at an important moment, it would be a huge deal, so if he behaved, I decided to attach and wear him at my waist.

[It's a strange place.] Seregia said.

Like always, her voice was calm and dry. But the more you listened to her, the better you'd get at roughly understanding how she feels.

“Yeah. The murals are also unusual.”

It's been two days since I've parted ways with the kid.

I had passed through the middle floor and reached the lowest floor.

Though I didn't have a guide, I could easily tell that I had escaped the middle floor.

I walked through the middle floor's passageway and was eventually met with a stone gate that blocked the narrow passageway.

It was a thick stone gate, inscribed with a glowing magic circle.

If the holy sword's explanation was correct...

Based on the holy sword's explanation, the gate was a magic door that would open only after you spoke the proper keyword. I just smashed through the gate with pure strength and went in. After that, the dungeon's appearance changed significantly.

Contrary to the middle floor's narrow passageway that went on in the shape of a winding road, the lowest floor consisted of a single clearing.

The lowest floor looked as if it was a giant temple.

I couldn't read most of the writing and the drawings were discolored as well, but I could tell what this place was.

This place was a spot built for worship.

But rather than worshipping a god, it looked as if it were a place to worship a dragon.

That's what I thought when I saw the stone statues of a giant dragon as well as the vague draconic patterns.

I walked through the dragon's temple silently save for the sound of my footsteps and eventually reached the end.

A giant door.

I thought it might be about as high as a ten-story apartment; the giant door was the only thing blocking my advance.

The giant door was engraved with strange words and symbols.

[They're runes.] Seregia said.

“You also know runes? That's surprising.”

It was prejudiced, but Seregia didn't look as though she had any expertise in anything other than swordsmanship.

[I remember learning it from the Academy's liberal arts classes.]

“Can you read it?”

[No. I only know that they are runes.]

As always, Seregia responded confidently.

She had given off this impression since a while back, but whenever Seregia believes that she can't do something, something won't work out, or she doesn't have something, and talks about something negative, she responds even more confidently than before.

Is that a characteristic of her speech, or if not, is it some sort of strange masochistic gag?

[Hoo. Hoo. It's obvious that our cute Miss Seregia wouldn't be able to read those words. You don't have to be too hard on yourself, Miss Seregia.]

The holy sword went 'hoo. hoo.' again and started talking.

[...I'm not blaming myself, but you're making me feel bad, so please refrain from calling my name.]

The holy sword ignored Seregia's request and continued.

[Those runes are written in the draconic language.]

“I see. Then can you read it?”

[No. I can also read a few runes, but reading that is impossible. It's not like draconic language is like a kid's coded message, so how could I read it? There probably aren't even ten people on this entire continent who can decipher that message.]

I briefly felt that the holy sword's statement was odd.

Was the draconic language that difficult of a language to understand?

I had heard about the distinctive characteristics of the draconic language from Idy before.

“Is it really that difficult?”

[Yes. Of course.]

“What I heard is that all of the meaning is put in the front in the draconic language; the rest is just an inefficient language that lists unnecessary words. Then, if you just decipher the beginning of those runes, shouldn't you be able to guess its meaning?"

[I don't know who you heard this from, but that someone clearly has absolutely no knowledge of runes. You cannot just thoughtlessly say something like that, Warrior. Magicians will say that you're looking down on them and attack you out of anger for your disrespect.]

Is that so?

The dungeon's path continued on beyond that giant door.

If it's possible, I would just smash through the door and walk in, but I wanted to understand some of its meaning before that.

"Can you at least read a few letters?"

[I might. Even if I know a few runes, the meaning can be completely different so there's a high possibility that I will misunderstand it.

[TL Note: He's saying that the words differ in meaning, presumably based on how they're sequenced, spelled, etc.]

How unfortunate.

I smacked my lips and I walked forward to smash apart the door.

[You don't have to blame yourself for not being able to read those runes. It's only natural, sir holy sword, Ahbooboo something or another.]

The quiet Seregia suddenly 'cast' provoke.

[...Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. It's natural, you say?... Warrior. Could you please give me some time? If you just give me enough time, I can interpret as many of those mere scribbles as you want!]

The holy sword was caught by the provocation.

The effect was tremendous.

“No. It's not a matter of time, but you said that you couldn't read it. Let's just go.”

[OH! Please, Warrior! If you give me a chance, I'll be quiet!]

That was a tempting offer.

“Fine. Then I'll give you some time, so stay quiet.”

[Yes. Thank you, Warrior. I love you, Warrior. I'm definitely going to decipher that draconic language. And I'll show you that I'm worthy of being a holy sword. When I say I'll do something, I definitely follow through. And Miss Seregia, my name isn't Ahbooboo, it's Ahoubuch!]

[I know. Sir mythomania holy sword.]

I ignored the bickering between Seregia and the holy sword, and leaned on a nearby pillar.

Since I had been moving unceasingly for a few days, resting before smashing apart the door wouldn't be such a bad idea.

I have absolutely no idea what was beyond that door.

Enemies may burst out the moment I open the door, so let's move after we've gotten some rest.

It also quieted down the holy sword.

I closed my eyes and briefly passed the time by circulating the mana circuits inside my body.

* * *

“Are you still not done?”

[That is... Warrior. If you give me some more time and manpower then...]

Manpower. What manpower?

I drew the holy sword from my waist.

[Warrior! Please! Please don't put me into the inventory!]

As soon as I drew the holy sword from his sheath, he had thought that I was going to put him into my inventory and quickly protested.

I crudely stuck the holy sword into the ground.

"I'll give you 10 more minutes. Finish within that time. Meanwhile, I'll be taking a look around."

After I stuck the holy sword into the ground at a position where it could see the front of the door well, I walked around the clearing as I glanced around.

I couldn't read the letters and the drawings and pieces were extremely damaged, so it was difficult to figure anything out.

But it felt like I was walking through a museum, so it wasn't bad.

In the corner, there were several comic strip-like murals divided into sections.

Likewise, they were considerably damaged, but the more you looked at them, the more you guess the story.

A great dragon fought and defeated an evil enemy.

The dragon that had defeated the enemy had either been cursed or made ill.

The dragon prepared a special ritual.

Before the ritual began, the dragon gave something to a human with a certain pattern.

At the site of the ritual that was taking place, the man waited outside of the door for the dragon.

The human became humans.

Whenever the drawings would change, the humans' faces would change slightly.

The drawing of the humans who waited outside of the door for the dragon continued for hundreds, maybe thousands of times.

The longer it went on, the more their numbers dwindled.

On the final picture on the wall, there was only one person remaining.

[It's an interesting story.]

“Yeah. I'm really curious what the dragon gave to the humans.”

What could it have possibly given them that they waited generations for the sleeping dragon?

I wonder what had become of the dragon's consciousness?

Has the dragon not woken up yet, by any chance?

It would be a real disappointment if the floor's objective was to slay a sleeping dragon.

[What do you think happened to the humans? Do you think they grew old and died?]

“Probably not. They probably just don't come over here anymore, even if they're still alive.”

[Why do you think that way?]

“Look at that pattern that's drawn on the humans over there. Don't you think you've seen that somewhere before?”

[So it was the guides' symbol.]

It was an interesting story, in more ways than one.

I returned to the front of the stone gate and drew the holy sword.

“Were you able to decipher some of it while I was away?”

[...]

The holy sword just kept silent.

[Sir holy sword sure does keep his promise, considering how he's already silent.]

Even though Seregia's remark was clearly sarcastic, the holy sword didn't retort as I returned him back to his sheath.

I drew the soul sword and enveloped it in aura.

And swung it at the giant stone gate.

* * *

Ultimately, even with my strength, I completely failed to break apart the stone gate.

It definitely seems like it's made of stone, but its hardness surpassed that of steel.

I tried a few times, but in the end I had no choice but to give up.

Instead, using my maximally condensed aura, I was able to make a small hole in the gate that I had to narrowly crawl through.

The air was different as soon as I got out of the hole.

The mana density was extremely high.

It felt like I was swimming through water composed of mana.

And beyond the darkness, I sensed a powerful existence.

I felt that the circulation of my mana was blocked due to its magic, and my sight couldn't pierce through the deep darkness.

All I could do was assume who this existence was, based on the power that I felt.

And I was sure.

That was a dragon.

I could say without any hesitation that the only existence that could match up to that is a dragon.

Rather, it was to the point that I was surprised.

Even though it's a dragon, I expected it to be on par with the Demon King or just a little weaker.

That's because the strength that the Demon King exhibited definitely wasn't suitable for the 26th floor difficulty.

However, that was a miscalculation.

That thing exceeds the Demon King's strength.

When I had met the Great Mother, I had witnessed the nearby mana resonating with her.

That was only possible because the Great Mother had complete command over the area.

When I had encountered the Demon King on the 26th floor, I could feel something tremendous beyond the Demon King's physical appearance.

The summoned Demon King would be used as a medium connecting him to his original body's mana in the Demon World beyond.

The Demon King summoned his body's strength and I had felt that considerable power crossing over right before my very eyes.

It was a surprising experience.

And right now, I was experiencing both of those phenomena right now.

The ground underneath and the ambient mana began to shake, and was resonating with the owner of that strength.

And within that owner's body, there was a vessel that existed, containing that absurd amount of mana.

What's worse was that it pulsed every few seconds and generated new mana.

It was an absurd spectacle.

Every few seconds, it would be freshly supplied with an amount of mana similar to my entire supply of mana.

If you just looked at our mana, you wouldn't even be able to compare the two of us.

Kwang!!

It suddenly roared, accompanied by a cloud of dust and wind surging forth.

And I could feel it.

The dragon had recognized my existence.

Those dragon eyes were looking at me.

My feet stiffened at that truth.

It wasn't fear.

It wasn't from a magical effect.

My brain had just stopped for a second.

At the face of overwhelming strength.

I couldn't find a way to take it down.

In my head, I could see myself repeatedly fail; after that, I could see my death.

That thing isn't something that should appear on the 27th floor.

There's some kind of problem.

[Warrior.]

I heard Seregia.

I instinctively drew and unsheathed the soul sword.

And I raised the holy sword in my left hand.

Although I had decided to refrain from using the holy sword for the sake of my growth, I had to use it in this kind of dangerous situation.

That's why I had continued to carry it from the very beginning.

I thought as I felt its gaze narrow on me.

I couldn't see it, nor could I sense it, but it had turned its body towards me just now.

The first thing I could think of: a magic attack.

When its long-range attack comes, how should I handle it?

“Holy sword.”

[Yes. Warrior.]

Contrary to his normal speech, the holy sword spoke both curtly and sharply.

“If a long-distance intangible magic attack comes, for example a restraint, or sleep, or a magic that puts my body into an abnormal state, you can block it, right?”

[I can. So long as the God of the Sky responds, I should be able to block it using holy spells.]

“How much?”

[Twice. Maybe three times.]

That's too few.

“What about ordinary attack magic?”

[I cannot block it at my level. No matter what comes flying, I won't be able to block it.]

So you're saying that I have to evade attack magics and rely on Talaria's Wings.

My preparation against the long-distance attack is too poor.

If that's the case, I have to approach first.

While the dragon is preparing its attack right now, I have to preemptively rush it and win in a short-term battle.

[Indomitable]

[Talaria's Wings]

[Soul Siphon]

[Soul Cry]

[Designate Opponent]

I used all the skills that I could and stepped forward.

At the same time, the dragon roared.

The dragon rushed towards me, accompanied by a deafening roar.

Contrary to what I had expected, it's going to fight me hand-to-hand.

Those conditions aren't bad for me.

I gripped the swords in my hands.

And I too, ran towards the approaching dragon.

Chapter 168

Tutorial 27th Floor (7)

[Roar!]

It felt as though the dragon's harsh cry was reverberating even inside my body.

The dragon and I approached each other at breakneck speed; the distance between the dragon and I was closing quickly.

In an instant, it ripped through the darkness and the dragon revealed itself before my very eyes.

Its body appeared as though it were larger than five meters.

It currently wasn't flying, but those giant, widely-spread wings...

As well as its teeth and its talons looked as big as my body...

Since it's close to me now, I can feel that overwhelming mana more clearly than before.

Its very existence was emitting a powerful intense pressure.

Just looking at it face-to-face made me lose my breath.

I repressed that intense pressure and told the holy sword.

Holy sword, focus on blocking the magic.

[Yes.]

[Blink]

I heard the holy sword reply curtly, unlike usual, and blinked to the back of the dragon's head.

I simultaneously swung the soul sword, cutting the back of the dragon's head as I leaped past.

The sword was enveloped in aura, but the dragon hadn't sustained much damage.

My attack wasn't shallow.

It was just that the dragon's defense was excessively high.

Despite precisely-aimed strikes, it just made a scratch mark on the dragon's hide, rather than cutting through and causing the dragon to bleed.

[Time Confinement]

I organized the outcome in my head.

It had nullified that simple sword strike.

It wasn't as if my aura was completely ineffective.

It was just that the damage inflicted was insignificant.

In order to land a serious attack, it must contain my aura's flames or I have to attempt an even stronger attack.

The former's consumption of my mana and mental strength is huge, and there's too much danger involved in the latter.

Next is the dragon's condition.

I could only observe it with my eyes for a split second, but I had seen everything that I needed to see.

The dragon's condition wasn't normal.

Fortunately.

The dragon's four legs were extremely skinny.

Its muscles looked as if they had shrunk as well.

Its wings' webbing was torn to pieces.

I could easily figure out the reason for that.

It wasn't just the wings; the dragon's entire body was covered in scars.

They were all self-inflicted wounds from its talons.

As the leading expert on self-injury, I was sure those scars were definitely self-inflicted.

Those self-inflicted scars were different in their direction and location than normal self-inflicted scars.

To add to that, I didn't see the pupils of its eyes.

Its pupils were dyed in a cloudy white color.

No matter how I see it, it looks like it's not in the right state of mind.

If the dragon's mind is addled, it wouldn't be able to utilize its spells or mana, so I could understand why it was idiotically charging in like that.

Of course, I can't be positive that the dragon won't use magic.

If it feels like it's in even a little bit in danger, it may start chaotically firing magic at random.

I formulated a plan until my Time Confinement ended.

I tried to predict the dragon's next move, one by one.

I postulated on every type of attack that I could imagine, and considered these situations while factoring in the dragon's speed.

Of course, most of my simulations' results were negative.

However, it was a lot better than what I had thought before the battle.

Just by approaching the dragon this much, my chances of winning were a lot higher than they were before.

I have to end the fight in a short period of time in order to win.

The next thing I had to think about was whether or not I could use the Light Sword.

Could I use the Light Sword the moment that the Time Confinement ends?

I slowly examined my current condition.

It's impossible.

Positioned in the air.

The direction of the attack.

My body is shaken up by my opponent's mana.

Kiri Kiri's warning on the mental strain on my brain.

The alarmingly close distance from the enemy.

Using the Light Sword right away is impossible.

I dismissed the Light Sword and pondered on my choice of attack I'll initiate as soon as my Time Confinement ends.

In that instant, the Time Confinement ended.

[Blink]

As soon as the effects of my Time Confinement were over, I used Blink to avoid the dragon's front legs.

I held onto the holy sword that had been in my left hand in my mouth.

I changed the Thousand Arms sheath that was attached to my waist into a dagger.

[Blink]

I blinked once again.

This time, I aimed for the dragon's neck and bashed into it by casting blink.

The powerful impact was accompanied by a heavy thud sound, as if I were crashing into a wall.

When I had used my blink tackle combo on the waiting room's wall, I had estimated the strength of the impact before using my blink.

I could ignore the impact and move my body.

I pierced the dragon's skin and lodged the dagger in my left hand into the dragon's neck.

I had planned to get up close and pierce a tender region; my dagger ended up lodged about half-way into the dragon's neck.

[Poison]

[TL Note: Was translated as Poison Energy before. That's much too literal and should be translated as poison anyway.]

After the 12th floor, I had consistently practiced the skill; it came in handy here.

It wasn't a skill that was to be used as a finisher, but I had enhanced my sword with the skill and fought several opponents with it before. Therefore, the skill level itself was sufficiently high.

In addition to the poison, I had also added my blazing aura.

Compared to the dragon's huge body, a dagger was nothing more than a needle stuck into its body, but it was different when poison and fire were involved.

If they were to pass through its body, it could obstruct its flow of mana; a critical attack.

Both of the dragon's front legs flew towards me.

[Blink]

[Blink]

I used Blink twice and I once again moved to the back of its head.

I raised the soul sword with both hands and focused on my aura.

I couldn't recklessly use the Light Sword, but I could use imitations of the Light Sword as much as I wanted.

[TL Note: The 'imitations' refer to the techniques with those cringy names that the swordmasters created in an attempt to replicate the Light Sword.]

Amongst them, there was a technique with the grandiose name, Cutting the Sky or Falling Fire's Judgment or whatever.

Even amongst the many techniques, it was the sole technique that stressed explosive power to such a degree.

Since I couldn't sever the dragon's head in one strike, I decided that striking the back of its head was my best plan of action, so long as I can buy even a split second longer for my next attack.

The technique properly struck the back of its head, and the dragon and I were both shocked by the attack.

Due to the impact, my body momentarily floated into the air.

I focused for my next move.

It was hit with an attack of this severity, so the dragon will start considering the use of magic.

Now, I'd have to move differently based on the dragon's response.

Offensive magic, evasion magic, obstruction magic.

I have no idea how many types of magic the dragon can use.

I also have no idea what magic it uses.

I would just react based on the purpose of that magic, that's all.

And in order to respond to that magic, I would have to predict the dragon's intent.

In a situation where I don't know how many or what kind of cards my opponent has, I have to predict their next move.

What's worse, it wasn't even a human; it was a dragon.

I focused on the dragon's face and muscle movements.

Regardless of what kind of magic the dragon decides on, there will always be telltale signs of its intent.

No matter how tiny they are.

Along with that, I was also tense from the trembling of the ambient mana.

Even though I was close to a beginner at magic, I had to foresee the characteristics of the magical invocation no matter what.

It was unbelievably difficult, but it was something I had to do.

My focus and my thinking speed sped up faster than ever before.

Due to the acceleration of my thoughts, the world slowed down to a speed that could compare to Time Confinement; I tried to guess the dragon's next move.

Despite my attempts, the dragon did something completely preposterous that was outside the realm of my predictions.

The dragon didn't attack, evade, or even restrain me.

It just screamed in agony.

[Shriek!]

I was dumbfounded when I saw the marred dragon clearly exposing its blind spots.

I was locked in confusion and couldn't initiate my next attack.

* * *

When I saw the dragon's overly straightforward movements and its dull pupils, I had assumed it, but the dragon had definitely lost its mind.

Contrary to my expectation, the dragon didn't get a hold of itself when danger was approaching, and even after encountering pain, it couldn't formulate a counter-measure.

It just writhed in pain and chased me because I was in its sights.

It swung its human-sized talons and teeth at me with enough force behind its arms and legs that it seemed as though it could break through anything. But its behavior wasn't much different from a housecat chasing around a mosquito.

Although the dragon's close range attacks were backed by a fearsome strength, it wasn't at a level that could threaten me.

Its front legs, as well as its teeth exhibited a simple attack pattern.

Anything that lay in its line of sight was in its aggro.

Its muscles would jerk in order to attack.

The dragon wasn't even aware of its own exposed blind spot and just mustered all its strength to move its body.

Because of that, no matter how strong or fast its attacks were, I could predict the course of its attacks in advance, and calmly avoid them.

It wasn't hard.

Pure strength can lead to different outcomes based on how you use it.

Based on how you use your strength, the result can differ; the results branch off into an infinite number of outcomes.

And far from using magic or mana, the dragon demonstrated an intellect worse than a neighborhood mutt's, so there was no way that it would be my match.

Henceforth, what was progressing wasn't a battle, but a one-sided hunt.

I dodged its attacks and whenever there was a gap, I would stab it with my soul sword.

I didn't really need to put myself in danger to get in a damaging strike.

My sword strikes were enveloped in poison and flames, so whenever I hit the mark, the dragon would cry out and worsen its own injuries by thrashing about.

Ultimately, the dragon couldn't bear the exhaustion created by its uncontrolled movements, plus the poison and the flames, and collapsed to the ground.

For a short while, the dragon was gasping intermittently, but eventually stopped moving completely.

I sighed.

How empty.

I had such high expectations as I progressed through the 27th floor.

When I had first saw the dragon, it had demonstrated strength beyond my imagination.

However, it couldn't properly wield that strength and died like... this.

It was such a hollow ending that it was sad.

* * *

Only when the matter came to an end was I able to properly examine the dragon.

At the time, the situation had felt seriously dangerous; the dragon had so wildly dashed in, so I hadn't been able to properly examine it.

However, the dragon's condition was a little strange, to say the least.

“Ahbooboo. Do you know a bit about dragons?”

[It's Ahoubuch, Warrior. If it's truly difficult for you to remember, please just call me the holy sword. Since becoming a holy sword, I have encountered a dragon about twice before, but to see one in that state, it's a first. Even for me.]

So that's how it is, huh.

The dragon's appearance certainly looked strange.

Despite it being my first time inspecting a dragon, it was so strange that I could easily discern that peculiarity.

Its body was far longer than a few meters, decorated with red spots as well as discolored black spots; sometimes, there were sections where the skin would be flaking off, revealing bone.

Of course, there were several wounds caused by my attacks, but even if we exclude those, the dragon had already been on the verge of death.

As its flesh burned, a foul stench emanated from the smoke coming from its body.

I had become used to the foul smell of poisoned and burnt corpses.

However, the foul stench that came from the dragon wasn't like that.

Was it because of the curse that I had seen on the murals?

In any case, the dragon hadn't been in its normal condition.

This did fit the stage's high difficulty.

Since it looked like the main process of this stage was to win over a guide, and reach the lowest floor, there was definitely more to this.

Rather than a battle like this, sometimes the stage focused on a different aspect. I believed that the 27th floor was also one of those stages, so there wasn't anything strange with the difficulty.

It just seemed a little empty.

That overwhelming presence that I had felt when I first came inside this room...

I had definitely felt like I might die, and in each moment I had strived to make the best decisions.

However, the dragon was worse than I had expected.

I think I knew why the clear condition message clearly specified that it was an earthworm.

It was too low-level to be called a dragon.

“Maybe I should've given it an elixir and fought it after it'd recovered a bit.”

[Warrior. I don't believe that an elixir would be able to solve the problem that even the dragon hadn't been able to solve.]

Seregia interrupted.

That's what I think too.

I'm just saying that because I'm disappointed.

In any case, I defeated the dragon that had already been half dead. The only thing left to clear was to acquire the treasure.

The clear conditions clearly stated to defeat the earth dragon and acquire the earth dragon's treasure.

Yeah... it'll probably take a quite a bit of time to find it.

As always, the magic in the dungeon was anarchic.

So long as I couldn't use my mana to search my surroundings, I would have to go around and search for it manually.

The clearing I'm in right now is considerably vast. No. It looked ridiculously huge, and I also saw dark crossroads; who knows how far those crossroads would continue on for.

Perhaps I'll have to search the entire floor, including the room with the exit.

I didn't even know what exactly the earthworm's 'treasure' was.

The lowest floor was boundless.

Around the 11th floor or so, I had received a mission where I had to find a hidden treasure in an underground city.

It felt like I would be trapped inside that underground city forever. Needless to say, I had wandered around in there for a long time.

Ultimately though, I broke down a wall and found a secret room in a fit of anger.

If I have to find a hidden treasure again like that time...

I pondered briefly before explaining the situation to Seregia and the holy sword.

And I asked the holy sword if he could find something similar to a treasure with his magic.

[It would be difficult. I can't really do anything about the mana obstruction magic in this room. Also, Warrior.]

“Yeah?”

[Are you sure that that treasure is in the lowest floor? Based on what you said, Warrior, you don't know where the treasure is, right?]

After the holy sword spoke, I was momentarily silent.

What if the its treasure was outside?

That was actually a little better.

That's because I can just interrogate anyone who might have the treasure. Interrogate roughly, that is.

For example, that old guide lady.

However, if it were somewhere in the middle floor, the upper-middle floor, or the upper floor...

How would I find it?

I'm screwed.

I had been so focused on the dragon that I had completely forgotten about the treasure.

* * *

First, I decided to search the lowest floor meticulously.

If I look for it and can't find it at all, I can just use the Order of Vigilance to look for corresponding information on the lowest floor, so there was no reason to be overly anxious.

Since the beginning, the Order of Vigilance was involved in helping with the rankers' clears.

I have to use them at times like this.

I took out a magical stone lantern from my inventory and slowly looked around the lowest floor.

There were talon scratch marks here and there on what remained of the walls and the floor.

They were from the dragon's talons, of course.

“Anyhow, why did the dragon become like that? Based on the murals, I know that it was afflicted with some sort of curse or poison. But is it possible for a dragon to lapse into such an incurable idiotic monster?”

The murals had also depicted a time when the dragon had been wise, governing the humans under its command.

If that's the case, then it means it suddenly changed like that after the battle with that black being.

[Aren't stories of frenzied dragons fairly common?]

A frenzied dragon?

“No, that's the first time I've heard about it. Please explain it to me.”

Seregia explained.

[It's not a special story. It's a story commonly passed down orally. A dragon that had lived for thousands of years went insane due to a certain reason. Each person has their own theory, but if there's a common denominator, it's that the dragon didn't stop rampaging until it died. Most stories speak of an ancient empire that couldn't stop the dragon's rampage and fell or they speak of an entire race being wiped out.]

After hearing Seregia's explanation, I interpreted it as something that could happen occasionally; however, a dragon going mad was still uncommon.

“A mad dragon, huh... Then are there any stories of people successfully defeating a frenzied dragon?”

[No. There aren't any. As it destroyed everything in its sight, it would exhaust itself, weaken, and die. It's a common ending.]

Weaken and die?

Then while it's running amok, you're basically saying that you have no other choice besides running away.

“Is that so? Then is this guy too weak to be called a dragon?”

[I'm sorry?]

“Well, that's because at its level, I would've stopped it regardless.”

[I'm sorry?]

[Pardon?]

“What?”

Seregia and the holy sword both expressed their doubt.

I played along.

“I mean, it was becoming a bit stale. When I realized that that guy was dumb, I didn't really feel like he was much of a threat to me anymore. That's why it felt a little empty.”

[...From start to finish, I thought that it was very dangerous. In the first place, a dragon that isn't frenzied isn't a being that mere humans can mess with.]

[Hoo. Hoo. As expected, you're truly the warrior that I, the holy sword Ahoubuch, chose. I love you, Warrior.]

The holy sword once again said something that gave me goosebumps.

I ignored him and asked a question.

“Holy sword. Do you have any guesses as to why the dragon turned out like that?”

[There are a few causes that could make a dragon go crazy, but in this case, it's probably a curse. Considering how the dragon couldn't treat it, there are two possibilities.]

The holy sword started its explanation.

Unlike usual, Seregia and I quietly listened to the holy sword's explanation.

[First, there's a chance that it was the type of curse that was impossible to purge. I've heard about it before, but if it's the type of curse that parasitizes the host's mana, then the dragon's immense mana could have been used to poison it. If not, then it could be the type of curse that suppresses one's mana. In this case, other people need to treat you, but not just anyone can treat that kind of curse.]

Surprisingly, the holy sword had a broad knowledge of curses.

And come to think of it, I hadn't thought about learning magic from the holy sword.

I do need offensive spells, but after I possess the knowledge regarding seals and curses, my highest priority will be having a defense against them.

I'll try to learn it when I have the time.

[The other case is that it was a curse that the dragon itself couldn't treat.]

“Is that possible? Aren't dragons normally at the pinnacle of magic?”

Of course, it wasn't exactly information that I had personally witnessed.

It's normally like that.

[There are the gods.]

Ah. That's right.

I had forgotten about the gods.

[If the dragon's enemy drawn on the murals was an evil god, it's entirely possible.]

It was an interesting story.

The gods that were watching the Tutorial.

They were the gods that were watching me, even at this very moment.

If such gods existed, they would clearly make their presence known to the world.

In the 16th floor and 26th floor, there were people who had talked about the gods.

And I had also heard about the consequences of the gods' intervention in those worlds.

The stories that the knight on the 16th floor had told me and the holy sword that the God of the Sky had gifted mankind on the 26th floor fit in perfectly.

If that's the case, there's a possibility that that dragon had attacked a god as well.

Since it was a matter that couldn't be found on Earth, I hadn't thought about the possibility of a god being the attacker.

And inside this Tutorial, the gods' range of activity was significantly limited.

All they could do was use messages to relay their feelings and intent to the challengers, and exhibit their power.

To me, the gods' existence still seemed like a mirage in a far-off place; it felt as though they were unknown beings that I could never reach in my lifetime.

That's something I need to change.

I have a goal.

As soon as I've achieved my goal, and if the gods deny it...

Then I'll have to try to convince them, or bend down to their will.

As absurd as I felt thinking about it, it was also a task that was just as hard.

However, it's a task I've promised myself to do, as well as something I had to do for my own sake.

Thus, in order to fulfill my goal, I can't just remain as an infinitesimally small existence before the gods.

[The God of Slowness is pleased.]

[The God of Adventure is rooting for you.]

[The God of Dueling is staying silent.]

[The God of Death is rubbing his eyelids.]

[The God of the Sky is feeling uncomfortable.]

[The God of Devotion feels sorry for you.]

[The God of Nature thinks you're foolish.]

The messages before my eyes passed by quickly.

Aside from the gods that I see often, there were even some gods that I had only seen a few times.

The total sum of those messages was 100.

[All the Gods of the Temple of a Hundred Gods are watching you.]

I won't be able to think to myself, jeez.

Most of the gods had negative reactions.

Those that expressed a positive reaction were only a small minority.

The God of Chaos for example, or the God of Amusement sent reactions. They were, for the most part, gods who enjoyed ridiculous situations.

Then there's the God of Adventure and the God of Slowness.

Are these guys ok?

If you look at it a certain way, I had essentially promised to fight against the gods' will, yet they were cheering me on.

[The God of Adventure is clenching his fists.]

[The God of Slowness is embarrassed about someone.]

Subsequently, I couldn't help but giggle.

That old man sure doesn't change.

He really doesn't change.

* * *

After about four hours had passed since I started searching the lowest floor, Seregia asked.

[I'm sorry, but Warrior. Could you please give more details on the explanation you were presented with? We're lacking too many clues. There won't be an end if we keep searching like this.]

After she asked, I revealed all the information that had been presented to me.

[Ultimately, we don't have any information regarding the dragon's treasure.]

“Yeah. That was all the guidance it gave me to find it.”

[If there are so few clues, let's inversely use the lack of information as a clue.]

“How?”

[One of the two conditions: if you defeat the dragon, you should be able to naturally find the dragon's treasure. If that's true, then the treasure should be close to the dragon's body. For example, it could be the dragon's corpse itself. Above all, it's a dragon's corpse.]

[A dragon heart! Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. I, the holy sword Ahoubuch, who received the blessing of a god, have figured out the answer. A dragon's most valuable treasure is a dragon's heart! It's a dragon heart. This earth-shattering reasoning! Wow... though I'm a holy sword, I'm so extraordinary, aren't I?]

“No. You just said out loud what Seregia had already figured out.”

[No that's not it, Warrior. I figured it out first. I was just late because I sorted my thoughts first and then spoke. Really. Please trust me. If you deduct the time I took confirming my hypothesis, I had figured it out more than an hour ago. Miss Seregia? You also think that way, don't you, Miss Seregia?]

[First, please check if the treasure truly is the dragon heart. Warrior.]

Seregia sharply ignored the holy sword's remark.

Just like she said, I returned to the area with the dragon's corpse.

I approached the dragon's belly as it lay unmoving on its side...

When I got closer, the corpse's foul stench began to hit my nose...

I thought I had seen it all, yet even I felt as though I was going to vomit a little.

I felt nauseous.

My nose was congested with the foul stench.

When you think about my skills corresponding to my senses like Paralysis Resistance and Poison Resistance, it's really unbelievable.

The source of this foul smell is probably the curse that the dragon was afflicted with.

Rather than a simple foul odor, there's a high chance that the corpse is still afflicted with magic.

Whatever the case, at least in this instance, I was thankful that my sense of smell was impaired.

It was good to know that my sense of smell had been moderately paralyzed.

In the meantime, I drew the soul sword to gut it.

[Warrior.]

“What?”

[The great holy sword, Sir Ahbooboo said that he wanted to cut through the dragon and gain the title of Dragon Slayer. Although the dragon's already dead, you should at least give him the opportunity now.]

In conclusion, use the holy sword instead of her to butcher the dragon.

I thought about it briefly, sheathed the soul sword, and drew the holy sword instead.

[Warrior! Please just wait a moment. Just a moment.]

The holy sword frantically tried to stop me, but I ignored him and stabbed the dragon's chest.

“Ugh!”

I ignored the holy sword's screams and continued butchering it.

The gutting took longer than I thought it would.

I had actually vomited twice and the holy sword whined over and over again. By the time that the holy sword started to beg, I was able to take out the heart from the dragon's chest.

Chapter 169

Tutorial 27th Floor (8)

[Blech.]

Please refrain from making such nauseating sounds. I feel like I'm going to vomit again.

I endured it without saying anything out loud, and instead muttered inwardly.

The holy sword was sufficiently tormented in the process of extracting the dragon's heart.

The holy sword, retching a few more times, said.

[I'll go inside and rest a little bit.]

“Where are you going?”

[My room.]

The holy sword turned silent towards the end of his reply.

There's a room inside of the sword?

Is there by any chance a bathroom inside as well?

It wasn't just the holy sword, Seregia was also grumbling and making sounds.

“Were you really that nauseous?”

[No, it's not that. I'm just... I'm feeling a bit strange. I think it's because of the battle before. I feel as though my feelings and eccentricities have been enhanced after becoming a sword.]

The feeling of becoming a sword.

Seregia's already a sword.

Seregia probably calmed down as she returned to her calm voice and said.

[Warrior, is that it?]

After she said that, I looked directly at the dragon's heart.

It was a red shade overall, but I could see numerous black spots on the heart.

The heart seemed to be as big as an armful, had an intense foul stench, and radiated with an ominous energy.

The cause of the dragon corpse's foul smell seemed to be this heart.

Just being close to the heart would give you a feeling of disgust.

That's why I was standing pretty far away from the heart right now.

However, the clear condition definitely stated that I had to acquire the earth dragon's treasure.

If that heart is the earth dragon's treasure, I have to obtain it.

However, what's the criteria for acquiring it?

Do I have to put that dirty, unpleasant, and foul-smelling heart into my arms?

I really don't want to.

At that time, a message appeared.

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty, 27th floor, cleared.]

[All status effects and injuries are healed.]

[You have received 5000 points for clearing the floor.]

[You have received 5000 points for being the first to clear the floor.]

[Many gods react positively to you. You have received 6000 points.]

[Many gods react negatively to you. 3300 points have been deducted.]

[All the gods of the Temple of a Hundred Gods are watching you.]

[You have received an additional 2200 points.]

What a relief.

If that dragon heart wasn't the earth dragon's treasure, I would've had to search every nook and cranny of the dungeon.

“It seems like that's the right one.”

[Then what do we do now?]

“We've done everything we needed to do. We just need to take this and return,” I said, as I looked at the magic circle beneath my feet.

Seregia summed up this phenomenon simply.

[That's convenient.]

I was glad she accepted it so easily so I wouldn't have to explain the tutorial system to her.

If she became curious, this would've become much more troublesome.

I can't truthfully explain it to her due to the system's restraints, so I would've had to make something up.

And I would've had to continue to play along with my lie.

[Warrior, then what are you going to do with that?]

Seregia spoke without hands or even a face, but I could easily tell what she was referring to.

She was referring to the female kid guide who was crawling through the hole in the stone gate.

I had cleaned up all the monsters on the way here from the middle floor, opening a safe path for that kid.

[Let's kill her before going.]

“Do we really need to?”

[I don't feel like that child will trouble us in the future. However, you don't really have a reason not to kill her. She can also be a stain on your reputation in the future. Please finish this up and then go.]

“It's fine. Let's just go.”

I cleaned the bloodstains on the holy sword and stood atop the portal.

I was about to transport, but then I heard Seregia.

[That child is lucky.]

“What?”

[There's the dragon's corpse. If she takes just a few of those scales, she'll be able to make a fortune. If she somehow gets out, she'll be able to live without ever worrying about money ever again.]

Or on the contrary, she may be met with disaster because of those scales.

Well, whatever.

Whether that kid leads a wealthy life from now on.

Or dies without being able to escape the dungeon.

Or is killed by other people outside.

Regardless of what this kid's story is henceforth.

It didn't matter.

I reaffirmed my indifference towards that kid once more, and teleported through the portal.

* * *

“Blech. The smell.”

I was transported to the field, and Kiri Kiri covered her nose as soon as I encountered her.

Kiri Kiri had been scribbling something on the floor, and stretched her hand in front of me.

A cozy warm wind blew from her palm.

I felt the lingering foul stench and the ominous energy vanish.

“Thanks. If it had remained any longer, I was going to vomit again.”

“Heng. I hate this stage. It's always like this,” Kiri Kiri said, pouting.

It seems like I had cleared the stage through a tried and true method.

The words “it's always like this” meant that the other challengers had also extracted the dead dragon's heart.

“But it's actually not like that.”

“Could you explain it to me in more detail?”

“In how much detail?” Kiri Kiri said, sitting down in her spot.

I followed suit and sat down as well.

As I sat down, I felt a certain emptiness at my waist; the holy sword and the soul sword which were strapped to my belt had disappeared.

They should be inside my inventory.

The holy sword is probably going to complain about something again.

I responded to Kiri Kiri's question.

“Just what's necessary for the person behind me to tackle the stage.”

“Honestly, you can just leave that kind of thing to me. Because that's my role. Hoooooujae, you don't really need the advice. I'm not giving you much information, but I'll give the person after you, Hoooooujae, as much advice as I can.”

That's true. Giving people advice about the stages is Kiri Kiri's role.

She was also happy to do her job.

But she may have thought of it as me overstepping my authority here.

“Nope. It's nothing like that.”

“It's because I want to prepare for my growth in the stages ahead. Also, the more advice, the better.”

After Kiri Kiri listened to me, she placed her finger at her cheek with a thoughtful look...

“First, you have to pick the right guide. There are several guides in the town. In order to request a guide, you have to improve your reputation within the town by doing this and that in order to gain the guide's trust.”

“But there wasn't anything like that for me?”

“That's because you frightened the first guide, Hoooooujae.”

I think I understand what she's talking about.

The old lady that I met in the town said that I was a monster and she had no interest in taking a stroll with me before running away.

“The guide that accompanied you was honestly the worst, Hoooooujae.”

She was the worst?

I had thought that she was lacking in various ways.

“Then... The other guides won't threaten you in the dungeon or be covetous of the challenger's possessions?”

“They will.”

Then they're no different from the worst.

“The degree at which they do is different though. They're a bit smarter and you can talk to them. When you've passed the upper floor and upper-middle floor, they're also more useful. You have to win over the guide in the town that way. In the middle floor, you have to convince the guide once more. The guide is quite finicky so they won't go down to the lowest floor. You have to offer them the right price, or threaten them with force.”

So it wasn't easy after all.

If the challenger doesn't figure out how to find the right path in the dungeon, then the guide obtains the position of power.

It shouldn't be easy to convince them.

As the kid guide was fine with us both dying together if she were in a pinch.

“Then what about when you're in the lowest floor?”

“If you go all the way there with your guide, everything's pretty much been taken care of, so I don't think I really need to explain that.”

I see.

That's because you can just progress the same way I did if you reached the lowest floor on your own without a guide.

“In return, if you progress without a guide like you did, Hoooooujae, you'd have to find the right path yourself, defeat the dragon, have a high poison resistance and paralysis resistance, as well as a fear resistance skill.”

If it's possible, you should go together with a guide.

I could advise the next challenger, Lee Hyung Jin to raise his resistance skills, but I don't think he'd actually be able to raise his resistances.

It's hard for people to raise their resistance skills.

Even more than I had thought.

I had roughly sated my curiosity for the 27th floor.

Now it was time to ask about other things.

“Heng. You can't, though.”

I ignored Kiri Kiri and asked my question.

“Tell me a method of increasing the difficulty of progression in the next floor stage.”

I want an even higher difficulty.

I want an even more dangerous and more difficult trial.

I want more death and more danger.

I had felt that danger from encountering the dragon and it may have been because the fight had ended so hollowly, but I felt a greater sense of yearning than before.

In order to run up against difficulty like that, I needed specific conditions.

For example, like how I had provoked the summoned Demon King on the 26th floor, inducing him into using his full strength.

Kiri Kiri sighed rather than reply.

“You can't. There'll be an accident that way. You're not supposed to recklessly use those methods. For example, if you made a mistake on the 27th floor, the dungeon could end up collapsing on top of you. If that happens, even you would be helplessly crushed to death, Hooooujae.”

“The stage's setting, the dungeon, can also collapse?”

“It can. Don't think about randomly raising the difficulty level. If you go up the floors, clearing will naturally become tougher. Be patient.”

It was disappointing, but I decided to accept it.

Aside from the difficulty, there could actually be an accident that I can't avoid.

More importantly, this was the first time that Kiri Kiri refused to give me any information.

I didn't have to endure danger to the point that I ignored her advice.

“Don't worry. The next stage will be difficult even for you, Hoooooujae.”

I wonder.

That's because I've heard that more than once or twice and I've been disappointed with the stage's difficulty.

* * *

After I had listened to all her advice regarding the stage, I decided to take a nap in the field; it was something I hadn't done in a long time.

Kiri Kiri had continuously advised me to rest and it had been a really long time since I'd had proper sleep.

I laid a mat onto the floor and laid down.

The instant I was about to close my eyes, messages appeared.

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: What are up to? Are you busy?]

I was about to sleep.

Though I wasn't busy.

[Lee Ho Jae, 28th floor: I'm not busy.]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: So you've already gotten to the 28th floor. I remember a few days ago that you were on the 25th floor, though.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 28th floor: Yeah. What? Is something wrong?]

I responded curtly.

In response, Kim Min Hyuk said that there were no problems, but there were things he wanted to talk to me about.

Honestly, what would Kim Min Hyuk have to talk to me about?

He would just tell me about this and that and how they're progressing.

In any case, it's because I also hold a key position in the Order of Vigilance.

Kim Min Hyuk told me about how they were communicating with the Korean government.

Whatever the Order of Vigilance or challengers wanted to say could be communicated through the challengers that had cleared the tutorial and gotten outside.

However, relaying what the outside wanted to say to the inside was extremely difficult.

The sole method was relaying messages to the newly entering challengers, but these new challengers would be selected randomly.

Ultimately, they would have to broadcast those messages nationwide.

In order for all the people in Korea to know.

However, in this scenario, there's no way to relay the type of information that the public cannot know.

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Therefore, we're making secret codes. But we also can't have someone who doesn't know the secret codes figuring them out. It's quite tricky.]

Even so, it wasn't an area I could help them with.

I just continued to listen to Kim Min Hyuk's complaints.

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: We also thought of a way to send messages to a small amount of people.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 28th floor: How? You never know who or when they'll be summoned.]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: We'll send the message to a few people, and pray that they'll be summoned.]

You should really pray diligently then.

Amongst the population of 50 million Koreans, only 100 people are summoned per round.

Even if you roughly think about it, the chances of the designated individual being summoned are 500,000:1.

Adding a few more people won't change the odds much.

I yawned while thinking that.

Since I had suffered insomnia on the stage, I hadn't been able to sleep properly, but I could get a good night's sleep for at least a few hours on this field.

Right when I closed my eyes, I felt tired.

As soon as I felt drowsy, I couldn't see the messages properly.

No, even though I saw them with my eyes, I couldn't comprehend the contents of the messages.

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor:... This round is almost over too. First, if we gather more information from the next round newbies, we should be able to hear about the supermen that appeared in China...]

I suppressed my sleepiness, and saw the messages, but then I had a thought.

That this had become a conversation that didn't really concern me.

The latest in the community were noisy regarding this subject.

They wanted to know about their lives following their clear and going outside.

They predicted that they'd be used as test subjects in labs, or be used as human weapons in the army, or that they'd become heroes in a world where monsters were causing chaos, or that they'd become the hope of humanity, or they even thought that they'd become a new race of mankind.

There were truly countless stories.

That's because whenever the challengers had time to spare, they would talk about that subject.

However, I had felt like it had nothing to do with me.

I had secretly wanted the Tutorial to go on forever.

Even if I did go outside, I didn't want to be labeled a monster and live in solitude.

I wouldn't have any goals or any stimulation, and I didn't want to live a dry life until the day I died of old age.

Of course, my thoughts had changed now and I had a goal I wanted to achieve once I got out of the Tutorial.

However, that goal wasn't limited to just outside the Tutorial, Korea, or even the Earth.

I thought I was a little strange when I thought that.

“Kiri Kiri.”

“...Uh, yeah?”

I called Kiri Kiri, who was sitting atop the mat.

It seemed as though Kiri Kiri was thinking of something else, as she responded a bit late to my voice.

“Kiri Kiri, you can press the message window, right?”

“Yeah. I can, why?”

“Then could you talk to him a little bit for me?”

“How?”

“Just say 'I see'. Yeah. Oh. Right. I understand. Do as you please. It's fine if you just respond like that.”

“...Is that ok?”

Kiri Kiri's round eyes rolled around here and there, speaking with a anxious expression.

“It's fine. I usually respond like that anyway. Then, I'm counting on you.”

Towards the end, I closed my eyes.

As soon as I closed my eyes, I quickly fell asleep from the surging deluge of exhaustion.

* * *

Whenever I woke up from a nap in Kiri Kiri's field, I would usually awaken due to her head; she would be sleeping with her head on my stomach, using it as a pillow.

However, it was a little different today.

I heard a strange laughter and woke up.

“Hehehe.”

Hehehe?

It felt strange and as soon as I opened my eyes, I saw Kiri Kiri.

My hand had been raised in the air, and Kiri Kiri was about to press the “confirm” button on the message in the air.

And the message window, no. I also saw the reason for the cake set floating in the auction window.

“Kiri Kiri.”

The beaming Kiri Kiri stopped immediately.

Kiri Kiri briefly stiffened like a stone statue, quietly closed the auction window, and put my hand down to the floor.

And she sat down like nothing had happened.

She briefly stayed still like that.

Then she scampered away and started to run away somewhere.

I sighed as I saw Kiri Kiri quickly get far away and stood up.

I had at least rested for a bit, so it was now time for me to get a move on.

[22nd round, 26th day. 2:20]

Chapter 170

Tutorial 60th Floor (13)

“Is the work going well?”

I opened the laboratory door and said.

“No. I feel like I'm dying. Save me.”

My clone bastard was making a fuss over nothing.

“It's not nothing, you know. You damn main body bastard.”

While watching the grumbling clone bastard, I clicked my tongue and sat down.

The analysis of the authorities that the clone bastard gained on the 61st floor was at its peak.

Though it was something I'd done several times before, analyzing authorities always brought new challenges.

An authority is the implementation of one's will through divinity, which is the essence of one's identity, by a being who acquired godhood with their own power.

It honestly wasn't much different from magic.

Perhaps the gods don't think that there's a difference between magic and authorities.

They would use the ‘power of miracles’ known as mana, and unleash their will onto the world.

Their divine power is used as a medium to invoke their authorities, which produces miracles; said authorities are determined by their divinity.

While magic is limited by its power, scale, perception, and range, gods' power is limited by their identity.

There are gods that probably use their power without even thinking about it very much, but I couldn't use it as comfortably as them.

I had to thoroughly analyze it, study it, and pass through countless trials and errors before I could barely imitate it.

That's why all the authorities that I use, that were gifted to me by the gods, are all imitations.

Though I could say that they're improved products.

As I continuously used their authorities, I realized the principles behind them.

I realized how my suspicions, the god's divine power, as well as their personal identities were connected.

In this artificially restricted space where time would be repeated and stopped, I watched as the authorities were 'cast' instantaneously and analyzed what kind of process they go through as they're cast.

And I would use that data as a basis to fabricate those authorities.

Through magic.

I was the disciple of several gods, used those authority skills so much that I got sick of them, become sensitive to divine power, had a great understanding of the divine, realized the height of magic, and lastly, had the seed of the divine within me.

If not for those, I wouldn't have been able to attempt it.

But in any case, I'm doing it now.

I had enhanced Blink Orb* on a previous evening, as well as familiar authorities like Soul Siphon. Now, I was succeeding in improving the authorities that my clone bastard had brought this time, one by one.

[TL Note: Previously translated as Blink Emblem by other translators but should have been translated as Blink Orb.]

But because there were so many authorities that the clone bastard stole, it would take a long time before I could make all of them mine.

But ultimately, it was just a matter of time.

No matter how obscure or complicated the principle was, there weren't any authorities that seemed impossible to analyze and remodel.

“No. About half of them are impossible. I said that it's impossible. You crazy main body bastard.”

“Why are you saying it's impossible without even trying? It seems like it'll work.”

“If something goes wrong, there are dozens of things that could cause my head to blow up. You call something like that impossible.”

“But we can succeed if you overcome the risk of your head blowing up. That's what you call possible.”

“You crazy bastard.”

While my clone bastard muttered some curses, I halted the activation of the magic circle.

The giant magic circle that had been spread all across the laboratory disappeared.

Considering the scale of the laboratory, how it took a quarter of a day just to walk from one end to the other, the magic circle that my clone bastard had been maintaining was truly huge.

Of course, it wasn't to cast something, but for analysis.

Still, my clone bastard should be feeling extremely exhausted.

“Know-it-all...”

“Then let's rest a bit.”

“Oh, really? What's the matter?”

“Since you need sufficient rest to be more efficient.”

“So you're saying you'll give me a task that requires high efficiency again, aren't you. You damn main body bastard.”

Even while my clone bastard was complaining, he sprawled out onto the floor and prepared to rest.

I saw him take a novel out of the subspace and I too reclined on my chair.

And I opened my message window.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Contact me when you have the time.]

It was such a dry and brief message that I felt as if the existing moisture evaporated.

It seems like she sent me a message like that in order to minimize the interference in my authority analysis.

It's not much of a disturbance, so you can send me a long message if you want.

Is it because of what happened before?

Since I've made some mistakes, I nagged at myself as well.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: I'm resting a bit right now. What's the matter?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: There's new information from the outside. How's your work going?]

That's what I had asked my clone bastard before.

My work is going well.

“No, it's not. It's not going well.”

I ignored my clone bastard's voice and continued to send messages.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Of course it's going well. And send longer messages. What do you mean by 'contact me when you have the time'. That's too dry.]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: I did it that way because I thought I might get in the way of your work.]

It was the reason that I had anticipated.

I felt bitter for no special reason.

And I felt apologetic.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: You're not getting in the way at all. In fact, I'd appreciate if it you sent me messages more often.]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Are you sure? You said you were busy doing something lately.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: It's ok. And am I busy? You're the one who's busy. Is your work going alright? You're not pushing yourself too hard?]

While I could analyze as much as I want, when I want to, as well as rest and play whenever I wanted to, Park Jung Ah was finishing her work on schedule.

Aside from that, she was focused on counseling, coordinating opinions, and even trivial matters, so she was really busy.

Rather, it's to the point where I'm the one who's waiting for her messages more.

After Kim Min Hyuk went outside, it looked like she didn't even have a few hours of spare time a week.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: What's this? Why are you so nice all of a sudden? It's not like you.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: You don't like it?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: No, I like it.]

“You crazy...”

My clone bastard cursed at me.

I ignored him.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: I wonder why you're doing this all of a sudden. You wouldn't have contracted a terminal illness; are you having an affair?]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: What do you mean by an affair; there are only the three of us here: Yong Yong, my clone bastard, and me.]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: If a man becomes kind all of a sudden, they say that it's evidence of cheating.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Says who?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: The community.]

She's like that because she learned about dating from books too.

Though I'm no different.

For a short while, I talked to Park Jung Ah about trivial matters.

The conversation had no value to it, but it was a joyous talk nonetheless.

My clone bastard, who was listening beside me, twisted his body around, and when he started to look tormented, Park Jung Ah brought up the main point.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Lee Joon Seok failed to defeat a G-rank monster. To be exact, the information states that before he attacked, Lee Joon Seok declared that the attack was inadvisable and ran away.]

That was unexpected.

“That's a surprise.”

My clone bastard thought the same as me.

Right before Lee Joon Seok cleared the Tutorial, he had told me that he was level 201.

Level 100 had been the maximum value in the early phases, and if you compare him to the other Awakened on Earth, there really was a overwhelming gap that existed.

That's why I had been optimistic.

That Lee Joon Seok would be able to defeat it, since Earth's Awakened had already successfully hunted a G-rank monster before.

So he should've prepared for the attack.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Was it by chance an attack initiated by Lee Joon Seok alone?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: No. Korea, China, and Japan temporarily transferred a considerable amount of Awakened, and the ASEAN and the U.S. became the key members; it was an attack they had prepared for.]

It doesn't seem as though they lacked anything for the attack.

Then what could've been the problem?

They had succeeded in safely subjugating the G-rank monster on the U.S.'s eastern shore.

Back then, the force of rallied Awakened, and the American Navy had taken considerable damage, but had, in any case, successfully taken care of the monster.

Under the assumption that they prepared a similar force, Lee Joon Seok joining them should've raised their chances of success by more than 50%.

And I relayed my thoughts to Park Jung Ah.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Then it makes sense that he cancelled it. A 50% chance of victory isn't very high. And the casualty count wouldn't be low. Wouldn't they consider cancelling the attack and look for the next opportunity with a success rate like that?]

Is that so?

Is it because I think too lightly of danger and sacrifice?

“Obviously, you crazy main body bastard. In that sense, isn't continuously pressuring me into doing a job that doesn't even have a 10% chance of success too much?”

“You wouldn't die from it anyway.”

After I had ignored my clone bastard's complaint, I sent a message.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Do you by any chance have any detailed information regarding the attack on the monster at the eastern part of the U.S.?)

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Nope. The only things we know are in the data that was officially published by the press. It didn't convey any detailed information regarding the G-rank monster.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: What about the Academy Line?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: They had the same information that the press had revealed.]

Academy Line.

The Korean government, after the Tutorial had been disclosed, required the entire nation's citizens to train their physical fitness, as well as undergo battle training; at the same time, they had established facilities to train special elites.

The government would sort out the individuals with extraordinary physical abilities and decision-making abilities, and started to train them in preparation for the Tutorial.

Of course, there was no guarantee that the Academy trainees would enter the Tutorial at the right time.

It was much better than standing still and gawking.

Honestly, there are occasionally a few trainees that enter the Tutorial.

These trainees had more information than what was revealed by the press, and they remembered messages that they had to transmit to the challengers within the Tutorial.

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Firstly, we'll use the people who have cleared in this round to relay a message to the outside that we want information regarding the G-rank monster.]

Lee Joon Seok's failure was a really serious issue.

The other people probably thought 'a G-rank Awakened has appeared, so let's try it out once. If not, we can just cancel it.' and had prepared accordingly, but Lee Joon Seok should've been different.

Through the conversations we had before he went outside, Lee Joon Seok had assured me that he'd be able to take on a G-rank monster on his own.

I thought the same.

If we go by the data we've been given regarding the G-rank monster, it was certainly possible.

That Lee Joon Seok had given up on the attack.

I wonder why?

If the data we have isn't true.

If there are far more casualties than we're aware of.

Or perhaps the success of the attack in its entirety is a lie.

How should I determine the danger of the G-rank monster?

There's no standard.

So long as we can't trust our reference point, the last attack, we can't blindly assume the G-rank monster's strength.

I sorted out all my thoughts.

In conclusion, I could only wait until new information came in.

The evidence that Lee Joon Seok had given up on the attack.

Precise data on the G-rank monster.

The information was lacking.

Like always.

After I had finished thinking, I suddenly had a weird feeling.

That Lee Joon Seok, after clearing the Tutorial, had went outside.

And for the news of Lee Joon Seok on the outside to be relayed.

It was truly a strange feeling.

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Jung Ah, how old are we again?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: 29.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: What? Haven't you also passed thirty now?]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Since I haven't counted my age after 29, I'm 29.]

What's with that unbelievable stubbornness?

* * *

For a while, I chattered with Park Jung Ah through my messages, and eventually closed my message window.

I had finished resting, and looked at my clone bastard.

He was still lying prone on the floor, reading a novel.

“Aren't you going to work?”

“Let's just rest a little more. No, can't we just rest for the entire day?”

So you really don't want to work.

“It's not that I don't want to work, I really feel like I'm going to die.”

He was laying on the floor, and spoke while swinging his legs around.

I clicked my tongue, seeing him lie on the floor and speak while swinging his legs around.

“I told you to do some magic training. At this rate, Yong Yong will catch up to you.”

“I don't really care if he catches up to me, you know. Yong Yong isn't as cold-hearted as you, so even if he becomes stronger than me, he'll take care of me well.”

I didn't believe a single word of what my clone just said.

Really.

The phrase, 'desire to improve myself' was always extremely important to me.

I fundamentally liked to improve myself through my own efforts.

And I can't stand falling behind others.

Along with that, I really, really hated passing the boring and tedious time without doing any work.

I always had to be doing something or I wouldn't feel satisfied.

My clone bastard's personality was created using mine as the base.

To be exact, it was a personality formed by using my memories inside of the Tutorial.

He should obviously be doing his utmost to train, as he doesn't know much about the world outside the Tutorial, and only holds intense memories from within the Tutorial.

Despite that, the reason he doesn't want to improve is clear.

He must think it'll have an adverse reaction to his development.

Regardless of how important you regard the desire to improve, or how your personality develops, if someone else coerces you and pressures you to do so...

As soon as you're born at that.

You'd have no choice but to have an adverse reaction to it.

"I'll go call Yong Yong. Since it's already dinnertime. Let's eat together."

My clone bastard said, and as I watched his back, I once again had mixed feelings.

With an apology.

I don't know why I'm remembering so many memories that I feel sorry about today.

My clone bastard who had been walking along paused, and turned his head towards me.

"Why. What. You got something to say?"

I'd thought after closing the link, but it seems like my emotions had leaked out.

"If not, then whatever."

He once again turned his back on me and started walking; I spoke to his back.

If I don't say it now, I felt like I wouldn't be able to say it in the future.

"I was sorry about what happened before."

He had been walking, yet stopped.

His back was still, yet he couldn't help but turn his attention towards me.

I felt embarrassed so I touched my chin or my nose for no special reason.

The brief silence continued on, and soon I heard his responding voice.

“As long as you know, it's fine.”

As he opened the lab door and walked out, he added one more thing.

“Your apology's way too late. You damn bastard, Ho Jae.”

And he left, closing the door with a thud.

My embarrassment wouldn't end.

I hadn't felt anything like displeasure or fury from him before he'd closed the door and left.

Rather, his feelings were warmer and brighter.

My embarrassment really wouldn't fade.

I pondered briefly and I sent this through telepathy.

[Thanks.]

He was my younger sibling, something that the protagonist of a fantasy novel yearned for.

Lee Ho Chi quickly sent a message back.

[I'm really feeling goosebumps here, so stop it.]

Chapter 171

Tutorial 30th Floor (1)

[Round 24, Day 29. 3:30]

“Heng. It was tough this time, wasn't it?” Kiri Kiri asked, as she smiled beamingly, and I couldn't help but nod.

It certainly was difficult.

Though they weren't at my desired level of difficulty, the 28th and 29th floors had certainly been difficult.

Especially the 29th floor.

My reputation had risen abruptly.

If I hadn't earned the people's trust enough to hear the information that the underground force was going to perform an act of terror on the city's marketplace, I may have had to challenge the stage more than once, taking several rounds.

I had been tied down in the 29th floor for a whole round, but on the contrary, it was fortunate that I had been able to clear it within only one round.

“So about what I was talking about before, the combat difficulty.”

“No, that's...”

Kiri Kiri had been talking ecstatically, but she suddenly paused.

I wondered why, and I waited briefly.

Kiri Kiri looked at me seriously and said, “Hoooooujae, you already know what kind of floor the next one is, right?”

Of course I do.

The 30th floor.

It was the first residential district that existed within the Tutorial.

It was different from the stages that repeated every round, or even the waiting rooms, that were maintained by a powerful preservation magic.

They weren't connected to time; regardless of the number of people, or the organization of said people in the waiting room, it was a space where you could rest when you wanted, play when you wanted, and meet people when you wanted.

Of course, it had a different meaning for me.

I'm alone anyway.

The residential district wasn't much different from a large waiting room to me.

“That's not it.”

“What do you mean?”

“It doesn't have a healing function, restoration also doesn't work, and there's also no protective wall.”

“Is that a huge difference?”

“It's a big difference.”

I thought she would say some pointless wordplay, but Kiri Kiri looked quite serious.

“Hoooooujae, you've mostly done your training in the waiting room. Of course, you also grew a lot during combat, but that foundation came from your training in the waiting room.”

“That's true.”

If it weren't for my training, my concentration, and my preparation in the waiting room before entering a stage, it would've been difficult to exhibit a sufficient performance or growth.

“Also, the waiting room is an innocuous space. Since no matter what you do, you won't get hurt, and nothing will be broken. If you're hurt by an excessive impact, or the walls collapse, they'll also be restored.”

I nodded my head once again.

“It's such a different environment. It differs based on the individual to what extent your body feels that, but your mind is different. Most people definitely recognize the difference in their mind, and through that, they're able to influence their subconscious mind.”

“For example, by you using your body more excessively than usual.”

“So that's how it is.”

It was just as Kiri Kiri said.

You could see it if you took a look at my training that I had invested the most time into, or even my self-injury.

Of course, even if you consider my self-injury as a part of my training, there would be a question remaining of 'are you ok', but... let's say that it's training.

If it weren't the waiting room, would I have been able to self-injure myself every day like that?

Regardless of how much I needed it, or how much I preferred that method, I wouldn't have been able to self-harm myself so frequently.

Because my body would sustain damage.

“In conclusion, I'm saying that you shouldn't just rest for a few days and immediately rush to the 31st floor.”

Yeah...

Honestly, after this round ended, and the next round started, I had decided to immediately enter the 31st floor.

I couldn't anticipate any improvements on my specs through level ups anymore, and as the combat difficulty of the stages went down, I wouldn't be able to anticipate my growth in battle either.

The only thing remaining was for me to go up the stages as quickly as possible, and encounter greater difficulties.

That's also how Kiri Kiri had advised me.

“However, it's not often for you to get an opportunity to take a major step forward through just training.”

A major step forward, huh.

It'll be that effective just training on the 30th floor?

Why would training have such an effect in a space that isn't even the waiting room?

I had sometimes trained in stages where I had already acquired safety and I needed to kill time.

“Stages are also different. Especially you, Hoooooujae, since your body changes whenever you leave the stage.”

“Are you talking about my insomnia?”

“A little of this and that, including that too.”

I briefly pondered, and ultimately decided to follow Kiri Kiri's advice.

I usually didn't lose out by listening to Kiri Kiri.

Though it did happen occasionally.

“It doesn't!”

“What do you mean 'it doesn't'.”

Kiri Kiri may have saddened from my statement as she went 'hmpf' and turned her head.

For some reason, I started laughing at the sight.

I laughed, stood up, and approached the portal.

“Finally, if I were to tell you one last thing, you have to rest a bit.”

“I got it. I'll make sure to rest properly.”

“And don't do it half-heartedly. Think about it as training too, and force yourself to rest.”

“I got it. I got it.”

After I finished responding, I stood atop the portal.

As soon as I waved my hand, Kiri Kiri scampered around and said her goodbyes, telling me to take care.

Soon, I was transported to the 30th floor from Kiri Kiri's field.

[Welcome to the 30th floor residential district.]

The message was accompanied with a full view of the 30th floor.

The 30th floor residential district had also been the setting for the first competition.

It definitely looked identical to what I'd seen before.

There was a square in the middle, surrounded by a line of wooden buildings.

I wonder how many buildings there are?

Even if I were to make a low estimate, there should be more than hundreds of them.

I was certainly well-aware of how the residential district was structured.

At the time of the competition, I had experienced it firsthand, and I also read the community's explanatory articles.

Certain buildings should be lodgings, while others should be restaurants.

Even amongst these buildings, they had separate uses.

They even had a cafe, a pub, a playground, and even a casino.

It was truly a town.

However, to me, it was no different from the waiting room.

On the contrary, it was worse.

There wasn't anyone here besides me anyway.

I sighed, and started walking to decide my lodging.

I felt hungry.

In general, whenever a stage ended, my hunger would automatically settle when I entered a waiting room, so I wasn't often pestered by hunger.

However, I had spent an entire round within the previous floor, and had been transported to the residential district, not the waiting room; thus, my hunger hadn't settled.

As soon as I find my accommodations, I should eat something.

Is there any beef jerky left?

* * *

[Oh... I was really scared, Warrior.]

“If you pout one more time, I'm going to shove you into my inventory.”

I stopped the holy sword from making his frightened appeal in his cutest way.

The holy sword felt that it was unfair, but who cares.

[You know how scary going into the inventory can be.]

What do you want me to do about it?

Whenever I go to Kiri Kiri's field, you're automatically stored into my inventory.

“What about Seregia? Were you also scared by any chance, Seregia?”

[No.]

She answered promptly.

It also sounded like she snorted at the end there.

It was definitely a ridicule-filled snort towards someone.

“Seregia, are you feeling better now? You seemed really unwell back there.”

[Yes. I'm alright. And I was alright back there as well.]

Whenever there was a battle recently, Seregia became a bit weird.

Though she was usually curt and didn't speak much, she became really quiet after a battle.

She becomes firmer and sharper.

I'm not talking about the tone of her voice, but her will.

It was to the point that I, the wielder, could feel it; the sharp will within her.

And considering those times, it seems like she's losing her humanity.

Well, she seems to like her current condition, so I'm not sure if I should be worried about her.

I didn't have to walk for very long and went inside the closest building.

There was a table with chairs spread around it on the 1st floor.

It was a space where you could sit and rest.

I went up to the 2nd floor.

I opened the closest door and went inside.

There was a small desk to the side and a bed right next to the window.

It was a small room.

It was the same as the room I had stayed in during the competition.

“What should I do now?”

[I agree with the advice that you heard, Warrior. First, please rest.]

“Do you really think I need the rest?”

[Yes. You really do need it.]

After the holy sword spoke, I asked for an explanation.

[First off, it's your bodily condition, Warrior.]

“My body's fine. My fatigue has also gone away for the most part.”

[No. I'm talking about your continuously maintained tense state. I have no idea what will happen if you completely release all your tension. Truthfully, the amount of time a person can maintain a tense state is at most a few days. However, you haven't released that tension even once, Warrior. At least, after you acquired me.]

He had a point.

It was unlike him.

Even in the completely safe waiting room, as well as Kiri Kiri's field, I hadn't ever completely released my tension.

That's because I need to concentrate in order to clear the next stage.

However, if I were to completely release my tension while I have this chance to rest...

[Next, it's regarding your 'level'*, Warrior.]

[T/N: His level of strength. Not his Tutorial level or stage.]

“Level?”

That was unexpected.

What does rest have to with my level?

[If I'm completely honest, your level changes case-by-case. It's not to the point where I can see it going up and down, but I see it abruptly go up to the next level.]

“I'm hearing that as you saying that I'm a half-wit who can't even manage his own power.”

[Yes. That's exactly what I'm... not saying, but I'm saying that that's how amazing you are, Warrior! Ha. Ha. Haha. I love you, Warrior.]

I wish he would stop saying that he loves me over and over again.

[From my point of view, it seems to me that your problem is that your body cannot keep up with your own skill, Warrior. Since you haven't given your body the time to adapt to your skill and you've been continuously growing until now. Of course, during that time, your body should have also felt that process of growth, and had grown accordingly, but that's only when talking about normal people. When you get to this strength, it is important for your body to become accustomed to even a single leap of growth.]

He had a point this time too.

If we just exclude that it came out of the holy sword's mouth, it was extremely useful advice.

Kiri Kiri and the holy sword.

Both of my trusted advisers had recommended that I rest.

Unreasonably going to the 31st floor from here would probably be overdoing it.

I want to immediately leave here, but I restrained myself by thinking of it as another sort of training.

I chattered with Park Jung Ah and Kim Min Hyuk a bit, and read the surplus community articles.

I guess I'll meditate if I get bored.

With that in mind, I decided to rest for a few days.

“Also, teach me some magic.”

[I don't want to.]

“...Why?”

He spoke so firmly that for an instant I thought the holy sword was Seregia.

[My position becomes uncertain.]

“If you don't teach me magic, your position will become really solid. You'll definitely be able to reflect on your solid position from within my inventory.”

[I'll teach you.]

After my consultation with the holy sword, I decided to rest for three days accompanied by study in magic theory.

So after I feel as though I've rested aplenty, my schedule would be one day of rest, one day of magic study, and one day of swordsmanship training in that order; and I decided to stay here for around one round, maybe even two.

I drew up a chart of my daily schedule as if I were a elementary school student.

My schedule was mostly filled with rest, taking walks, meditating, or chatting (messages) and I tried my very best to follow it to the letter.

Even on the days I had to train in magic, my training didn't surpass three hours.

It was a boring everyday life to the point that I felt impatient, but it was effective.

It had been one week since I'd entered the residential district.

And then there was an unexpected change.

[Your level has been adjusted.]

[Lee Ho Jae (Human)]

Lv. 101

I had been at level 56 and had suddenly shot up to level 101.

Chapter 172

Tutorial 30th Floor (2)

[Lee Ho Jae (Human)]

Lv. 101

What is this?

Is it like when you level up after spending a night at an inn in an RPG?

No. That's not possible.

It wasn't as if I hadn't rested at all this entire time.

Like Kiri Kiri and the holy sword had said, my body hadn't been able to keep up with my achievements; by resting, my body had become able to get used to them.

I heard I needed rest, but I didn't know that it'd have this kind of effect.

I expected my focus to improve with enough sleep, but I hadn't expected my level to shoot up by about 50 levels.

On that note.

“I’m completely abandoning my schedule.”

[I'm sorry? Shouldn't you rest a bit more? You only rested for about a week.]

“I'm going to rest more.”

[Yes?]

“I'm just going to rest for the entire week. No more magic or swordsmanship training in the middle. I'm just going to eat, sleep, and play for the entire day.”

[Isn't... that too excessive?]

The holy sword tried to dissuade me, but my mind was made up.

Since I had figured out that rest was this effective, I decided that I'd rest for the entire week without doing anything.

If I drastically increase my level this way, maybe I'll be able to receive level up rewards again.

I may not level up from resting anymore, but there's also a possibility that it could increase further.

I'll rest lazily for one or two days, and then I'll be able to confirm whether it's true or not. I wanted to see if my level would increase more if I rested properly for a week.

If it didn't, I can just start training again after a week passes.

[I'm concerned that you'll become dull if all you do is rest for a week, Warrior.]

“Not a chance.”

Seregia said something about me becoming useless or whatever. I quickly denied it and dove into my bed.

Starting now, I'm not going to move a step from my bed!

Until I really need to use the restroom.

[Pain Resistance Lv. 6 has been acquired.]

[Mental Pollution Immunity Lv. 5 has been acquired.]

* * *

In terms of results, resting for a week was a complete failure.

My level didn't change a bit.

Instead, my Pain Resistance and Mental Pollution Immunity skills leveled up.

I hadn't self-injured myself while resting either.

I had only rested all day. The boredom and the restlessness really took a toll on my willpower; the psychological agony was practically torture as my body writhed atop the bed, so my skills leveled up.

I knew myself well; even as I rested for a week, I felt like I was being lazy, or that there was nothing to do. That's just how sincere I was about resting.

After resting for a week, I felt as though I had been buried by that tranquility.

It sounded like the second hand of a nonexistent clock rang out, and it felt like the ceiling would collapse on top of me at any moment; I felt an uneasiness that had no basis.

The entire time I spent on top of my bed felt like torture.

It seemed as though Seregia and the holy sword realized that both my body and mind were exhausted, so they tried to convince me to start training again; but I thought of this as training too, and endured.

And today, the week-long rest ended.

As soon as morning came, I happily got down from my bed and went straight to making a new schedule.

[Mind power* is ultimately no different from magic. Don't they say that extremes meet? Normally, when a young superman reaches a certain level, he'll be able to easily master both magic and swordsmanship. It was the same for me as well.]

[TL Note: I had absolutely no idea what the author had written in Korean, but I looked it up. I believe it's a word used in Tai Chi and means "yinian". It's likely a word often used in wuxia novels rather than Korean novels. It can roughly be translated as intent/will and mind power as well. It's what lets you use your chi/inner energy. The author mentioned that Ho Jae felt like his "life force" (chi) may have been drained from using the Light Sword before, so...]

"Then, you're saying that I should focus on swordsmanship first?"

[Yes. You don't really need to learn magic right now. Swordsmanship is the best. More importantly, isn't it cool? Why do you want to learn something that those tottering magicians mutter in their small rooms?]

[You can say that again. Swordsmanship really is the best. Please hone your swordsmanship first, Warrior.]

Seregia ended up being persuaded by the holy sword.

"It's not like I'm going to neglect my swordsmanship. But I'm finally able to study magic. I was barely able to find a magic book that specifies runes."

As soon as I had cleared the 29th floor, I got Kiri Kiri's help and bought magic books.

In large quantities.

[That's not it. I'm not saying you shouldn't learn magic. But you should focus on your swordsmanship right now.]

"I should focus on my swordsmanship? Why?"

The holy sword wasn't saying that I should prioritize my swordsmanship; he was saying that I had to train my swordsmanship at this time.

I asked for a detailed reason.

[You are still unskilled in using your mind power, Warrior. It also hasn't been very long since you've genuinely used it. In order to become skilled at using it, you need more practice and effort. Plus, you've recently shown an extraordinary growth rate, Warrior. This kind of opportunity is hard to come by even once in your life. Whether you were blessed by the God of War, or the energy of the universe is focused on you, this unusual acceleration is uncommon. Just as there's a period of growth with your body, there's also a time where you'll experience explosive growth in your swordsmanship. And this period of growth differs between individuals. I'm saying that you never know when it'll end. You don't know when this condition will end, so don't waste time on magic. Please focus on swordsmanship.]

What are you talking about?

I've just been growing normally.

Whether it's the God of War's blessing, or the will of the universe fulfilling my desires, it's not like I've ever heard or seen them before.

[He's correct, Warrior. This is the first time he's said something right, so please listen to what Sir Ahbooboo has to say.]

Seregia assented from my side.

Was she enthusiastically chiming in after understanding what the holy sword had said?

I asked out of curiosity.

[I wasn't paying close attention, so I'm not sure. More importantly, I'll be bored if you decide to train in magic, so please practice swordsmanship.]

It turned out that she was just being faithful to her desires.

Due to the two ego swords' passionate complaints, I decided to change my schedule.

First, I'll polish my swordsmanship a bit, and study magic later.

After I've made some visible progress in the two fields, I'll enter the 31st floor.

That's how my training in the 30th floor residential district began.

* * *

“I thought that it was a technique that added magic, though.”

I was talking about the technique that the holy sword used on the 26th floor.

I had just slashed downwards, but the cut had gone beyond the field and through the rampart.

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. That was a technique that I frequently used when I was still human. At the time, I wasn't familiar with magic. That was when I was at my peak. Ha!]

It seemed like he was going to start boasting again.

“At any rate, explain the basics of it for me. If you don't want to go into the inventory.”

[Yes. I'll explain it to you. First, I have to talk about your skills, Warrior. That's because this kind of thing is understood differently based on the individual. When you used your mind power Warrior, how did you do it?]

As the holy sword requested, I drew the soul sword and took a stance.

“Honestly, I never learned this technique in detail. I just imitated it based on the stories that I had been told. I recalled something in my head when I listened to the stories and I just reenacted the same thing.”

[Good. Focusing on that image and embodying it is an effective method. However, you were able to successfully figure that out on your own. Plus, you were able to utilize a technique you've never learned before.]

“Next is... It's difficult to explain.”

[That's alright. It's naturally difficult to explain.]

“...This is just a speculation. If I were to artificially generate heat and light, I think I would've had to rub the mana together. This way.”

I stretched my left palm out and released my mana.

My mana collided with atmospheric mana, and as it shot up, the impact generated heat.

If I released any more mana, the heat would have been accompanied by light.

[You really do all sorts of things. Do you really need to learn magic? You don't use that technique by applying that to your sword, right?]

“I do apply it to my sword.”

[...Please try it.]

I shifted the aura that had formed around the sword.

It was definitely a lot more difficult.

Generating heat around the sword was much more difficult than using friction to form fire using the atmospheric mana.

A sword was a solid medium.

It had much more of a dull, stiff-moving, refined aura.

As the aura moved against my will, the heat generated was far greater.

First, I have to be careful that the energy doesn't build up in my body.

At the same time, in order for the unfolding energy that travels along the sword to go straight forward, the direction of my movements also had to line up.

I weaved together the aura that was spreading everywhere spontaneously, and then the aura is focused onto a single point on the sword's tip at the end of that complex process.

It started from my body, and would flow down through the sword until it ended at the sword's tip; it would continue to collide and the flowing aura which created energy would be released from my control at the tip of the blade.

The energy that was released from the sword's tip wouldn't be in a straight line.

As soon as the energy is released, it will shoot in various directions.

The continuously colliding energy would flow down the sword until it reaches the blade-edge, where it undergoes a diffused reflection. The sword's fixed power would dissipate, spreading out in every direction.

The energy could shoot out to the side, and could even aim at me, behind the sword.

Ultimately, it was vital that I direct it into a straight line in front of me.

This was the Light Sword's first form, Pierce.

A bright light would glisten upon the sword's tip.

That was the end of it.

I stirred the soul sword around, and waited for the heat to be discharged.

I didn't use the Light Sword at its completed stage.

You could see it as an imitation because it wasn't the founder who used it, but a different swordsman who created it. However, it did contain immense heat.

[...Does that make any sense? All those miniscule particles of aura moving forward? Who was it? The person who told you about such a suicidal technique?]

“No one told me about the technique; I just tried it based on the story that I heard.”

The holy sword seemed momentarily dumbfounded, and laughed with a 'ho ho.'

[I don't know what to say. In general, if you attempt that kind of technique without any guidelines or without a conventional method, your body will explode.]

My body did explode, and was followed by a flood of mana.

If it hadn't been in the waiting room, I may have died.

I briefly told the holy sword about my attempts at practicing the Light Sword.

[Even though something like that happened, you ultimately completed the technique. Your tenacity is amazing, so such so that you're absurd. In any case, it's a relief that you didn't die.]

The holy sword said that I couldn't do something so dangerous in the future, stating that a warrior's most important weapon was their body, and began nagging that I needed to be particularly careful with mine.

After he nagged me for a bit, the holy sword taught me his technique.

[It was a technique that I called the Spatial Rift Mind Slash.]

“Did you say the Spatial Rift Mind Slash?”

When I heard the grandiose name, my anticipation rose.

[Of course, it's not a technique that allows you to harm your enemy with just your will. However.]

“However?”

[It doesn't seem that different from the outside. That's the important factor. Hoo. Hoo.]

“Stop laughing and explain it to me quickly.”

[Yes. Of course. First, it's important to form the aura around both sides of the sword symmetrically. And the aura follows the sword and goes to the end... no, when you use your soul sword, Warrior, rather than the sword tip, a slightly more distant point would be better. And...]

The holy sword started to explain obediently.

He used similar words and expressions to the ones I used when I used the Light Sword and explained it so it was easy to understand.

He started with a simple outline, gave a description to help with imagining it in my head, told me the pattern that my magic circuits should unfold (as well as the shape of the aura), and the method to achieving it.

When I heard the scrupulous and helpful information, I could understand the technique that the holy sword was describing, contrary to when I had clumsily practiced the Light Sword on my own.

If the key factor for the Light Sword was friction, then the Spatial Rift Mind Slash focused on the compression of mana.

You would compress the mana to its limit; this technique was derived from the basic question: 'what would happen if I continuously suppress the compressed mana?'

The aura would follow both sides of the blade and collide at the tip, where it would be continuously stored.

I failed at directing that power in the direction that I desired previously, but after I maintained the power in its entirety, it would be able to exhibit a tremendous force if I were to hit my target.

For example, if it were to impact a magic barrier, there would be a huge explosion.

It was highly likely that the person using such a technique would also die.

It was a technique that you could call disastrous and filled with holes.

However, when the holy sword attempted this technique, I figured out a new method of application.

The holy sword would maintain the compressed power in the tip of the sword, and I was able to confirm that a piece of the aura protruded forward for a brief instance.

It was smaller than a needle, but it was still aura.

No matter how thin it is, it would cut through bone and steel at a mere touch.

It was an unseeable extension at the blade's tip.

“What do you mean the Spatial Rift Mind Slash? The name has nothing to do with the technique.”

[But from the outside, it looks like an invisible sword that passes through space. That's what's important.]

It did look like that.

Since I had just slashed downwards, there hadn't been any sign; yet it had cleanly cut through the distant rampart.

Even I, the wielder, had been astonished; how bad would it have been for other people?

It would look like I had cut the rampart with just my will.

“However, if you consider the amount of willpower or mana that this uses, isn't it too ineffective? Only a small bit of aura is used compared to the amount of aura that's put in.”

[That doesn't matter. Aura is aura. Just the fact that it's aura means it has enough power. Of course, there's a lot of mana that's wasted, but because of that mana, they won't be able to detect the Spatial Rift Mind Slash. Therefore, you'll be able to cut through your enemies without them being able to respond.]

This was also a valid point.

I, the wielder, had been surprised by the considerable power contained within the sword, but even I hadn't noticed the slender aura that had actually cut through the rampart.

Though its mana consumption was high, it was much less than that of the Light Sword.

In terms of practicality, it was much better than the Light Sword.

I couldn't say anything more.

“It's amazing.”

[Of course it is! Who am I? I'm the legendary holy sword that was blessed by the great God of the Sky, Ahoubuch! Hahahaha.]

The holy sword started to boast again.

Rather than listen to that, I decided to use what I had learned and show it to him.

I went in front of the residential district's fountain. Then, I drew and raised the soul sword.

The application of aura wasn't much different from the Light Sword.

On the contrary, it was simpler and easier.

My mana would be refined and shaped into aura according to my will.

I compressed that aura at the edge of the sword.

[From here on, you need to familiarize yourself with the technique, Warrior. You must learn when to project the aura forward.]

Just as the holy sword said, I maintained the aura after compressing it at the tip of the blade.

I didn't just stay still after the blade was covered in aura.

I continuously drew out aura, and pushed it to a single point.

It escaped my control, and the aura burst out; as the aura's power became progressively stronger, its strength continued to become harder and harder to control.

Because of that, the flow of mana began to shake finely.

But at some point, a tiny fraction of the aura protruded forward.

The protruding aura quickly scattered and vanished as it escaped my control.

I somehow succeeded.

It was a split second. And it was only as long as a finger at that.

I had precisely matched my timing and extended the aura, like when I had swung the holy sword.

To a length that could cut through the distant rampart.

I suddenly realized that the holy sword's level of swordsmanship was far above mine.

[Ho... I didn't think you'd be able to do that on your first attempt. Regardless of how much you explain it, the majority of people can't even attempt it. As expected, you don't have ordinary talent, Warrior. I love you, Warrior.]

[Warrior.]

While the holy sword suddenly began flattering me again, Seregia spoke to me.

[When do you think you'll be able to complete the technique that you used just now?]

“What's with you all of a sudden?”

[I'm just... feeling greedy. I want you to master the technique as quickly as possible and use it.]

What a peculiar greed.

Is that the desire of a swordsman, or the desire of a sword?

To think she wants me to demonstrate the technique as soon as possible.

[Around half a year should be enough time. Since the Warrior's extremely talented, and he's been practicing a similar technique up until now.]

The holy sword explained to Seregia.

What do you mean by half a year?

I don't have any plans on dragging it out for that long.

“One week.”

[I'm sorry?]

“I'm going to master it within a week. That way, I'll be able to study magic as well.”

Chapter 173

Tutorial 30th Floor (3)

It didn't take a long time before I was familiar with the grandiosely-named technique, Spatial Rift Mind Slash.

Nevertheless, the holy sword's technique was similar to the Light Sword. If you were to quibble over it, it was actually easier to use.

[I still don't understand.]

Seregia spoke sullenly.

While I practiced the Spatial Rift Mind Slash with the soul sword, Seregia was also at my side.

However, it seemed like she was getting disappointed as our understanding of the technique broadened.

“It's not that difficult. I'll explain it simply by comparing it to something else.”

Contrary to its grandiose name, the technique was ultimately just a technique that extended the sword's edge by compressing aura.

It was an aura slash that extended so finely that it couldn't be seen by the naked eye, inducing an optical illusion that looked as though you had cut through space.

That's all.

Applying the aura was extremely simple.

You just need to think of it like a swelling, triangular zit.

You would press down on the pustule from both sides, forcing its contents to explode outward.

With a pop.

[What do you mean by a 'pop'?!? Do you really have to explain my lethal technique by comparing it to something so filthy?]

"I'm not wrong, am I?"

I ignored the grumbling holy sword and continued my explanation.

"And the split second that the pustule is fired, you swing your sword. Of course, you need to know exactly when the pustule will be fired, how far you want it to go, and also how to maintain it for a certain amount of time. That's all there is to this technique."

[When you put it that way, Warrior, my technique seems way too mundane, and it also feels filthy. Warrior.]

I explained the method of utilizing the technique and its applications thoroughly to Seregia.

She couldn't try out the technique herself since she didn't have a body anymore, but Seregia's passion for swordsmanship hadn't waned.

On the contrary, her desires were much more transparent than when she was a human. She earnestly wanted to improve her understanding of the technique.

Of course, the holy sword wasn't quite happy that his technique was being analyzed thoroughly in the process of explaining his technique.

He was pretty displeased.

[Then why don't YOU try using that simple technique! Since you've practiced a lot already, why don't you try using it properly! It would be fine if you used it on that house over there, wouldn't it!?!]

The holy sword was pissed.

I may have hurt his pride.

Rather than confront the infuriated holy sword, I decided to do as he said.

I was standing in front of the mountain right now. The distance between me and the building that the holy sword had pointed out was certainly not small.

Around 150 meters.

I had pulled off the technique successfully many times in the past few days, but I had never tried to use it at this distance.

But whatever.

I didn't think of it as impossible.

I just haven't tried to apply it differently.

It's been five days since I started practicing the technique, and I've already become familiar with it.

I drew my sword and enveloped it in aura.

I felt the aura compress at the tip and briefly waited.

I still couldn't use it at a moment's notice because it needed a bit of time before the reaction I was looking for came.

Eventually, I found a specific pattern in the lump of condensed aura.

I matched the timing based on prior experience and swung my sword.

It followed my diagonal sword swing and a scar carved itself onto the wooden building 150 meters away.

It looked as if it were marked by the talons of a monster that only appeared in legends.

That was satisfying.

[...I-It's still not perfect! Look at that. Aren't the traces of your sword strike too uneven? It's proof that you didn't control your aura properly!]

The holy sword was silent for a short while before he continued to argue.

Just as the holy sword said, the traces of my sword strike were definitely uneven.

As I said, it looked exactly like a talon mark.

I have to make the traces cleaner and smoother.

“It'll be fine if I practice some more. There are two days left, aren't there?”

I had promised that I would succeed within a week, and there were still two days remaining.

Perhaps that was the reason the holy sword was acting sharp and fastidious.

The holy sword did confidently assure me that I wouldn't be able to completely familiarize myself with the technique within a week.

Disregarding that...

There's something else on my mind.

“Should I try combining it?”

The sword was engulfed with flames.

It still wasn't possible to combine the Spatial Rift Mind Slash and the Light Sword technique.

However, it seemed like simply fusing fire to the aura would be fine.

In that state, I attempted the Spatial Rift Mind Slash again.

Even though it looked similar, it required a different method of control since I had mixed the two techniques. The aura did as it pleased and went wild.

I had to guide that aura to the tip of my sword.

It was more akin to using my strength to roughly shove the aura, rather than using a technique.

And I slashed down with my sword once again.

I had swung my sword at a leisurely pace, yet I heard an unsettling sound effect emanate from my sword.

And the two-story wooden building in front of me earned another lengthy scar.

If I were to describe the difference between the two slashes, the second one was interspersed with flames.

[This crazy...]

[You're truly amazing. I don't know what else I can say. You're amazing, Warrior.]

The holy sword and Seregia both reviewed it side by side.

Seregia just complimented me like normal.

And the holy sword... it sounded like this asshole was going to cuss at me?

Honestly, it's not a very practical technique.

Using the holy sword's original technique would be much more effective, and smoother.

If I were to add fire, it'd just add more weaknesses.

The aura consumption was also enormous.

More importantly, controlling it wasn't easy.

Seregia and the holy sword hadn't noticed, but the second technique didn't hit my initial target.

And this type of mistake could be fatal during a battle.

However, there was one advantage that offset all those disadvantages.

It looked cool.

Others would see it as a slow sword swing, but it would appear as though my slash had severed a distant object while simultaneously igniting it on fire.

It was pretty good for showing off.

[What are you even going to do by learning magic? Please just learn swordsmanship. If you're also skilled in magic, Warrior, my position is at risk.]

I ignored the holy sword's whining.

The holy sword's position is solid.

Who would dare aim for the position of a frivolous demonic sword?

[What are you going to call that technique?]

The holy sword stopped complaining and finally contributed something.

The technique's name was important.

Once upon a time, I had thought it foolish to name your techniques individually.

Giving them names were like limiting your own potential.

However, as I familiarized myself with the Light Sword technique, my opinion changed.

If you don't hammer in that fixed perception, the technique would be too difficult to even practice.

Attaching names to these techniques was definitely helpful in recalling and exercising the technique.

[How about Spatial Rift Blazing Mind Slash?]

What insincere naming sense.

You just added "blazing" to the original technique name.

And.

"You can't use mind slash."

There wasn't any problem to the holy sword adding the name 'Mind Slash' to his technique.

However, there was definitely a problem adding 'Mind Slash' to my own technique.

[It's perfectly fine to call it a mind slash. Most people will see it as a mind slash anyway.]

The holy sword advised that I use the name mind slash, but I thought differently.

I wouldn't be able to call this technique 'Mind Slash,' regardless of what others may think or see.

Familiarizing myself with the name 'mind slash' will be detrimental to me later on.

If I wanted to attach 'mind slash' to it, I can't allow my sword strike to be as rugged as the scar on the wooden building.

I would only recognize this as a 'mind slash' when I'm able to precisely cut off a person's head without drawing my sword.

And 'Spatial Rift Blazing Mind Slash,' really?

It's too long, and it's lame.

[Well, if that's what you think.]

Mind slash, huh.

Mind slash.

I sat next to the fountain and thought about a mind slash.

When I saw the technique the holy sword had unleashed on the 26th floor, I had truly felt that it was a mind slash.

And I had attempted it by myself in Kiri Kiri's field.

As a result, the only thing I was able to confirm was that I couldn't even attempt the mind slash yet.

At the time, I thought I could use the mind slash.

I'd succeeded in keeping a calm mind while executing the Light Sword technique.

I had earnestly attempted to use the mind slash.

My method of attempting it was both simple and stupid.

I formed mana in the air.

It was like lifting mana from my palm, like how I had drawn and returned the short sword lodged in the tree.

I condensed the mana midair and moved it.

It wasn't my body nor was it my sword; I projected the mana in the air, and made it solid, forcibly controlling it. At the same time, seeing the movement that was controlled by that force was extremely difficult.

And I swung my sword.

The condensed mana and the sword in my grasp became one.

As I swung my sword slowly, the mana in the air follow the same trajectory.

That's how I materialized my will into the air.

I succeeded in hitting the falling Thousand Arms with my mana.

However, that was all.

All my strength went into it, but I was only able to slightly nudge the free-falling Thousand Arms.

Ultimately, that was all.

However, what if I were to combine it with the holy sword's technique here?

Let's try it.

I gathered aura in my palm.

Forming mana outside the body and forming aura had different levels of difficulty.

On the surface of my palm, aura about the size of my thumb was formed and rose up.

That was enough.

I molded the aura into the shape of a triangle and compressed it at the end of a single point.

It was the same as the holy sword's technique.

I didn't gather the aura at the end of a sword; I just gathered the mana that I had formed in the air.

I momentarily focused my strength at the end of the aura, a slender branch of aura stuck out for a short while.

Even though I was focused, it was difficult for me to see it in a split second.

It wasn't even the length of 1 cm.

[...What did you just do?]

“After I amassed the aura, I used the method of the Spatial Rift Mind Slash to try to project a part of the aura.”

[You really do all sorts of things. My goodness.]

[How effective is it, Warrior?]

“I probably won't even be able to kill a sewer rat.”

I can't use this.

Even if I were to increase the output from here, it doesn't seem like I'll be able to get a better outcome.

It wasn't a problem with the amount of mana I had, but rather a problem utilizing it.

I pondered about it a bit more.

In order to use brief protrusion of aura from the holy sword's technique, the Spatial Rift Mind Slash, you had to swing your sword.

And if you swing your sword in a large arc, you would be able to quickly slash across a wide range using a small amount of mana.

What would happen if I were to swing the aura in the air towards the front?

The difficulty is just too high.

I had only removed the sword as a medium, yet its difficulty rises absurdly.

Amassing the aura in the air and using that to mimic the Spatial Rift Mind Slash was too much for me.

After centering the aura on the central axis, I had to match the timing and swing it?

That's impossible.

Extending the aura and swinging it simultaneously was impossible.

I can only do one or the other.

If that's the case, taking out the swing is the right move.

Let's solve the problems preceding the swing.

While the aura's moving diagonally, I'll focus on the essential task of extending the aura.

The further it moves diagonally, the better.

If that's the case, it'd be better to rotate the aura.

I enlarged the aura that floated above my hand a bit more, to about the size of a fist.

And I started to slowly spin it.

As the aura spun, I realized I made an error.

I didn't have a way to condense the aura that rotated in one direction.

In order to project a portion of the aura, you have to pressurize the aura.

However, in order to pressurize the quickly rotating aura, I'd have to concentrate on producing an opposing reaction.

It needed a collision of force.

If it's not clockwise, then let's try counterclockwise.

I dispersed the aura that was above my hand and started over again.

This time, I shaped the aura into a sphere.

The aura within the sphere was divided into three bodies.

The three bodies simultaneously rotated in opposing directions and on slightly different axes, rubbing against each other to emit heat.

Rather than it being the holy sword's Spatial Rift Mind Slash, it was closer to the method of utilizing the Light Sword.

The aura particles used the process of friction to generate heat, and at a single point the collision between particles was maximized, creating pressure. Using that pressure, a piece of aura was momentarily projected.

The friction, as well as the rotation, was running smoothly.

Though, there was one problem.

The rotational speed was continuously accelerating.

I wasn't using my strength sustain the rotation anymore, but I had fastened the sphere onto its central axis so that it wouldn't escape my control; yet the rotational speed was accelerating once again.

There was so much light that it was difficult to open my eyes and look directly at it.

The heat went beyond my palm and started to singe my wrist.

It was like a fist-sized sun.

This is really dangerous, though.

It was like an airplane's engines, ringing out across the residential district.

The intense light tormented my two closed eyes.

[Warrior, stop. Please stop! What is this all of a sudden? If you keep going and that explodes, you'll really die!]

In an instant, the aura transformed into a miniature bomb as the holy sword urgently tried to stop me.

I also wanted to disperse it like the holy sword said, but it wasn't possible.

If that violent energy escapes my control, I have no idea what'll happen.

I didn't know whether it would explode or disseminate in all directions.

However, whatever the result, it would bring about an extremely dangerous situation; that I did know.

The activity of intense thermal energy had created a bomb.

So that I wouldn't be swept by the fierce air current, I held onto the fountain with my left hand and endured.

I could use my mana and stand my ground, but I didn't have any extra mana at my disposal.

[Warrior, you'll really die!]

[Time Confinement]

I used my Time Confinement and temporarily halted time.

It's too late to stop the sphere.

It was impossible to naturally disperse that energy.

In order to destroy the sphere, all its energy has to be used up.

Even within the world that had been stopped by Time Confinement, the white light sphere was slowly spinning.

How fast is that thing spinning?

This is driving me crazy.

I don't know whether that thing will endure the entire duration of Time Confinement.

I repressed my uneasiness and focused on the sphere's movement.

In any case, the sphere was moving slow enough that its spin was apparent to the naked eye.

The chance to calmly look at the slowly-moving aura was really valuable.

The single sphere was composed of three autonomous bodies, and I was able to observe that the three layers were colliding and rubbing against each other.

Its flow.

I watched for quite a long time.

Right before my Time Confinement was over, I counted the numbers.

One.

Two.

Three.

At the same time that I counted three, the effects of Time Confinement ended.

The sphere started to rotate at a rapid pace once again, and the world began to shake.

In the midst of this, I manipulated the sphere.

I had prepared this method and waited for the effects of Time Confinement to come to an end.

And through that method, I was successfully able to pressurize a part of the aura that formed the sphere and project it.

In the next moment, a giant echo was accompanied by a burst of intense light.

It was accompanied by a wave of mana, and I couldn't tell exactly what had happened.

After the burst of light, I felt that the temporarily-projected aura had already dissipated.

Before I had been engulfed by the aftereffect, I had hurriedly used Blink repeatedly to escape the range of its effects.

Because Blink had negated the force that would be applied to my body, I was able to land safely, rather than be swept away and tumble about.

From the direction of the sphere, a thunderous sound belatedly rang out.

Despite being quite far away, I felt the heat strongly.

It was to the point that even I, who had Fire Resistance, felt pain from the heat.

I had expected that the length of the aura that I had projected from the sphere was about 30 centimeters.

However, it rotated and continued to accelerate even further, so as soon as I directed the aura from the sphere, its length was longer than several meters.

And during that brief instance, the giant bulge of aura rotated several hundred times using the sphere as its center, no it rotated several thousands of times.

That was the result.

At the center of the residential district, the entire fountain area was razed to the ground and burning.

Kwang!

I didn't know if the aura that I couldn't collect and lost control of had diffused in all directions, and exploded, but another boom rang out.

A part of the aura had been projected; since an equivalent energy had been consumed, the explosion hadn't been that large.

With that, the sphere had completely disappeared.

I started to analyze the aftermath.

The sphere had rotated repeatedly, and at some point, it increased its revolutions per minute by effectively “grabbing” onto the central axis.

It was difficult to stand my ground in the face of the storm.

The sphere had over-accelerated and its revolutions per minute drastically increased the force of the technique.

In a split second, everything in my vicinity would be torn apart if that technique were to use the aura blade as its center.

Like a blender.

Also, the technique was accompanied by an intense heat and light.

Subsequently, it becomes extremely difficult to maintain the central axis, to the point that I can't deal with it at my level.

Obviously, the ideal path of action would be to use the aura projection to consume as much of the sphere's energy as possible. Then, immediately after using the technique, I have to escape from the blast area.

After using it, the remaining energy in the sphere explodes.

So, if it's possible, after using the technique, it'd be best not to leave too much energy within the sphere.

Thereafter, if there's an excess of energy in the sphere, I have to escape as quickly as possible.

And the only noteworthy thing is that it would end like this.

It had plenty of force and great potential in a wide variety of combat situations.

In conclusion, I have two questions: how do I decrease the excessive force, and how do I control it?

I have to reduce the danger of the technique as well as tame its excessive force.

At my current level, I have no chance of controlling it.

Later, after my skills have progressed further, I'll try it again in the safety of the waiting room.

More importantly, my magic circuits have become a mess; even if I were able to take the risk, I wouldn't be able to attempt it again.

I took out medicine for burns from my inventory and said.

“I think this is enough swordsmanship. Let's study magic starting tomorrow.”

[...So if you're a person who can do something like that, why are you trying to learn something like magic?]

* * *

[The God of the Sky agrees with someone's opinion.]

[The God of Light is happy.]

[All of the Gods of the Temple of a Hundred Gods are watching you.]

PDF by: traitor/1ZEN

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 7 -

-AUTHOR-
Gandara

[Light Novel Bastion | Rebirth Online
World | WangMama]

GANDARA 퓨전 판타지 장편소설

튜토리얼이 너무어렵다

Chapter 174

Tutorial 31st Floor (1)

[Mister.]

[What?]

[Do you know what I saw on the 30th floor?]

[What did you see?]

[It was just a heap of ashes.]

[...Take comfort in the fact that you probably weren't planning on staying in the 30th floor.]

[Mister.]

[...My bad.]

* * *

“Then let's get going.”

[Come now. Say it like it is, Warrior. Rather than departing, aren't you running away?]

This annoying bastard always says things better left unsaid.

I arrived at the bonfire room before I went to the portal for the 31st floor stage.

I breathed in the fresh air, and my head felt a bit refreshed.

“It feels like I’ll survive now.”

My original plan was to study magic for about a week after wrapping up my swordsmanship training.

However, I ended up leaving the 30th floor residential area on the second day, contrary to my plans.

[Who sets fire to the town like that? Warrior, did you not wet yourself?]

I shoved the annoying holy sword into my inventory wordlessly.

[It’s nice now that it’s so much quieter, Warrior.]

It’s just as Seregia said.

On the last day of my swordsmanship training, the residential district went up in flames.

After living in stages where it didn’t matter whether there was a fire or not, or in the waiting room that could restore itself, the very concept of fire had faded from my conscience.

Regardless of whether the town burned down or not, I had escaped the region of flames and begun my study of magic.

However, the residential district’s buildings were made of wood, so the longer the fire continued, the fiercer it got.

The fires had become too wild for me to put out now, let alone extinguishing the flames later. I had no choice but to escape from the residential district.

[What do you think about studying here, and then going?] Seregia asked.

“No. It’s fine. I’ve read over the runes once already, so I can just memorize them as I go through the stage.”

It seemed like it would be better to study magic in the next stage's waiting room.

My body itched ever since I entered the bonfire room, as I wanted to go straight into the next stage.

Instead, I created an sphere of aura in the air about the diameter of a finger.

And I slowly – at an incredibly slow pace – rotated it.

I planned to get a bit comfortable with using the aura sphere by repeatedly rotating it, stopping it, and rotating it in the opposite direction.

If I clear the stage while maintaining the sphere, my proficiency should rise quickly.

Before I went on to the next stage, I removed the holy sword from my inventory.

“Are you going to keep messing around?”

[I'll stop messing around. I, Ahoubuch, promise that I'll become your loyal, and cute holy sword, Warrior. I love you, Warrior.]

I kind of wanted to put him back into my inventory after hearing about his cute such-and-such, but I decided to just depart.

I stepped atop the portal.

[Welcome to the 31st floor stage.]

The 31st floor stage was somewhat unusual.

I may be inside of a cave, as there were rock walls all around me.

Peculiarly, the rocks were all red.

And they were dimly glowing.

Are they a type of luminous stone?

[They're magic blood stones.]

What are magic blood stones?

Since the stage was an unfamiliar environment, I asked telepathically.

The holy sword replied frankly.

[They're a type of rock found inside a dungeon. You don't seem them often. The fact that the ceiling, the floor, and the walls are all made of magic blood stones means that this dungeon's level is no joke. Honestly, this place is no different from demon world. Please be careful.]

At least when the holy sword explains something, he explains it plainly.

This guy also has the tendency to be an explanation freak.

Just as the holy sword said, who is firmly strengthening his position as a Pokedex, I decided to be a bit more tense.

The 30th floor residential district was a kind of line.

The 31st stage and after were stages prepared to give challengers an even harder challenge, especially after leaving the completely safe and pleasant 30th floor residential district.

Whenever you pass through a residential district, the difficulty spikes dramatically,

The challengers on normal or hard difficulty had realized a long time ago that after you pass through a residential district, the difficulty shoots up dramatically.

I tensed up and focused. Soon, I felt someone's presence in front of me as I was walking slowly.

Because of the corner, I couldn't see him.

I could sense two people through my mana.

One of them was 2 meters tall, and the other was significantly shorter at 150 cm.

Both of them had already sensed my mana and were displeased that I was spying on them.

Both of them swiftly accelerated and approached.

While I was preparing to respond, a message appeared.

[The 31 floor's challenge is starting.]

Explanation: You have entered the devil world ?? ??? region. Once every 100 years, the demons of all regions gather in one place, and only the victor of the competition has the chance to challenge the Demon King; this ?? ??? areas, possessing a unique culture have always produced a powerful Demon King.]

Presently, in the ??? ?? region, the current Demon King has ruled for 400 years in the ?? ??? region, and has been considered the strongest Demon King, generation after generation.

Win the competition, and then prove that you are the greatest challenger in your ?? ??? region.

Finally, challenge the ?? ???'s ruler, and prove that you are the strongest demon of ?? ???.

[Clear Conditions]

??? ?? Pass the first round of the region preliminaries.

[TL Note: I did my best to make it understandable, but the author is purposefully omitting certain things.]

What an interesting explanation.

The two approaching enemies revealed themselves.

They each had large horns on their heads and wings protruding from their backs.

“This isn’t a dungeon that’s close to the demon world; it seems like demons have actually come looking for me?”

[Yes. They’re truly classic demons. Melee fighting type. They are weak to the water and holy attributes. They have a high resistance to mental attacks, high physical resistance, and have a moderate resistance to magic. Their danger level is 5-stars. At your level, Warrior, they’re about 1 1/2 stars.]

He’s progressively evolving into a Pokedex.

The demons marveled at the holy sword’s explanation, and one of the demons exclaimed.

It was the tall one.

“You rude bastard!”

What’s with him.

Of course, it was rude to spy on people with my mana, but how could a demon be so narrow-minded and get offended over that?

“You dumb bastard!”

“Right back at you.”

The tall demon looked shocked after hearing my response.

He looks kind of dumb.

“Y-You shameless bastard!”

He really is dumb.

Why is he being like that?

Is there a problem with the translation of the knowledge before Babel skill?

He was begrudgingly standing there until the short demon beside him spoke.

“Hey, newcomer. If you’re too late for the qualifier, you should show your sincerity to your seniors and think about joining them. Who do you think you are, to mock us like this!”

Preliminaries, join up, sincerity.

Those are words you don’t usually see together.

[Warrior, use that, that.]

What is that?

[You know, that thing. The one that goes ‘kaboom’. Don’t you have that thing that you used to burn down the residential district?]

Boom, huh?

That’s an interesting way of putting it.

I don’t think the holy sword knows the term ‘kaboom’, so the knowledge before Babel skill probably just translated the meaning of the term to ‘kaboom’.

“No. I have a lot to ask them. And if something goes wrong with that, it can be dangerous for me as well.”

I raised my head, and gazed at the demons again.

The demons were looking at me as if they were asking, ‘why is he muttering to himself?’.

I’ve barely just met these stupid demons, so I can’t let this opportunity just pass by, now can I?

* * *

“So you’re saying that if you kill other demons, you get a token, and you have to gather a thousand of those tokens in order to pass the preliminaries?”

“Yes, yes. That’s right.”

The two demons were kneeling before me, telling me information about this place.

Of course, before I had asked them for information, I needed to do a bit of reconciliation.

The short demon was called Kakarang.

The tall and stupid demon was called Ubo.

Kakarang was the one talking for the most part while Ubo kept his mouth shut.

“Ah, by the way.”

“Yes. Yes. Please ask.”

“What do you see me as?”

“I’m sorry? You, of course, look like a strong, beautiful, wicked, and great demon.”

So I look like a demon.

Is it because they were hit, and if not, do they really see me as a demon?

[PR Note: It's safe to assume he beat them up.]

It's possible, if it's possible for the system to change my identity from a human to demon for this stage.

"Even though I don't have any horns, nor do I have any wings?"

"Jeez. Do you think that all demons have to have horns and wings? I'm different from those conservative geezers."

Based on what he's saying, it seems like there are demons without horns and wings.

However, there should be differences in skin color, physical appearance (ears, eyes, mouth, and nose), and body type.

It's a bit strange that he's no suspicious of me at all.

Was this set up by the system after all?

[It seems like they seem you as a demon, Warrior. I don't know why they're under that sort of delusion, but it's a relief,] the holy sword said.

Well, I guess it's a relief.

"Then, keep talking."

"Yes. I understand. First, I'll tell you about the current situation with the preliminaries. The preliminaries have gone on about the same way for two years already, and we've never made it very far."

Based on what the short demon said, the preliminaries have become a heated competition amongst the great factions.

Rather than several demons participating, acquainted demons started to make groups amongst themselves, and eventually , some groups had grown to command more than tens of thousands of members.

In order to protect themselves from hostile groups, the other demons would join other groups or start making their own groups.

That's how the originally individual preliminaries had become a power struggle.

"Besides, they say that the level of the competition really changes starting from the second round of the preliminaries. That's because they're the strong who take the tokens one by one. That's why even if the representative of the group gather a thousand tokens, they continue to gather tokens with their comrades. Even if they gather more than a thousand tokens, the strong individuals remain, so their group identity worsens as time goes on."

So the time limit for the battle for power exacerbated the conflict.

They would competitively stockpile their forces, and the competition would be rife with betrayal, plots, covert fights, and trickery.

It's a situation where wars of words and marriages of convenience come and go.

To the point that I couldn't believe that this was a competition between regions or an event.

"About you guys."

"Yes, yes. Please ask."

"To be honest, it doesn't seem like you guys can pass the preliminaries. Why are you guys out here?"

"Ah, are you perhaps a foreigner? All the demons in this region are forced to participate in the event. And before the event has come to a close, we cannot escape from here. If you want to live, you have to stay here, even if you have no desire for Demon King's position."

So that's how it is.

Then if you're a strong person who really isn't interested in the Demon King's position, you could just stay in the first round of the preliminaries, since it'll become unnecessarily dangerous the higher you go.

"Fine, do you have anything else to tell me?"

"I do. There's a lot. Uh... by the way. Could you please take us with you? We'll definitely be of help to you."

It seems like they want me to carry them on my back.

Well, it seems like it won't matter.

I've already heard all the fundamental information, and I can just learn the rest as I fight.

I just need to check one more thing.

I stood up from my spot.

"Are you leaving? In the future, people from each group will stick real close to you. There's no way that the groups will leave a newcomer alone. They'll probably either try to appease you or attack you. If you tell me what you want, I'll guide you, ugh."

I pierced Kakarang's neck with my hand.

And I continued on, slicing my hand downwards.

Kakarang was split from his neck down to his hamstring, and died.

The external appearance of the joints weren't much different from a humans.

However, I need to check the locations of the organs.

I looked inside the split body, and there wasn't really anything different or strange about it.

"You, you bastard!"

The tall demon, Ubo yelled belatedly, and ran towards me.

There wasn't really anything to check now, so I cleanly lopped off his head with a straight hand.

It was a pain chopping off someone's head barehanded, especially because he much bigger than me. But it wasn't hard for such a slow demon.

I waited briefly, and the two demons' bodies started to evaporate into the air.

The corpses soon completely vanished.

In their place, a piece of stone appeared.

Just like Kakarang had said, it was a token.

It's just like when you defeat your enemies in a game and loot the items.

I also confirmed the most important piece of information.

So I guess I just need to gather a thousand of these stone pieces.

I roughly put the tokens into my pant pocket.

And I continued walking.

[The God of Death is snickering unpleasantly.]

[The God of Chaos is watching you.]

[The God of Deception is watching you.]

[The God of Games is bored.]

Chapter 175

Tutorial 31st Floor (2)

After taking care of the two demons and continuing to walk, I came upon a small door.

There was a single number written on the door.

[7]

I didn't know what the number was indicating, and my curiosity didn't go away as I opened the door.

As soon as I opened the door, a small room appeared.

If I were to tell you how small it was, it was about as small as the single room apartment I used to live in.

And in that narrow room, twelve demons were gathered and facing each other.

It was an entertaining scene.

The demons were divided into two crowds, and each of the demons was carrying a weapon; they were thrusting their weapons forward and at the edge of confrontation.

One side had five and the other side had seven.

It seemed like I had opened the door and come in at the moment a fight would break out.

The agitated demons' gazes gradually centered on me.

“Ah, don’t worry about me, and keep doing what you were doing. I’ll wait a bit.”

Based on what the two demons had previously told me, the rules of this event are similar to a battle royale.

You have to kill a thousand demons and take their tokens in order to pass the preliminaries.

However, the two demons had said that most demons were already forming their groups and within these groups, there were large groups that fought intensely amongst themselves.

If that’s the case, how should I analyze the conflict in this tiny room?

There was a lot I was curious about.

Therefore, rather than meddling in their fight, I decided that I would take a step back and watch.

I’ll be able to more or less sate my curiosity if I were to ask about this and that to the victor after the fighting is over.

With that in mind, I closed the door and leaned on it.

The twelve demons were still staring at me idiotically.

Perhaps there’s a rule that states that an outsider can’t watch while they’re fighting.

“Why aren’t you guys fighting?”

I’d prefer if they started fighting immediately.

I wasn’t just curious about this place; I was also curious about the demons’ strength.

Of course, I had easily beat up the two demons from before, but since they were roaming around the entrance, they might’ve just been nobodies.

Both the demons I had met prior to the 31st floor and the ones I had just met had considerable mana.

But I didn't feel a chaotic spirit or a wicked demonic energy.

I was also curious as to why I couldn't feel that from the demons.

At that moment, one of the demons spoke to me.

"Please help us!"

Among the demons with red skin, the demon with blue skin spoke out.

It was a delicate blue-violet color skin.

The demon was wearing a skull necklace around her neck.

Amongst the demons here, she was the shortest and also the only woman.

She was part of the larger one of the two groups.

In other words, she was part of the group that held the advantage.

Thus, when she spoke, I couldn't immediately understand the situation.

"Why?"

"I-I'll give you a token!"

I wanted to ask why she had such a desperate expression when she had the advantage, but it seemed like the girl was under the impression that I'd ask for compensation to help.

I briefly thought about it.

Is giving me a token synonymous to dying for me?

Probably not.

She'll give me a stone piece that she's keeping, so she's asking me to fight with them.

At that moment, the group of demons that the girl's group was confronting yelled.

Their voices overflowed with composure, unlike the desperate-looking girl.

"You actually came from that direction. Are you perhaps a newcomer? Or are you one of those lousy demons who were thrown out to the entrance? Regardless of which, stay out of this, if you don't want to die with them."

I was right; the demons that I had met nearby the entrance were lousy, as expected.

[These demons don't look much different from those demons before,] Seregia said.

I agree.

Even if there were, they'd be minute differences.

That small difference looked a little suspicious to me.

I felt like it was the difference between a normal person who trained in a training hall, and a normal person who hated exercising.

The demon that threatened me looked displeased when he saw how I didn't respond to him.

"You should choose well. We have an alliance with the Kraagor group. If you defy us, you'll have to pay the price. No, that's not it. If you chase these guys out and capture this room with us, I'll also give you a position. This room can accommodate seven people anyway.”

Kraagor group. Room. Accommodating members.

They are keywords for information that can satisfy my curiosity.

I would decide my next move, and would then enact that move.

It seemed like the silent holy sword realized that, and started droning, emitting a vibrating sound.

And that vibrating briefly stopped.

[Warrior, may I try it? As a performance test. Yes? Please. Teehee.]

This bastard always readily makes a “cute expression” mixed with a nasally voice.

Aside from his manner of speaking, he had the voice of a middle-aged man’s, so I feel goosebumps whenever I hear it.

I wanted to shove him into my inventory immediately, but I also agreed that I needed to test its performance, so I let it go.

Right before entering the 30th floor, Kiri Kiri had told me that I could now buy the items that were locked.

In the meantime, I had gathered a lot of points, so I bought several items.

The first things I bought were books regarding magic.

Aside from that, I bought elixirs, liquid medicine, and basic gear.

Finally, I bought a weapon enhancement scroll.

It wasn’t a scroll that would strengthen a normal sword’s sharpness or durability.

When I thought about the holy sword's performance, I didn't think that I needed to strengthen those.

Instead, the scrolls that I had bought were all scrolls that would endow an exclusive magic onto an living sword.

I had applied two of those scrolls onto the holy sword.

They were the fly magic and the blink magic.

Since both of them were high-rank magic, the holy sword hadn't been able to use those skills himself; using the scrolls, I had increased the abilities of the holy sword.

I had already used it in a test run on the 30th floor residential district, and all that was left was a field-test of its performance.

"Fine, try it."

[Yes. Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. You know I love you, Warrior, right? Yes. I also know that you love me too. You're so shy, acting like you've never met me!]

The holy sword activated the magic as he spoke some nauseating phrases.

When I clear this floor, I have to find a scroll that can apply silence.

While I was thinking that, the holy sword applied the fly magic, and slid out of the sheath all on its own.

And said dismally.

[I can kill them all, right? Hoo. Hoo. Hoo.]

"Eh, nope. Only kill the five on that side, the ones that said something or another about a group such and such."

[I'm sorry? But that side has fewer people!]

“Yeah, the smaller group.”

The demons momentarily stiffened.

It was way too easy to tell that they were terrified and tense.

When the demons saw the sword leave the sheath by itself and fly into the air, the demons simply shook.

Their composed attitude just a little while ago disappeared.

That's strange.

[Holy sword Ahoubuch, taking off!]

The holy sword that had been drifting in the air suddenly accelerated and flew towards the demons.

Even to me, his speed was quite fast.

The first demon he targeted was somehow able to react to the holy sword's speed.

The demon raised his shield and brought it before the holy sword's path.

However, the holy sword used the enchanted magic.

Blink.

The holy sword leaped over the shield, piercing cleanly through the demon's neck.

The demon's endurance or mana hadn't been a problem at all.

The holy sword's aura was flowing.

As soon as the first target toppled to the floor, his comrades turned around and started to run away.

However, they couldn't shake the holy sword's pursuit, and he hunted them down, one-by-one.

The holy sword had completely changed his stabbing pattern, and even suddenly stopped in the midst of flying and slashed at them using the hilt as a pivotal point.

The performance test was a success.

It didn't even take the holy sword thirty seconds for it to take care of the five demons.

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. Demon's blood! I need more warm demon's blood!]

This insane holy sword had used magic, and unlike usual, loudly yelled out with his voice.

Because of that, the remaining seven demons could also hear his voice and were soon struck with fear and began shaking.

"Stop it, you crazy bastard."

I grabbed and retrieved the holy sword that was acting like a blowfly that had eaten mosquito repellent (flying in the air and emitting light)

* * *

"If it's that important, you don't really need to give it to me."

"No, we'll give it to you! Please let us give it to you!"

'Please let us give it to you!' was what came out of the desperate demon girl's mouth.

With this, I've gotten a total of eight tokens.

If I add the token I had from the beginning, I have a total of nine.

Among the six tokens that I had received, I stored five of them into my pocket.

The tokens disappeared immediately after I put them in my pocket.

I put the remaining token into my subspace bag.

Based on the demon girl's explanation, there were a couple of rules regarding the tokens.

1. The tokens will be automatically set to the location that you first stored your tokens.
2. The set tokens cannot be removed until you die.

In my case, my pocket in my pants is that set location.

It didn't matter whether I needed to store a thousand or even ten-thousand tokens; my pants pocket have become able to store an indefinite amount of tokens.

And they can't be retrieved until I'm killed and they drop.

Therefore, if I want to exchange them or sell them, I have to store the tokens somewhere else.

The final rule regarding tokens was...

"I also said this before, but the value of the tokens is tremendous. You must take up our request without fail..."

"I get it. I said I heard you."

The demon girl kept repeating those words.

She says that the tokens have tremendous value.

If you're in a life-threatening scenario, she says that if you give a token to your enemy, in most cases, you can beg your enemy for mercy and come out alive.

It's not official, but it seemed to be an unspoken rule.

By giving up a single token, you treat a difficult matter as if it never happened. It felt something like that.

It actually is worth your life.

The tokens that the demon girl had passed to me was also dropped by someone they had killed.

"Then you didn't think to give your tokens to those guys back there?"

"Yes."

"Can I ask why?"

"It's because those guys would've just come back later. Or they would've sent their other comrades. If you lose your tokens like that, you'll ultimately be left with nothing."

That's true.

I had already heard why they were fighting in the first place.

As there are rules regarding the tokens here, there are also rules regarding the 'rooms.'

Each room has a limited amount of people it can accommodate.

Just like it said on the door, this room can accommodate seven people.

Next, a minimum number of people are guaranteed to live.

You won't feel hungry and you won't use up your stamina.

You don't even need to sleep.

That means that the activities that sustain your life are unnecessary.

It unexpectedly seemed to have the same effects as the waiting room.

Though, it was different in that it didn't have a healing function.

In this place without light, crops, or even animals, meekly shutting yourself inside these rooms is the most surefire way to survive.

That's why the demons fight over the rooms.

"But you managed to obtain a pretty good room," I said without thinking much.

The demons gathered inside the room weren't very strong.

Honestly, they were really weak.

It didn't matter if their bodies were durable, if they had sharp senses, or if they had an overflowing amount of mana that was characteristic of their race.

They were ordinary people.

Before the event had started, they said that they were demons who were involved in business.

The seven demons gathered here said that they were from the same town.

Demons running a business? It feels like something's out of focus.

I could understand the reason that they had shrunk before their enemies, despite them having a numbers advantage and not suffering from an immense level difference.

Thus, I was surprised that they had actually occupied a room.

It looked like it was in quite a good location too; I wonder how they took possession of this room?

“We paid the rental fee... with tokens.”

“Is there perhaps no rental service for guards?”

The demon girl pointed at the sprawled corpses on the ground and spoke.

“These demons work under the guy who leased the room.”

I didn't understand immediately.

Only after the demon girl had elaborated on her explanation could I understand.

The demons that had died over there had leased the room to these guys but returned to launch a surprise attack.

If they didn't want to die, they would have to leave the room, or continue to give them tokens.

It was a really effective way of collecting tokens.

If you're given a token, you have to either let them go on their way, or you have to reimburse them for its value. As long as they don't break either of these rules, it was a method that enabled them to scrape up and gather all of their remaining tokens.

I stood up.

The demons' eyes reflected terror at my sudden movement.

Despite helping them, they were afraid of me.

It felt strange.

The fact that demons look at me and feel afraid in itself felt strange to me.

And it also felt unfortunate.

“Do you have a map by any chance?”

They had one.

I received a map that detailed the rooms, as well as the passageway that connected these rooms.

“And tell me where the group that that guy was talking about is.”

The demon girl looked at me quizzically and marked their location on the map.

I checked the location, took out the token that I had put in my subspace bag, and returned it to the girl.

I left the room after telling the flustered demon girl that it was the price of her map and information.

[Where are you going?]

“Where the groups are.”

The groups stockpiled several tokens in order to advance together with their comrades.

Plus, the tokens are used for trading and can be used as a method of bail for one's life.

Even the groups who had no interest of advancing were stockpiling the tokens.

The bigger and more powerful the group was, the more tokens they'd have.

A little while ago, the tokens that I could acquire from that small room was seven at the minimum.

At most, it would be ten, maybe twenty.

I didn't want to gather a thousand tokens that way.

It was tiresome and it would take a long time.

I have to rob from those who had hundreds of them from the start.

I told Seregia and the holy sword my idea.

Seregia was momentarily silent and asked me.

[Is that really the only reason?]

I wanted to know the reason why she asked.

It's already been three months since I've started traveling with Seregia.

She always stayed together with me.

That was plenty of time to know me by now.

That's why I responded honestly.

"I don't want to attack people who aren't my enemies."

[Among the enemies up till now, there have been some who have begged for mercy, Warrior.]

Of course, I killed them without thinking.

[There were also a lot of people who turned their backs and ran away.]

I obviously chased and killed them.

[There were also people who would die just from being grazed by your sword winds.]

I didn't concern myself with their weakness.

[I want to know what the difference is between those demons and the others.]

If I look back, I feel like I've been like this.

Seregia always wanted to learn more about me.

Therefore, after listening to the reason behind my decision, she should use that reason to infer my aim and my personality.

Maybe that's her habit.

"Enemies are people who try to kill me, attack me, try to steal from me, or get in my way. I haven't considered the circumstances of my enemies in the past and that's how it'll continue to be."

A person who appears as my enemy even once, or members of that group, had all been considered my enemies.

And I've never compromised with my enemies.

Even after an interrogation, I would always kill them.

It wasn't an issue of morality.

This was a an issue of survival.

This is the Hell difficulty, where even the smallest weakness can lead to a life-threatening consequences.

Being merciful to those who were my enemies, or those who have the possibility of becoming my enemies, is too dangerous.

[I see. I understand.]

After finishing our conversation, I started walking again.

As I walked and walked some more, I started to doubt my own answer.

There was an exception.

The people I had met on the 16th floor.

Though they were definitely my enemies, I reconciled with them and spent time with them in peace.

Even though one of them was a doppelganger who had hidden itself.

It was confusing.

That line that I had drawn wasn't as clear as I had originally thought.

I looked inside for any hidden reasons.

Rather than reflecting on my thoughts, it felt like I was inferring the principle behind my own conduct.

A little bit later, I had to correct my thoughts.

This was a problem of morality, but at the same time it was a method of survival.

I did this to keep myself sane.

After what happened on the 18th floor, I wanted to minimize the harm to people who weren't hostile.

The things that happened that day had traumatized me.

Therefore, I divided people into two groups: those who are enemies and those who weren't.

And I was even more ruthless to my enemies, in exchange for not hurting people who weren't my enemies.

Due to those hidden reasons, I didn't pursue the, at minimum, seven tokens that were right before my eyes, and just left.

I even returned one of those tokens in exchange for their information.

It got deeper and deeper the more I thought about it.

This will definitely become a weakness.

Do I have to deal with this newly found issue, or ignore it?

Chapter 176

Tutorial 31st Floor (3)

I was lost in my thoughts as I followed the map; before I knew it, I had reached my destination.

This is the room of the people who had sent the attackers to the first room I had arrived at.

[39]

Contrary to the previous room which could only accommodate seven people, this was a room that could house quite a few members.

They had that many more combatants and were stronger.

That meant that they had a force capable of protecting the room.

I was walking around nearby, and a demon who appeared to be the gatekeeper approached me.

Just by looking at him, you could tell that he didn't have the attitude of a guard.

“Who are you! This room is full. If you don't want to die, go back and take a different path.”

“A different path?”

“Yeah, you can't pass through this room!”

I spread out the map and checked the paths in the surrounding area.

If I don't go through this room, I'll have to walk back quite the distance.

Honestly, it isn't an issue to me.

Especially because I have business in this room.

I heard the sounds of screams echo out from inside the room as well as the smell of blood, so I was sure that I came to the right place.

“This is my last warning. Get lost! We also have an alliance with the Kraagor group. You won't die painlessly if you start an argument pointlessly!”

It seems like I did come to the right place, as expected.

I didn't need to go through the hassle of checking, since the gatekeeper so kindly told me.

“Ahbooboo.”

[My name is Ahoubuch, Warrior.]

The holy sword slipped out of the sheath, and started flying again.

Whether there are five enemies, or thirty-seven, it was all pointless before the holy sword, which was clad in aura and flying at high speeds.

It didn't take very long before the demons within the room were all incapacitated.

I approached the gatekeeper demon that the holy sword had deliberately left alive.

I asked the demon, whose shoulder had been pierced by the holy sword and embedded in the wall.

“So, how do I find that Kraagor or whatever group?”

The half-panicked demon shook just from my approach, but I was somehow able to calm him down and get him to mark the map.

After telling me the location, the embedded holy sword promptly took care of him.

There were three other demons inside the room, who looked as though they had been captured and tortured.

I passed out a few potions to them.

They came into possession of a vacant room, so they wouldn't die as long as they stayed here.

They also wouldn't have to worry about the group exacting their revenge.

Since I'll take care of everything.

That's what I told them, but the three demons just kept shaking.

They couldn't even look me in the eye, so I couldn't be sure that they understood me.

I left the room and started walking again.

And I resumed pondering over the concerns that I had briefly pushed aside.

To be exact, I was looking back at my memories, and was watching them in third-person.

It was like watching a movie.

I analyzed myself, as if I were inferring a main character's values and troubles within a movie.

As I recollected how I had thought and acted in the past, I needed to figure out how I had changed, as well as how I was changing.

At the end of that long retrospection, I could focus on one thing.

From a while back, I had helped those who were weak.

There were a lot of memories of me doing so.

Or did I not?

There was a small difference between helping other people, and trying to help someone.

Maybe not.

Let's think about it a little more.

I needed a lot more time than I had expected to retrace my past.

I had soon arrived at one of the rooms that those Kraagor group guys were staying at.

The demon that I had met just a little while ago said that the Kraagor group possessed more than ten rooms, both large and small.

This was the room that was closest.

[24]

Their numbers were a slightly smaller than before.

"Hey you, stop right there. Where are you trying to go, all bloodied like that?"

"This is a room where the Kraagor group is staying, right?"

"That's... true, but what business do you have here? Have you perhaps come to see the Room Leader?"

I found the right place again.

“Ahbooboo.”

[I told you, it's Ahoubuch!]

It took less time for the holy sword to clean up than it took to walk over to the room.

As a result, I could head over to the next room without even pausing.

Since I already knew where all the rooms that were a part of the group were located, I didn't need anything else.

When I thought about it, rather than helping the weak, it seems like I had a different goal.

After crossing a certain line, I couldn't just let someone I considered an enemy go.

It wasn't just in the Tutorial where I had to kill my enemies; it was on Earth as well.

Those hostile or deceitful towards me.

Even if they didn't directly try to inflict me any harm, if I see the people around me get hurt, I would gladly intervene.

Of course, the result of that wasn't always great.

Though I could say that I had more interest in those who would become my enemies than those who were weak, my desire to help the weak was earnest nonetheless.

Let's go back to square one.

Do I correct my weakness or hold onto it?

That was my concern.

Let's assume that I fix my weakness.

I'll put aside whether fixing it is possible for now.

It would certainly be to my advantage in clearing floors if I didn't have to differentiate between killing the virtuous and the wicked or the weak and the strong.

It would also reduce the level of danger.

Let's take a look at the current situation. If I were to have killed all the demons indiscriminately, I would already have more than a thousand tokens.

However, the amount of tokens that I had gathered up till now only numbers one-hundred and seven.

If I wasn't selective about killing and focused on clearing quickly and safely to grow...

There'd be a high chance that I'd go insane.

And if I were to not deal with my weakness?

It'd conversely become that much more dangerous.

Let's think about this carefully.

My current idleness leads to danger and a crumbling morality, and I tried to figure out which side the balanced scale would lean towards when I added this element of danger.

* * *

"Ahhh!"

"Boss, boss! We have to surrender before we all die! Boss? Hey, where's the boss!"

"He's over there running away by himself, you dumbass! Catch him!"

“Hey! Catch the boss over there!”

“It’s too late to catch him, you idiots. We have to fight on our own.”

“Who are you calling an idiot? How are we supposed to fight that...”

[Hahaha! Burn! To the point where the blood in your body boils!
Make your blood even hotter for me!]

[Holy Light! Burning Field! Fire Wall! Poison Fog!]

The holy sword flew around erratically, casting all sorts of different spells. One of the spells created a poisonous mist, which immediately created an explosion.

It seems like the poison mist had contained flammable gas.

Of course, the holy sword hadn’t been affected by the explosion whatsoever.

The demons also hadn’t been hurt much by the explosion in the air, but its sudden roar and piercing light intensified their fear.

[273]

This was the headquarters where quite a few demons of the Kraagor group resided, but the holy sword took care of them all while playing with some here and there.

While coming to their headquarters, I had a chance to eavesdrop about the Kraagor group’s wrongdoings from the demons that were a part of the group.

However, at least at this very moment, the enemy demons looked pitiful.

I looked at the crazily radiant holy sword.

It seems like he’s finished cleaning up.

He had taken care of all the demons that could be called enemies.

It was quite a large room, and each demon was extremely powerful and skilled.

However, they weren't very dangerous.

If they were at the level where they were single-handedly annihilated by the holy sword, which simply loved killing people, there would've been no real danger if I had intervened myself.

I'm sure of it.

This wasn't dangerous for me.

I had already become a lot stronger, but I wasn't satisfied with that because I wanted to grow even further.

I'm confident.

Regardless of what difficulties show up along the road, I'm confident that I won't die in vain.

As I thought, it doesn't make sense for me to give up subjectivity just because of an increased risk of danger.

Using any means necessary and throwing away the last shreds of your morality was the way for the weak to survive.

I also did so.

I had sliced my arms and legs with a dagger, and had placed my hand into a bonfire.

For faster growth, I had to overtax my body, and my mind.

When I had first met Idy, who had been stronger than me, I took advantage of her kindness and attacked her.

When I had killed the goblins on the 4th floor, I had killed them all, regardless of whether they were injured or had surrendered.

Even while assuming that they were a conscripted militia.

Back then, that was correct.

If I hadn't done so, I would've been the one to die.

However, is that still true?

It's certainly not.

I'm currently standing in the position of the strong.

I'm this relaxed right now, so I didn't need to be unnecessarily cruel or meek.

I didn't really need to kill all the enemies who weren't my enemies, and frantically gather the tokens.

So long as it's not a situation where I don't have enough tokens, and I have no choice but to kill them.

Of course, the risk of danger will increase since I'm limiting my means.

However, I'm in the middle of wishing that the difficulty of the current stage was harder.

I actually welcome that increased risk of danger.

Someday, I'll definitely come face-to-face with something that I can't handle.

Therefore, even if I were to drop down to the position of a weakling, I'll overcome that obstacle no matter what.

That's what this strength and my effort is for: that time.

I'll protect what I must at that time, and it's a strength that will let me think 'I was right.'

That's what this stage clear is for.

That's what I thought, and pledged again.

[Hoo. Hoo. Hoo. The bells of ruin are ringing out! Warrior, the purification ritual ended with a blessing from the sky.]

The holy sword said, as he flew in front of me, blood dripping from his blade.

There were definitely demons nearby that weren't dead, who were crying out and closely lined up.

I had been told about the wickedness of the Kraggor group, and those demons who performed such wicked deeds were strewn all over the place and dying.

The line of my morality may seem extremely deep underground, but it's probably better than not having one.

I'll just keep doing what I've been doing.

After setting aside my concerns, I was refreshed.

[The God of Devotion feels sorry for someone.]

[The God of Adventure is satisfied somehow.]

[The God of Slowness is extremely happy.]

* * *

"I-I'm not connected with this place. I-I was dragged here against my will. It's the truth. Please believe me."

"I know. I already know."

I watched the trembling demon as I cleaned the demon blood off the holy sword.

If I could, I would've just sheathed the holy sword, but it would smell if I did that.

“I-It's the truth. It really is the truth.”

I thought about what I could do to make the trembling demon, who was pleading his innocence, understand that I trusted him.

There weren't any suitable methods that came to mind.

There were a few demons inside the Kraagor group headquarters that weren't related to the group.

Of course, those demons were all unconscious; the only demon who had regained consciousness was right before my eyes.

“D-Do you want a token by any chance?”

Perhaps he thought that I wanted something else since I was silent.

Honestly, I want information more than tokens.

There were a few demons that were unrelated to the group within the Kraggor group rooms.

I wanted to know the reason that the Kraagor group would capture other demons and put them in the rooms, even though it would take some of their space.

“Ahem... This is the only token I have. Please be merciful...”

When I saw the demon suddenly dig deep into his pants, and take out a token, I hurriedly took a step back.

Why were you hiding it in such a dirty place?

This is driving me nuts.

I didn't even have a clue as to where he had hidden the stone piece, when he didn't have any pockets...

No, I can guess where he hid it.

The angle at which his wrist and elbow were bent gave away the location of his hands in his pants.

The demon seemed a bit tormented as he retrieved the token, and his scream had a bit of pain mixed in.

Also, that demon was a man.

I felt disgusted.

I didn't want to touch a token that smells like shit.

Chapter 177

Tutorial 31st floor (4)

The demon that thrust the smelly tokens towards me was an old demon named Ma HaPa.

“I don’t need it. Put it back.”

“Yes, Yes.”

I turned my sight away from MaHaPa who was struggling to put the tokens back in his pants and groaning.

I couldn’t take the embarrassment and disgustingness.

The streets were littered with dead demons strewn about like trash.

The demons with ferocity and strength made me think this was really hell.

The perpetrator that made this hell was drunk from the blood and singing.

I couldn’t understand the words.

It was because the Babel Translation Skill couldn’t translate it, or because the words didn’t mean anything.

“Abubu.”

[It’s Aubutz, Hero!]

I gripped the handle of the holy sword who flew towards me like a dog to its master.

The handle was sticky from the blood of demons.

I didn't feel any other displeasure.

The holy sword was the one that massacred the demons, but the one wielding it was me.

"Cool off your head, it was too much."

I opened the inventory, and threw the holy sword carelessly into the inventory.

The holy sword pleaded and screamed as it was being thrown in, but I ignored it.

"Serezia, do you know anything about the god of Sky?"

[Yes. The religion of the Empire was the god of the sky, so I know a little.]

Serezia answered.

It was unexpected

Recently Serezia said little.

Even before she wouldn't say a lot, but was the type to engage in conversation and only be satisfied after saying what she wanted to when she wanted to say it.

But recently, she wouldn't take part in the conversations and would ignore everything as though lost in thought.

I asked without expecting much, but thankfully she answered this time.

"Is the god of the Sky an evil god?"

[The god isn't an evil god. More of a neutral god. I shouldn't comment on gods, but the God of the Sky isn't one that cares about good or evil. The god cares more about position.]

A god that cares about position.

From the name Sky, does the God of the Sky want to rule over everything?

The reason God of the Sky bestowed the Holy Sword to the Emperor was to punish his arrogance...

The Evil King in the 26th floor stage was an arrogant being looking down on the demons that summoned his as less than pests.

Enough for the God of the Sky to hand the holy sword to the Hero and subdue him.

It was a plausible assumption.

It also gave a link to why the Holy Sword blessed by the God of the Sky was overtly ruthless and longed for the blood of others.

The fear stemming from the extreme violent and ruthlessness is the most efficient way to suppress and stand above others.

I told Serezia my thoughts.

[You're probably not wrong. The interpretation of gods are different for each theologian, and this kind of generalization would make the believers hostile, so you should take care not to say it in front of others.]

While I conversed with Serezia about the God of the Sky, Ma HaPa had put away the tokens somewhere and spoke to him.

"I, If... you don't need the tokens, w, what do you require..."

What could I need from this poor trembling demon?

Information.

“I have something to ask.”

I had one question from passing through various rooms.

The demons capable of answering were too scared to answer the question and all of them refused to answer.

Rather than answer my question, they chose to faint or begged for mercy.

“Coming through the Kragor group’s rooms, I saw a few demons being kept captive.”

Just like the demon Ma Hapa before my eyes.

“From what I know, the rooms are essential for survival, and the rooms are highly valuable. And to keep someone captive in the rooms with limited space is a waste. It’s better to exile or kill them. But the rooms I passed through always had a few demons kept captive.”

As I progressed, Ma Hapa’s faced turned dark.

It was the same face I saw every time I asked this question.

“What’s the reason you were kept captive in this room?”

As I expected MaHaPa started showing signs of extreme anxiety and was flustered.

I’d have normally given up at this point, but I wanted to hear the answer this time.

It took quite some time to calm MaHaPa down.

After promising multiple times not to turn MaHaPa, I could calm him down.

And I also got the answer to my question.

The answer wasn't as serious as I thought.

"So they use living demons to store the tokens."

"Yes... When the group needs to store tokens, they take demons without any connections like me and force us to take in the tokens. For when they need the tokens."

The acquired tokens couldn't be retrieved until the demons that acquired them die.

When they need the tokens, they kill the captive demons and take out the tokens.

They're basically livestock.

No, maybe worse.

Tokens are hard to keep because of their characteristic and importance.

Because of them being traded at a high value, and as you can leave the space as soon as you gather one thousand, it's easy to decide to steal them.

If the head demon of the group chose to keep them himself, it was cause enough for them to be the target of skirmishes and assassinations.

As he would be the top target for those that want the tokens.

To deal with these problems, they stored the group's tokens in a few select demons while keeping them captive and under surveillance.

"from what I hear, tokens are traded one at a time mostly. Where do they use the large number of tokens?"

I asked wondering if they were used for business transactions or diplomacy.

“S,Sometimes... there are demons that do not wish to stay in the 1st preliminaries, and wish to go up.”

MaHaPa glanced at me while he talked.

Yeah, like me.

“Those demons usually massacre every demon they see from the starting point. Then the group contacts them, and gives them a massive number of tokens and make them leave the 1st preliminary area.”

It's easier to send off those who disturb the ecosystem huh.

Most of my curiosities were solved.

One thing was left.

Then how many tokens did this demon named MaHaPa have?

This was probably the reason why the demons who heard my question couldn't answer my question and trembled.

To their eyes, I was someone who massacred every demon I saw for tokens, so they couldn't answer my question.

Fearing that I would kill them for tokens as soon as they answered.

Instead of asking MaHaPa how many tokens he had, I asked him to write down everything he knew on the map.

After looking over what MaHaPa told me, I started on my way.

As I was about to leave, MaHaPa grabbed me.

“H,Hey...”

No idea what it is, but he probably has a request.

Since he gave me a lot of information, I thought I would be ok to listen to his request.

“Talk. What is it?”

“C, Could you protect... us?”

MaHaPa pointed towards the demons knocked out cold, and himself and answered.

“Krago Group is gone, but once the other groups learn of us, they’ll try and take us. Please... help us...”

To sum it up he wanted protection.

I thought about it but shook my head.

“Sorry. That’s a bit much.”

Too cumbersome.

After shaking off MaHaPa, I started walking out the room.

The new destination was the base of the Olphon Group.

Olphon group was the one ruling this domain.

The other groups are all subordinate alliance groups, so the Olphon group for sure the largest group in the 1st round preliminaries.

[Hero.]

Suddenly Serezia called me.

“Yeah. Why.”

[I would like to tell you something of concern.]

“What is it.”

Something of concern. Could it be something dangerous that I hadn't thought it.

But Serezia's concern was something completely unexpected.

[Soon, I might not be able to talk at all.]

Soon, I was able to understand her words.

Instead of saying less, soon she would be unable to talk at all.

But I couldn't understand the reason.

[I don't know for sure myself. My self-consciousness is becoming faint. The self-awareness as your sword is becoming larger than my self-awareness as Serezia. my consciousness is becoming slow and everything besides combat is becoming faint. Even when I talk, I'm having trouble concentrating on topics other than combat.]

What is this.

[As if I were becoming a rock or a tree. No, I should say like becoming a sword. I'm actually sword right now right?]

Serezia didn't say anything after that.

I called her several times, but no answer.

I stopped from disconcertion.

I tried to understand her words, but eventually pulled out the holy sword from the inventory. The holy sword muttered about the act of shoving him in the inventory, but said this after hearing what Serezia had said.

[Don't think too much about it. It's the process of becoming a sword. Isn't Serezia a sword not?]

“No, you're a sword. You talk fine.”

[I'm an Ego Sword. Whereas Serezia was turned into a sword upon her death. There's a difference.]

“Then is she never going to be able to speak or know who she is?”

[Well. Wouldn't it depend on her? If Serezia wants to keep her human mind, she could become like me. She would probably be able to give advice on combat and answer simple questions. But Serezia seems satisfied with being a sword right? That's a little worrying.]

For me, it was a bit ridiculous.

Dumbfounded and aghast.

Once a human possess a sword, they lose their self-awareness and become a sword?

Even for Serezia who said she wished she was born a sword, that was weird.

[It's not completely absurd. Most of the souls made to possess objects by Dark Magicians go through this process.]

“How does it turn out usually?”

[Usually. Their consciousness crumples, and they lose their self. As they become stabilized, they become captivated by the words their enchanter whispers to them and long after that for eternity. Most magical swords and cursed rings are produced this way.]

Hearing the creation of magical swords from a magical sword helped me understand quickly.

So that's how it's done.

I hope Serezia doesn't become like Aubu.

I'm worried.

Once I clear this stage, let's get some advice from KiriKiri.

Personally, I'm attached to Serezia.

She was similar to me in many ways.

From her thought process to preference and principle.

The times spent with her were comfortable and dear.

I wondered if I would be able to meet someone so similar to be in the future.

But there were differences between me and her.

Serezia adjusted herself to the fate of becoming someone's sword, and I was pleased.

That was the difference.

If I were in the same circumstance as her, would I be able to accept that fate?

If it came to it, I would be a cursed sword.

A sword rebelling and trying to kill its owner.

Thinking about it, the situation now wasn't that different.

As I thought about it, its situation was amusing.

I felt as though me, Serezia, and the holy swords were three swords. Each pursuing their own will.

Instead of belittling myself, I tried to have more constructive thoughts.

I didn't want to become a tool of gods.

Even if I didn't know what they wanted from me or would request from me.

So, I placed importance on my goal and will.

But tied to my side were two swords with their own agendas.

If more than just will was required to overcome becoming a tool.

If having my own will wasn't enough to prove I wasn't a tool.

What more do I need to achieve?

A few answers came up.

I wasn't sure if they were all correct, there were probably also many answers that I haven't thought of.

But if I fulfill them one by one, I would be able to achieve all the answers.

That's what I thought.

As I was about to finish organizing my thoughts and about to move, I felt a large wave of magical energy.

A magical circle appeared on nearby ground.

The air above the ground started to warp, and soon a demon appeared.

From having used it with Serezia early, I quickly recognized what it was.

It was a teleportation circle.

As the shaking mana calmed, a shadow appeared above the circle.

It was a demon.

A strong ferocious force, an enormous and ominous evil magic.

It was the first demon-like demon I've met since coming here.

The complex thoughts from earlier melted away.

I waited for the demon to finish.

A moment later, the demon, instead of lunging at me and using magic, it opened its mouth.

“You’ve finally stopped. Olphon would like to see you. You’ll need to come with me, newbie.”

Chapter 178

Tutorial 31st Floor (5)

He who introduced himself as the Olphol group devil reactivated the magic circle.

The destination he came from.

[Just kill him.]

I asked the holy play the reason.

Why?

[Just cause.]

This guy probably needed more probation.

Although it didn't seem right to put him in the inventory right away.

Instead, I decided to lock him in the inventory for a good one or two months.

In time, the devil completed the activation and gestured to me.

“Come and stand on the circle. Newbie.”

What reason was there to hesitate when they wanted to summon me to their base.

I walked to the circle and stood on it.

[It might be a trap, hero. What are you going to do it isn't a teleportation circle.]

It's a teleportation circle.

[How can you be sure?]

I've rode it before. Twice.

[Normally you can't confirm the type of the circle by riding it twice. What are you going to do if it doesn't head to their base and somewhere dangerous.]

It's fine. If it is, then I can cancel the teleportation. If I do, it'll send me back to this place.

[...is that possible?]

It was.

I tried it the first time I rode the magic circle with Serezia.

Because of that, the sickness that overcame Serezia from activating the circle three times in a row was tremendous.

Back then, Serezia acted as though there was nothing wrong with the magic circle.

Not knowing it was me that caused the issues with the circle.

The demon spoke before he activated the circle.

“Newbie, I'm saying this for your own good, but listen closely. Do not be rash in front of Olfon. It's not as though there were demons who tried their hand at the Demon King's seat, and it wasn't a small number that was brought forth before Olphon. There will be dire consequences if you show arrogance believing in your magics.”

“What kind of consequences?”

“Well. Who knows, but where you'll be headed is down instead of up.”

What the fuck does that mean.

Is it some sort of ambiguous expression.

“Newbie, your goal is probably to challenge for the seat of Demon King.”

“If you want, you could put it that way.”

“The one you will meet now has already been on the Demon King throne.”

My questions weren't fully answered yet, but the demon started the magic circle.

The space in front of my eyes warped.

The space shook here and there and at a certain point, it started to rip with a certain starting point in the air.

Like a paper ripping, the space ripped.

Past the ripped space, I saw another space.

From the crazy amount of mana flowing out, I knew it was the place Olphon was at.

[It's not a teleport circle?]

“...It's possible.”

“What is.”

The demon responded to my embarrassed soliloquy to the holy sword's words.

“No. It's nothing.”

[Hero. Hero? That's not a teleport circle? It's a dimension gate? Didn't you say you knew from just seeing the magic circle? Wow, world. I wouldn't know in my dreams. That the all-knowing hero would make a mistake like this. Hah, if you live for a few centuries things like this happen after all. Fu. Fu. Fu. Fu.]

Leave it at that.

[Eebebebe.]

I promised to find a silence enchantment scroll after I clear this floor.

And passed through the gate with the demon beside me.

Once I passed the gap in space, the ripped space healed itself.

It looks like a great high-level magic.

How long would it take me to learn that.

My thirst for magic is continuing to become larger.

It was then, a voice from a distance in front of me could be heard.

It was the words of the demon sitting at the head of the table in this banquet-like hall.

Numerous demons were filling the space.

Unusually, there was no difference in height of the seats the demons were sitting on.

89 demons exactly.

Each one had a strength that would be hard to find elsewhere.

But from the presence of the demon at the head of the table made everyone else seem small.

“Welcome, newbie.”

It was monotonous and soft.

The voice wasn't loud either.

Rather, it was quiet.

But the strength carried by the voice, the mana gave it that presence.

The demon talking to me was sitting at the same level as me, but his presence felt as though it was above my head and also behind me.

“You have a cute magic sword.”

“Didn't your mother tell you that it's not good manners to listen in on other people's conversations?”

The mood in the banquet hall completely changed at my words.

It went past intimidating and became outright bloody.

That's no good for banquets.

It felt as though I made a mistake in ruining the mood.

“You know nothing about me.”

‘Was there a reason I had to?’

The mood started to attack my body outright.

The sense of the mood ready to cut.

If it was a normal human, they would've actually been cut to pieces and died.

“I was born in the third class, in the depths of despair. I have no mother and father. I was born alone, existed alone, and prove myself.”

Prove oneself by existing alone.

Would that be enough to prove oneself as a sentient being.

Self-respect is just self-respect.

There was something more important.

The demon in front of my eyes was born with an advantage from birth.

“So that means you’re immune to mom-jokes. That’s good for you, mate.”

Kwang!

The mood exploded.

The demons exuded intimidating force at the same time, and from that clash came an explosion.

I thought to myself as my hair was flying back in the wind from the explosion.

It wasn’t something I should be saying when I blew up the 30th floor from experimenting, but to cause an explosion by not being able to control that.

What idiots.

The demons were screaming and denouncing something about me.

Unfortunately, I couldn’t understand the words.

Whether it was colloquial that demons here used, or ancient words of the demon race, but it didn’t translate well.

But thankfully I could guess at what it meant.

After some time went by, sitting at the head of the table, Olphon opened his mouth again.

Olphon's face didn't seem that angry.

The only thing I could fathom was weariness.

"From the report, I thought a great magician appeared. But what really appeared was an idiot with a rare magic sword. Talk, newbie. What fuels your stupidity?"

Magician.

He must've thought I was a battle magician controlling the sword through magic.

Then once he realized the ability was fully from the holy sword, been disappointed.

And the magic and strength he can feel from me wouldn't be enough to satisfy him.

That's always the problem with these idiots.

"Out of those that I've called here, there were many who truly wished to challenge the Demon King. There actually was one that was able to challenge the Demon King. But what are you. I have no idea what you are thinking by coming here. What is your purpose in coming here. Do you wish to die, or are you just raving with madness."

What I want.

Well.

"For now, it's taking care of the Demon King."

"Your jokes are no longer funny. It's impossible for you to kill the Demon King. It's true for anyone else for that matter."

"impossible to kill the Demon King?"

"Yes."

Impossible to kill the Demon King.

Would the Demon King be immortal or a mind-form or that sort of thing.

I asked Olphon who was strangely good at describing things.

"Just like the words, it's impossible to kill the Demon King."

What kind of stupid answer is that.

"The current Demon King is the strongest of all time. That is true. I can assure you. Before he ceases to exist, there will be no demon who can trump him and take the throne of Demon King."

"A stupid answer till the end."

"Why do you think so?"

Why do I think so?

I'm calling a stupid answer stupid, what else can I call it.

"You all are always like this. You think that's everything probably because you're born with unimaginable strength and power."

"...What does that mean?"

"You have no interest in figuring out how to use that power better, and just ponder how to achieve more power. And."

"And?"

“You overtly trust the absolute amount of power.”

The strength of the demons here surpasses mine.

It wouldn't be comparable even if 89 Lee HoJae's were here to fight the 89 demons.

89 Lee HoJae's wouldn't be enough to surpass that one Olphon.

That sort of glaring difference.

But.

I'm already certain.

I'm the absolutely the strongest one here.

The position isn't made by my muscles and mana.

It wasn't from the experience of swordsmanship and shield techniques either.

It also wasn't the talent and sense I had.

What could you see as the standard for strength when those with the strength by which one wave of the hand fells the sky, and rips the earth.

To standardize it through the absolute quantity of mana was a stupid thing to do.

From my perspective, an objective standard should be victory.

A higher win rate means more strength.

The strong doesn't win, the victorious is strong.

As I've said multiple times, I'm unwaveringly the strongest here, and the probability that I'll beat the demons there surpass half.

“It seems you've really come here to die.”

As I gathered my spirit, Olphon said upon noticing.

He was that nonchalant even though I'm explicitly preparing for battle.

He doesn't know how to utilize this strength, and have never learned how to see true strength because he's been drunk on his own strength.

He couldn't even become the target of my Opponent Designation skill.

Just prey with bulky amounts of strength ready to be hunted.

How long will they disappoint me.

“Let me ask one last thing.”

Demons are hurt by explosions caused by magic.

Obviously, they're not hurt by explosions caused by their own.

Just like a moment ago.

But they were grievously wounded by the explosion made by the holy sword and me.

Physically and mentally.

It's probably because of the Holy energy in our mana.

The holy energy exploded in every direction along with the explosion and attacked them.

I had prepared something nice for the explosion.

Before I entered the 31st floor, I made a sphere of aura.

I had slowly rotated and maintained that.

Even this moment.

I added a sphere to that every day.

There were three spheres rotating above my head.

“What is it that you wanted to ask before your death?”

I smirked at Olphon’s still nonchalant voice.

“Are you used to pain?”

I’m fucking used to it.

At the same time as my words ended, the transparent spheres lit up in white flames.

Just before the spheres rotating at high speed started to create friction and explode, I gave up confining it.

[The God of Light is excited!]

And I lunged at the demons.

Boom!

From the strong explosion behind my back, my body was covered thoroughly in the impact.

I persevered.

I saved my blink.

Instead, I used Talalia’s wings and Fortitude.

The two skills raised by stats relative to the opponent's strength.

The demons couldn't gather their senses amidst the continuing explosions.

The strong light and sounds quashed their sight and hearing.

The holy energy mixed with mana pouring down upon them was no different from white phosphorous shells.

I took out the soul sword on my side.

Meanwhile, the magic initiated by demons that came to their sense blocked my path.

Shield, Barrier, Trap, Hallucination, the magic that binds my legs, and attack magics made to intercept filled vision in disarray.

Just like a barrage game.

I'm insanely good at this.

[Hero, can I join in? Please, Please!]

"Take care of the little ones! The ones in the middle are all mine!"

The holy sword went around the magic and towards the demons in the corners.

Before I lose my pretty to the holy sword, I need to make it past these magics.

Rather than taking a step backwards away from the magic flying towards me, I ran forward.

Chapter 179

Tutorial 31st Floor (6)

The festival of various magics in front of me.

The key is breaking past this and doing the most damage to the demons in front of me.

The holy sword went around the volley of magic and will take the small fry off to the side, so I just need to deal with the demons in the middle.

The main perpetrator of these magics and also those that are recovering the quickest from the effects of the explosion.

I swung the soul sword filled to the brim with aura and I cleared up a fireball coming towards me.

Before the fireball lapsed, it exploded as if it were natural.

As I was expecting it, I lowered my upper body to evade it and kept on running.

It wasn't just one or two magic spells that were flying at me.

There were tens just in my view.

There would be magic hidden behind other magic, and those that were hidden through special means from sight.

It's been a while.

Memories of the 1st and 2nd floor popped up.

I really thought I was going to die then.

Obviously, there is a vast difference between the me then and now.

But there's also a vast difference between the arrows from then and the magic missiles here.

If I'm hit properly, I'm definitely dead.

If I'm hit, I need to make sure it just grazes me, and sacrifice the parts I don't need to minimize damage.

I also have a constraint that I need to reach the demons while dodging the magics.

I raised my focus.

It wasn't as much as the God's Power of Time Confinement which was closer to time freezing, but I can do something similar with just my concentration all the time.

I located and counted each magic that I could see within the slow moving world.

And I calculated the velocity and course of those magics.

If there was one good takeaway, these magics were unfolded by the demons taken by surprise.

I won't run into death disguised as life while making my way through the cracks between the magic spells.

I didn't think they would be able to create a trap on a united front during that short time.

It wasn't an underestimation of their intelligence.

It was an assessment of the attitude they showed towards me before this battle.

And I trust my judgement.

As soon as I stopped concentrating, the magics flew towards me.

I crouched and lunged forward.

The magics flew dangerously close to my body.

Out of them, the sharp ice spear grazed my arm, but I was fine.

It was bearable.

The next moment, while I was charging at the enemies, I used blink for a step forward.

It was just one step, but the effect was outstanding.

While moving at high speed, using blink made me suddenly stop in place.

In front of me where a web of magic without any sort of gap.

But the magics didn't reach my body and went off in a separate direction.

This was the one spot that magic wouldn't touch my body with just enough space for this moment.

In barrage games, the key is to find these points and get to them safely.

I made my way forward again.

The wall of magic evaporated slowly, and a gap appeared.

This is the hard part.

I was already halfway towards the demons from where I began.

Even now, the demons were spewing magic.

The barrage would be thicker as I get closer.

There was a safe route.

But that was a longer path.

If there is a right path, there is a need to take it no matter how dangerous and painful.

A magic that seemed to be of the wind-type was flying towards me at high speed.

To be specific, there was nothing else besides the wind magic flying towards me from the front.

Everything else was aiming towards my escape routes.

If I can force myself through the wind magic, it's an open road.

Not that it's easy.

I don't know which damn demon cast that magic, but that's a super high-level magic.

The wind blades were rotating from the magic core in the middle.

It's basically a drill with blades of wind.

But I need to break through it.

If I go around, it would take too long.

I would be stumbling back, making the path here completely moot.

So, I need to break it.

Using a proper technique is not possible.

I don't have the minimal amount of time to initiate a technique.

Just before, I was twisting my body with abrupt acceleration and abrupt breaks to make it forward.

It wouldn't make sense to overwork my magic circuit.

My position is awkward.

I can't be sure I'll be able to muster the strength.

Just as I've evaded the magic missiles, I need to dodge again after breaking through this.

I need to prepare for that.

And after that as well.

There's only one way.

[Iron Wall]

[Talalia's Wings]

I wrapped my body in Talalia's wings and Iron Wall which raises the defense of my body temporarily.

I haven't don't this in a while.

I thought it was something that I wouldn't have to use again.

I curled my body so that Talalia's Wings would cover it completely.

I used my arms to cover my chest and head, and legs for my midsection.

And

[Blink]

I used blink to collide straight into the wind magic.

There was no chance of winning colliding against the wind blades.

I slammed against the magic core in the middle with my body.

Right after the collision, there was an explosive sound and shockwave, but I couldn't feel anything besides a thud.

I didn't hear or feel anything.

My consciousness shook.

My sight was uneven as though I were drunk, and my hearing was completely dead.

My sense of balance was in danger as well.

I didn't have a way to know how much damage I took.

But I stood on the ground, and there was a wide-open path in front of me where the extinguished wind magic was.

I ran along the path.

I couldn't recover the temporarily paralyzed senses.

Hearing, midsection, right shoulder, under the left knee, all of the magic circuit and the ones I couldn't verify weren't able to send me information.

The few senses left were whispering untruthful information to me.

The wavering vision and sense of balance.

I felt as though I would end up rolling on the ground from a wrong step.

It would be normal for anyone to lose control of their body and collapse on the ground.

Even ones stronger than me, of higher level, better swordsmanship, and with multiple various skills.

Nobody can run straight in this situation.

But I can.

Because I'm used to it.

I've been through the pain and chaos multiple times.

And at the end of the advance, I prepared the next step.

I closed a vast amount of distance between the demons and me.

The things blocking my path weren't magic missiles.

Shields, barriers and trap magics.

I had no intention of breaching each and every one.

I didn't have the skill.

I'll just explode everything.

The demons behind the magic, as a set.

I made a diagonal slash with the soul sword while keeping my running pace.

What does it matter if my body isn't normal, or if I can't feel the mana along the magic circuit.

The trained swordsman should know how to make a precise slash with their eyes closed.

I can also, without being able to feel anything from the magic circuit, can finish my skills.

“Die in flames you shits!”

Light Blade (光剣) , 2nd form – Slash.

[The God of Light is Cheering!]

The maximum force I could output unfolded right in front of the demons.

Even if they made magic shields and barriers, I definitely poured enough destructive power to surpass it.

The space filled with ominous black and red was filled with a white flash I created.

The light blade’s 2nd form, slash.

It looks simple, but once you get into the details it’s not a simple technique.

The light blade’s stab creates light and heat through the friction of aura and sends the explosive energy along with the one-point stab towards my front.

And the slash is a continuous stream of energy.

Unlike the stab which creates a flash and explosion for one moment, the slash needs the energy to be maintained from start to end.

The line, not a point, radiates a larger area with energy.

It spreads it over a larger area, but because it makes use of the fast blade movement and holds the energy instead of exploding it over a specified amount of time, the impact becomes greater.

If you hear until here, it's a magnificent technique.

It's more amazing when you use it yourself.

It explains its own might when you look at how it sent Olphon and the demons besides him to hell equally.

Just that the difficulty of employment is too high.

It's hard enough holding the energy at its zenith, but you also have to swing it.

In the process, you have to govern the energy from going wild when it is amplified.

You also can't forget to send it forward while you're holding the energy.

And making sure it all heads forward while the aura particles go every which way.

It's an insane difficulty.

But no matter what happened, I succeeded again this time.

The result was the giant craters and the tens of thousands of tokens to prove it.

The tokens Olphon and the demons under him have gathered.

From seeing the mountains of tokens, you could fathom how many demons they exploited and killed.

Good for me.

Thanks to that, I don't have to go around collecting, and can just gather the tokens I need here.

[You have cleared Tutorial, Hell Difficulty 31st floor.]

[All status ailments and injuries will be healed.]

[You have gained 6000 points for clear rewards.]

[You have gained 6000 Points for first clear rewards.]

[There are multiple Gods showing interest. Gained 7200 Points.]

[There are multiple Gods showing negative reception. Minus 1300 Points.]

[All of the Gods in the The Hundred God Temple are observing you.]

[A small number of Gods wish to gift you a special skill instead of giving you extra rewards.]

[Current Vote Poll: Agreement 1 vote. Disagreement 0 vote.]

[You have acquired Aura Mastery Lv.3.]

[Aura Master lv2. has been integrated into Aura Masters Lv.3.]

The clear message appeared.

After finishing the battle, while I was gathering the tokens the dead Olphon and demons dropped into my pocket's, the message suddenly appeared.

The travel portal appeared beneath my feet.

I first checked the extra rewards.

It's been a while since I've received a skill as an extra reward.

It was unexpected since I've been getting points or useless items of late.

Aura Mastery Lv.3

The magic circuit skill had turned into Aura Master Lv.1 after surpassing skill level of 30.

Not so long ago, I had raised Aura Master skill to level 2.

And I've received the level 3 this time as a gift.

...to be gifted a skill just one level higher.

The fuck is this.

Stingy.

If you're gonna gift, gift big.

The vote results for extra rewards were one yes and zero nos.

So, put it in another way, one god wanted to gift an extra reward, and they agreed to it themselves.

And since nobody disagreed, it passed.

Who was that, the agreement?

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

It was the God of Light.

I've gotten an offer to become the apostle of the God of Light after clearing the 26th floor.

I didn't know much about the God of Light, so I waited to hear KiriKiri's advice before making a decision.

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

It seems that he wanted to appeal himself because of that, and gifted the skill as an extra reward.

If he's gonna gift, why not go big and gift a God Power.

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

Argh, I got it. I KNOW.

I saw it. I SAW THE MESSAGE!

Stop it!

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

[The God of Adventure is displeased.]

Chapter 180

Tutorial 32nd Floor

[The God of Light announces it was him!]

...

...Is it over?

I wasn't sure, so I decided to wait a moment.

...

Hmm...

Seems to be over.

The messages announcing that the Aura Mastery skill was gifted by the God of Light himself finally stopped.

The continuously ongoing messages indirectly reflected the God of Light's personality.

It wasn't a very loveable personality.

Since the bombardment of messages finally stopped, I continued with my thoughts.

The 31st floor stage was cleared.

I've gathered 1,000 tokens, and by making it through the preliminaries, I've completed the clear conditions.

But I haven't seen the so-called strongest Demon King anywhere.

It was unsatisfying to just take the portal.

“Abubu.”

[It's Ahoubuch. Hero.]

“Can you go wake the demons dying over there so I can ask them some questions?”

Aubutz squealed happily and flew toward the demons.

Holy sword... no, the cursed sword Aubutz likes to keep his enemies just at the tip of death.

He hasn't clarified, but it's probably because he wants to relish the warm blood.

Blood goes cold once they're dead.

So he lets the enemies slowly die of hemorrhaging.

If possible, I intend to fix that bad taste as soon as I have the chance, but for now, it was rather helpful.

None of the demons I've dealt with were alive.

I walked over to the holy sword who was applying healing magic to the dying demons and waking the unconscious demons with various magics.

I could hear the grief-stricken cries with each step I made.

[Hero! It's all set. Ask whatever you want!]

I pointed out it was an overdone setup and proceeded to question the demons.

“So, if you collect a thousand tokens, you automatically get summoned to the 2nd preliminary area?”

“Yes. Yes. It is so.”

The demon answering my questions was fortunately the same demon that brought me here through gate magic.

He had quite the different attitude from his otherwise pompous image he’s been cultivating, but I couldn’t embarrass him by pointing that out.

Who could keep their calm when there was a cursed sword piercing their left shoulder and humming along to the beat of their heart?

I carefully took out the crazy cursed sword from the demon’s shoulder.

[Uahuaahhkh. Hero! It was perfect! It was a perfect moment! The moments when his heartbeat slowed little by little.]

I casually tossed the crazy sword spewing insanity into the inventory.

Based on the demon’s explanation, you have to pass through multiple gates to challenge the Demon King.

And to go onto the next stage, you must follow the summoning circle that appears after you collect the tokens.

Obviously, there wasn’t a summoning circle in front of my eyes that would lead me to the next stage.

It seemed like this stage ended here.

I ignored the fleeing demon that dashed as soon as I shifted my gaze away, and stepped atop the portal.

I stepped out of the black and red colorways of the space covered slathered in demon blood and into the bright green field.

The field was green like always, and the bunny was active as always.

“Hi! Been a while! It’s been a while!”

“Yeah, it’s been a while.”

“Then, cake for commemoration!”

The last bit came as naturally as a greeting.

But the expression on Kiri Kiri’s face said otherwise.

Her pursed lips tremored, and the tip of her nose wrinkled busily.

The eyes twinkled with abnormal desire, and I could hear the vigorous sound of nose breathing.

I was certainly later than normal because I had to pass through the residence area of the 30th floor.

Even so, it hadn’t been more than a few days; KiriKiri probably intended to use it as a reason to greet with a long time no see.

To respond to her rather simple wits, I bought a cake.

“So, the next floor is the 2nd preliminary?”

“Yup.”

I left KiriKiri alone, who was completely absorbed in the cake, and thought to myself.

The second area of the gathering of Demon King candidates was the 32nd floor.

Then it means I’ll eventually be able to challenge the Demon King.

If I thought about it positively, it would be so.

If I think about it negatively...

“It might be too easy. If I make it higher, there won’t be another like Olphon right?”

“Nope.”

It was so.

First of all, there was no reason to meet Olphon on the 31st floor and take care of him.

It’s much easier to massacre demons on the outskirts and gather 1,000 tokens that way.

In addition, if you get called before Olphon, you could gain his acknowledgement and proceed onto the next area.

Olphon said that there were demons like himself.

To clear the 31st floor, try not to be noticed by Olphon’s underlings.

And once discovered, avoid being summoned.

And once summoned, earn his acknowledgement.

This would be enough for the strategy to clear the 31st floor.

I took out a notepad from the space pocket and wrote it down.

I need to show this to Lee Hyungjin later.

Lee Hyungjin has been recently progressing through the latter half of the 9th floor.

The reports he sent me and the speed by which he was progressing through the level was enough to make me yawn, but I placed great significance on him reaching the end of the 9th floor alive.

Once he clears the 11th floor, it'll be a continuous stream of solo stages.

The stages afterwards would be a breeze to pass through.

“KiriKiri.”

I called KiriKiri who had finished the cake and was proceeding to lick the plate.

“Hmm? Yeah!”

Based on Kiri Kiri's expression peering at me from the side of the plate, it seems as though she expected me to buy her another cake.

Sorry, but I just had something I needed to ask.

“Uhh... that.”

“Yeah, Seregia.”

KiriKiri can read my mind and watch over my performance on the stages.

So, I don't need to go on and on with explaining my frustration and questions.

“The holy sword is correct.”

“So how does it end?”

“She probably becomes a sword. A sword with a clear volition.”

“Shouldn't you see Seregia as a living sword right now too?”

Kiri Kiri whipped her head side to side and explained.

“No, that's not what living swords are. And not all swords with a will are living swords.”

“Then?”

Kiri Kiri put down her plate.

From her rolling her eyes and biding her time, it looks as though she was organizing her thoughts.

Because she knows that this is important to me, Kiri Kiri makes sure that I am able to understand her words by choosing her vocabulary carefully. I’m always grateful for her considerations.

“Houuujaee probably doesn’t know from just using normal swords, but there are notable swords that possess will every now and then.”

“Different from living swords?”

“Yup. Not like talking and using magic through intellect. Just nesting a willpower into the sword. And the will of the sword synchronizes with the owner and shows its effects that way.”

“What kind of effect?”

“Thaaat... isn’t something that’s set in stone. It’s something swordsmen can infer from using the swords themselves.”

Now it was apparent that Kiri Kiri wasn’t being careful; she just didn’t know much about the subject.

You can infer from using swords...

“The soul inside the soul sword matches your propensity, possessed the sword while in frequent use , and is friendly to you, so the effects will probably be positive. What, how, and how much is something that I don’t know.”

Upon hearing Kiri Kiri’s words, a new question came up.

“So, is that why you suggested the soul sword back then?”

Kiri Kiri had suggested that I buy the soul sword when I’ve harvested Seregia’s soul and entered Kiri Kiri’s field.

Did she suggest it because she knew that once Serezia’s soul possessed the soul sword, her soul would be helpful and have a high rate of synchrony?

That’s what I thought.

Kiri Kiri shook her head.

“Nope.

“Really?”

“Yup. I know of things that happen and will happen, but I don’t know much about things that are uncertain of happening.”

“That’s how it is huh.”

I took a minute to think about Kiri Kiri’s words.

While fragmented, being able to predict the future is probably linked to various information associated with the Tutorial.

For example, what will appear in the next floor.

She said she isn’t able to predict the future of uncertain qualities.

The variable of Serezia and the variable of me tied together into a soul sword can’t be predicted.

Would that apply only to Kiri Kiri, or every...

“It’s the same for every administrating God.”

“...Yeah?”

“Gods with power related to prescience can only see fragments of the clues to the future. Although, I don’t know if the God of Slow can peek into it.”

Gods too cannot decide the future.

It was precious information.

What it means is, it’s expensive information.

“Is that something you can tell me?”

“Yup.”

“Explain.”

“Can you imagine what it would be like for someone to follow a predetermined path?”

It was the same question that popped into my head a moment ago.

“It would be despairing. It wouldn’t have a positive effect to Houuujaeee, and that’s why I’m giving you advice in advance. That it’s not so.”

I was grateful for those words.

“Plus, you don’t need any tips until the 35th floor, so you have room to work with in the information department.”

Kiri Kiri softly closed her eyes and held her chin high upon finishing her words.

She was being proud with a smile on her lips.

When Kiri Kiri herself felt that she did a good job, she always seemed satisfied and proud.

Well, it was good advice considering the price of the information.

It was something to be proud of.

“Thanks, Kiri Kiri.”

Kiri Kiri didn’t show it but she was really happy.

And became a step more arrogant.

Both her nose and shoulders went up about 5 centimeters.

Kiri Kiri’s heavy nose-breathing reached my face.

Like the breeze from a fan, it was enough to flip my hair back.

Finding Kiri Kiri amusing, I laughed by myself for quite a while.

[Welcome to the 32nd stage.]

[The 31st floor stage beings.]

Explanation: You have entered the demon realm ?? ???. The ?? ??? has been known for producing strong Demon Kings through a special tradition of placing all demons in this area into one space every hundred years in a battle royale. Only the victor may challenge the Demon King.

The current Demon King of ?? ??? region has been ruling for four hundred years and is evaluated as the strongest in the ?? ??? region.

Prove that you are the strongest challenger in the ?? ??? region by winning the contest.

Lastly, prove that you are the strongest demon in the ?? ??? region by defeating the ruler of ?? ??? region.

[Clear Criteria]

Make it through the ??? ?? region's 2nd preliminaries.

Based on what I heard from Kiri Kiri, the 32nd floor's theme is no different from the 31st floor.

It will be run the same way.

Only the number of tokens I have to collect has changed

The number of tokens I have to collect now in total is ten thousand.

The number is absurdly high, but the demons that have made it through the 1st round and have reached the 2nd round all have over a thousand tokens each.

If you think about it, it makes it easier.

While the method was similar, the 32nd stage was constructed differently compared to the 31st floor.

Unlike the 31st floor layout of small rooms and connected pathways, the 32nd floor was one enormous interconnected area.

It seems to have been unified into one space because the number of demons in the 2nd round was small.

And the demons driven into the space were making a very desirable atmosphere.

Even though I appeared, none of the demons were paying any attention to me.

It wasn't indifference.

They were just too busy.

Their bodies weren't busy.

Having killed a thousand demons and entering the 2nd round with their thousand tokens gathered, the demons were busy examining each other with an air of hostility.

It felt good.

This was exactly what I wanted.

It was easy to notice.

There's no group here.

Each of the hundreds of demons here are each other's enemies.

What I couldn't feel from Olphon, who had a massive amount of mana, I could feel it in each of the demons here.

Tenison, spirit, intent to kill, fear, apprehension, excitement, delight.

The violent emotions shook, and they hid their evils schemes behind the emotions.

They monitored each other and were preparing for an imminent brawl.

The demons' standoff was maintaining an exquisite equilibrium.

How did this come to be.

How long has this been going on for.

Maybe I was summoned right after a vigorous brawl, and everyone was taking a breather.

Everyone was fired up, but nobody was moving.

Everyone knew.

In such a tense situation of hundreds of demons keeping an eye on each other, whoever makes the first move will be the primary target.

So, they're waiting for their chance.

For someone to make a move.

For this standoff to break.

While sharpening their intent.

I was summoned into an amusing situation.

The only one that can move in this situation is me. Only me.

Slowly and in a carefree manner, I moved my feet.

And I approached the middle of the space.

Every time I took step, the demons jittered.

My movemets hid the targets from others' lines of sight.

The demons debated whether to move on the blindsight I created, or to wait until the blind spot I created disappeared.

The mana that were competing for control of the space were shaking because of my movements.

It wasn't just disturbing sight and mana.

The small speculation weakens concentration.

And the gap created like that, appears to be a giant hole to the enemies confronting each other with spirits raised.

Large enough to easily take the opponent's life.

“Kuaaahk!”

“Kyak!”

“W,Wait! Kuk...”

“Kek. Phuaa... this can't be. Because of one crazy newbie. Ugk...”

“Kyaaa!”

Every step lead to the shattering of paused confrontation, and battles began.

Several demons died off.

It was a good feeling.

It felt as though I had become an eye of the storm.

I had soon reached the middle of the area.

I stood there for a moment.

The area was quiet again.

The demons showing openings have become consumed, and the demons who showed an opening by consuming those demons were consumed as well.

The only demons that were left were those unshaken by my movements and with an eye on their surroundings.

And me.

I had no intention of keeping this standoff.

Rather, I wanted to splendidly shatter it.

I took out the space pocket from the inventory.

The tens of millions of tokens gathered from killing Olphon and his underlings.

I tired of collecting them and casually shoved them into the space pocket.

Standing on the middle of the area, I flipped the space pocket in my hands.

The red-black tokens started to fall onto the ground.

The tokens on the ground soon surpassed tens, hundreds, thousands, and reached ten thousands.

And even so, the tokens kept on pouring out.

What is the goal of the demons here?

To gather ten thousand tokens and make it to the next area.

The mounds of tokens falling to my feet like a waterfall gripped their eyes and hearts for a moment.

The ambition brought about by the agitation created giant divisions incomparable to before.

The stance of demons was shaken for a moment, and the demons all aimed for each other's openings.

The simultaneous battle made more openings, and more battles.

The cries and screams of demons could be heard from every direction.

Greed and fear

The most desperate emotions collided and as a by-product blood and death trickled down.

From the midst of the extremely satisfying situation, I quietly smiled.

[Hero, Hero. Me too! Me too! Let me in!]

Like a child jumping up and down begging for candy, the holy sword whined.

Pulling out the holy sword from my waist, I ran into the raving waves of battle.

[You have cleared the 32nd floor.]

Chapter 181

Tutorial 34th Floor

As I stood on the portal headed to the 34th floor, a message appeared.

[Before you enter the stage, select your party members]

[Current party members (1/1)]

-Lee Hojae

It was the same theme from the 31st stage, but the number of participants kept on changing.

The 31st floor was a solo stage.

The 32nd floor was meant to be done with a group of 5 and 33rd floor with 10.

But the 34th floor stage was a solo stage.

The theme didn't change, but it raised the difficulty by expanding the number of participants.

And once at the 34th floor stage, it returned back to a solo stage.

Based on Kiri Kiri's prediction that I'll be up against the Demon King on the 34th floor, the 34th is the one that actually needs more party members.

If there was one that made it past the 33rd floor by becoming more of a supporter, that person wouldn't be able to make it through the 34th floor.

Ruthless construction as always.

Before I entered the stage, I organized my thoughts.

As I finished my preparations and was about to get up from my seat, I heard a strange voice.

[urgh... Urgh...]

“The fuck is this? Do you wanna go back into the inventory?”

It wasn't a surprise since it was common for this crazy holy sword to start convulsing randomly.

[It's not me! Hero, it's not me making the sound.]

“Sure, sure. I'm sure. Do you still practice female voices?”

[Of course! Since you, the hero, like it!]

“It would be better if it was an actual female's voice, but I don't want to hear a man masking a feminine voice.”

[Anyway, it's not me making the voice! Its Seregia!]

After the holy sword's words, I examined Seregia who was bound to the soul sword.

[Ah, Ah... Um...]

The voice came again.

I was sure.

Just as the holy sword said, the voice was Seregia's.

I didn't realize it was her voice, because it sounded tired and listless, unlike Seregia's typically strong and clear voice.

I thought it was the holy sword mimicking a female ghost.

“Seregia?”

I called Seregia, but no answer came.

After keeping an eye on the soul sword for a little while, I became nervous.

“Aubu. Do you think we need to some urgent care or something?”

[What urgent care? Are you gonna do CPR on the handle? It’s because she’s trying to say something, but it isn’t working out. Let’

As per the holy sword’s words, I put the soul sword on the ground and waited.

Seregia’s voice came through a few words every minute.

It was practically senseless mumbling, but as time went on the voice became clearer.

[Ah... Uh... H, Hero. Hero...]

Seregia finally succeeded in saying proper words after mumbling on for some time.

“Yeah. Seregia. I’m here. Take your time.”

[Wish. I have a wish.]

Seregia finally spoke her wish after being silent for days.

I tensed up in case her wish was to become human again or to leave the sword.

If so, I would need to ask Kiri Kiri about the means to do so.

It would be at a large expense, but I was willing to do so if it was what Seregia wanted.

I don't know how much of a help Seregia synchronizing completely to the sword was, but I wanted to continue having conversations with Seregia.

[Hero...]

“Yeah. Speak your wish without worry.”

[...Snacks.]

“Huh?”

[I want to eat snacks.]

I was speechless.

Seregia went silent after declaring she wanted to eat snacks.

The holy sword explained.

[There seems to be a human conscience appearing from the process of becoming one with the sword. The obsessions of the previous life or something like that seems to have brought forth a desire for snacks that she used to like.]

Normally, wouldn't family or aspirations come up first?

Or at least playing basketball.

Snacks, straight out of the blue.

Maybe I need to set up a ceremonial table for her with snacks.

[Welcome to the 34th floor.]

[The 34th floor's challenge begins.]

Explanation: You have entered the demon realm ?? ???. The ?? ??? has been known for producing strong Demon King through a special tradition of placing all demons in this area into once space every hundred years, and only the victor may challenge the Demon King.

The current Demon King of ?? ??? region has been ruling for four hundred years and is evaluated as the strongest in the ?? ??? region

By making it through the main round, you have proved that you are the strongest challenger from the ?? ??? preliminary area.

Now prove that you are the strongest challenger by battling the challengers that have made it past the main round and head toward the challenge round where the Demon King awaits.

Lastly, prove that you are the strongest demon in the ?? ??? region by defeating the ruler of ?? ??? region.

[Clear Criteria]

Pass the ??? ?? Final Stage

The area I was summoned to was a wide-open space.

The space carried over the theme from the 31st floor: an underground space filled with red and black colorways.

If I had to specify one interesting thing, unlike the 32, 33rd floors, there was just one demon in sight and.

“Hey, Newbie. How are you doing?”

His attitude was relaxed.

The demon greeting me was laying on his side and had a cigarette in his mouth.

His posture was full of openings, but I didn't want to exploit those openings.

The demon seemed to have no intention of fighting me.

I felt no fighting spirit or apprehension.

"This is quite unexpected."

"What."

"The stages before this point were packed with intense competition. So, I didn't expect a sight peaceful as this."

It wasn't just the demon in front of me.

They couldn't be seen, but there were demons lying lethargically all around this large space.

Even though I spread my mana and detected them, they didn't react in any way.

It was strange considering the demons here have made it up here killing countless other demons.

"It's possible."

I waited for the demon to continue.

But instead, the demon quietly continued to smoke.

"...From what I've heard, you don't need to collect anymore tokens."

"That's right."

"Then what do you do here? Just go ahead and challenge the Demon King?"

The demon pretended not to hear me.

Only after he was done with his cigarette did he scratch his head and began to explain.

“Well... since I took on the guide role, I’ll explain the basics. There’s no need to collect tokens here. The moment you wish to challenge the Demon King, a summoning circle will appear. That’s it.”

“Then, what do you do here?”

I repeated my question from before.

Thankfully, this time I was able to get an answer.

“It’s for the demons to challenge each other and assess their strength. Also, it’s for demons to gather their strength before challenging the Demon King.”

“It doesn’t look it.”

“Yeah well.”

I waited for a while, but the demon didn’t say anything after the “yeah well.”

So, I had to ask again.

“Why are you so carefree?”

“It wasn’t like this from the beginning. The demons here tried everything to improve before challenging the Demon King. They measured their strength by dueling each other. And we chose who the strongest demon amongst us was.

And the demon chosen through that went on to challenge the Demon King.”

“And?”

“And what else? The challenging demons all died to the Demon King. Like I said, the challenging demons were the strongest ones here.”

That’s why they gave up.

‘It meant they gave up instead of trying to improve.’

The demons stronger than him all challenged the Demon King, but all of them died.

Even if they duel the each other here and cultivate their strength it’s obvious that they’ll end up dying, so they don’t challenge the King.

Since they don’t bother challenging, they don’t try to grow stronger.

More and more gave up to the point where everyone ended up giving up.

It’s a common tale.

“Yeah, well. We just wait until the event is over. It’s boring, but what can you do?”

I felt déjà vu.

During my time as a pro-gamer, I had visited another team’s dorms.

It was a team that was last in the pro league and soon-to-be disbanded.

The players there were just like this.

I didn’t like them.

Even if they believed that ‘we’re going to lose anyway, and no matter how many times we try it won’t change it,’ they can still try

And their efforts will come back to reward them.

But they didn't try.

They burned time making their rut a habit.

It was enough to make me angry by just looking at them.

I found no reason to attack them.

They weren't opponent or prey.

They couldn't even become a punching bag for practice.

It was no different from a corpse lying on the ground.

Instead of wasting my time, I wanted to challenge the Demon King.

As soon as I thought that, a summoning circle appeared before my eyes.

It seemed to be a different form than the one from the tutorial.

“Newbie, you're going to challenge right away? Don't go. You'll die. Do you really want the Demon King's throne so bad? How about just waiting here for the event to end? You can get a spot for yourself by just making it here.”

The demon talked at a pace never seen before.

What would be the reason for saying those words?

Is he concerned for my life who he saw for the first time?

Or does he want to justify himself lying on the dirt and squirming like a worm?

That it's not possible, that this is the more effective and comfortable route.

Is that how he wants to comfort himself?

I didn't see a reason in responding to the pointless attempts at dissuasion.

I just got up on the summoning circle without any words.

Once on the summoning circle, my surroundings were enshrouded in light.

As the light faded away and my vision restored itself, I could see the changed surroundings.

There was a giant throne a little higher than my line of vision, and there was a giant Demon sitting atop the throne.

[You have entered the last phase of the 34th floor.]

"A challenger at last. Welcome."

The demon sitting atop the high throne looking down at me had a familiar face.

It was the demon I met on the 26th floor.

"You're recycled too huh."

"What does that mean?"

I thought it would be like this.

That the Demon King appearing on the 26th floor and the Demon King of the 34th floor would be the same.

They had the same title, and the information I gathered from the demons exactly described the Demon King I had seen.

So, it was fully plausible.

But aside from that, it was a little unpleasant.

The opponent I had killed with my own hands standing there. Alive.
With no remembrance of event happening.

It's natural that he doesn't remember.

It didn't happened to this Demon King.

I shook away the train of thought.

I knew the unfortunate fate of the Demon King being a captive of the tutorial, but I didn't need to equate it with her

"It's a delight that a challenger has finally appeared to comfort my boredom. I'm curious. How did a little squirt like you make it up here?"

A forced smile welled up.

I couldn't feel any sort of tension from the Demon King sitting atop the throne.

Just like when I had met Olphon.

It's probably the same for the demon I had met just before.

They pronounce the result as it were predetermined, and they deem the process before the result insignificant.

It was a stunning portrayal of arrogance.

They believe they are able to do something even the Gods cannot do.

Is that why they are demons?

Those sorts of thoughts came to mind.

“Speak up. Since the results are certain, feel free to talk before you die. If you are able to relieve my boredom, I won’t kill you before the event is over.”

It was amusing.

There was a big difference between the 26th floor me and the me now...

But the Demon King’s guard is still relaxed even after seeing me.

What would he have thought of me on the 26th floor.

He probably thought he could squash me as easily as a bug.

And because of that complacency, he was in danger of being recalled in the middle of the summoning, and forcibly tried to bring the power of his true being.

And died.

I didn’t want the same thing to happen again.

On the 26th floor, I used the light blade to finish him off as soon as he was summoned.

If I didn’t so do, I couldn’t assure my victory.

But now, I have room to play around.

Enough to hold back while fighting that Demon King.

Enough to induce him into bringing out his whole power.

I calmly pondered how to make him angry.

And I found it.

“Aububu.”

[It's Aubutz, Hero!]

Chapter 182

Tutorial 35th Floor (1)

The holy sword did his job well.

The holy sword flew over to the Demon King who seemed quite interested and proceeded to whisper something that infuriated him.

The subsequent battle was one-sided.

Even if there was a gap in power, it was the same Demon King he had defeated on the 26th floor.

I was faster and stronger than before.

I could react to the Demon King's movements, and my attacks dealt significant damage to the Demon King.

I defended against the Demon King's attacks and mixed in counterattacks to buy time.

And when the critical moment came, I used the light blade to finish the battle.

It was the basic strategy of swordsmanship.

It was something I noticed before, but this sword technique is effective against those that are stronger than me and groups of enemies.

I suddenly felt thankful to the Knight I met on the 16th floor.

“So.”

[Yes?]

“What did you say that made the Demon King so mad?”

The Demon King had sprung at me like a madman upon hearing the holy sword's words.

While it helped accomplish my goal of making the Demon King give his all, it was rather rough to deal with a Demon King who gave no regards about his safety.

[That is.]

“Yeah.”

[A secret. Kyu.]

I felt a strong urge to hit the sword.

I could understand the Demon King's feelings. Just a tiny bit.

[You have cleared the Tutorial, Hell Difficulty 34th floor]

[All status ailments and injuries will be healed.]

[You have acquired 6000 points for clearing the level.]

[You have acquired 6000 points for being the first person to clear this level.]

[There are multiple Gods showing a positive response. Gained 4300 points.]

[There are multiple Gods showing a negative response. 1200 points deducted.]

[Extra rewards are given based on play records.]

[4400 points acquired.]

There wasn't an extra reward of note this time either.

There are a lot of Gods showing an interest in me, but not that many Gods that gift authorities.

Even the God of Light showed interest by gifting me extra rewards, but didn't gift an authority.

Maybe it was because of the constraint that each God can only gift an authority to one challenger.

I heard that it doesn't apply if the gifting is done anonymously like the God of Death did, but it didn't seem to be common.

Since I had nothing more to think about, I casually stepped into the portal.

"It was too easy?"

"Yeah."

"In truth, the Demon King is a considerably strong being. It wasn't that easy of a stage."

"I thought the Demon King who appeared on the 34th floor stage was around average difficulty since it was a solo stage. But the earlier bouts were too easy."

Kiri Kiri scratched her nose at my words.

She didn't seem to agree.

"On the 31st floor it's easily possible to gather one thousand tokens by just going after the weak demons on the outskirts. You could obtain tens, hundreds if you killed the demons who were essentially a safe. and the 32nd and 33rd floor were party-play."

"Uhhh... that's true."

“Didn’t you specifically say before that difficulty spikes after the 30th floor?”

My questioning put Kiri Kiri in a rough spot.

She had no idea how much I anticipated the stages after the 30th floor after hearing Kiri Kiri’s words.

If it was a mistake or she misspoke, Kiri Kiri will pay the price.

I won’t buy her cake

“Ahh! No! I haven’t misspoken!”

“Then?”

“The premise was wrong.”

“Explain.”

Kiri Kiri seemed torn on the explanation.

“Hng... it’ll be expensive to explain everything.”

“It’s not like there’s information I need to know right away. Just tell me.”

I didn’t need information on how to clear stages that badly right now.

I was easily clearing with just the minimum amount of information anyway.

“I’ll explain it as briefly as possible. First of all the Demons aren’t that weak. Even the ones in the outskirts.”

They seem weak...

“Not just the strength they have, but their high degree of intellect and sly, atrocious temperament warrant an even higher risk.”

I thought of the demons I met on the outskirts of the 31st floor.

I never had trouble dealing with their intellect.

“That’s because Houujaeer is too strong. You took care of them before they had a chance to think. And some demons did hold onto their lives by leaving a good impression to Houujaeer.”

That was true.

Although, they were the victim.

“Being a victim doesn’t mean they’re virtuous. All the ones there are demons, and that holds truer. The reason why Houujaeer unconditionally took them as victims was because of their behavior. And that was deliberate acting on their part.”

Hmm...

“If Houujaeer was weak, they would’ve stuck a knife in your back without thinking twice.”

That might be true.

And the different in power between me and them were part of the reason why I wasn’t concerned with them.

Maybe it’s true that the demons recognized that I had no interest in them and wanted to avoid irritating me.

Looking back to when I was questing a demon who was a victim on the 31st floor, after I let one faint, the others fainted as soon as I asked them questions too.

“Then what about the demons like Olphon? They seemed rather stupid.”

“That’s... That’s also because Houujaeer is too strong.”

“Not because they’re too weak?”

Olphon and his underlings possessed frightening degrees of strength.

They had much greater pools of mana than I did.

Both them and I were aware of the fact.

“Because Houujaeer’s mana is mostly hidden away. That’s why they couldn’t discern Houujaeer’s full power.”

The mana circulating in the body flows out of the body every rotation of the magic circuit.

And the mana that flows out becomes a gauge for measuring the characteristics of the mana and how much mana the other person has.

Even their intentions.

But.

“I’m not at the level of pissing mana out anymore.”

Kiri Kiri shook her head vigorously.

“That’s not as easy as it sounds.”

Wasn’t that hard.

“They misjudged the amount and couldn’t read your intentions. So, they couldn’t help but look down on you. It would be hard for the demons to believe that the skill difference would be that large when the volume of mana differed that much.”

Is that so.

I was convinced by Kiri Kiri's explanations.

I never thought my opponents would misjudge me like that because of the mana I had put away in order to be more efficient.

Especially opponents like the Demon King and Olphon.

I pondered for a moment.

First, this will help me in the future battles.

It has a tremendous effect of the outcome of battle if the enemy can't fully fathom my power like Olphon and the other demons. But if my enemies keep looking down on me, it'll be difficult to fight the way I want to.

Do I need to intentionally let some mana loose to coerce them?

Against an opponent with much more mana than me?

The reason I hadn't done so until now was simple.

It's just not efficient.

Then would it be possible to let broadcast my intentions instead of mana?

That would solve the problem if I could coerce them without wasting my energy.

Hmm... I can't think of a way right now.

This is something I need to think about.

If possible, it would be very helpful.

I stopped pondering and looked at Kiri Kiri.

Since she took sated my curiosities, I opened the Shop window to gift her a cake.

“Wait.”

“Huh?”

“There’s something I need to tell you first.”

My hands froze just as I was about to buy her the cake.

Something more important than cake to Kiri Ki.

I had no idea what she was going to say, but my body stiffened in anticipation of bad news.

“Next floor?”

“Yeah, let me explain the next floor.”

I thought it was about changes in the system or some sort of problem, but it was an explanation for the next floor.

While Kiri Kiri has offered in-depth explanation of critical dangers, it was the first time Kiri Kiri had something to explain with a serious expression like this.

Does it mean it’s that dangerous?

I saw the worried expression on Kiri Kiri’s face, but a corner of my heart lit up from the excitement.

“The main theme of the next floor is surviving for a certain length of time.”

Survival with a time limit.

It sounded similar to the 12th floor.

Will there be a similar restriction like the sealing of the inventory window?

“The next floor will start from the 1st floor.”

Huh?

“First, you have to survive for an hour on the 1st floor. Then 2 hours on the 2nd floor. Three on the 3rd floor. And so forth.”

“It’s surviving on the floors I was on for a specific amount of time?”

“Yeah. From the 1st floor until the 34th floor. For approximately 24 days.”

I thought about the information Kiri Kiri gave me.

It’s not hard to hold out on the lower floors.

Even now, there were people surviving on jerky and water on the 1st floor.

“Both the inventory and items will be confiscated.”

“What about the items I take?”

“Same for those too. You have to do it with bare hands, without the starting weapons.”

That’s a bit harsh.

They’ll drop me on the 1st floor with just my bare hands?

Magicians and clerics will probably die here.

“The progress you’ve made until now will be gone too. You have to start again from level 1.”

“What?”

“Your body will return to the condition it was in back to when you first started the tutorial. Just for 35th floor though.”

I dwelled on Kiri Kiri’s words for a moment.

It felt as though the words weren’t registering in my brain.

I slowly understood her words.

And.

“Hey! That’s a bit harsh!”

“I didn’t make it that way!”

Kiri Kiri screamed back at me.

Fuck. I thought the Gods calmed down for a bit, but the fucking Gods were up to it again.

Are they even sane?

They’ll roll back the progress I’ve made until now?

[The God of Adventure is feels falsely accused.]

I didn’t care that the God felt falsely accused; I kept on thinking.

I can survive on the 1st floor.

The theme of the 1st floor are traps, and I won’t die if I make it past the traps.

The problems were the stages that began with fights.

For example ,the 31st floor begins with a run-in with two demons at the entrance.

Going up against two demons with the body that just entered the Tutorial...

I'll die a hundred times even if I had the chance to fight them a hundred times.

"But you get to progress anew."

"Progress?"

"Since you return to level 1, you can progress again from level 1. You can gain skills too."

Basically, you can start again from the beginning.

But there was still a problem.

There wasn't enough time

There were only 24 days to make it from the 1st floor to the 34th floor.

Could I make enough progress to survive through all the stages in just 24 days?

I wasn't sure.

"There's one thing I want you to promise."

Kiri Kiri grasped the tip of my clothes while I was thinking hard.

"This was why I told you about the stage in advance."

"What is it?"

"Please, it's an earnest request."

I could predict the next words out of Kiri Kiri's mouth when she said request.

"Don't overdo it. The 35th floor stage focused on how to deal with yourself when the progress you've made is gone rather than surviving against your opponents. You need to keep that in mind."

How you deal with yourself...

Does it want me to feel ashamed or something from seeing myself become incompetent overnight?

"The 35th stage isn't something you can clear with just strength. You have to focus on survival using supplementary skills like conversation and hiding rather than strategy and fighting to clear it."

Even so, there aren't many stages that are dangerous from the moment you enter.

Furthermore, the enemies that appear in the beginning are passive.

Not just passive, but they can become friendly depending on how I behave.

Even thinking back to the 16th floor, the doppelgänger was one example.

So, if I don't overextend myself, I can guarantee my survival.

But.

"I dunno."

Too bad I don't work that way

Chapter 183

Tutorial 35th Floor (2)

[Round 24, Day 2. 23h 55m]

[Huh? Really?]

“Yeah, really.”

[Really? Really?]

“Yes, really.”

[Really? Really? Really? For real?]

I threw the holy sword who was obnoxiously making nasal voices into the inventory.

It's been doing that ever since it heard that I won't be able to bring him out for over 24 days.

It's not like I couldn't understand how suffocating it was to be confined in the inventory for all that time, but what could I do?

The system wouldn't let me access my gear.

[Does that apply to me as well?]

Seregia abruptly asked.

“Yeah, you too.”

Seregia didn't say any more.

It seems as though she fell back down into her deep consciousness.

Thankfully, Seregia still speaks up like that every now and then.

It startles me because her timing is random and out of the blue, but it was better than nothing.

I put the soul sword into the inventory as well.

Since the gear will all be confiscated, I didn't need to prepare anything and stepped atop the portal.

Past the campfire room, I entered the 35th stage.

[Welcome to the 35th floor stage.]

[Round 24, Day 3. 0h 0m]

“Phewwww.”

I tried not to make any unnecessary noises, but I couldn't help but let out a long sigh.

It was an expected sight.

It was just as Kiri Kiri had said.

I knew it was going to happen, but the shock came again.

I was standing at the entrance of the 1st floor stage.

A straight dark pathway.

There were faint lights embedded in the ceiling every few meters.

The three-meter-high ceiling.

The floors and walls made of rough stone material.

I shed a lot of blood on these floors.

A chill ran down my spine.

It wasn't because I was stuck in my past trauma.

It was the feeling, not the familiar sight.

My feet hurt.

No, hurt as much as.

I could feel the hard floor

The feeling of exhaustion in my feet from standing on the stone floors felt very foreign.

The leather armor I was wearing until just a moment ago was all gone, and I was wearing the thin clothes from when I first entered the Tutorial.

The smooth modern clothes that I hadn't seen for a long time were unfamiliar.

My body was also unfamiliar.

The inhalations were brisk, and my beating heart felt fragile enough to burst at any moment.

I couldn't feel any strength in my arms and legs.

My vision was dark.

Though the lights were faint, they were just barely enough for me to discern the straight hallway.

It was no longer the superhuman body that I was used to for the last two years, but the typical body of a NEET – living life as though I were crippled and spending time alone in my room.

[The 35th floor stage begins.]

Explanation: Your body returns to the time it was the weakest. By walking in the footsteps that you have once already made, survive in a different way.

The stage has 34 gates in total, and each gate mostly coincides with those that you have passed through before.

Everything you have achieved here goes back to naught. Each time you pass a gate, water and jerky will be given to you through the pouch.

If you survive for a specified amount of time, you will be sent to the next gate.

[Clear Criteria.]

1. Survive

It was no different from what I had heard from Kiri Kiri.

If there was one thing different, it was the information about water and jerky.

Without me realizing it, there was a small pouch tied to my waist.

I opened it, but nothing was inside.

Seems like they'll store water and jerky here as I proceed with the gates.

Seems like that's plausible.

Now, what do I do?

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

The God of Remorse.

That wasn't a familiar title.

It's possible that the God of Remorse is the architect behind this 35th floor stage.

Remorse.

I'll keep that in mind.

I put aside thoughts about the god for now.

It wasn't something that I needed to concern myself with right now.

Instead, I needed to focus on how to survive this stage and proceed past it.

First, there is no need to move right away.

The theme of the 1st floor is arrow traps, and the traps don't go off unless I approach them.

Let's prepare here, then move.

Next, I'll need to check my condition

“Status.”

[Lee HoJae (Human)]

Str: 10

Dex: 13

Sta: 11

Mana: 21

It's been a while since I've seen a status this bleak.

There's no level being shown and I'm level 0 just like when I entered the Tutorial.

The numerous skills I've had are all gone.

It really is a do-over.

What I need to focus on in this bleak status window is the mana.

Mana: 21.

During my time on the 1st floor, I didn't know what mana meant, nor the implications of it being 21.

But now, I know exactly what it means.

The norm for most people is to start at 0 or 1, and the highest is around 10 for the mana value.

A mana value of 21 is a ridiculously high value.

And because of that, I very rarely ran short of mana when I've used skills.

To be fair, it's also because I've used Authorities instead of active skills.

I closed my eyes and tried to feel the mana inside my body.

It was scattered throughout my body.

I proceeded to move a slightly large piece.

It absorbed the smaller mana fragments that it passed by and congregated into a large lump.

It was like rolling a snowball.

Once I felt enough mana was gathered, I moved it along a circuit.

[Acquired Mana Circuit Lv. 1.]

[Acquired Mana Circuit Lv. 3.]

Unlike the other challengers that did not know how to advance their skills even after obtaining it, I fully understand the fundamental workings.

Without the help of the system, I could force open the blocked mana circuit.

One error was that the mana circuit in my body back then was smaller than I thought.

The mana being forced through the circuit brought small pains and tremors, along with a sensation as if small ants were crawling in my skin. My whole body started to tremble.

In addition, there were clogs along the path here and there.

Normally, one would slowly melt those away and widen the path by circulating mana hundreds or thousands of times, but I didn't have the luxury of waiting for that.

I bore a path through the blockades.

“Kuhk.”

[Acquired Mana Circuit Lv. 7.]

Blood poured out of my nose and mouth.

It wasn't like a small nosebleed.

It was more accurate to say I threw up blood than I had a nosebleed.

A small puddle of blood soon gathered at my feet.

“Phewooooook. Phewooooo.”

Because I couldn't breathe while throwing up blood, my lungs struggled for air.

My lung capacity was pathetically awful.

I spat out the blood in my mouth and moved the mana again.

Just recognizing and moving the mana does nothing.

You need to find pathways to manifest mana outside of the body.

A lump of mana moving at high velocity clashed against a blockaded wall.

And along with it a Boom sound.

As if I were the victim of a hit and run, I felt a strong pain at the back of my head.

My vision went dark.

And the next moment, I felt nothing.

Along with the pain, my senses died, and my focus dissipated.

Fuck. Pain Tolerance.

I forgot I didn't have Pain Tolerance.

Without the tolerance skill, my body released hormones to sedate itself upon feeling a strong pain signal.

I forced myself to focus.

I couldn't feel any sensations, but I tried desperately to guide the mana along the circuit path.

Soon, part of my senses came back.

I was lying on the ground, writhing in agony.

I couldn't keep a clear mind through the pain that came from every bone becoming misaligned and my muscles twisting.

It was too strong of a stimulation without Pain Tolerance.

“Ku... ahhhk...”

A groan escaped my clenched teeth.

My face felt as though it would explode from the blood pressure.

If not, my eyeballs would pop out at the bare minimum.

[Acquired Mana Circuit Lv. 16.]

[Acquired Will Lv. 4.]

[Acquired Awakening Lv. 7.]

Without knowing how much time had passed, the pain slowly eased away.

I waited for the pain to completely dissipate.

After I was confident that I was completely fine, I squirmed my arms and legs.

Thankfully, they move fine.

I thought I would be crippled if this went badly.

And if so, it would be very bothersome until I cleared the 35th floor.

Once I looked around, the formerly-small blood puddle had enlarged.

My body was sticky, as if blood had oozed out through my skin instead of just my nose and mouth.

It wasn't a small amount of pitch-black blood.

If I express it how I used to, I probably dipped my ankles in the Samdo River

[Acquired Pain Tolerance Lv. 2.]

I got Pain Tolerance up to Lv. 2 in one go.

It really, honest-to-god fucking hurt.

It was enough to make me worry if my body would die from the shock.

Pain Tolerance doesn't reduce the pain itself but blocks the shock and sedation of the senses.

A great deal of anxiety had welled up inside me upon being greeted by the acute pain without any form of tolerance.

I was more worried that this body would actually die from the pain rather than the pain itself.

The sensation of pain was quickly dissipating.

But it left me feeling washed out.

I felt drowsy from my lack of strength.

But I also felt refreshed.

With the airways unobstructed and probably because bodily waste was gone, my mind felt clear.

And the mana inside my body was circulating without any obstructions.

Once I recover my stamina, it would be much better.

I decided to sit down and rest.

According to Kiri Kiri's information, I'll be on the 1st floor stage for a total of one hour.

[Round 24, Day 3. 0h 27m]

More time had passed than I had initially thought.

I thought it would be a few minutes at most, but I must've writhed in pain for a good half hour.

My reward was Mana Circuit Lv. 16.

It was good enough for now.

I decided to be content with it for now.

If I did anymore right now, it would take too much time; plus, I was afraid I might die from shock.

I needed to respect my weak body.

To take the next step, I needed to relentlessly circulate my mana and prepare myself.

I finished up my thoughts and got up.

I was going to rest a bit more, but I needed to get moving since more time had passed than I initially thought.

Once I started to move forward, each step was excruciatingly difficult.

My legs shook, and my back bent backwards

As I moved, I could feel the aches here and there in my body.

My body's current condition required a few days of rest no matter how you look at it, but I pressed on.

Fuck. What I wouldn't do for a bottle of elixir.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

The message about the God of Remorse appeared again.

The message appeared as soon as I wondered if I was irrational in forcing the mana circuit, as if the God was just waiting for it.

Was it waiting for me to have a regret or something?

I started to wonder what the Gods wanted to say throughout this stage.

Was it to look back through the stages that I've been through and find a new solution for the regrets that I've had?

Or was it to take everything I've achieved away, leaving this sad body with me to make me feel sorry for myself?

To ruminate over the terror and pain from the beginning and realize how meaningless of a being that I was?

Whatever it was, I was pissed.

I clenched my teeth and forced my legs forward.

My left leg wouldn't move properly.

I proceeded along with one leg limping.

Ping.

Accompanied by the launch noise I was waiting for, the arrow went off.

My eyes followed the white flash of the arrowhead reflecting the light.

I wasn't certain if my eyes would be able to track and locate the arrow's path, but it was enough.

The first is left shoulder.

I snatched the shaft of the arrow with my right hand.

I imbued mana on my hand and fingers to make sure the arrow wouldn't slip through.

It felt as though my hand was on fire from the intense friction, but I ignored it.

Ping.

The second one is the heart.

I swung the arrow in my right hand.

Tik.

The arrow I swung hit the flying arrow's tip and made it swerve from its path.

Ping.

The next one aims between the brows.

Without the need to swing my arrow, I tilted my head to the side.

The arrow passed through the air and flew into the distance.

The fourth comes a bit later.

One beat pause and...

Ping.

I threw the arrow downwards, past my knee.

The arrow that came low aiming for my ankle was impaled by the arrow I had and embedded into the ground.

I still had my natural abilities.

And the abilities, once the system recognizes it, becomes skills.

[Acquired Slash Lv. 11]

[Acquired Intermediate Weaponry Lv. 4]

[Slash Lv. 11 combined into Intermediate Weaponry]

[Acquired Intermediate Throwing Lv. 1]

[Acquired Combat Concentration Lv. 21]

“Status.”

[Lee HoJae (Human)]

Str: 10

Dex: 13

Sta: 11

Mana: 21

Skill: Combat Concentration Lv. 21, Will Lv.4, Awakening Lv. 7, Intermediate Weaponry Lv. 4, Intermediate

Throwing Lv.1, Mana Circuit Lv. 16, Pain Tolerance Lv. 2

The once-bleak status window was soon filled.

Unlike the weaponry skill and combat concentration skills, the Pain Tolerance skill just skipped to Level 2.

It's probably the difference between a skill about knowing technique, and a skill requiring familiarity with the technique.

The only merits I can take away are skills that don't require the help of the system to acquire or use.

Let's examine it for a bit.

The main objective is survival.

For that, I need to proceed carefully and defensively, and procure the minimal amount of jerky and water by passing through the gates.

But that wasn't my personal goal.

I want a proper clear.

For that, I needed a more active progression.

The 35th floor stage lasts slightly longer than 24 days.

Only 24 days.

How much could I progress through in 24 days?

In that time, could I develop enough to defeat the enemies I'll be facing again?

Authorities, Level Ups, Clear Rewards, and even the items you could buy in the store weren't available.

But I have experience and information.

I calmly organized my thoughts.

Fun

This is going to be a lot of fun.

I slowly took my breaths.

The air in the hallway was cold.

The cold inhale soon became a hot exhale.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

Let's see how it goes.

To see if it goes your way or mine.

Chapter 184

Tutorial 35th Floor (3)

One hour on the 1st floor.

Two hours on the 2nd

.

I thought there was more than enough me to complete both the 1st and 2nd floors.

I've lost my previous stats and skills, but there were some skills I was able to recover.

And I also had the experience of clearing them before.

But it was a miscalculation.

My stats were the same as level 0 stats.

And from the skills I've recovered, the only thing that would be of actual help was just the Mana Circuit.

The only thing mana could do in this situation was to coat simple weapons along with my hands and feet to strengthen the hardness and sharpness.

It reinforces and matures the body by just circulating within.

It's also possible to exert it in explosive strength.

It wasn't much different from the inner strength described in martial arts novels.

I was proficient in controlling mana, and it was the basis for my self-confidence – the confidence that made me think I could clear the 1st and 2nd floor within the given time if I just strengthened my arms and legs.

One thing I hadn't thought of was needing to expend more mana to protect my limbs than just strengthen them.

The first time I'd started to handle mana was during the latter half of the 6th floor.

Back then, I had a body strong enough to be called superhuman.

It was a body capable of handling internal and external combat at an adequate level.

And because of that, I was able to use my mana more offensively.

But this body right now, which was prone to break at a moment's notice, needed more attention on my part to make sure it would survive the speed before I could make it move at a speed I would be satisfied with.

I needed to rely on inner power rather than pure hand-to-hand combat.

In addition, I needed to circulate the mana at all times in order to amass a larger amount, so I didn't have much mana to work with.

So, I didn't even make it to the Boss's chambers before the hour was up, and I had only been able to make it to the middle part of the 2nd floor.

But on the 3rd floor, I finally succeeded in making it to the Boss Room.

I was becoming more used to using my mana efficiently.

Not to mention I had three hours this time.

[Round 24, Day 2. 5h 15m]

[Pond of Recovery]

Note: If you drink or apply this on a site, it will have a healing effect.

Maybe even for baldness...

It's been a while since I've seen a Pond of Recovery.

Honestly, I didn't even think I'd ever see one.

Since it's been so long since I've last saw one.

The Pond of Recovery was more of a special reward before you entered the Boss Room.

The pond is slightly different from the surreal recovery effects of the waiting room. The pond has the power to heal and assist the body's recovery.

Recently, there has been research on exactly what effects the pond water had, but when I was passing through the lower floors, I just used it to fill up my HP.

The taste was rather poor, so it was normal to just take a few sips and leave it be.

I just tossed aside my shoes and took a dip in the pond.

I needed to take my clothes off for a proper bath, but it was bothersome.

As I dipped my body, my body started to itch here and there.

It was the sensation of small injuries being healed.

I took my mouth to the source of the water spout and drank it in.

My body had been exhausted to the point where it could take it no longer in the past 5 hours.

I had managed to force it down with my mana, but my joints were starting to creak as if they were broken parts.

Once I paused before continuing to drink the water, the muscles that were trembling from exhaustion quickly recovered.

Even the broken parts from overexertion will have recovered.

According to the recent information published in the community, if you tend injuries from overworked muscles with water from the pond of recovery, it enhances the muscle-building.

Same for the mana circuit.

I soon felt full, as I was drinking the water as if it were liquor.

It was hard to drink much more because of the weird taste.

I took out some jerky from the pouch on my side and ate it.

I felt a bit better once I felt the salty sodium come in.

I took a brief break here and feasted on the jerky and pond water.

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: I got it, thanks.]

[Lee Hyungjin, 7th floor: It's nothing compared to what you've taught me. It's a novel feeling to be teaching you something for a change.]

I asked Lee Hyungjin who had made it to the 7th floor for information on the boss at the 3rd floor.

Thanks to the overpowered Authority of Blink, I cleared the boss room on the 3rd floor the first me without falling from the cloud bridge. I asked Lee Hyungjin, who had cleared it even though he fell from the cloud bridge for ps.

[Lee Hyungjin, 7th floor: I've told you before, but the important part is when you fall. When you fall, the illusions disappear, and the traps go off immediately when you hit the floor. So it all depends on how fast you cope with the situaon.]

I sent Lee Hyungjin a thank you for ps and closed the chat window.

I raised my completely immersed body and stepped out.

I felt thankful for the addional ps.

Lee Hyungjin was stuck on the 6th floor for quite some me.

I haven't had a chance to meet him face to face, but I could see his mental breakdown from the messages we exchanged.

I understood completely, since I was extremely stressed out when I was stuck on the 6th floor myself.

But it seemed as though his mood was much brighter from making it onto the 7th floor aer surpassing the wall that blocked his way for quite some me.

And he also found his self-confidence again.

It was an inference based on the chat message, but even so I felt relieved.

I hope that I'll have a chance to meet him during a comepon or a Day of Great Harmony

I should ask Park JungAh if there's any related informaon on those.

[Round 24, Day 2. 5h 24m]

I had 35 minutes left until the 3rd floor stage ends and I get moved onto the 4th floor stage.

It's my turn to have a go at the Boss Room.

I squeezed my clothes and stood in front of the stone walls of the Boss Room.

The doors opened with a heavy sound and the panoramic view of the Boss Room entered my sights.

As I walked into the room, I could hear the doors close behind me.

While they're slow to open, they close rather quickly.

As if telling me, 'Don't even think about leaving'.

But how could I not think about leaving after seeing this fucked-up place.

The fuck.

I crossed this?

When I was on the 3rd floor?

What I could see were two mountain tops rising far above the clouds in the azure sky.

The mountaintop I was standing on, and another that was at least a few hundred meters away.

The wind was screaming like a jet engine on takeoff.

Even the wind was that strong.

My weak body couldn't stand properly, so I needed to grip onto the ground in a bent position.

It was a dangerous situation to be in even just standing on the 15m² of space atop the mountain.

It made me think that just surviving here for 30 minutes was enough to deem it worthy of the Hell Difficulty.

But the Hell Difficulty wouldn't be satisfied with just that.

A message appeared.

[Reach the designated destination.]

Mother fucker.

It's fucking shitty even though it's the 2nd time I seen it.

The destination they're referring to is the mountain top over there, theeeeere.

A ledge appeared midair.

Green.

The next moment, the green ledge turned yellow, then red.

And fell.

And then a ledge bridge appeared and connected the peak I was standing on with the peak far away.

The ledges were all green.

But soon, the ledge closest to me turned yellow.

I sighed and stepped onto the ledge.

And before the ledge turned red, I walked forward.

The sight at my feet was no joke.

Fuck, how did I do this before.

Even if I had Blink, it doesn't rid one of the psychological pressures.

I was slowly progressing, but the strong winds buffeted me left and right.

So, in the end I used the mana I was saving.

Using mana, I added suction power to the boom of my feet and made it easy to stay on the les.

And once I added mana on to my leg and waist muscles, it was rather manageable.

Speeding up from the slow walking pace, I started to run.

It was dangerous because of the wind, but it's better to just make a run for it.

Right now, the les fell at intervals of about 10 seconds, but later, the les fall every 3 seconds.

I needed to proceed as far as I could while the les were still falling slowly.

In the past, the wind swept me off my feet as I was running on these les.

I endured by just barely keeping my balance each time I was in danger of falling.

But this time, it was much more stable.

Ping!

Along with the launch sound, an arrow flew at me.

I covered the back of my hand in mana and struck it away.

I easily overcame a difficult moment and kept on running.

And then, I felt a small movement in the le underneath me.

Ah, it's that.

It was something I knew from having memorized informaon about the 3rd floor Boss Room once more.

Soon, the le bridge will careen up and down.

Instead of running forward, I chose to crouch down and sit on the le.

I made my hands sck onto the le.

Soon, the le bridge flew up and down as if it were a rollercoaster, but since I had been prepared, I could stay on without falling.

Aer the swaying stopped, I looked back.

I sll had a safe distance of about ten les.

I'll probably be fine If I sck to this pace.

The end was near.

When I glanced back, I saw about five les behind me.

The le bridge connued to sway up and down every now and then, but as I crouched my body and waited for it to pass, it wasn't that dangerous.

Thank god I had chosen to start running at the beginning.

Now if I can just pass the obstacle in front of my eyes, the 3rd floor boss room should be done.

The cloud bridge had a break in the les in the middle.

A gap of about 30 to 40 les were missing.

Glancing back, I check how many les I had for space.

I slowed down and prepared myself.

I counted to myself and ran forward as fast as I could.

I stepped down on the spot where the les started to disappear and leaped out.

Since I had poured mana in as if I was making an explosion, there was a big ‘kwang!’ sound from just the simple step down, and my body shot forward.

This should be enough to make me cross.

But as I soared in an arc progressed, I couldn’t but change my mind.

It was a bit short.

Just barely.

I regretted for a second thinking I should’ve, maybe, used more mana even if it would damage my legs.

But there was nothing to be done when I was up in the air.

I extended my arms as much as I could, but I couldn’t reach the other le by the breadth of one finger.

If it was a lile, just a lile further, I could’ve gripped the le and made it up.

“Shit, Fuuuuuuck!”

My swearing was cut short from the fall.

It was a mistake to open my mouth to swear.

Because of the velocity of the fall, my pronunciation was muffled.

Regrets were regrets, but since I already fell, I needed to prepare myself for what comes next.

The fall wasn't that bad.

It was a wide-open space, and all I could see were white clouds.

The wind licking my body was cold and fierce, but it was also refreshing.

Is this what skydiving is like?

I could understand why people pay exorbitant amounts of money to go skydiving.

My limbs, hands, feet, and head all didn't go into a panic from the impact of the fall and were fine.

Thank god.

The next important thing is ming.

Lee Hyungjin said the traps go off as soon as the illusions dissipate.

He said the fall went on for about two minutes.

So, I still probably have quite some me...

Thuk.

Huh? Wha?

I was falling from the sky unl just a moment ago, but I was lying on a pathway right now.

The illusion of mountaintops above the clouds were gone.

And a spear was flying towards me right in front of my eyes.

Hey, two minutes.

You said two minutes!

I HAVEN'T FALLEN FOR MORE THAN 20 SECONDS!

I francally threw my body and dodged the spear.

And the spear was embedded in the spot I was lying at a moment before.

Ping. Ping. Ping. Ping. Ping. Ping. Ping.

could hear the connuous launching sound.

Arrows this me.

Seven shots.

The exact locaon was all different, but all were from the front.

All of the arrows were aimed at my body.

I took the spear stuck in the ground and extended it in front of me.

[Acquired Intermediate Spear Technique Lv. 3]

I calmly hit away each arrow.

It was much faster than most arrows on the 1st and 2nd floors, but they're sll arrows.

Next, axes.

I blocked the axes falling from the ceiling with the spear.

The axes fell without a sound, but since they were right above me, I had already noticed.

I tried my best to knock the axes away, but the falling axes were much heavier than I had thought.

As soon as I blocked the axes, I made a circular swing towards my knee level.

Ting. Ting. The sounds were made as needles were flicked off.

The poisonous needles right after a flurry of noisy attacks.

It's a typical trap pattern.

Next are arrows.

There were no sounds and they were fast.

The launch location was at the 5 o'clock direction aiming for the back of my head.

And because of that, I noticed too late.

What I saw was a small palm-sized arrow.

It seems to be specialized for speed and silence.

Instead of responding by swinging my spear, I turned my head and pushed my face forward.

I clenched my teeth.

I wasn't trying to do something absurd like grabbing the flying arrow with my teeth.

That's just asking for it to get stuck in your throat.

I just used my teeth as a small shield and put it in the pathway of the arrow.

The teeth, protected by mana, easily blocked the arrow.

But even so, my jaw and gums were burning.

The traps stopped aer the small arrow.

According to Lee Hyungjin's words, this is one set.

He said these kinds of traps repeat themselves on my way to the end of the Boss Room.

He also said he wasn't sure, but there wasn't a paern, and the types and order of weapons change every me.

Since my safety was assured for now, I looked over my condion.

And also, this situaon.

I come to a conclusion.

Damn, I should've just fell earlier.

I needlessly toiled away in a shiy situaon on top of the tiles.

It was because Hyungjin was crying away about the dangerous traps down here.

I think this is at an adequate difficulty to pass by with ease.

I'll need to reprimand him later.

Chapter 185

Tutorial 35th floor (4)

[Level Up]

[Strength increases by 1.]

[Dexterity increases by 1.]

I reached the end of the passageway as I got the level up message.

It seemed as though it was the end of the Boss Room because it was blocked by a wall.

And nothing happened.

Shit. Is there not even a clear.

Is it too much to ask for?

There's no clear reward or even stamina restoration.

[Round 24, Day 2. 5h 55m]

Just 5 minutes left.

It was close.

I leaned against the wall.

“Status.”

[Lee HoJae (Human)]

Str: 13

Dex: 15

Sta: 15

Mana: 22

Skill: Combat Concentration Lv. 21, Will Lv.4, Awakening Lv. 7, Dash Lv. 1, Natural Recovery Lv.3, SuperRegeneration Lv. 3, Intermediate Spear Technique Lv. 3, Intermediate Weaponry Lv. 4, Intermediate Throwing Lv.1, Mana Circuit LV. 19, Pain Tolerance Lv. 2

At least I leveled up.

If it weren't for the stat gains from leveling up, it would be hard to clear the later stages even if it was fine now.

I closed my eyes, sat down in a comfortable position, and guided my mana along the circuit.

It's probably because of leveling up just now, but my body's condition was good.

It was hard to believe the growth in such a short span of time.

I had a revelation in learning that the mana circuit expands quickly if the repeated overworking of the circuit act in conjunction with the water from the Spring of Recovery.

Obviously to 'overwork' the mana circuit, one needed a certain amount of skill; if one had that much aptitude, he didn't need to expand the mana circuit forcibly.

But thanks to that, I could improve quickly.

I still felt a bit uncomfortable while circulating the mana.

The original plan was to clear the 3rd floor Boss Room and attempt to expand my mana circuit in the waiting room.

The process of forcing the circuit's blockades open and expanding the path puts a considerable amount of burden on the body.

So, I wanted to give it a go in the waiting room, which has a recovery function.

But even though I had proceeded to the end of the 3rd floor Boss Room, I still wasn't getting a clear message.

And because of that, there wasn't a waiting room.

Once a bit of time passes, I'll be moved directly to the 4th floor.

They precisely cut away the things they wanted to take away.

But why won't they make these kinds of things exactly as it was before?

I should wait on expanding the mana circuit until I reach the 4th or 5th floor's Spring of Recovery.

In the time left, I messaged Kim MinHyuk to let him know the new information I had discovered about the mana circuit.

[Kim MinHyeok, 30th floor: I got it. I'll keep a record.]

[Kim MinHyeok, 30th floor: But are you ok on the 35th floor? Lee HyungJin was worried about you.]

It seems he talked to Lee HyungJin in the short time span.

Lee HyungJin took on the responsibility of managing and taking record of the people in the Hell Difficulty 1st floor instead of me.

So, Lee HyungJin talks to Kim MinHyuk or other militia members every now and then.

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: I'm fine.]

If I wasn't fine, what could be done.

It wasn't like I could give up.

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: What about Jung-Ah? She didn't read my messages.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: Even if you sent one, she won't be able to check. It's the start of the round, so she'll be busy for a while.]

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: That's a shame. You should work too. Work harder.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor:... I'm busy too.]

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: Work more.]

Recently, Park JungAh has been super busy every time a new round begins.

It doesn't seem like her workload lessens when the start of the round has passed either.

As time passes, challenger survival rates are becoming slightly higher.

Since people don't die like before and new people enter every round, the population in the tutorial is becoming larger.

As the strategy is solidifying, the danger level of the tutorial stage is much lower.

Naturally there has been an increase in the number of people enthusiastically trying their hand at the stages.

So, the ones in a bind were the administrators in the militia.

Plus, there was the need to check for information on those that have made it out of the tutorial from the newbies that have come into the tutorial during the new rounds.

They couldn't help but be busy.

The time seemed to have passed as I was talking to Kim MinHyuk, and I was on the 4th floor stage.

Upon seeing the scenery change, I got up.

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: I gotta move. I'll message you later.]

[Kim MinHyeok, 30th floor: Ok.]

[Round 24, Day 2. 6h 0m]

The time limit for the 4

I wasn't sure if I could make it to the Boss Room within that time frame.

Even if I do make it to the Boss Room, it'll be hard to clear.

The area of the 4th floor Boss Room is immense.

I couldn't be certain I'd be able to clear the Boss Room even if I had four hours to put into just that.

I'll just try and do what I can.

I walked along the pathway that seemed larger than before.

The biggest point of interest on the 4th floor was that it's the first stage with battles.

Unlike the earlier stages which are all trap-based, goblins appear, and you need to take care of them.

I thought of the moment when I first entered the 4th floor.

“Kuwaaaaaa!”

The same cry as before.

It was peculiar to hear it again.

Even to go through the traps I’ve been through before, but this was a bit different.

While they were Goblins, seeing the same reactions as before from living beings overlapped my vision with memories from the past.

The dark green skin.

The tightly squeezed muscles.

The large incisors.

The red glitter in their eyes.

The height going over 2 meters.

The heavy axes.

The iron armor.

The Goblin drill sergeant that appears first on the 4th floor.

It was the first enemy I’ve meet when I first came into the tutorial, and the first living organism I saw since the death of the people I met on the 1st floor.

“Heh, it’s been a while.”

The Goblin cocked its head at my words.

An adorable gesture for something of that stature.

Instead of accepting its charms, I quickly ran forward.

I don't have any weapons.

It's not like when I had a short sword and shield.

The only choice I can make now, is to run into the Goblin's range.

As I quickly approached, the Goblin quickly erased its doubts and got ready for combat.

He lowered his axe and waited for the moment I approached to swing up the axe from the left bottom.

It was a tricky timing and arc to deal with since I was running straight at it.

But if I take a step back, I'll be at the mercy of the Goblin's range.

I need to do whatever it takes to get close.

I made sure not to lose any speed as I dodged the axe by sliding low.

And as I passed between the Goblin's legs, I moved my hands.

I created a sharp edge of mana from my fingertips and scratched the Goblin's calves.

The Goblin was wearing iron boots, but unfortunately, it didn't cover his calves or thighs.

[Acquired Intermediate Brawling Lv. 8.]

Upon seeing the blood splatter from the Goblin's calves, I got up.

As soon as I got up, the Goblin's axe swung at me.

Instead of blocking the axe, I gripped the Goblin's right wrist.

And with the other hand, I stabbed the Goblin's side.

Obviously, it was coated with mana as sharp as a surgeon's scalpel.

Trying to attack me while I was close enough to hug the Goblin, he moved his head.

I hesitated for a moment when I saw the Goblin attempt to headbutt me.

Normally, I'd just take the headbutt.

But it wasn't a good choice right now.

While I could cover myself in mana, if I get hit by the stupid rock head, there will be quite an impact.

Plus, the Goblin was wearing a helmet.

Before, I surpassed the Goblin in strength and speed, but was behind in ability.

Now, I surpass the Goblin in ability, but my strength, speed and endurance were very inferior.

I needed to take care of my body.

So, I sat straight down.

There was nothing else I could do to dodge the Axe coming from the side, the headbutt, and the left hand waiting to strike.

I let my legs crumple, and as I fell, I raised one knee and kicked the Goblin in the balls.

“Kuwaaaaaa!”

Sorry!

Really sorry!

I aimed for the Goblin hobbled over in a strange posture.

I wrapped the Goblin's ankle and calf with my right arm and struck the Goblin's knee from the side hard with my left fist.

With a crushing sound, a leg bone popped out the other side.

The Goblin couldn't even cry out from the abrupt pain.

I lifted my body as I pushed down on the Goblin falling from being struck on both legs and the balls.

I took a mounting position atop the Goblin falling down backwards and swung with my fists.

All the while the Goblin tried to raise its hands to protect its face, but what I was aiming for wasn't its face.

I could feel the ribs breaking from my fist embedded in the Goblin's chest.

The Goblin spit out saliva and the last of its breath as it were writhing, and soon its arms fell down.

Thanks to that, I could easily cut the Goblin's throat with my two hands wrapped in mana.

That's the end.

The Goblin convulsed as its neck spewed forth blood and died on the spot.

The hit to the chest was probably quite effective, since it died without able to even letting out a scream.

I was able to confirm that a good strike will be able to deal a proper blow.

I couldn't help but feel the lack of mana available for shaping.

There was a difference in strength and speed, but it wasn't hard to take care of him.

Not only did I finish the battle fast, but I also didn't take any damage.

I wasn't sure if this body would manage to keep pace with my thoughts in combat.

It was true my body wasn't in top condition, but it's fine if I keep that in mind.

The 1st battle on the 35th floor was a success.

That's how I wrapped up the combat results.

I decided to take the axe lying on the floor.

I've never used an axe, but I thought it would be better to have a weapon than just bare hands.

If it doesn't fit, I can just toss it aside.

As I walked with the axe, I could see a little foxhole ahead of me.

It was a hole with a tent on top.

Inside the tent were five goblins.

Two spearmen, two archers, and one shaman.

The goblin shaman is more of a support for the other four goblins rather than an attacker.

Since it was the 4th floor, its magic power wasn't much to worry about.

It appears as though the goblin shaman discovered me, as it was shaking awake the other sleeping goblins.

That's the role of that goblin shaman.

I ran holding the axe in front of me.

The two goblin archers quickly started shooting at me, but arrows from just two archers weren't enough to be of any danger to me.

There was no need to block using my axe, and I just closed the distance while dodging the arrows.

As I approached near the tent, the two spearmen crossed the two spears and lowered them to block my approach.

The two archers behind tossed aside their bows and gripped their daggers.

It seems to be an attempt to prevent me from closing in near the spearmen.

I drew near one of the spearmen.

Instead of snuggling close, I quickly swung the axe and hit the head of the spear.

Normally, you need to ignore this and let it slide off.

But the goblin spearmen couldn't manage to do that.

While the spearhead was pushed to the side from the impact with the axe, I took a wide step forward.

The nearby archer swung the dagger at me.

I dropped the axe I was holding.

I grabbed onto the wrist of the archer and stole the archer's dagger with my other hand.

All the while holding onto the archer's wrist, I stabbed the archer's back muscles with the dagger.

I stomped on the spearman swinging his spear at me again and shoved him with my shoulder.

As his ankle bones broke and the goblin spearman collapsed on the ground, I stabbed his neck and sent him off.

Now there was a set of one spearman and one archer, as well as a shaman standing at a slight distance.

Three in total.

As I was about to rush toward the other pair of spearman and archer, I heard a scream from behind me.

“Uaaaaaa!”

The goblin shaman was running at me while screaming.

I tried to ignore him, but there was a blue energy forming on the staff.

The shaman's body was rather slow.

Without a problem, I suppressed him by grabbing his wrist and turned him around.

I embraced the goblin shaman from behind and held my dagger by his neck.

Then the spearman and archer running at me stopped in their tracks.

They apparently stop when I hold a knife to their ally's neck.

I didn't know this before.

After watching the hesitating goblins for a while, I stabbed the dagger deep into the shaman's neck.

And shoved the shaman toward the spearman.

While the goblins were stunned, I quickly close the distance and ended the battle there.

It was something I felt before, but there was a large disparity in skill between the Goblin drill sergeant that appears in the beginning and the other goblins.

After making sure the goblins writhing on the ground were no longer breathing, I walked out of the tent.

I took one of the daggers.

I greatly preferred daggers to axes.

I'll use the axe like a shield when I approach defensively and toss the aside the axe and use the dagger when I'm close.

"Huah..."

It felt refreshing.

While it was a clean victory, there wasn't a big difference between me and the goblins.

It was a pleasant feeling of tension.

And the refreshing taste of small battles here and there that I haven't had in a while.

Let's hurry and go to the next one.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

Chapter 186

Tutorial 35th Floor (5)

I stepped out of the spring and squeezed my clothes dry.

[Round 24, Day 2. 6h 25m]

The clear was easier than I thought.

I made it to the 4th floor stage's Spring of Recovery in just 25 minutes.

Regardless of the difficulty, it was much faster compared to the stages with long pathways.

In front of the Boss Room, the giant stone doors opened, and revealed a new world.

It was the mid-slope of a mountain.

Thankfully, I knew the road.

If you follow the road, a goblin fortress appears.

As I looked up from the beaten path, I could see the stars filling the night sky.

This is one of the places where stars are bright.

Just like the last time I was here, I couldn't help but admire the view.

I admired the night sky as I slowly walked.

There was no reason to rush.

It's going to be hard to get to the city with the goblin king in time anyway.

And even harder to kill the goblin king who will be in the center of the city within four hours.

Furthermore.

No message appeared.

There was no message telling me to take care of the goblin king or do something.

They've just put me in this world and let me be.

I expected this after clearing to the end of the 3rd floor boss room and nothing happened.

This 35th floor doesn't give separate missions for each floor.

Then what do I need to do.

In the time remaining.

I eventually reached the castle walls.

From up close, the castle walls were quite high.

Last time, I got up easily using the Blink Authority, but that isn't an option now.

I could jump using a chunk of mana, but it'll also cause a catastrophic sound.

And the goblin soldiers will notice.

Do I need to climb up the wall?

As I was pondering about this, I heard a shout from the top of the wall.

“Hey! Human!”

[Acquired Akemin Continent Language Lv. 10.]

Huh?

“What are you looking for in this late hour!”

Did he just yell at me?

Puzzled, I looked up at the goblin soldier atop the castle walls.

The soldier was looking directly at me.

I thought I was far enough from him to avoid his sight.

That was a mistake.

The goblins have good night vision.

Unlike humans, they can see this far without a problem.

And when I was here before, I had covert skills and the like.

So, I just assumed it would be like the last time I was here and wasn't noticed, and I didn't think to hide my body.

[Acquired Coverttness Lv. 17]

As I thought about hiding my body, I acquired the Coverttness skill, though rather late.

But the goblin atop the castle walls had already found me.

I pondered for a moment, then answered the goblin atop the castle walls.

“I lost my way!”

I shouted proudly!

It wasn't a lie.

It was... an ambiguous expression.

The goblin soldier shook his head a few times and disappeared from the walls.

I was more concerned with other things than the soldier disappearing.

I acquired the Akaine Continent language.

It means I already knew the Akaine continent language.

It was probably because of the Knowledge Before the Time of Babel skill.

I thought the Knowledge Before the Time of Babel Babel skill was a magical skill that would translate foreign languages.

So, when I could hear, say, and use the languages I didn't know, I assumed I didn't know the languages.

But when I heard the goblin's words just now, I understood as soon as I heard it.

The system judged that I already knew the language and added it as a skill.

If the Knowledge Before the Time of Babel skill isn't just a simple translating skill, and is instead one that imbeds the language into my head, it's possible.

If it's a language stuck in one's head, it's possible to recognize it as soon as one hears it.

Is that really how it is?

I'll need to ask Kiri Kiri.

A small side door next to the giant stone doors opened.

The goblin soldier said to me from behind the open door.

"Come in."

I listened to the soldier's words and walked into through the castle walls.

It was quiet inside the walls.

It felt weird as the memory in my mind clashed with the situation now.

"It's quiet."

"Of course. It's late."

And it felt weird hearing the goblin say that to me as it were a natural thing.

"How did you lose your way in the mountains this late?" "I dunno."

"What's your destination?"

The goblin soldier asked me as though he were talking to a friend rather than conducting an interrogation.

I thought he would ask about me or request identification, but the goblin didn't request anything.

I couldn't feel any apprehension from the goblin that guided me through the fortress after closing the small side door.

Destination.

What was the name of the goblin city past the fortress?

I don't remember.

"City."

"I assumed so. For what? Probably trade right?"

"I have something I need to find out."

The goblin didn't ask me what it is that I wanted to know.

He probably thought I was a merchant sent for market research.

Instead, he asked something else.

"When do you need to be there by? There's a carriage going to the city tomorrow afternoon. If you want, I can let you on.

Excessively friendly.

That kindness was enough to make my stomach ache.

Naturally, I thought of the deeds I had done while I was progressing through the 4th floor.

Back then, I lit the four fortresses on fire and massacred the goblin soldiers.

And once I cut their numbers, I infiltrated the city.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

Well. Is this what that god wanted?

What terrible taste.

“Sorry, but your words are more than enough. Instead, could you tell me the way to the city?”

“Now?”

I nodded.

“I’m in a bit of a rush.”

The goblin looked at me with a terrified look.

And murmured with a cackling sound.

“Damn. You were wandering the woods and have to go right away. Human trade guilds are too strict.”

[Acquired the Kipain Area’s Native Goblin Language Lv. 10]

Turns out the language me and the goblin were using was a foreign language.

I learned the goblin’s local dialect through hearing him murmur.

“Ok but go up there and wait a bit.”

The goblin had gestured at the watchtower.

A watchtower looking out toward the city.

“The view is pretty good. Since the stars are bright tonight, you can probably see the city a bit. It’s quite the spectacle, so go see the sights for a bit.”

With those words, the goblin vanished to somewhere.

Is he bringing me a map or something, because I don’t need one.

Once at the top of the watchtower, I could see the moonlight falling on the city from a distance, just like the goblin told me.

The goal I had set not too long ago was wavering.

Kiri Kiri had told me to not overdo it.

That the 35th floor stage wasn't made to be completed through combat alone.

Is this what she meant.

Once the clear goals that were given to me were gone, I couldn't figure out what to do this time.

The first thing that came to my mind was in the end, combat.

As I climb higher, there will be numerous enemies just waiting for a piece of me.

And I can't deal with those enemies can't be dealt easily in this weakened body.

It's better to become stronger while I have the chance.

And the goblins below the watchtower over there will be the perfect opponents for a faster leveling.

But should I attack those that were sympathetic towards me just because of that?

I asked myself the same question I had before.

My answer was. No.

The reason was simple.

I'm stronger.

I have the right to choose how to become stronger.

Is it the same now?

In just a few hours, a few days, I'll be plopped onto extremely dangerous floors.

The time given to me is limited.

Because I'm running against time, I don't have the luxury of choosing.

But still, I'm the stronger one here.

I wasn't sure what the God of Remorse wanted to say.

But I was sure of one thing.

My strength is no longer tied to the tutorial.

While the tutorial did provide the opportunity and means to evolve myself, I have already completely absorbed the ways.

Even if I was immediately returned to my state two years prior when I was watching tv and doing nothing with my life, I can return myself to this state without a problem.

Obviously, it'll be harder outside of the tutorial.

But it wouldn't be impossible in 5 or 10 years.

The 35th floor stage made me certain.

It was a doubt that I had always harbored.

No matter how much I scream and shout about how well off I am, they were abilities and power given to me by the gods.

I was afraid that I would become nothing if and when my powers were taken away from me.

But now, those fears are gone.

My power isn't something that is seen through the status window display of Authorities or skills or even the high stats and levels.

And because of that I could proudly say.

I'm strong.

No matter where I am.

Even when I'm faced with opponents much stronger than me, I will always be the stronger one.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

"How kind."

"You're welcome."

The goblin came back.

With a large satchel.

"You don't need a map right? Just follow the highway leading down straight. It'll take about half a day if you're on a horse. And these are some fruits, bread, and drinks. Snack on it during your trip."

I asked the kind goblin.

"Why are you being so nice to me?"

The goblin was a bit taken aback at my words.

"Just. Well. It's amusing. I also felt bad when you said you had to leave right away when you were lost in the woods until just now."

“Amusing?”

“Seeing a human. It’s been a while. Usually, human merchants take the fortress doors over there.”

He was interested as though he were seeing a foreigner.

He acted as though he saw humans every day on the way to work, but he I took the satchel from the goblin.

“Thanks.”

“No problem.”

I got him to repeat the directions.

The goblin opened the small side door toward the city, and I started off towards the road.

As I’ve walked out, I felt the goblin’s gaze on my back disappear.

I stopped for a moment and stretched.

Originally, I hadn’t planned on going to the city.

There was quite a distance to the city, and there was no reason to if I thought about the time I had left.

Especially when I had no reason to take care of the goblin king.

But now, I had a reason to go and see the goblin king.

I had something I wanted to ask.

I haven’t tried to exert my mana to its maximum capacity since start of the 35th floor.

There was a bit of mana I needed to save to further increase my mana capacity.

Above all, it was dangerous.

I say this again, but it's dangerous.

But now, I had a reason to give it my all.

I mustered up as much mana as I could.

And instead of focusing it onto my limbs or back muscles, I spread it out in my body, and activated the circuit.

What I need right now isn't to strengthen or lighten my body, or even protection through mana.

But to awaken my body.

Pang!

As I kicked off, my body shot out like an arrow.

The cold dawn winds brushed my face, but I ran on.

Towards the goblin city.

“Phuek. Hooooo.”

When I took my breath, it sounded like a dog panting.

I wanted to breath as quietly as possible, but it wasn't under my control.

I checked again to make sure the goblins by my feet wouldn't come to.

Thankfully, both were dozing off in the dreamland.

Huaaa.

It was hard.

I ran through the plains between the fortress and the city, and snuck in by climbing the castle walls.

I did the same for the inner castle walls

And the same to get to the goblin king's bedroom.

Since I had already infiltrated into the goblin king's bedroom once before, I could find it without any trouble.

I didn't need to worry about being caught by the goblin soldiers.

If they could see through Level 17 Covertness, they wouldn't have appeared on the 4th floor.

Anything over level 15 goes beyond just quietly hiding and moving; it was enough to not be noticed while using up mana at the max potential right in front of someone's eyes.

[Round 24, Day 2. 7h 15m]

It only took 50 minutes to dash through the plains on horseback, and sneak past the city's outer and inner walls to this center spot.

I used everything I had.

In the aftermath of the violent workout, white steam emanated from my body.

I thought about using the rest of the mana to calm it down quickly, but I decided to let my body cool off by itself.

I quietly opened the door and entered the bedroom.

The bedroom was a bit humid and hot.

It smelled a bit.

It was a large enough room to where I couldn't immediately locate the goblin king.

Instead of using my eyes, I focused on my hearing.

If I can locate his breathing, I can easily find where he is.

Once my hearing is strengthened by mana, it can locate any minute noise.

Through my ears ready to hear any small noise in the room, I heard breathing.

There was a problem.

There were three.

Three including me.

There were two goblins breathing heavily on the bed.

That's when I realized some of my questions could be answered.

Why there were so few guards near the bedroom.

Why the room was so humid and hot.

And why it smelled.

I knew.

The goblin king was performing nighttime labor.

I remembered the goblin king's children.

And the sight of an old goblin king.

He had a white beard down to his chest, but he's quite vigorous for his age.

I covered my face with my two hands, dumbfounded at the unanticipated situation.

Unable to do anything and agonizing over what to do, I coughed.

“Khm.”

Chapter 187

Tutorial 35th Floor (6)

“Khem!”

I coughed loudly to cover up the embarrassing situaon.

But unfortunately, the goblin king didn't display any sort of response to my coughing sounds.

Did he not hear me?

“Uhhuhhum!”

I made another coughing sound.

This me, thankfully the goblin king reacted.

He stopped moving, looked around, then started doing his thing again.

...Fuck.

“Uhhum! Uhhuhhum!”

I made a noise loud enough to stop a marketplace aune dead in her tracks.

If he doesn't hear this, it means his sense of hearing has problems.

Or he's just really horny.

Please fucking stop, please!

I finally met the goblin king face to face.

After jumping out of bed and rushing to grab his robes, the goblin king asked, “W-Who are you!”

A question straight to the core.

The problem was that it’s hard to answer that question.

It wasn’t because I didn’t want to reveal my identity, but because I couldn’t be sure of what my identity was.

What would be a good way to introduce myself?

I pondered for a moment.

“Assassin.”

It was a good choice.

Of course, not for the goblin king

The green face froze.

And the pitiful and old goblin dragged himself out of bed and changed his composure.

He couldn’t even gather himself from being surprised, but he regained his self-control upon hearing my answer.

It was a rather impressive sight to see him becoming dignified in the face of danger.

I honestly admired the goblin’s transformation from a man whose nightly duty was cut short into a king facing an assassin.

The goblin king yet again displayed his dignity.

“I don’t believe I’ve done anything to displace the human kingdoms.”

I agree with the senment.

The guards at the fortress weren't hosle towards humans, but rather he let me through without inspecon.

The city itself is amicable towards humans and they aren't skepcal either.

"Trade guild? Seems like they want to exert influence over the city aer killing me. But I don't know the method."

The goblin king connued with a calm tone.

It was a calm atude, but he wasn't calm.

What reason did he have to explain the details to an assassin?

None.

He's just connuing on to buy me for a plan.

He didn't try to call guards.

I made quite a ruckus in this bedroom.

If the guards outside didn't react to that, it meant that I had already taken care of them.

"It's not like there's rare minerals or specialty goods on this land either."

I needed a beer subject.

"I'm not an assassin sent by the kingdom or the trade guild."

"...Then who sent you?"

It wasn't the sort of queson an assassin would ever answer.

So, I could avoid answering without remorse.

“Who knows.”

The goblin king stopped speaking whatever came to his mind to try and think of ways to get out of this situaon.

Instead, he focused on me.

That was good.

“Rather, I have something I’d like to ask. I’d be pleased if you would answer.”

The goblin didn’t let down his guard but couldn’t hide the relief and hope in his eyes.

He probably thought I was here to deliver a message or a warning instead of assassinang him.

But my goal was honestly just to ask this queson.

“Have you done anything that would anger or annoy the gods? Or seriously endanger the peace of this world?”

Up unl now, whenever I saw a ‘terminate’ message, I didn’t have any doubts.

The targets were usually necromancers, doppelgängers, demon kings and other easily-idenfiable villains who endangered world peace.

But this goblin king is different.

His reign was superb, humane... no, the best thing I have seen out of goblins.

The city was peaceful and wealthy.

It was a stage without any major conflict.

But the tutorial requested the terminaon of the goblin king and ordered the murder of countless goblin soldiers.

I wondered why.

If there was no reason...

Did they make us aack this peaceful city without a reason, just to test challengers?

It was something I had to know.

It was possible that the tutorial stages have nothing to do with good or evil.

It wasn't something that I was unfamiliar with.

Fundamentally, the gods in this tutorial don't seem very kind-hearted.

The Earth is infested with monsters, and hell is unfolding.

If abducng people to make them superhuman in order to defend themselves isn't kindhearted, what is?

Even glancing through the community, people's atudes were mainly amicable when it came to the tutorial.

There are unfathomable numbers praising the gods, comparing them to gods nave to Earth.

It was all the more common in people who entered the tutorial aer experiencing the mayhem caused by monsters.

Some also researched doctrines of gods and idenfied themselves as believers of a parcular god.

But there are no Hell Difficulty challengers that praise the kind-heartedness of gods.

At least as far as I know.

The goblin king went silent for a moment at my question.

It was a weird reason.

Wouldn't one normally ask what that means?

"Do you happen to be a god's Apostle?"

His calm voice started to shake.

It seems as though he had something on his mind.

I nodded in affirmation.

To tell the truth, I wasn't an apostle.

But I was something similar.

[The God of Adventure is pleased.]

Huh? Why is the God of Adventure pleased?

All of a sudden.

[The God of Slowness rebukes someone.]

[The God of Duels vehemently denies someone's word.]

[The God of Death mocks someone.]

[The God of Adventure is embarrassed.]

I wasn't sure what they were doing, but I ignored them for now and focused on the goblin king.

The goblin king was noticeably anxious.

“What were you planning? Answer honestly.”

I asked him in an overtly apostle-like tone.

“I-It wasn’t created by us. I happened to acquire it by chance and hoped I could use it to fulfill my personal desires.”

Created. Acquired. Desire.

All the key words.

“Bring it.”

“Sir?”

“Bring it to me and show me.”

Not that I knew what it was.

“Yes sir.”

“Don’t even think about escaping or calling the soldiers. It’s annoying. I don’t have much time left, and if you cannot prove your innocence I’ll act as planned.”

This is probably enough intimidation.

The goblin king seems to think of me as an apostle sent to punish him.

“Please wait here for a moment.”

The goblin king left after those words.

I deliberated the dialogue in the recently-vacated room.

“Hey...”

It wasn’t an empty room!

The goblin's partner was still here.

She had put on her gown and asked nervously.

"Can... I leave?"

"Ah, yes. Feel free."

I said to the goblin female running out of the room.

"My sincere apologies!"

Of course, the goblin female ran out and closed the door before I could finish my apologies.

I waited for the goblin king while organizing my thoughts in the now, truly, empty room.

It took the goblin king a while to come back.

Just before I decided to go and catch the goblin king myself.

"If you were just a little bit late, I would have waited for you myself."

"How could I possibly run from an Apostle?"

It wasn't likely.

The goblin king seemed to be short of breath and was sweating profusely.

Probably because he was rushing to bring back the item.

Or, maybe because he was looking for the guards.

"It would have been interesting in itself if you ran."

"But not for me. Haha..."

He laughed as if his anxiety lessened.

But with a forced smile.

The goblin king brought back a small black sphere.

The sphere was large enough to fill my hand was smooth and had quite a he to it.

“I’ve already told you, but we acquired it by chance; we didn’t cra it.

“I think I heard something about you fulfilling your wishes with this.”

“I... did. But I haven’t tried yet.”

The moment before he tried, huh?

Is this stage meant to stop the aempt by dispatching a challenger to take care of the king?

If so, what happens aer his aempt?

And what is this sphere that makes the gods uneasy?

At the very least, the goblin king seems to assume that this sphere is the cause.

I examined the sphere, but I couldn’t make out a shred of mana in the sphere.

How did he plan to use this thing?

Instead, I injected my mana into it.

The mana couldn’t enter and was repelled.

As if it was full of a different type of mana.

Is it a stone that repels mana?

“How did you plan to fulfill your wish with this?”

“I heard that it was possible if you use the power inside. From what the magicians told me...”

Power within the sphere.

It meant that there's something inside here.

[All of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple are watching you closely.]

[The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple are nervous.]

I tried to absorb the sphere's energy.

As if sucking out mana.

I didn't feel anything being absorbed.

It felt as though I were trying to absorb something when there was nothing.

But.

There was something coming inside me.

The 'something' that I couldn't feel kept coming.

Even so, I couldn't figure out what it was, nor feel it.

The hairs on my body rose up from the peculiar sensaon.

It was a dreadful sensaon, having something that I didn't know coming into me.

[The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple start a vote.]

[Approval : 94 votes in favor, 4 votes against, 2 votes are abstained.]

[The moon has passed with a majority. It now invokes force over someone.]

[The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple start a vote.]

[Approval : 95 votes in favor, 4 votes against, 1 vote is abstained.]

The messages started to appear for no reason.

Before I could understand the meaning, my body was moved.

Aer a brief flash, once I opened my eyes, I was no longer standing in the goblin king's bedroom.

I was at the entrance of the 5th floor stage.

What is this?

[Round 24, Day 2. 8h 40m]

It wasn't me to be moved from the 4th floor stage onto the 5th floor stage yet.

Then this meant I was moved by force through the vote of the gods.

Like the me the God of Adventure moved me on the 5th floor previously.

It wasn't a pleasant feeling.

I didn't like being moved in a particular way by the influence of others.

Apart from the unpleasantness, I wondered what the reason was.

It wasn't part of the concept of the 4th floor to move the challenger by force, so there is definitely a reason why I was moved.

And the first thing that came to my mind was, the black sphere.

And the power absorbed from the black sphere.

Something that I couldn't feel or be aware of but proved itself by diffusing into my body.

That energy was clumped in my right arm.

I couldn't feel the energy, but I have a precise understanding of my body and observe it closely.

It was possible for me to locate the foreign substance and set up walls around it to make sure it wouldn't spread to another area.

I focused on the energy clumped in my arm.

I heightened every bit of my senses and tried to feel something from the energy I couldn't feel.

Aer about an hour, I could organize my findings.

First, this energy has attributes similar to mana.

Second, the energy's identity wasn't hidden through magical means.

At least, that's what I could discern at my level.

Third, after examining this energy for an hour, I got a feeling.

It was an abstract feeling, but I was sure because of my experience.

The feeling from this energy was similar to the divine power of Authorities.

Chapter 188

Tutorial 35th Floor (7)

First, ignoring what it was that was absorbed into my right arm, I needed to handle of the current situation.

As soon as I obtained the energy, two rounds of votes took place; as a result I was forced onto the 5th floor stage.

I didn't have a way of knowing the topic of the votes, but I speculated it was because they no longer wanted me on the 4th floor stage in order to prevent me from learning something I wasn't meant to.

And that "something" is closely related to the energy absorbed into my right arm.

Regardless of what the energy is, it's certainly of importance.

If I thought of it that way, I felt I benefited from the ordeal.

But I was more offended that I was moved at the whim of the gods.

This unpleasantness gave me renewed conviction for my goal.

It happened before as well.

When I cleared the 4th floor and when I was abducted into the tutorial.

That's not all.

Even now, my actions are being controlled by them.

I couldn't stay in the waiting room beyond a certain amount of time, and once the time passes, I'm banished from the room.

And once I'm on the stage, I need to squirm and struggle my way through clearing each of the floor's missions.

It was something that I accepted previously.

I even thanked them a bit for changing my life.

But once I took a disliking to it, it was something I could no longer bear.

"Hooooo."

I quickened my breathing to calm down.

Although it's hard, I need to restrain myself.

I'll have to suppress it for quite a while anyway.

Let's ask Kiri Kiri about this event.

Though, it'll be difficult to get a proper answer.

Next, this energy.

The energy absorbed into my right arm is moving according to my guidance just like mana.

It didn't seem to go crazy or have any negative effects on my body either.

Just that I wasn't able to accurately feel or recognize its existence, and that it's radiating the same sort of holy energy found in God's Authorities.

It could be a condensed form of Holy energy.

It's possible if the stone I received from the goblin king was a god's holy relic, or a token of an Apostle.

Anyhow, a sleeping energy in my right hand...

As if it were a sleeping black dragon in my right hand.

I was nervous that my 8th grade syndrome would flare up again.

I moved the energy to another spot.

There was a spot in a corner of my chest.

I was curious about this particular spot from polishing my mana circuit for the last 2 years.

In the circuit that connects the whole body, there was a dead space.

It wasn't like the cells died, or I caught a disease.

But just like dead space in an interior design, I had an empty space in my chest.

The space doesn't have any effect on any of the circuits, but it was still connected to all of the important circuits running through all of the limbs.

I stored the energy there.

If it's here, I won't have a problem of it colliding with mana that I would be utilizing.

After I stored it, it felt as I finally completed something.

Almost like this space was made to store this kind of energy.

My ignorance on the subject of the mana circuit hurt me deeply.

I didn't have a chance to learn from anyone about the mana circuit.

The very few chances I've had were with Idy and the Knight on the 16th floor.

They weren't that proficient in their own, and I needed to self-study to research the circuit pathways and application methods.

I couldn't ask other challengers.

They don't have any information on the mana circuit in the first place.

I was the first one to find the mana circuit, and the one to inform the The Order of Vigilance and the challengers in the community of its existence.

Moreover, most of the challengers didn't know how to use it even when I've given the instructions and methods of applying the mana circuit.

The most that they've done was to attain Lvl. 1 or 2 mana circuit skills through the information I gave them, and vacantly wait for the skill to level up passively as part of their level up reward.

As a result, I also had much to learn about the mana circuit.

I didn't even have names for the circuit's structure or channels, and there was no way of finding new applications if I didn't know or couldn't think of in the first place.

I needed an opportunity to study it properly.

But I couldn't ask Kiri Kiri about the mana circuit in depth, and I wouldn't find any books on it through the Shop.

Neither Seregia nor the holy sword had information at the level I needed.

Ways to learn were limited.

I needed to learn from someone or grasp it during a fight.

Or learn through outcomes.

There were two that came to my mind.

The Juji on the 13th floor.

And the godmother on the 19th floor.

Out of them, I thought about the head monk, who I would encounter first.

Back then, his skills were better than mine, and he excelled at managing mana.

Some of the ways I manipulate my mana were from emulating and learning from how he managed his mana.

In addition, he has a similar body structure to humans and is also an Apostle.

Lastly, he didn't have any qualms about teaching the challengers.

A perfect environment.

I'll need to make meeting Juji on the 13th floor my primary goal for now.

It wasn't an easy task.

The path to reach the 13th floor Juji goes beyond the requirements of just clearing the 13th floor.

I needed to meet Juji within the 13 hour time limit, and rush in order to learn something from him.

Let's speed up my growth before then.

[Round 24, Day 2. 9h30m]

Normally, I was going to be moved onto this 5th floor stage at 10, but my plans were changed.

I was probably moved 30 to 35 minutes too early.

Then, would I be moved from the 5th floor stage to the 6th floor stage at 15 sharp or near 1430?

I couldn't be sure.

Let's just move for now.

I jammed my spear through the lizardman's jaw.

The spearhead pierced the jaw and came out through his head.

I left the spear in the corpse remorselessly and turned my back.

The enemy wasn't just one lizardman.

The tail attacks toward my torso.

I couldn't slip past the thick tails.

The tail's reach was too long for me to just back off safely.

Instead of backing off too much, I took a large step forward.

Since the tail is swung from the body as a pivot, the force dealt is weaker the closer I am to the center.

I wrapped mana around my left arm and shielded my body.

Kang!

The intense blow triggered a throbbing pain from my left arm and shoulder.

The pain surged down my chest and into my waist.

If the waist shakes, the center of balance shakes and destabilizes the lower body.

I forcibly quashed the pain and moved.

The lizardman was also affected by the blow's impact

As much as the tail attack was done with the full strength of his whole body, he couldn't be free from the recoil damage.

The largest weakness of tail attacks is that one has to turn their back to attack.

I attacked the lizardman's back as he was hurriedly trying to twist his body.

As I shoved my right fist into him, I heard the ribs shatter.

“Kehek!”

I wasn't satisfied with just that and buried my fist in him again.

Precisely onto his spine.

That incapacitated the last of the lizardmen.

I picked up one of the spears strewn on the ground.

I finished off a lizardman who was foaming and writhing on the ground.

“Hua...”

My arm was tingling from blocking the strike just now.

Not just the arm, but my body was lined with small and large cuts, pangs and aches.

The lizardmen were hostile.

They didn't turn away from battle.

They threw their whole body at me in hopes of succeeding in one attack.

In their minds, they probably didn't have the phrase "high-risk, high-return."

Probably just "high-return."

It wasn't possible be uninjured while fighting those that didn't care about how strong the opponent was, or how many of their peers died beside them.

Unlike the past, where I surpassed them in physical capability, I was lacking in physical strength. Even if my skills far surpassed them, I couldn't help but take damage here and there.

And this is just an assumption, but the lizardmen seemed to rush at me with ferocity unlike before.

From what I've heard from Lee Hyungjin who cleared this 5th floor like I had done before, the 5th floor wasn't supposed to be this difficult.

I haven't felt this before since I was far past the level of 5th floor standards, but the 5th floor is much more difficult compared to the 4th floor.

So, I formulated a hypothesis.

Based on the fact that half of the lizardmen on the 5th floor... or rather lizardwomen, it made all the more likely that my hypothesis is correct.

My hypothesis became conviction when I heard their dying words.

My head was filled with a familiar face while fight them.

Idy.

Or Idaltar.

My heart was heavy from just thinking about her, who would be waiting for me in the 5th floor boss room.

There was a lot that came to mind, a lot that I was curious about, and even much more in what I would say to her when I come face to face with her.

I wasn't sure how to face her when it came to be.

I agonized over the meeting with her as soon as I saw the message that I'll be challenging the floors again from the 1st floor.

But even as the meeting neared, I wasn't able to formulate a clear answer.

And now, I chose to postpone the answer.

To think about it after I meet her.

After walking away from the lizardmen, who were the most erratic opponents up until now, I reached the Spring of Recovery.

This is the last Spring of Recovery.

From the 6th floor onwards, there is no Spring of Recovery.

It could appear again in the higher floors that I have yet to reach, but from what I know, the Spring of Recovery on the 5th floor is the last.

So, this was the last chance.

I went and laid down in the spring.

Sudden expansion of the mana circuit places extreme stress on the body.

Because I won't be able to enter the waiting room on the 35th floor stage, I needed to expand my mana circuit as much as I could in the Spring of Recovery here.

As I manipulated a larger volume of more highly concentrated mana than before, I felt the pain shoot through my body.

I brutally forced open the congested areas where the circuit slowed down.

Of the paths that were blocked, I rammed through with all my strength.

The walls didn't break down on the first try.

As they were walls that required time to melt away the blockades, it wasn't easy.

Every time I attacked the wall, I heard a 'kwangkwang' sound in my head and my body convulsed, but I repeatedly slammed at the wall.

As I repeated that multiple times, I could feel the walls weaken.

After preparing myself, I readied myself to attack multiple walls in one go.

The impact of breaking down one wall, and having the mana flow through is immense.

It's possible I would lose my mind and faint from just that.

But I didn't have much time.

I couldn't faint multiple times before trying again.

So, I chose to break down the weakened walls in one go.

Even if it was probably extremely dangerous.

No, it was extremely dangerous.

But it was something I could attempt because of the Spring of Recovery.

Kwang!

Along with the impact, the walls broke down and my mana in my body started to go wild.

The side effect of leaping over multiple stages and shedding the limits was larger than I thought it would be.

My head felt as though it would explode from just trying to make the berserk mana circulate along the path.

It wasn't something I could control if I hadn't had the experience up until now in my head, even if my body was not reset.

[Acquired Mana Circuit Lv. 20]

But because of that, I was able to reach Mana Circuit Lv.20 in one attempt.

If I thought about the suffering, I had to go through to raise my Mana Circuit skill level to 20, it was quite a feat.

Once I tamed the mana that was about to explode, the pain came flooding in.

The pain was as if a thousand hands were wringing my body dry as if it were laundry.

My muscles were frozen stiff from the pain, and because of that I couldn't even scream.

[Acquired Pain Tolerance Lv. 4]

[Acquired Pain Tolerance Lv. 5]

[Acquired Pain Tolerance Lv. 6]

It's been a while.

I've been through pain countless times and have suffered through it. But this level of pain wasn't common.

Moreover, my pain tolerance level was low, and my body didn't have the strength to handle this sort of impact.

With my consciousness fading out, I could only hope that my body and mind would safely make it through this agony.

Chapter 189

Tutorial 35th Floor (8)

I checked the time as soon as I opened my eyes.

More time had passed than I thought.

Now that I think about it, I didn't have Faint Resistance yet.

Because of that, I must've been floating on the spring water for longer than I expected.

I walked out of the blackened spring water.

A stench rose from the filthy water.

I couldn't believe all of that black filth came from my body.

What the fuck is that.

It's almost as if I shit through my skin.

I observed the changes from a distance.

First of all, the development of the mana circuit was a success.

It was exactly as I expected.

Rather, the body's development was astounding.

My five senses had significantly sharpened, including sight...

My skin, bones, and physique all reached a respectable durability compared to before.

The twisted joints from living as an invalid were gone, and my muscle flexibility improved significantly.

In addition, my stamina and strength stats rose quite a bit.

Above all, my senses for feeling and perceiving mana were sharper than ever.

It really felt like an overhaul of the body, like in martial arts novels.

Unlike before, when I went back and forth between raising levels and training for prolonged periods of time, I transformed my invalid body to this point in just a few hours.

It was no different from completely reconstructing it.

It was enough to warrant the pain and agony that came before I passed out.

In addition, I also gained higher levels of Pain Tolerance, as well as just one level of Faint Resistance.

You could see it as attaining a slightly better result compared to my original goal.

Most of all, my heart was calm.

Maybe it was because I had expelled all the bad elements in my body, but my heart was as light and tranquil as my body.

The troubles that harrowed my mind before passing out were still present.

But I felt as though I could deal with those troubles without much worry.

I manipulated my mana as I walked.

I finished my testing after checking the mana circuit and verifying it by encapsulating the tip of my finger with aura.

Definitely a result I was satisfied with.

It wasn't comparable to my body before entering the 35th floor, but with this I no longer had to struggle with the body's inadequacy.

I brushed the filth off my body and dried my wet clothes with mana.

The stench was immense, but I also blew it off with mana.

Normally, I used deodorant or changed into new clothes.

But right now I don't have access to the inventory or any items, so I needed to dry and deodorize each item to get rid of the stench.

It was an unconventional experience.

After making sure I was in presentable condition, I left the spring and started walking.

As I walked on, I soon reached the 5th floor boss room.

Once I saw the room, I had mixed feelings.

Would it be the right choice to open this?

Or should I just bide my time and pass onto the 6th floor?

In truth, the answer was already set.

I had no intention of backing away.

If I don't open this door, even if it was the correct choice, I'll rue the day forever.

My hesitation was about Idy.

But the remorse after the choice had nothing to do with her.

It was my problem.

I put strength in my hand, and gave a hard push.

The enormous door opened, and an overly familiar face greeted me.

“It’s been some time since I’ve had a challenger. Keruk, Keruk.”

A message telling me to defeat the enemy in front of me didn’t appear like the last time I entered the 5th floor boss room.

There wasn’t even the wall blockading us from each other.

I ended up coming face to face with her, who was giving me a blank gaze while sitting on the floor.

“I... daltar”

“Keruk?”

Idaltar’s eyes glistened from the words that escaped my mouth without me thinking.

To be fair, Idaltar’s eyes always glistened, but even so, they glistened even more.

“You know my name. Keruk, Keruk. Did you hear it from my brethren?”

My heart beat briskly from the thought of almost accidentally having called her Idy unintentionally.

Her real name ‘Idaltar’ and the nickname ‘Idy’ was how I was distinguishing her.

“Keruk, then you probably haven’t heard good things.”

She was quite unusual in the tutorial because Idaltar was one of the few beings who was somewhat familiar with the system.

Since she was imprisoned alone in the 5th floor boss room, it was probable that she needed to have some knowledge regarding the general state of things.

Obviously, she knew that her kind were outside this boss room.

But there was one thing that bothered me.

When I first entered the room, Idy said that I was the only challenger in quite some time.

“Was there another visitor in this room before me?”

I wanted to ask if she remembered others before me.

“Keruk, Keruk.”

Idy keruk’d and swayed her head to say no.

“Then why.”

“That makes it seem more legitimate. Keruk, Keruk.”

Idy was...

No, Idaltar laughed, keruk-ing as if she found something funny.

The Idaltar in front of me seemed to overlap with the dying Idy in the Temple of Dinosaurs.

Her freedom was limited by the Constraints; she had little choice in what to think and say.

Her memories were tampered with, and she couldn’t even attempt to try and remember her past.

And she knew these facts.

But she laughed as if it was unavoidable; my memories of her overlapped with the reality in front of my eyes.

Rage and sadness leapt up inside me chaotically.

I suppressed the emotions as best as I could.

It wasn't something the Idaltar in front of me would want either.

Above all, I couldn't accomplish anything when being swept away by these emotions.

What I wanted was to resolve the root cause for this rage and sadness, not to run rampant after being swallowed whole by these emotions.

“Keruk, you don't have to pity me. I don't know why you're so concerned with my situation. Keruk, Keruk, the challenger this time is rather kind.”

Her words telling me I didn't need to be so concerned pulled me deeper into my pit of emotions.

I cleared my throat and said.

“Khem, hm, it's not nice to strike at the core of someone else's thoughts.”

It was something she had said to me in the past.

“But I'm good at reading others' emotions. Keruk, I was ostracized ever since I was young by my own kind. I had to get used to deciphering their reactions. After I became a Great Warrior and received power from a god, I became able to read other people's emotions almost perfectly.”

I didn't ask which god gave her the power.

I knew she wouldn't be able to answer.

“Keruk, I don't know why you're feeling pity for me, but I hope today's encounter goes well. Even if it's something that I won't be able to remember after this time is over, isn't it better to enjoy the present?”

“Yeah, you're right.”

She was right.

There was no need to complicate things.

“So, about that. Keruk, Keruk.”

Idaltar gave a long speech but soon became bashful.

I could predict her words from my past experience.

“Would you mate with...”

“Nope.”

“Keruk.”

That again.

Is that why she was going on about having a good time and stuff?

Once I realized her notion of a 'good time' and mine was different, I realized what she said could be heard differently.

“Keruk.”

Good time my ass. Idaltar made a face as if the world was falling apart and looked like she was about to cry.

“Why are you so down? Am I in the wrong here? Is it really my fault?”

Even if you make a sad face, I'm still not going to do it."

At my words, Idaltar scratched her head and straightened her face.

"Keruk, didn't think that my compassion-inducement strategy wouldn't work. Such a shame."

I had one thing I wanted to ask Idaltar.

Female lizardmen... lizardwomen had been lunging at me ferociously.

And from what I know, for the lizardmen race the strongest and most triumphant have priority in every situation.

When I met Idaltar for the first time, she was the stronger one and boldly requested that I mate with her.

Of course, I declined, and Idaltar was upset and dumbfounded.

That's how the lizardmen race was.

The strong deserve respect, and most willingly and even gladly accommodate to their requests.

Therefore, the strong can comfortably demand what they want from the other.

On the flip side, the weak make frantic ef.

To gain the right to request what their desires through victory.

Or even if they don't win, to appeal to the other by fighting fiercely.

If you just listen to the explanation, you'll be wondering what kind of crazy talk is this.

To be fair, the lizardmen race has a few screws loose to begin with.

Idaltar was on the calm and sensible side of the spectrum.

Anyway, to get back to my original point, I wasn't able to distinguish the males and females of the lizardmen race.

But now that I can definitely distinguish them, I wondered why female lizardmen were particularly ferocious towards me.

"You just like the way I look?"

"Keruk, Keruk. Ideal type. Handsome."

Motherfucker.

Idaltar just said that my face is an ideal appearance for lizardwomen.

What kind of face is the face that's popular among lizardmen. What on earth...

"Exactly your face. Keruk."

Turns out my face is celebrity-level for lizardmen.

Should I be pleased or not?

All of a sudden, I remembered the time when I met her for the first time.

I thought I had gained her favor because I acknowledged and complimented her skills.

But according to what she was telling me now, that was all a delusion.

It was highly probable that she would've lunged at me no matter what I said.

"To continue with that, Keruk."

Idaltar gripped the spear she had over her shoulder.

“Won’t you do it?”

I got goosebumps from her serious voice.

“Don’t leave out the object of the sentence!”

“It was an ambiguous meaning. Keruk. We’re going to do it anyway if I win, right?”

“NO!”

“Keruk, Keruk, Keruk.”

Idaltar laughed and keruk-ed as if it was funny.

“You won’t shy away from the duel right?”

“Of course I won’t.”

It wasn’t easy to find a dueling partner like her.

Proficient spearmanship in strong strikes and cunning judgement.

In addition, she also has an Authority from an unknown god.

While there were stronger foes than her in the higher floors, it was hard to find a dueling partner as constructive as her.

Above all, she relishes duking it out in a rough brawl over talking as much as I do.

The lizardmen are warriors from birth.

Even if it doesn’t have to do anything with mating, they love battles.

“Keruk, you don’t seem to have a weapon.”

“Unfortunately.”

Instead, I pulled out long blades of aura just above the top of my hands.

The mana consumption of the blades wasn't as bad as I thought.

Forming mana on weapons constantly consumes mana.

But it doesn't take much mana to maintain the form of perfectly refined aura like this.

I checked the length, width, and sharpness of the claws I extended from the top of both my hands.

It was basically a zealot.

“Keruk, what an incredible challenger.”

Idaltar said as if delighted.

“Keruk, but I hope you won't be careless. I feel like I'll finally be able to use the power I'm normally unable to. Just don't die on me.”

“Power you were unable to use?”

“Keruk, Keruk.”

She didn't seem to be able to say more.

Was there power that I wasn't aware of?

To be fair, she did have unusual abilities.

She is able to temporarily boost her body's ability, as well and temporarily become invulnerable by turning her body into smoke.

In addition to that, she can brandish her cursed-level strength through her weapons.

An ability I didn't know in addition to that?

Was she really an ex-Apostle of a god?

“Ok, let's go at it.”

Chapter 190

Tutorial 35th Floor (9)

Before engaging in battle, Idaltar's eyes flushed red.

In that state, her muscle strength and tolerance to pain increases drastically.

Kwang!

She created a massive fissure by slamming her spear on the ground.

Let's avoid battles of strength if I can.

I thought that technique was only something she could use when her emotions were in turmoil, but it turns out she can use it whenever she pleases.

"Keruk, it's on!"

Idtalar kicked off the ground with a shout.

A typical stab using the superior reach of the spear came at me.

I quickly lowered my body to evade the spearhead flying towards my throat.

With the aura-formed claws on my right hand, I intercepted the spear and closed the distance.

Along with a 'voong' sound, the spear brushed past my ear.

Some sparks flew and noise rang out from the aura's collision with the spear.

Idaltar took a step back and retracted her spear.

All the while, she kept me in check using her tail and spear shaft.

Kang! Kang! Kang! Kang!

My aura repeatedly clashed with her spear.

As if knowing I was aiming at her blind spots, Idaltar held me back using smaller quick attacks rather than a large sweeping one.

Even so, I needed to focus on mitigating her attacks to my sides because of the difference in strength.

“I can feel 7 times the strength rising up!”

“Stop saying shit like that when we’re fighting!”

Just as Idaltar said those hair-raising words, I saw an opening.

“Opening!”

Idy’s spear and tail flew at me in unison.

The spear’s trajectory was hard to evade to one side.

It looked like a perilous situation, but in truth, it wasn’t.

Lizardmen support their body using their thick tails.

Their feet, optimized for movement by water, isn’t made for walking on two feet.

Therefore, tail attacks were only possible after lowering their center of gravity, or by shifting their body weight completely.

Instead of avoiding her attack, I closed in further.

I blocked by whipping the shaft away using the aura claw.

Instead of opting to block her tail attack, I went for a strike at Idaltar's body.

The moment the aura claw penetrated her body.

Her body shifted into black smoke. Without a moment to be bewildered, I felt strong energy emanating from beyond the smoke.

Kwang!

I was barely able to block the spear strike that pierced the smoke.

I purposely let the spear push me back while blocking.

“Keruk.”

Phoo.

Too close for comfort.

“It was my secret attack. Keruk. I didn't think it would be blocked.”

I blocked it on an impulse.

What in the world is that skill?

It's not a Cloning Technique or even an Illusory Technique.

She turned her body into smoke, and immediately after her main body appeared from behind the smoke.

I couldn't understand the fundamentals behind it.

The skill I knew she had was turning her body into smoke to dodge an enemy's attack.

Furthermore, she couldn't move momentarily afterward, so she was open to attacks.

It wasn't a ninja-decoy skill like the one I had just seen.

"Keruk, should we continue?"

"Sure."

There were skills that I didn't know that mixed in, but I didn't feel the need to avoid combat.

Rather, the tension was multiplied and so was my joy.

As the fight went on, I took the upper hand.

It was due course.

Even if she was using skills that I wasn't aware of, or even if my body wasn't at the perfect standard, I knew her too well.

Her speed, strength, techniques, skills, as well as her instincts in particular situations.

I knew everything.

So, it was hard for me to lose.

Kwang!

Idaltar barely blocked my attack with a swing of her spear.

Instead of being pushed back by the impact, she twirled her spear and went for another blow.

The spear flying at me was smothered with black energy.

It was just at the moment I was expecting it.

The blackened spear pierced an empty space.

Meanwhile, I snuck close to Idaltar and pierced her heart with my aura.

It was something I had been planning before the battle had even started.

And as expected, my plans succeeded.

The results were exactly as I had planned.

“Keruk.”

Idaltar fell, keruk-ing till the end.

Unlike me, who felt a bit empty, she seemed very pleased.

I opened my mouth with hopes that she wasn't able to read my thoughts.

“You were great.”

Idaltar let out a grin and put up a thumb at my words.

And in the next moment, quietly passed away.

I was dumbstruck at her satisfaction and confidence.

I wondered if I would be able to do that when I died.

I didn't think I could.

It was my third time seeing her corpse.

The difference was that her corpse didn't disappear after her death.

I collapsed next to her corpse.

I wasn't in shock from her third death.

I gifted her the thing she wanted the most.

A defeat after a close battle, and an honorable death to be recognized by the strong in her last moment.

To be fair, the battle was one-sided, but from her point of view, it would've been a very close and intense fight.

It was the death that every lizardmen would dream of.

It would be the same for Idaltar.

Obviously, this didn't mean her complete death.

She won't even remember it.

One could also see it as never having happened.

But Idaltar would've been fully satisfied just before her death.

At least, it would've been much more satisfying than being reset after sitting down and chatting until my eventual departure.

It was even more so because, during the battle as well as just before her death, she will have felt the satisfaction of being alive.

Even so, it was my personal opinion, as well as a decision I made.

I was sure she would prefer this.

I wasn't all that different from her, so I could sympathize and understand her.

But while she would be pleased with the results of her third death, it wasn't a pleasing conclusion for me.

My desire for strength increased evermore.

[Round 24, Day 5. 9h 55m]

I got up after checking the time.

My joints are aching because I've been sitting in the same spot for over 10 hours.

I was in the midst of a quiet, flourishing forest.

The scenery didn't suit me.

I started my mana training as soon as I entered the 12th floor.

I wanted to build up my mana as much as possible before being moved onto the 13th floor.

I've already the level and the basic stats that I aimed for on the party stage before coming to the 12th floor.

I thought the monsters in the forest would be a nuisance before I started training, but it wasn't the case.

It may have been because of my mana, but there wasn't an insect, let alone a fucking bird nearby.

Thanks to that, there was silence except for the wind and my breathing in the dense forest.

The sound of bugs in the grass would've been nice. Not having the sound was my one regret.

"Status Window."

[Lee HoJae (Human)]

Lv. 8

Str: 16

Dex: 14

Sta: 19

Mana: 34

Skill: Battle Focus Lv. 30, Willpower Lv.7, Awakening Lv. 7, Dash Lv. 4, Covertiness Lv. 19, Superhuman Senses Lv. 1, Sensory Amplification Lv. 1, Senses Lv. 20 Ironwall Lv. 2, Natural Recovery Lv. 5, Super-Regeneration Lv. 5, Intermediate Swordsmanship Lv. 10, Intermediate Spearmanship Lv. 6, Intermediate Weaponry Lv. 10, Intermediate Throwing Lv.1, Intermediate Brawling Lv. 14, Mana Circuit Lv. 21, Pain Tolerance Lv. 9, Hemmorage Resistance Lv. 3, Paralysis Resistance Lv. 4, Curse Resistance Lv. 1, Great Magic Resistance Lv. 1

It was barely conceivable that I developed this much in just 3 days.

It was still lacking, but I was satisfied with this degree of growth for now.

My only regrets were that I wasn't able to pick up any new skills in the lower levels.

As I peered at the status window and checked my growth, my body was moved to a new space.

The dark stone room was a direct contrast from the earlier dense forest.

The 13th floor stage.

As I proceeded, I was met with a wooden door.

A sign with a number 0 was written next to the door.

Once I opened the door passed the hallway, a wooden door with a 1 written on it appeared.

“Welcome.”

In room number one, a giant monk over 2 meters high was sitting in a lotus position.

“It’s been a while since I met a challenger. What do you wish to gain here?”

The comment was surprisingly friendly.

I remember it being something along the lines of arrogant human or other the last time I came to the 13th floor.

It was because the plot of the stage itself was to be victorious against the enraged monks carrying out the god’s will.

But since the plot was no longer applicable, they seemed amicable.

“A clue to further growth is enough.”

“Uhaha, that’s not easy to attain. At your level, who knows how many years it would take until you get a tiny clue.

You wouldn’t even know if it’s applicable to yourself even if you find one.”

“That’s for ordinary people. I really just need a small clue.”

For example, JuJi’s power filling this room maybe.

I could feel JuJi’s power here, who would be sitting on the 33rd room.

Surprisingly, this power wasn’t mana.

It probably wasn’t holy energy either.

Then what was the identity of the power encompassing this room?

If I can uncover this, I would be satisfied; at that point, I would have attained enough on this 13th floor stage.

“Uhahaha, you’re a confident challenger. You were probably able to attain your level precisely because of that confidence.”

What a magnanimous monk.

Most monks like confident and enthusiastic people.

They were known to be indifferent We use cookies to enhance your visit to our site and to bring you advertisements that might interest you. Read our ferent to how others addressed them, which meant he could be as gutsy as he liked.

Because they don’t really care about others’ attitude or tone, one did not have to worry and could speak as gutsy as they want when talking to them.

“So, about that.”

“Mmm? What is it?”

“Since I don’t have much time, what’s the fastest way I can get the 33rd room?”

The monk chuckled at my words.

“There’s only one way to get to the next room. Uhahaha.”

It means there isn’t one. Fuck.

“Honestly, can’t I just run through really quick?”

“I can’t let you do that. I can only let you through once you pass the trial. Uhahaha.”

The 13th floor stage is rather long.

The last time I had a crack at this, it took me several days.

The difficulty far surpasses the level of the 13th floor, especially the rooms after the 15th one.

I couldn't say how long it would take to get past the rooms at that point.

The time allocated to me on this 13th floor stage was just 13 hours.

I wasn't sure if I could meet JuJi within that time frame and attain a meaningful clue.

"Ah, can't you just let me through?"

"I can't do that, Uhahahaha."

There was a joking element to the monk's laughter now.

Damn, I misspoke.

The thick-jawed monk had a clownish expression.

It was possible he would try and drag the fight on as long as possible.

"Uhahahaha."

I confirmed that the monk had no intentions of letting me pass.

Since that was the case, I'll break through with brute force, no questions asked.

I kicked off from my spot and lunged at the monk.

My fist clashed with the monk's fist.

Chapter 191

Tutorial 35th Floor (10)

“Isn’t this a little too much?”

“Uhahaha, I’m not too much, you are even more overwhelmed that you try to pass in a simple way.”

Said the Buddhist monk, who clung to the wooden door and was blocking the road with his whole body.

I thought it was impossible to reach room 33 in limited time.

So I came up with one expedient.

It wasn’t special.

I just ran away to the next room, ignoring the monk in the room.

That’s how I passed through room 25.

And maybe he heard the screaming of the monk in room 25, the monk in room 26 shut the door like that.

“What’s going on in room 33? Why are you so urgent to get there?”

“There is nothing going on in room 33. I just want to meet JuJi.”

“Then, why don’t you slowly pass through the rooms and then meet JuJi? Of course, I mean if you can safely pass through every room up to room 33. Uhh.”

I hated the way he laughed so boldly very much.

If a fly got into that wide open mouth, I believe his mouth wouldn't be a circle (he wouldn't be laughing so happily).

"I am so anxious because I have no time. I really don't have time."

I appealed that I had no time, but I didn't expect the monk to step aside.

All the monks I have encountered so far had ignored my words.

And so did this monk.

"Uhahaha, I see. But the world will not work according to people's wishes. Uhahaha."

Generally speaking, I don't have to give up. I can rush out, but time was not enough. There is no way.

Furthermore, even if I somehow met JuJi, I wouldn't have much time left to learn from him.

It's time to select Plan B.

"Oh, have you finally made up your mind? What kind of resolution?"

The monk looked at me who was determined, and asked with a smile.

"Firstly"

"What?"

"Let's play a game first."

"Uhahaha, it's nice for me. Let's get started."

When the monk's feet stepped on the clouds, my 26th battle began on the 13th floor.

“Uhahaha, that’s good, good.”

What is it?

This feeling of losing even though I won.

When I saw the monk who was bleeding everywhere but still laughing, I could not tell who had won.

Ah, of course, I won.

I went to the corner of the room and sat down against the wall.

“Well? Shouldn’t I go over to the next room?”

“It seems that it’s because there is no time. Thanks to everyone.”

Now, I really do not have much time.

If I couldn’t meet JuJi, I had to find a clue here where I could feel JuJi’s power.

I still want to go to a closer room even if it’s only a little bit closer, but it would be close enough to feel JuJi.

“Uhahaha, I’m sorry about that.”

“If you feel sorry, just be quiet. And I beg you not to laugh anymore.”

After I finished these words, the monk began to laugh without a sound.

It was not soft giggle. He laughed so boldly the same as before, but there was no sound anymore.

I am going to get angry and explode.

When I encountered monks in the past, they did not seem to be such a funny character.

Just because the clear goals and related settings were missed, attitudes changed.

Like someone else.

Will each other's positions work as conditions for judging others in the end?

I stopped thinking about useless things and closed my eyes.

The power of JuJi was clearly felt here as well.

His power had put pressure on me and made my senses dull at the same time.

At the same time, JuJi in Room 33 was observing me through this power.

When I first came here, I understood all this as a phenomenon that JuJi created by his mana.

So I was surprised that JuJi had an incredible amount of mana.

But it's not simple mana.

There were some reasonable clues.

Spirit, what Kiri Kiri said before.

She said I hid my mana and my own spirit as well.

It was a natural direction of development.

However, Kiri Kiri advised that if I could release spirit without consuming mana, that would be a great help.

Once I was tested in JuJi's room and for a moment my spirit expanded from room 33 to room 1.

In that short period, I could clearly see the strength of JuJi.

When I met the Great Mother and the Demon King, I felt great pressure.

Of course, my body got exciting due to that pressure and tried to take it in, but it certainly wasn't something that a normal person could bear.

It was an unnatural phenomenon in any way.

If you see it as spirit.

It's more like someone's strong sense of existence than simple burst of power.

Generally speaking, the sense of existence could only be observed when someone feels an object as the subject.

The person standing in front of the tiger is afraid because he or she has fear in the heart.

But sometimes it's not.

Nothing happens, but suddenly you feel creepy and when you look back, there is a person standing there.

Or walking down the street, you have a very strong impression on the person you are looking at by chance, and then found that it is a very famous person.

Or a singer who shows off his exceptionally strong presence on stage.

Of course, people often see this as a preconceived bias or frivolous feeling, but what if it is not.

What if that everyone has an average sense of existence is the norm.

And as you grow up here, your presence grows as well.

Kiri Kiri said I was hiding my spirit.

When I cherished and hid my mana, my mana was also hidden, without knowing it.

In other words, if you don't try to hide it, you won't have to hide it.

There had been no clue yet, but it seemed not very difficult not to hide the spirit.

The next thing to think about was intentionally displaying and processing more spirit.

I can refer to JuJi and the Great Mother.

I should've met JuJi.

Even if I was disappointed, I still tried to grasp the power of JuJi that I felt far away.

And the power I felt inside me.

Just then, I found a kind of existence suddenly broke into my space, and then I opened my eyes.

“What happened?”

“Great concentration. It seems that you have been summoned many times. In this case, you can still notice it when I just crossed the line. This is your space. Uhahaha.”

The giggling monk did have a foot in my space.

Because I had been watching him with an expression of suspicion, the monk explained.

“It’s almost the time you mentioned before. Shouldn’t you go?”

[The 24th, 6 Day. 18:59]

Time was really up.

I was about to move to the 14th floor.

I didn’t know that so much time had passed.

“Thanks to you, I’ve learnt a lot.”

“What?”

“The power I feel from you is a little weak, and witnessing you change that way is a valuable experience for me. Although it is a bit difficult to stick to, it’s still to some extent valuable. Thank you.”

It turned out that he had been observing the power that I burst out.

Think of it, it seemed more efficient that someone observed me and let me know the result than I did myself.

“Since you have gained valuable experience, you should do the same thing.”

“You don’t have to give me anything.”

I can’t even take it with me.

Weapons were not necessary for me.

“I’d like to give you something valuable, but unfortunately, what I have right now is this elixir.....”

Before the monk finished his words, my body moved.

It was the 14th floor stage.

“Ahhhh”

Elixir!

If you wanted to give me the altar, you should give it earlier!

I can eat the altar and come over!

Damn it.

If I had 30 seconds more, I'd have an altar to eat.

With the feeling of collapse, I sat on the ground and could not get up immediately.

After a while, I decided what to do next.

For the first time, I continued to train.

Next, I needed a helper to confirm my training performance and to inform me of the results.

I thought about the stage where there would be someone who can help me.

The closest one was 16th floor.

The stage where there was a mix of doppelgangers in the dungeon.

There were a number of people who were fairly high-quality, and the 16th floor, which people spent most of their time doing nothing, was the best place to find an assistant.

I will be moving to the 16th floor after some time, so let me do some more training during this period.

I thought so and closed my eyes again.

* * *

“Light.”

With the calm voice of magician, the light shone.

An old man with a wide-brimmed cone hat and a wooden cane appeared.

It was the magician in my memory.

What you saw in the community was a paladin, a knight, a magician, a mercenary, an adventurer, and me.

There were six people in total.

“Doppelganger! Doppelganger disappeared! Did he run away? “

The mercenary screamed.

Not only the noise, but also the voice were pollution.

“The doppelganger must still be here. Be careful. My sword is still warning you that there’s a demon in this space.”

The way paladin announced the existence of a doppelganger was the same.

The adventurer pointed out that the doppelganger could use transparent magic, and the magician used transparent sensing magic to identify the surroundings.

Think of it, that magician was a doppelganger.

Since the magician was most likely to detect something at first, it was the wisest from Doppelganger's point of view to eliminate the magician and take over his appearance.

I would not have thought of that he was on the body of the paladin who possessed divine power.

The ability of the knight to combat in short distance was too high, so I cannot attack him in the dark.

Then I got the answer.

He didn't hold the sword at that time.

When I was thinking, the conversation between people was going on.

"According to the record, the Doppelganger killed someone and took over his appearance. It seems that someone was attacked by Doppelganger when the dome collapsed. Then he became the appearance of that person at the same time, which really shocked me. People here are all skilled. It is a top demon species."

The explanation of this guy, which was like a know-it-all, was also the same.

And then something happened.

When people were looking around, the magician and I looked at each other.

The magician turned his eyes embarrassingly.

He did it before.

And I found that the adventurer was looking at me with interests.

The magician said that there were Doppelganger coming out everywhere.

Maybe because he knew the answer.

The conversation was going on, and going on, and who was Doppelganger was not the topic of conversation no longer.

Fortunately, the magician did not see my face in the attack of Dungeons, and the knight and the mercenary worked hard to move things forward.

The noisiest two people identified me as the Doppelganger, so this conversation went quickly and came to the conclusion that I should be attacked and got rid of as soon as possible.

The conclusion was made faster than before.

This time I kept my mouth closed, so it seemed stranger.

The knight and the mercenary drew the sword, and the paladin and the adventurer were behind, and behind them was the magician.

“You wicked devil! I don’t know who the master of the appearance you’re wearing, but I’ll kill you to offer the body to God and release the grudge of its master! Your evil soul will perish without even leaving a handful of ashes under the flame of God!”

It sounds like the words that paladin would say, but it was actually said by the knight.

Of course, I shouldn’t have to feel bad because he was talking to a doppelganger, but I still felt bad.

“Ahhh, for the highest king!”

Headed by a knight who ran along with annoying lines, the pedestrian joined the battle.

Of course, I defeated all of them with my strength.

“Do you believe?”

“Yes, I believe.”

The knight sitting on his knee answered me immediately as if he was waiting.

The mercenary who clutched his chest looked at him as if he was saying “Are you crazy?”, but it didn’t matter.

As expected, the knight’s posture changed very quickly.

Chapter 192

Tutorial 35th Floor (11)

“B... but!”

I explained for the paladin who was flustered and screaming.

“Don’t worry. I will handle the doppelganger before I leave.”

“Do you have a way?”

Said the paladin, nodding his head.

“It takes some time. About 17... 16 hours.”

In fact I could find it out right now.

Because doppelganger was the magician that stretched out there.

But there was something to learn from the magician, so I would leave him.

If the doppelganger took off his skin and expose himself, he would lose the scrupulous know-how and sensibility even though he could have the memory of the former host.

It was like watching a movie that was about someone else’s memory, and what he had was only the experience of watching that movie.

He have had all those short memories in the past.

Above all, there was no need to eliminate doppelganger now.

I would move to 17 stage after 17 hours.

The situation here would naturally end if I disappeared.

Because the situation was created for a challenger and made by constant repeating.

Of course, I'm thinking of getting rid of the doppelganger before I'm taken to the stage on the 18th floor to get some experience.

"You don't believe me?"

I said to the paladin who looked at me with suspicion.

The paladin didn't reply.

Let's change to a nearby target.

"You don't believe me, either?"

"I believe you!"

The knight answered immediately.

Now, the paladin also began to look at the knight with the look of a madman, like what mercenary did.

"So... what should we do during this time?"

"Maybe just keep our eyes on each other until that time."

"You still don't know who the doppelganger is?"

"Yes, I know. But it'll be unconvincing until I make it public. I don't want to make a fuss. Just think about who is the doppelganger and wait."

The back of fallen magician moved.

This was too obvious.

I was also worried that I might be caught by others and attacked before 17 hours passed.

“And there is something you have to do.”

“What... we have to do?”

The mercenary asked me in a loud voice.

I still hated that voice.

Mercenary had a really bad feeling toward me now.

Not for special reason, just because I beat the adventurer up, who were very close to him.

Once again, the adventurer made me slightly uncomfortable. At the cost, he was now on the side and spit.

That adventurer was the only one here who was losing his mind at all.

“It’s easy.”

“So what is it? It made me nervous...”

“Just tell me what you know. Magic, swordsmanship, knowledge of the divine power are all okay.”

Shouted the mercenary, looking startled.

Please, if that person can be quiet.

“Is it OK to omit other people’s core technology like that? No matter how strong you are, and even though you hold the lives of all of us in your hand, you can’t do this. My combat skills are never.....”

“I don’t need yours. Don’t worry.”

The chattering mercenary closed his mouth.

The mercenary seemed to be hurt rather than relieved.

He twisted his head awkwardly and turned his face to the paladin.

* * *

“Yes, that’s how divinity is supposed to be. But in fact, there is no such thing as a god in this world. They’re all gods from other worlds.”

“From another world?”

“I’m not sure, but I guess so. All the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple appeared in the form of God from the beginning...”

It was unexpected.

I never thought about a thing before it became a god.

“It wouldn’t be easy for a person to enter the stage of transcendentalism, surpass that stage and become a god. No matter how much they don’t care about the world, only the world knows the process.”

This made sense.

“According to records from other levels, there are countless ungodly people who want to be gods themselves while serving God. It’s embarrassing, but there are such people in the temple, too. Maybe that’s why the temple often asks about the temple in other world. “

The paladin explained enthusiastically while his unsavory attitude had gone.

He seemed to think that this was his professional field, there was no need to keep it confidential.

It was interesting, and I listened to it carefully.

“They said the transcender became gods at one point. For example, in a certain dimension, people are regarded as the existence of God, and people serve and support them.”

Now even the examples were mentioned.

I had never heard of this before.

“But one day, that existence talked to his followers that he became a god. Just think about what kind of stage that existence was at that time.”

The paladin seemed to be stunned, slobbered and lifted his neck.

[Ninety-nine gods in the Hundreds God Temple are looking at you.]

[Vote started.]

[Approve: 99 votes; Disapprove: 0 vote]

[Vote started.]

[Approve: 91 votes; Disapprove: 2 votes; Abstention: 6 votes]

[Vote started.]

[Approve: 37 votes; Disapprove: 41 votes; Abstention: 19 votes]

This situation had happened before.

It was that time when the king received black stones.

I couldn't know the details of vote.

But I would guess roughly.

The paladin stopped talking suddenly.

He was stuttering, as if he was buffering, and he continued for a long time.

“Suddenly I can’t remember where it comes from. But I am sure I have heard of it.”

The paladin looked not very good.

I hoped that he considered it as his memory was fading.

It was quite painful for someone to be conscious about his memory.

“It doesn’t matter. You can tell us when you think of it. ”

The paladin said yes.

This led to the discovery that the strength that flowed out of the black stone was related to the divine power.

For now, it was enough.

The paladin said he would think about it carefully and walked to the corner, and I started to look at the knight.

He was around the paladin when he talked all the time.

Nothing special, he seemed to try to butt in if he knew anything.

However, he kept quiet without a word. Maybe it was because he knew nothing about what the paladin talked.

“Is it my turn?”

“Yes, talk about your swordsmanship.”

* * *

“The first forefather to invent such a light sword.....”

“No, I know this. I want to know the 3rd type of light sword.”

“You know a lot about light sword. Just like you said, light sword has three types. The first type is how it first appeared in the world. At that time, the mainland was in chaos due to the Army War.....”

“No, I know it, too. Any information about the 3rd type of light sword?”

“That’s too much. The information about 3rd type is countless. The transmission of not only the inventor but also the knight after is countless. For example...”

“No, I’m not saying that!”

You stupid!

I couldn’t swear in the face of the knight who was keen on observing me, so I swore inside.

After that he had been saying something irrelevant.

At last, I just let him talk, as he wanted.

Then the story told by the knight proceeded step by step, and soon I heard what I wanted.

But, of course, I spent a looot of time to wait.

* * *

“So.”

Now I knew that people couldn’t speak fluently if they were annoyed.

The goggle-eyed knight looked at me, like a puppy that was exposed to rain.

“You really don’t know what I mean?”

“No!”

Looking at the knight who answered immediately, my blood pressure increased substantially.

“Do you want to die? I should have told you earlier. Do you know I am listening to your words for hours? You did it deliberately, right?”

I had listened to his words for over 5 hours.

And it turned out that he didn't know about it.

“But this is true. I have told you all I know. Except for these, I have nothing else to say.”

I really should have told him earlier.

Bullshit, it was my fault to listen to him without thinking about it.

I sat down dejectedly.

“Ah...”

Well, I only had one question to ask the knight now.

“What's your name?”

I had heard his name once before.

Although this time I had no chance to hear it.

“Aruhan.”

“What about your surname? A knight always has an aristocratic surname, isn't it?”

“Ah... I won't tell you my surname.”

I had been thinking about beating him up so that he would tell me his surname.

And I could vent my anger by the way.

This time the mercenary nearby interjected.

“Well, don’t inquire about other people’s private stories. You don’t even know what it means when someone introduces himself with first name and surname.”

“I don’t know.”

Really.

However, according to mercenary’s words, it wouldn’t be anything good.

I didn’t have to inquire about other people’s wounds just for story.

So I give up asking the knight’s surname.

Now, let me learn some magic from magician.

Along with the existence of the doppelganger, I could threaten him to tell me some information.

However, I was startled when the magician turned around.

He got so old that I felt uncomfortable when I saw him.

The magician really looked like an onion.

There was a face of young woman under the face of man, and a doppelganger under that face.

The mercenary asked me.

“When will you tell us who is the doppelganger?”

This was a good question at the right time.

“I will tell you who is the doppelganger soon.”

My word drew their attention.

“So... who is the doppelganger?”

“Wait for a while. Let’s talk about magic first.”

I walked to the magician.

And I took him to the corner.

“Can you build a barrier that is able to block noises? If it can hide my figure, it will be better.”

“W... why? Why do you want that kind of thing?”

He spoke like a woman, as if it was normal for a man to speak in such a way.

Although he spoke with a low voice, it was different from the way a man spoke in vocalization and pronunciation.

If he was not the doppelganger, the truth must be that he was a female magician.

But I didn’t have to show the doppelganger that hid in this woman’s body such incongruity.

So there were some questions.

“Let’s build the barrier first. We’ll talk about it later. ”

Others glared at me and the magician, as if they wanted to burn a hole on us.

The doppelganger would feel pressure in this situation.

It wasn't a bad choice for the doppelganger to separate me, who would reveal whom he is, from other people.

He would try to persuade me, or kill me first.

And I planned to coax the doppelganger properly (of course, using some force), and it was enough for me to get some information about magic.

"I... I reject!"

What?

"You know who I am, don't you?"

The magician spoke sharply.

"Yeah."

As soon as I answered, the magician's face became ashen and he drew back hurriedly.

He shouted to the people behind me.

"Help me!"

However, people just looked at him with an expression like "what is this old man doing?"

The magician made a gesture immediately.

The magician changed from an old man to a young woman quickly.

"This is the real me!"

“Uh... Doesn't she seem like the student of the Master of Maruathen Magic Tower?”

The mercenary muttered behind.

“Yes! I came in with the appearance of my teacher!”

Before people understood what she said before, she shouted again.

“Help me! The man tried to force me into a confined space while knowing who I am! ”

What?

This situation.....

“This lascivious man.....!”

What??? What man?

Chapter 193

Tutorial 35th Floor (12)

“What man?”

“Lascivious man!”

Instead of being angry, I was so dumbfounded and speechless.

You had been an old man before!

I protested for myself secretly, because of the absurd feeling that she called me lascivious man.

“You said you knew who I was!”

Yes, I did.

I knew you were the doppelganger.

“I don’t know how you got to know, but indeed you know that I came in with my teacher’s appearance. If you didn’t know about that, you wouldn’t be looking at me like that all the time!”

Of course I had to keep looking at you like that.

Because you were the doppelganger.

“And I didn’t say it because I was so scared, but isn’t it too rude that you use magic to casually look at someone up and down?”

Of course I had to use magic.

The only way to find out the doppelganger was to use magic.

Things were getting fuzzy now.

The doppelganger had three forms.

The forms of doppelganger, old man, and young woman.

It was quite embarrassing that the doppelganger was using the appearance of a young woman in order to gain more support.

The other people's eye expression became strange immediately.

I had to solve it as soon as possible.

But I couldn't come up with an appropriate method.

"If you are not, then tell me the reason! Why did you take me to the corner and ask me to build a barrier to block other people's sight?!"

Shouted the magician, with a sharp voice.

Okay, I am determined.

Let me drag the monster out of her body, and kill it.

I had got the basic information, no matter about magic, or something else.

I wanted more information, but I didn't have to put up with this irritating situation.

However, before I could even act, there was someone else who acted faster than me.

"Holy Strike!"

The paladin yelled and flew up. I avoided the divine power released by the paladin.

And I also avoided the paladin's battle hammer that kept flying in incessantly.

“Ahhh!”

What's this guy doing? Was he crazy?

I had been determined to attack the magician, but I had yet to act.

We had quarreled a lot, but we didn't have to be enemies.

I tripped the paladin and snatched his hammer.

The paladin, who fell on the ground, was shocked.

Through his eyes, it seemed like he was looking at the direction behind my back and the magician.

I took a guess.

The paladin had told me once before that the real look of the magician was like his daughter who was dead, so he couldn't attack her.

I had already paid attention to the doppelganger at that time, and I thought that the doppelganger had lost the memory of the paladin, and he was playing tricks, so I didn't care about it.

Now, it seemed that the paladin's trauma and the look of the doppelganger were some of the settings of the 16th floor.

If I hadn't been able to drag the doppelganger using Soul Siphon before, I think the same situation would have arisen.

If I were an ordinary challenger, this sudden situation would put me in danger.

I had to tell Lee Hyung Jin later.

I stopped my thought and looked at the paladin.

The paladin who lost his battle hammer was rushing over naked.

Everyone else looked at him with a “why is he exaggerating so much?” expression.

Even the magician was staring at him vacantly.

I hit the head of the paladin who was trying to tackle me with the hammer in my hands.

With a bang sound, the paladin fell backwards.

He wouldn't die.

Maybe.

By the way, hitting using the hammer felt better than I had thought.

What about integrating two-handed hammer into a big one?

Just like the character (in a movie or TV series) who liked to push goods with a shield.

While I was thinking, the second attacker appeared.

It was the adventurer.

I kicked the chest of the adventurer, who was taking out his dagger.

Unfortunate short adventurer.

A shorty with dagger, his reach was hopeless short.

Meanwhile, my doubt became stronger.

Why did he jump out?

So I asked him.

“Why are you going crazy, too?”

Instead of answering my words, the adventurer, who was still clutching his chest and curling up, spewed something out from his mouth towards my face.

It was poison.

I quickly covered my face with the hammer and stepped back.

As soon as I stepped back, the adventurer took up his dagger and shortened the distance between us.

As a result, I could only swing the hammer sharply and hit the adventurer on one side of his head.

The adventurer's head half deflated and he fell down.

There was no doubt he died this time.

Looking at the amount of blood scattered around, bones seen from the head wound, and what's contained in it, there was no doubt he died.

Hmm... I totally fucked it up now.

I was just going to pressure him, but I got a little angry when he suddenly spat poison in front of my face like a Hydra.

I only used average strength but the accident occurred because I was not sophisticated in using the hammer.

I had no chance to know why he had attacked me now.

However, to think he had kept poison in his mouth.

I guessed that he had prepared it as soon as the paladin had started to fight with me.

I had no idea why he had done this, just to kill me.

Apart from the reason that didn't come to my mind, the atmosphere went very badly.

Other people were all flustered by this sudden incident.

I wanted to keep the atmosphere as bright as possible.

Not only did I have something to learn from them, but I also had to concentrate as much as I could before going up to the 17th floor.

However, because of the incident, the atmosphere became more tense, and my plan got disrupted in many ways.

No matter how much I insisted that it had been self-defense, the atmosphere had changed.

They wouldn't come to me and show kindness in any way.

And the important thing was.

“Khan, Khanjar, Khanjar!”

The mercenary ran over, calling the adventurer's name.

They were good friends.

After examining the body of the adventurer, perhaps the mercenary would run at me.

Even if he wouldn't, he would definitely be hostile to me.

While I was thinking and looking for a way to break through this situation, the mercenary who was rushing towards me suddenly stopped.

His eyes were full of confusion.

Following his eyes, I looked back and I saw something was crawling out from the body of the adventurer.

To be precise, tiny tentacles kept growing out from his head, and those tentacles were struggling to come out through the holes on his head.

What's more, something inside him was forming its own body.

“Doppelganger!”

Said the knight, who had been silent through the whole confusion.

“Those purple tentacles belong to the doppelganger! The doppelganger tore the adventure's body and was wearing his appearance!”

There had been two doppelgangers on the 16th stage.

The magician, and me.

But this time the adventurer was the doppelganger.

I could understand why the doppelganger changed from the magician to the adventurer.

The existence of the doppelganger changed every time I entered the tutorial.

If it didn't, according to the explanation on the 35th floor, this stage would be the same as the other stages.

What about the second doppelganger?

The second doppelganger hid inside of the challenger.

But in all 35 stages, the challengers couldn't change the settings of every stage.

If so, could I infer that there was no second doppelganger?

Or perhaps there was another doppelganger among the rest of the people?

I kept trying to figure it out, but I had no idea at all.

I would go up to the next stage as soon as the time was up anyway, so I decided not to think about it.

Although the doppelganger was killed, the atmosphere was still grim.

The mercenary stayed in the corner, grieving over the death of his friend, the adventurer.

Confirming that the magician was not his daughter, the paladin was saddened by the painful memories of the past that resurfaced.

He apologised to the magician and me, and then went to the same corner as the mercenary.

The knight comforted the mercenary and the paladin alternately, and then became depressed like the rest of them.

Just what were they doing...

“Well?”

“What? ”

“Why did you take me to the corner and ask me to build a barrier?”

Ah, this question...

“I wanted you to teach me some magic.”

My words made the magician frown.

“You should have just said that you want me to teach you some magic. Why did you take me to the corner. It really scared me. Telling me to build a barrier also led to misunderstanding.”

The magician’s attitude was still not good, but fortunately the misunderstanding was resolved.

After the magician saw how I had used the battle hammer to knock down the giant tentacle monster, no matter what kind of misunderstanding it was, would be naturally resolved.

“Did you know that?”

“Know what?”

The magician always started a conversation suddenly.

“The doppelganger used the adventurer’s appearance. You said that you knew who was the doppelganger.”

Maybe that was why the adventurer, or the doppelganger with the adventurer’s appearance, suddenly attacked me.

As the adventurer was the doppelganger, he became apprehensive because I said I knew who the doppelganger was.

At that time, a hostile atmosphere against me had been formed and while the paladin had been attacking me, the adventurer thought “Yep! This is a good opportunity!”, and then he ran over to me.

“Nope.”

She looked dumbfounded because of my words.

“You really didn’t know?”

I nodded.

“I thought it was you.”

“What? ”

“I said I thought you had been the doppelganger.”

“W... what?”

A strange look came over the magician’s face.

“So, why did you ask me to build a barrier?”

“I just wanted to learn some magic from you. In exchange, I wouldn’t tell other people that you were doppelganger.”

“From the doppelganger?!”

“Yeah.”

The magician’s look at me became sharp.

It was sharper than the time she had thought I had been a psychopath.

“How dare you...”

The magician began to scold me.

How could you attempt to learn magic from the doppelganger, how could you try to hide the doppelganger, and how could you mistake me as the doppelganger.

She kept on talking.

This magician was much noisier than I had thought.

She had barely spoken anything when she had been using an old magician’s appearance. She must be uncomfortable when she had restrained herself to not speak too much.

She and that depressed knight on the corner were a perfect match.

I listened to the magician without speaking anything, and I asked her suddenly.

“So.”

“Yes?”

“Are you gonna teach me some magic?”

To increase the success rate of the request, I picked up the hammer that had fallen on the floor from my hand and asked.

“O, of course.”

I succeeded.

* * *

There wasn't much to learn from the magician.

Because I had heard the knowledge that she knew from the doppelganger before.

By the end of the magic lecture which lasted for several hours, other people had fallen asleep one by one.

Perhaps due to the confusion, those people were unable to overcome their fatigue and soon fell asleep.

Perhaps because of the death of the doppelganger, they were all sleeping in the room together, without even a night watch.

Except one.

“After hearing about the paladin’s story, I have thought a lot. In fact, there have been many dirty things in my family. Some of them are similar to what the paladin went through. The competition between aristocracy is actually much more vulgar and dirtier than the backstreet fight.”

So what!

“But I did get out of that hole, because I had become a knight by accident. Oh, have I told you why I became a knight? Oh, I guess not. It was a particularly fortuitous chance. It started with the Duke of Heblan. Have you ever been to the Duke of Heblan? Although it is famous for the beautiful lakes, there are actually more swamps than lakes. My brother and my friend Robben are also there. Oh, this friend, Robben, is my childhood friend, and we made a lifelong commitment when we were young. He is a common civilian, but we are close friends regardless of his status. From there...”

“Please.”

“Yes? ”

“Could you please just go to sleep.”

I wasn’t curious about your story. And you had already said it before!

Chapter 194

Tutorial 35th Floor (13)

[Round 24, Day 7. 16 hours 40 minutes.]

“Aren’t you tired?”

I looked at the knight sitting next to me and asked.

“Who knows what’s going on? I am not tired at all. A lot of things have happened today.”

“Why did you start to say something weird again? Just go to sleep.”

I stopped the knight, who was going to start a new topic.

His perseverance with talking was amazing.

The others had all sat down with eyes closed and were currently resting but this guy kept talking to me, I thought.

“There are many things that have happened, but none of them have been experienced by me in person, so I am not tired at all. Maybe I am just an outsider witnessing these things, so I don’t have that kind of feeling.”

That’s not true, you had experienced something in person.

You had been talking after experiencing so many things.

You had also rushed over to me and then been hammered by me.

I decided to give up trying to concentrate and then listened to the knight as he wished.

“What do you want to say? Don’t beat about the bush and speak frankly. We don’t have much time.”

Although the knight was really chatty, he knew what the others thought about himself.

So when others didn’t want to talk, he would stay in the corner quietly.

I met him on the previous 16th floor, so I knew this.

So the knight kept bothering me not because he was bored, but because he had something to say to me.

Sure enough, the knight scratched the back of his head and said,

“Are you sure it is finished?”

“What?”

“I am talking about the doppelganger, or whether there are other dangers in this dungeon.”

What was he talking about?

“Why do you think so?”

“Because no matter how many times I see it, it looks like you are preparing to fight again.”

If you knew about this, shouldn’t you interfere with me, and let me stand alone?

“Although you didn’t tell other people and you are not on guard, the way you sit here to concentrate obviously shows that you are preparing for a battle.”

I also felt it before, but this guy was really sensitive sometimes.

Although it did not help at all for finding the doppelganger.

“Something like the state of the mind? I can feel that kind of thing. Have I told you that I have participated in a war? I once went to the battlefield when I was young. The most impressive thing at that time was not the magician who burned the earth or the knight who could destroy a siege weapon with just a sword. It was an old cavalryman who was preparing to fight with a spear on his shoulders.”

Although he was really annoying, I had to admit one thing.

The stories this guy talked about were very interesting.

If you started listening, you would want to know what had happened next.

Maybe I had never heard anyone talk for such a long time after I had started the tutorial, so I thought it was interesting.

“I felt something special about him before the battle. I used to think that we should bring something to the battle. In order to stay alive, swords, fencing, armors, and teammates were necessary. But instead, what I learnt from him was to abandon.”

I seemed to understand what the young knight had learnt from the old soldier.

“He seemed to have abandoned fear, abandoned his obsession, and even abandoned his expectation, only focusing on the scene in front of him. It was not simply giving up all the thoughts about life. Although he didn’t directly tell me that, I think he was throwing all the useless things away in order to concentrate a little bit more.”

Doing one’s best and concentrating, were generally illusory.

It was impossible for a normal person to use the strength of the whole body and work hard with a mortal heart.

People would die before they managed to do this.

If one felt fear and despair, the brain would become confused. If a person was in an extremely tense state, the muscles would become stiff.

Any sense would be anesthetized by hormones.

In the face of death, human beings would not choose to overcome it, but instead choose self-anesthesia.

So we needed preparation.

It was the preparation in order to protect all and abandon all.

It was the preparation in order to face the crisis calmly and make a great effort in front of the crisis.

“Don’t worry.”

“Eh?”

“The danger will not appear here.”

The knight was quite confused.

I didn’t want to tell him word by word.

“I’m sure about that. Just go to sleep.”

This time I said these words while holding the hammer which had been lying on the side.

The knight immediately returned to his seat.

It seemed that I should have done this since the start.

The feeling of holding the hammer in my hands was very clear

It would be great if I could take this hammer away.

I had experienced crisis frequently recently.

I had faced enemies stronger than me and more enemies than this time, and had experienced the situation of being unable to escape.

But that kind of crisis was not serious enough to bring me the danger of death until now.

Since I had achieved a certain level, the crisis was neither a stepping stone for my growth nor an obstacle to me.

But it was different this time.

“Don’t fight.”

I remembered what Kiri Kiri had told me in a special tone.

I had heard about the information of the 35th floor from Kiri Kiri, and the first thing that came to mind was the 17th floor.

On the 17th floor, there was a mirage who took my appearance of that time.

Because I was the first challenger, I had ended the 17th floor within five seconds without doing anything.

So what would happen if I entered the 17th floor that’s on the 35th floor?

Would I encounter the mirage, or skip it as I had done before.

For my question, Kiri Kiri gave this answer.

“Since you can’t win, don’t fight.”

Something could be inferred from this answer.

I would encounter the mirage on the 17th floor.

It took 136 hours for me to get to the 17th floor.

It was 5 days plus 16 hours.

It was impossible to catch up with my accumulated growth from the 1st to the 17th floor during such a short time.

And therefore Kiri Kiri had told me those words.

The 35th floor didn't have any particular setting.

That meant there was no setting on the 17th floor that required my mirage to destroy the enemies in front of him.

Similarly, there was no setting that I should kill my mirage in order to get to the next floor.

“Don't fight, since you cannot win.”

These were the words that I couldn't respond.

I felt the shaking of the space.

Although it was the first time I felt such a thing, I clearly knew what it was.

It was the feeling of my body moving to another space.

The nerves that became extremely sensitive could even capture the feelings that couldn't be noticed before.

My body, which was trapped in the cave of the dungeon, moved to the stone room of a temple that I had once visited.

Along with the newly changed landscape, I sensed something new.

It was a murderous intent that permeated through the sweat pores of the skin. Just by feeling it, I could feel the heavy madness that's filling this space.

And there was also the mirage who looked exactly the same as me, exuding a fierce atmosphere.

[Round 24, Day 7. 17 Hours]

The 17th floor.

Sure enough, there was no message that should appear at the same time as my arrival.

The mirage in front of me didn't have to kill me.

And I didn't have to kill the mirage either.

However, look at him.

Look at the crazy man who pulled out the long sword when seeing me and smiled happily.

I didn't know why Kiri Kiri had said it's OK even if I didn't fight him.

I knew why the mirage was so happy.

He was feeling excited.

Because there was a new stimulus after such a long time.

Because of the crisis of death.

I really didn't like that smile, but there was also a similar smile on my face, so I decided not to pick holes.

I stood up.

Without saying anything.

I said nothing about the unexpected encounter with him.

I also said nothing about how he shared the same appearance as me.

There was no doubt that we had just vowed to kill each other and accepted it as the truth.

Looking at the mirage who took the first step towards me, I took out the things I had prepared beforehand.

The mana hidden around me suddenly unfolded. In the space between me and the mirage, the mana made a chain reaction.

There was no noise at all.

However, in an instant, there was an explosion that's fierce enough to give hearing loss, but the mirage broke through it.

It was a move that I had expected.

I compressed my aura and shot it straight towards the mirage.

It was a kind of finger strike.

Due to the explosion created by mana, the mirage could not choose to evade to the side or the back.

Blink

The mirage disappeared instantly and then reappeared.

I punched at the position that I had predicted, and it landed on the face of the mirage.

The thickly-compressed mana exploded, and the body of the mirage was hit and flew far away.

* * *

Shit.

The long knife almost grazed my chin, but I avoided and cursed it in my heart.

I tried to kick the abdomen of the mirage.

However, the mirage rather tried to grab my leg, but the mana's spinning near my ankle did not allow him to do it.

I knocked the mirage away and shouted.

“You ungrateful son of a bitch! This is too crazy!”

Just shouting loudly blazed anger burns in my heart.

Fucking Soul Siphon.

Just standing still made me feel lethargic.

Beyond simply being tired and exhausted, I had been affected by mana operations profoundly.

Any carelessness would give an opening to the mirage...

Damn it, I didn't want to admit it, but he was much stronger than me.

I couldn't deny that the fact that the gap between our powers is wide.

On the 17th floor, I never experienced such a serious crisis before.

Every time I faced an enemy, I had always been very calm.

If there was any danger to me at that time, the mirage could know based on how much strength I could exert.

But the performance of the mirage was beyond my expectations.

First, I only saw that crazy lunatic suddenly using magic like wind arrow and now he is unleashing an aura at the same level as me.

To my relief, one comforting point was that I succeeded in deceiving the mirage.

The mirage couldn't grasp me perfectly.

I could guess the amount and completeness of my mana circuit by looking at the techniques that poured out like water.

Of course, he would have thought that I had much more mana than him.

So the mirage chose a short-term battle and was ready to rush out without rest.

My odds of winning was slightly increased because of the mirage's strategy.

The total amount of mana I had was a quarter of that of the mirage's.

So if time dragged on a little longer, the outcome of this battle would be doomed.

The drawing board was unfolded. (I was prepared.)

The next thing was to draw the pictures. (What to do next was fighting.)

kuang!

The mirage spread the Talaria's Wings and instantly rushed to me.

My legs clashed with the mirage's sword.

The collision between both our auras exploded violently.

I twisted my body around to avoid the debris of the collision while preparing to start another attack on the mirage.

Information about the mirage and the situation was my best weapon

now.

I knew how would the mirage move next.

As I expected, the mirage pushed the sword away and rushed into my arms. I had foreseen this, so I was able to knock my elbows into his chin.

However, the mirage continued to attack as if he had never been hurt.

He was still faster than me.

He knew it and he would continue to take advantage of it.

I needed a breakthrough that only I had but the mirage didn't have.

The confirmation that I was the real one.

"I am the real one, you stupid motherfucker!"

We had the same face and figure with the same techniques and habits.

It was clear that the mirage began to feel confused while he was fighting with me.

The sentence "I am the real one" disturbed him.

Of course, He wouldn't delve into those words in the middle of a fight.

But just this short pause was enough.

The short pause was so fatal for him who was used the power that did not match his level.

And I would seize that opportunity.

Kuang!

His sword collided with my half broken weapon.

The remaining half of the sword started to shine in blue.

Damn it, it seemed that he was gonna explode.

The mirage was wielding a bomb that might explode anytime, so I had no choice but to stop it.

Bwoom!

I was temporarily blinded by the burning light in front of me, so that I couldn't manage to pay attention to the explode.

The crazy mirage tanked the explosion with his body and used Blink at the same time.

Blink moved his body forward, which should have been blown backwards.

In that moment, he caught my exhausted body flying in the air and stuck his short sword onto my neck...

I predicted that the mirage would rush to me after the explosion, so I grabbed his neck without any delay and placed my weapon right next to it...

Bang, we crashed on the ground together.

My back was stiff.

The mirage and I lied on the floor with him right on top of me.

It felt nauseated doing this with a man who looked just like me.

However, right now we both have our weapons against each other's neck.

“...Get off from me, you son of a bitch.”

The mirage was above me with a blade near my neck.

If I had not placed my weapon on his neck, he would have cut my throat right now. That was what his expression showed.

He was such a devil.

“Wh... Cough Cough!”

The mirage vomited blood several times as he tried to speak.

He wielded a force beyond his limits, so he deserved that rebound.

The problem was that all the blood spilled onto my face.

What the hell?

“You said that you are the real one. what do you mean?”

He had no way to prove that he was the real one at this time.

Aside from facing someone who looked exactly like him, he had always doubted whether he was “real”.

The face of the mirage showed even desperation, beyond anger and pain.

I could understand this feeling more than anyone else, but instead of comforting it, I laughed at it.

“Do you know the decisive difference between you and I?”

My vision was blurry due to his blood. I licked it, then I forced my eyes to open and smiled.

“Nothing else.”

I told the mirage, who was waiting for my answer, nothing.

“It’s the state of being.

My eyes still couldn’t see clearly.

But it was obvious.

The mirage wrinkled his face and looked away because of my aura.

He should not have given me the chance as I had thought.

I should have moved without hesitation.

That was the right judgment.

However, the mirage had given me more than 10 seconds now.

I decided to kill him.

“Mind Slash.”

The blade of aura sliced the head of the mirage before he recognized it.

The cut head rolled over my chest.

I threw it away roughly and removed the mirage’s corpse pressing on my body.

The difference between the mirage and I, was the state of being.

He had no different from me except that.

Ah, now that I’m thinking about, there was another difference between us.

The mirage failed, but I succeeded.

Chapter 195

Tutorial 35th Floor (14)

“Keak, ueak.”

I coughed up the blood flowing from my throat.

Nevertheless, my body did not recover.

My eyes are still blurry and my hearing is also problematic.

Although, my sense of touch is usable, it is not reliable enough.

My body exuded out chill from the inside.

[You have reached Poison Resistance Level 1.]

I am really tired.

That vicious and crazy man.

The blood that the mirage spit out is the root of my bane.

I had never thought he would mix poison in his own blood.

As far as the tutorial 35th floor, I had never thought that someone would mix poison in his blood offensively instead of using a weapon or limbs as a medium for poison.

I did not test if it was possible, so I did not consider its possibility.

Yet that mirage pulled it off.

This impromptu thought must popped up when he pinned me down and his blood flowed out because of excessive force.

I shot the head that was rolling around.

His judgmental ability was worthy of praise, but I could not regard it finely since I was the victim.

However, from his perspective, it was the best solution in that situation.

If I was poisoned when we were pointing at each other's neck with weapons, the mirage would have won as time passed.

He could've pried information from me while I begged for the antidote in his inventory.

He even thought about the antidote.

I couldn't touch the inventory, but there was his dimensional bag.

I remembered that there was one or two antidote in the dimensional bag, so I ran over the body of the mirage.

Soon I found the bag, in which there were a few odds and ends, some food, stamina potions and detoxification potions.

I took the potions out immediately.

I drank the stamina potions first and then the antidote,

There is no need to save them.

They would disappear when I moved to the 18th floor anyway.

[You have reached Poison Resistance Level 2.]

[You have reached Poison Resistance Level 3.]

I drank the antidote and waited for the symptoms to alleviate, yet the poison continued to erode my body slowly as if the antidote had no effect.

The thought never came to me until now.

My poison level.

In order to raise my level of Poison Energy skill, I had taken poison myself.

My Poison Energy skill had risen rapidly to overcome my high Poison Resistance.

I have never heard of a general antidote.

I no longer expect anything from the antidote potion and I intended to use mana to force the poison out of my body.

Even if I didn't have Poison Resistance, I could get rid of a few neurotoxins just by circulating mana.

My consciousness was almost broken, but I gripped it and forced my body to circulate my mana.

In order to prevent the poison that had invaded my body from spreading again, I blocked the path of their circulation. I planned to gather these poisons in one place and burn them with mana.

When I endured the pain and used mana, I fainted suddenly.

* * *

It was very noisy around.

I don't know whether this was a phonism sound in my ears or there was actually noise around.

The noise that hurt my head continued until I lost consciousness again.

* * *

[You have reached Poison Resistance Level 11.]

Consciousness returned with a message that the Poison Resistance Level was still rising.

As soon as I woke up, I used my mana reflexively to check my body.

The condition of it was the worst.

My limbs couldn't move and the poison still remained.

It was fortunate that I survived even after suffering from such extreme poison.

My eyesight is cloudy.

However, I am very lucky.

In order to stay awake, I couldn't use mana. I thought I would see nothing and spend time in the darkness with my blurred vision, but I managed to spot something.

My body was covered with large leaves.

I don't know how much I had sweated, but the ground was soaked in my sweat.

It was uncomfortable because the leaves were on top of my body.

What was strange was that I felt the warmth of the leaves.

I tried to focus my vision and found that there was something like mud between the leaves.

It seemed that the warmth was flowing slowly from the leaves themselves.

I was lying in a forest because all around me was only grass and trees.

It seemed that time passed and I left the 17th stage.

The stage that is nearest the 17th stage and set in a forest is 19th stage.

Did I skip the 18th stage already?

Maybe this was the 20th stage.

As I was thinking about it, I tried to use the mana in my body, but my consciousness faded again.

I lost my mind with the warm feeling of the leaves blanket.

* * *

I was awakened by a wonderful feeling.

It was really a wonderful feeling.

It seemed like someone was taking my pants off.

I opened my eyes and checked my pants.

There was a little boy who was trying to take off my pants.

He had fox's ears over his head.

“...What are you doing?”

Maybe because I woke up and spoke suddenly, Myong Myong may had been scared. He stuttered.

“I just wanted to find your wound...”

Usually, unless you ate poisonous mushrooms, most of the poisoning situations caused by poisonous weeds, thorns or insects would leave external wounds.

I looked at my wound, it had already gone.

He couldn't find the wound on my upper body, so he began to look at my lower body.

It was reasonable.

“There was no external wound because I consumed the poison.”

Now I knew who covered my body with leaves.

The forest setting of the 19th stage, was cold at night.

If Myong Myong did not cover me with leaves, my body that had been weakened by poison may be invaded by the cold.

I did a gesture to Myong Myong, asking him to come closer to my face.

It was difficult for me to speak loudly now.

I gave the pocket that hang on my waist to Myong Myong.

It was a pocket full of jerky and water.

At that time, Myong Myong was in a state of starvation because he couldn't eat well for a long time.

He pushed himself and suffered because he is taking care of me, so his condition was worsening.

I couldn't move, so I gave him the pocket that contained my emergency food.

But Myong Myong's reaction was strange.

Myong Myong did not think about checking the contents as soon as he got the pocket, but he started to cry.

“Are you gonna die?”

What is he saying?

I gave him food, but why did he ask this?

Looking at Myong Myong who held the pocket with both hands, I roughly knew what he was thinking.

“...I'm not gonna die. That's not a keepsake. Eat the food inside and find some herbs or fruit that can alleviate on my poison. “

I felt sorry to ask a weak boy to work for me, but Myong Myong had extensive knowledge of the herbs in the forest.

Maybe he knew some herbs that could be used as antidotes.

Myong Myong, who was tilting his head like a puppy, soon got up from his seat as if he knew what I said.

And before he left, he bent down and said to me,

“I am Myong Myong.”

He wanted to introduce himself first.

But he was really shy when we met before.

No, he was more afraid of me rather than being shy.

It took me more than a whole day to clear his boundary.

For Myong Myong, it would be more comfortable to stay with me who was lying down with pain than me at that time.

He was a good kid who liked to help others.

I said to Myong Myong, who was looking at me with his round eyes.

“Okay, my name is... I will tell you later.”

Myong Myong asked me why.

I didn't want to let him now because I remembered that he had laughed at my name before.

I explained that feeling to Myong Myong.

Myong Myong was a little disappointed and said.

“I never laugh at someone's name.”

Yes, you did. And you laughed very hard.

Of course, you tried to hold back your laughter, but it hurt me even more.

Myong Myong got up from his seat for what he needed to do, instead of asking for my name that I didn't want to say.

I thought he didn't want to eat jerky, but luckily he ran through my pockets while walking.

I lost my mind again when I saw the back of Myong Myong walking somewhere with a jerky in my mouth.

* * *

But Myong Myong strangely looked very energetic.

I remembered that he would get a cold every time he went into the tutorial.

Maybe he had a cold because he nervously taking care of me all night.

“Come on, open your mouth.”

I opened my mouth as Myong Myong said.

Myong Myong put the juicy stuff in my mouth, which was squeezed from herb

It was incredibly bitter.

[You have reached Poison Resistance Level 13.]

“...What’s this.”

What grass would improve my Poison Resistance as soon as I eat it.

“An herb named Sangun. It has the effect of protecting the body from poison and curse. Instead of just sleeping for a few days, you will get better when you get up. I have mixed it with the root of an herb named Hwaliong so that your body will not become weak in the meantime.”

“...I will fall asleep for how long?”

“About a week. Don’t worry, I will tend to you.”

I wanted to rebuttal the benevolent Myong Myong.

Of course, I appreciated the kindness of his heart for doing so much to a stranger who were lying in the forest.

But falling asleep for a week?!

I even didn’t know which stage I would be on after a week.

I could die while I was sleeping.

“Come on, it’s the last bite.”

“Well, wait for a minute. I can’t drink this...”

I tried to stop Myong Myong’s spoon, but it seemed like the herbs had already took effect, so my consciousness began to fade.

I felt Myong Myong ‘s herbal medicine coming into my mouth while my consciousness was fading.

I choked, but the medicine passed through my throat as soon as Myong Myong touched it.

* * *

A strange ceiling.

I did not know that I would say the words one day that was considered as one of the worst novels’ opening remarks.

But it was a very strange ceiling.

Looking at the materials, it was not a rough building.

It was not a modern building as it was old-fashioned.

I checked my body first.

The poison disappeared totally.

My limbs and body was normal.

My mana was also normal.

Sight, hearing, touch and smell was all normal.

Taste was also normal, I guess.

I was so grateful that I survived.

This time, I managed to get through the danger on account of luck rather than my ability.

I felt relieved, but terrified of the death crisis I didn't even recognize.

It was like I was halfway down the river Styx but I swam back finally.

“Do you feel better?”

It was a calm voice with no up and down.

I turned my head to the woman who asked the question without any surprise, even though I suddenly woke up.

She was sitting on a chair next to my bed.

“Seregia?”

It was Seregia that I met on the 25th stage, and she was attached to the soul sword now.

“You know my name? It seemed that you had been conscious once in a while in between.”

I nodded my head.

“I am glad you have woken up now. As soon as you were summoned here, you fell down and it caused some confusion. Your body has been cured by the priests, and after you were cured you were transported here.”

The explanation was neat.

“But how did you catch such extreme poison? The priests say that it was worse than the poison of Hydra in the Heblan marsh. It's hard to say that if the priests were not gathered here, you would have not recovered. ”

I couldn't explain the truth.

How can I explain that the mirage vomited his blood mixed with the poison onto my face and I was poisoned because the blood went into my mouth?

I ignored her question and thought about the past instead.

I went through from the 18th stage to the 24th stage when I lost my consciousness.

147 hours overall.

About 6 days.

It was about the fourth day since Myong Myong fed me the herbal juice.

I was so fortunate that I didn't die during that time.

Of course, it was possible because they were not the stages where risks came along with the entry.

“However.....”

“Yes, please speak.”

“Isn't it that my body is getting better?”

Myong Myong's special herbal juice made me sleep for 4 days in a coma.

“No, you're on the verge of life and death.”

Chapter 196

Tutorial 35th Floor (15)

I was a little relieved by Seregia's words.

Myong Myong's bright smiling face passed through my head.

"You are on the verge of life and death."

"You don't have to tell me it twice....."

Even so, I was still alive.

I just wanted to be optimistic about it.

There was something more urgent than that.

I was unconscious when I passed through the 17th floor to the 26th floor, which would be very troubling in the future.

I had to cultivate myself while I was going through the 17th to 26th floors to handle future challenges.

But now that I had lost the chance because of the poisoning, my capabilities has fallen short of the level required to handle challenges.

The biggest problems were the enemies beyond the 30th floor.

I didn't have enough physical strength, mana and other attack skills, so I needed the light sword technique to kill them.

Of course I could use light sword now.

But my body would explode instead.

I had to build up a body that could withstand the light sword's heat.

The schedule of my plan had already been so tight, but now my time had all flown away so the plan collapsed.

I need to find alternatives.

The first one was to find a new way that could defeat the enemies on the 30th floor.

If I could find a safer technique, which was not dangerous like light sword, I could pass the 30th floor.

However, I had no idea where to start.

If I had met Great Mother on the 19th floor or JuJi on the 13th floor, I might have found some new clues through a face-to-face meeting with them, but that was not arranged successfully in the end.

The second one, to abandon the conquest method I was using now.

As KiriKiri said, I would actively avoid fighting and flee for survival.

Flattering, hiding and escaping, I would be able to survive this way.

However, I was already determined not to use this method.

I didn't want to change what I had decided.

The last thing that I had to consider was how to improve my light sword.

I couldn't use the light sword because it was too dangerous, so all I could do was to eliminate or alleviate its drawback.

Of course, it wouldn't be easy to make the light sword safer while maintaining its power, but I had a feeling that it was possible.

The third form of the light sword was quite unusual.

It did not consist of a single action, like stabbing or cutting.

The basis of the light sword is the displaying offensive and defensive capabilities. This swordsmanship would manifest as the light sword.

A light sword that would explode constantly, killing all enemies around me.

But what if there were someone who could bear the light and heat ?

The founder of the light sword also thought about this question and his answer was to lengthen the fight while using the light sword.

No matter how much heat and light the enemy could bear, he would eventually falter.

So he held onto the light sword and burned everything.

He suggested to lengthen the fight until the enemy couldn't withstand it anymore.

That is the third form of the light sword.

In fact, this was impossible.

From my perspective, who is an actual user of the light sword, it is absurd to take continuous action while keeping that state.

But it was the information from the knight and he said that it was the only piece of information available.

It was possible that the information from the knight was distorted, but I succeeded in restoring all of the swordsmanship that he told me.

I was sure that most of the information was accurate.

Let's assume knight's information as right.

This was definitely the key point of the third form.

Users of the light sword could avoid its heat.

To fend off attacks from enemies in the inferno where the light sword was created, you should not be affected by the inferno itself.

Suppose the user isn't be hurt during the continuous use of the light sword.

If I could skillfully use the light sword, I could avoid self-damage.

With that alone, the enemies beyond the 30th floor will no longer be a threat.

In addition, the output of the light sword would be enhanced, too.

I had enough mana, skill, and understanding of the light sword to use it effectively.

The only thing was that my body couldn't bear it, so I must adjust the output

While I was deep in thought, Seregia was looking at me silently.

"Would you like to go outside? The banquet is in progress. If you'd like to go out, I'll take you there. However I think you should consider your body's condition....."

Said Seregia. It seemed that she wouldn't go out no matter what happened.

I also didn't want to waste time on banquet.

I told Seregia my worry.

Seregia had a fairly good insight into the theoretical part of swordsmanship and she had some novel ideas that I didn't have from time to time.

"Yes, it's hard to believe that it is possible. It's like a magic rather than swordsmanship.”

She was right.

Just as peak of different martial arts would be similar to each other, swordsmanship would be like magic if it exceeded a certain level.

“According to your explanation, it seems that you have a dangerous and primitive sword without hilt. And now you’re looking for a way to make a hilt.”

She understood quickly as I expected.

A primitive sword with no hilt.

Therefore I needed a safe hilt.

The space protected by hilt of the light sword was a safe zone built around the user.

The problem was a safe zone (hilt) that could bear the dangerous power of the light sword couldn’t be made by humans.

It was apparent that no matter how much mana I put the safe zone would break right away.

“Then maybe you need a safe zone like a typhoon’s eye, which is unaffected by the storm of power.”

Typhoon’s eye.

It was not a brand-new idea, but the image came out in my mind looked plausible.

If I spun the power of the light sword, would the center of that power be a safe zone?

Different from the typhoon, the light sword could target enemies.

I asked Seregia for a piece of paper and a pen.

I thought it would be better if I could draw my thoughts on the paper rather than just think about it.

I carefully marked the direction of the power of the light sword on the paper.

It looked as if I had drawn a magnetic field.

“I think it works.”

In order to make the light sword shoot straight and to burst the aura, it needed pressure from both sides.

Both sides would rotate in opposing directions.

The idea would be much more tangible if you thought about the two circles running on the baseball pitching machine.

How about increasing the output by adding another circle to the back of the two circles and at the same time creating a safe zone in the center of them.

But the problem was that the direction of the two circles was the opposite to each other.

I continued to think about it while I was drawing on the paper.

Seregia, who was next to me, took an interest in what I was drawing. She grabbed another piece of paper and started adding her own ideas following what I had drawn.

When the bright day passed and the dark night came, the floor of the room was full of papers that had been used up.

What's more.

“I feel this will work.”

“I agree with you. Let’s give it a try.”

Seragia was urging me beside.

“Please hurry up.”

“Why are you in such a hurry?”

“I’m looking forward to seeing it.”

Seregia’s mood is understandable.

Because I was in the same mood as her.

I couldn’t believe that I had worked on it for a whole day, but my head was full of inspiration.

I checked the design on the paper again instead of leaving my seat immediately.

It seemed possible.

“It is theoretically possible.”

The problem was that whether I could manifest this technique as well as the theory.

To be honest, this was clearly beyond my capabilities.

“It’s possible. Please have a try.”

“If I fail, will I explode?”

“You will be fine.”

I will certainly not.

Looking at Seregia's face, expressionless but flushed red, I could know how excited she was.

I remembered when she almost died because she wanted to observe the light sword closely back on the 26th floor.

I checked the design again.

It was complicated to utilize the original light sword, yet the complexity shored further with the new light sword design.

Curves and circles filled the papers representing the mana that I had to control.

They couldn't conflict with each other and had to achieve a synergy to complete the entire flow.

These papers were only designed for a single action, stabbing.

How many papers would be required if I wanted to show the design of the other various techniques of swordsmanship.

Furthermore, if I ceaselessly drew a design for all of the techniques, my brain would overload.

The founder of the light sword is extraordinary.

"Well, let's try it."

"Where do you want to go? We can teleport to somewhere that is near to the plain or the cliff."

She was really excited.

But we had something to do before it.

"Let's eat some food first."

I had been in a coma for several days, and studied the light sword for a whole day after I wake up.

Of course I was hungry.

“Just starve for a day.”

Said Seregia in a harsh voice while looking at me with her cold face.

I didn't know where the person who told me to rest in the morning had gone.

“No, I don't have enough energy, so I have to eat something first.”

I told Seregia, who was leaving her seat, for one more thing.

“If there is something like potion, take some for me too.”

* * *

After the meal, I left the room with Seregia.

We met some people on the road, but Seregia handled it properly.

“Well, where are we going?”

Seregia asked because I was taking the lead.

“We are going to take the holy sword with us.”

Seregia was surprised by my words.

“I will probably die if I use this technique with my current condition.”

“I see.”

Seregia didn't ask anything else.

Even when the guard in front of the sealed room was stunned because of the holy sword, she didn't ask any questions.

“Why are looking at me like that?”

Asked Seregia, who was rummaging into soldiers' bodies because she thought they might have some emergency artifacts.

It seemed that the empire did raise a lot of wastrels.

Different from when I came here alone, Seregia walked and found all the artifacts that were hidden in the walls and ceilings.

She is so skilled at this.

I was not sure whether we could do this, so I asked her.

“I think we should teleport as far as possible. Going to a foreign country is a good choice. You could seek asylum from the foreign nobleman who recognizes the strength of the technique you are going to try.”

She was planning the future in the meantime.

We walked for a while and saw the holy sword on the end of the road.

[Warrior.]

I heard a calm voice from the holy sword.

[Did you hear me, Warrior?]

I recalled the past.

I didn't answer the holy sword at that time, so he was anxious.

[Don't you hear me? Warrior? Warrior! Warrior! Ahhhh! Why people who come here during the past hundreds of years are all deaf? Ssshit.]

“I can hear you. ”

I couldn't just ignore it so I replied.

[Warrior! I have committed a capital offense! Please kill me, the criminal!]

What was he talking about?

I felt the absurdity of the holy sword in my hand, who asked me to punish him.

How could I kill someone who died once and became a sword spirit.

“Please set off. We don't have much time.”

Seregia stated.

I walked out, following her lead.

“I'll tell you what you need to do next as we walk so listen carefully.”

The holy sword was necessary If I wanted to finish this experiment smoothly.

As well as the protection magic that the holy sword had, his ability to help prevent the flow of mana from tangling was also needed.

Hearing my explanation, the holy sword stopped talking and began to listen quietly.

Sometimes he expressed his opinion and the design became better while we were on the teleport.

He helped a lot.

Sezeria operated the teleportation device and took us to a nameless plain.

We left the gate and could see nothing even over the horizon on this perfect empty plain.

“This place is pretty good. It is not the other country, but near the border line. Although there are castle chapels nearby, we should be able to cross the border before they come.”

[Round 24, Day 16. 2:45 p.m.]

It was the night here, but it was 2:45 p.m. in system.

The timing was perfect.

It was 15 minutes before moving from the 26th floor to the next floor.

Looking at the stars embedded in the night sky, I prepared the technique.

* * *

The light stretched out toward the dark blue night sky that slowly became red and the powerful gust generated by the light blew all the clouds around.

The light that penetrated the center of the red sky, where there were no clouds, seemed to be throwing open a door of the sky.

[The God of Heaven is displeased.]

[The God of Heaven refuses to expose his temple.]

[The vote begins.]

[Approval: 1 vote. Disapproval: 98 votes.]

[The God of the light is very excited!]

[The God of Heaven is very displeased.]

[The God of Light is very excited!]

[The God of Light is very excited!]

[You've reached Level 4 on aura mastery.]

I have surpassed the me before entering the 35th floor.

Chapter 197

Tutorial 35th Floor (16)

[Park JungAh, 60th floor: The danger of the tutorial of Hell difficulty seems to have been conveyed for sure. The newbies who came into this round say they've been informed about it. In fact, there are no newbies who came to Hell difficulty.]

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: I'm glad.]

[Park JungAh, 60th floor: I am relieved that things proceeded better than I thought. I thought the government might not believe what we said, or something unexpected might happen.]

[Lee HoJae, 35th floor: It may be because the outside situation is also abnormal. People outside may accept this phenomenon better than us, who have lived ordinary lives. Some of the contestants have come out after clearing tutorials from other countries.

I wrote it down and then I found that Park JungAh already knew the information I had.

She even knew much more than me.

But she said she agreed with me.

We peacefully chatted about the hardships and joy of recent life.

Park JungAh said that she thought about stopping the climb to 100th floor and taking a break when she reaches at the residential zone on the 60th floor.

She said she had been tired of doing the challenges and managing work at the same time. As the population in the tutorial increased, the problems also increased too, so she wanted to have a rest.

Although she is busy, it seems that she is living a peaceful life and enjoying the residential zone.

She told me about small things in everyday life, like planting a flower in the house and living a regular life.

I also temporarily stayed on the 30th floor.

But I couldn't share the same feeling as hers.

However, just listening to her daily life became a vicarious satisfaction.

There was a strange satisfaction from hearing others doing what I couldn't do.

It's not bad.

While I was looking at the message window, a hole opened up in the sky and a demon appeared.

"Newbie, Olphon want to see you."

Yes, of course.

He would appear soon.

I sent a message to Park that I would contact her later.

Park replied that we could chat again in the evening because business hours were nearing.

I turned off the message window and looked at the demon.

"Just follow me obediently. It'll good for you."

The content of the invitation was a bit different from before.

Is the treatment different from that when Orphean was indiscriminately beating organizations that are influential?

Perhaps he wanted me to be his subordinate.

Interesting.

After I nodded my head obediently, the devil used a gate magic.

I had seen that before.

Space magic is the field that I am most interested in.

So I got a lot of information about space magic from the holy sword.

“Is that magic able to remain for a while even if the user is dead?”

“What?”

Those were his last words as I sever his head.

He had done his job, so it was time to let him go.

I could see the space on the other side of the gate magic.

Interestingly, I could see Olphon and other demons.

They were flustered and angry because I killed that demon who led me.

I walked through the gate and moved to the space on the other side.

The gate that appeared in the sky gradually closed behind my back.

“Newbie.”

This was the second time I meet Olphon.

Olphon seemed like a little more nervous than before.

Amusing.

My strength and mana are not as good as our first meeting.

Even though my strength is less than before Olphon is more cautious and alert.

It seems that he is on guard against me because he couldn't read my upper limits like KiriKiri had said.

"You are a funny guy. Among the many demons that have passed through here, there are many who breezed through the preliminary area like you. There are even some who are able to reach the foot of the Demon king. However, there are also many fools who showed hostility towards me and died."

His speech was long.

I don't want to have a meaningless conversation with him.

"What are you doing newbie?"

I want to experiment on something from before.

It was the technique that I tested in the residential area of the 30th floor.

The technique, I'll call it "Yeodeuleum Pyo" or maybe "Sibam Boom", was made by aura of fist-size. (TL & PF's note: Yeodeuleum Pyo and Sibam Boom is the tempname of the new technique. The korean words are meaningless so we just transliterate these two words.)

When I used it earlier, It didn't infuse a lot of mana because the power was too vicious.

If I was well prepared and infused all of my mana, what would happen?

“Stop, newbie.”

Olphon stood up while the surrounding demons started to build defence net.

The demons at the far end began to quickly flee from their seats.

My aura mastery only increased one level, but what I got in the process is enormous.

I found a way to avoid damage from the power of the light sword, therefore I am able to apply it to other techniques.

Especially, this Sibam Boom technique which integrated the technique that the holy sword told me and the light sword.

“What do you want, newbie? State your demands.”

Of course, this technique is extremely dangerous because I am able to kill myself,

So I spent all of my time on this technique the 31st floor.

I couldn't see Olphon now.

The aura, which is rapidly rotating around me, is emitting blinding lights, so the view between the demons and me was completely blocked.

There is strong clamor and vibration inside my body.

I couldn't endure for a long time.

I could have added more power, but this is my limit for now.

I open my mouth before the aura exploded.

It was a pity that the noise was so loud that no one could hear me.

“Art is”

I really wanted to say this line.

“An explosion.”

Aura escaped from the tornado-like rotation speed.

The protruding aura stretched out dozens of meters and swept the area like a giant blender.

I abandoned the control of some aura at that time and then the aura burst out in every direction.

The explosion looked nicer than I thought from the inside.

This is real art.

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

[Level Up]

The level up notifications showed up in a row.

My current level would become meaningless when I leave the 35th floor.

The explosion, which lasted a while even after the level-up notices ended, had finally faded.

There were no living demons in this burning region.

Even their corpses had burned away.

What remained burning on the floor were flames, inside a giant crater, that had torched everything.

There was no bomb like this around.

When I leave the tutorial, I could be treated as a strategic weapon.

People can load me into a bomber and launch me into the middle of monsters.

The technique was successful.

I was not concerned about the power of this technique, but I worried about how much it hurts me.

My hearing and sight were not damaged nor did my mana circuit stagnate.

My body was throbbing and there was blood in my throat, but this was because my body was too weak at this moment.

It was unavoidable.

I cleaned myself up and quickly left from the site.

My body couldn't withstand the hot air here or the flames on the ground.

I left as soon as possible, but my body was burning everywhere.

I didn't recover from the damage I had suffered after level-up.

* * *

There was some time left after I killed Olphon and other demons.

I was doing nothing for a while.

It was a little awkward because there was time left.

Especially since entering the 35th floor, I've immersed myself in things every moment.

If I had an inventory, I would have been eating snacks, but I didn't.

What a pity. I opened the community window while chewing on jerky.

While I was doing this, I recalled the old days.

In the early days, I checked community as my daily routine, but recently I had never opened the community window.

A hot topic was being discussed on the community.

This was a normal occurrence.

If some hot topic appeared, thirsty challengers would rush to it blindly and talked about it as if the topic was the most concerning thing for every challenger.

This time, the topic was the possibility of growth of melee weapons.

The topic was interesting.

Warriors who only use melee weapons are usually less favored.

It is more dangerous and less powerful than focusing on skills.

What's more, their role in team battle is faint because they're not a tanker.

Rankers like me who entered in the early rounds lacked the options and focused on the weapon, but the challengers who entered later were encouraged to use skills.

This tendency became more prevalent as Lee Jun-seok, who mainly used an electric skill, became famous.

However, there were always challengers who preferred melee weapons such as a spear or sword.

People could safely level up with weapons at the very beginning and people with weapons were more powerful on solo stage. So, even this method fell out of meta gradually. It had its own advantages and demand.

These challengers recently called themselves as warriors.

I thought carefully and found that I also belonged to that group, so I read one of the posts.

There were a lot of opinions saying that warriors should play a better role in the team play, but warriors found their own ways.

There were some users in the AOS(MOBA) games who used off-meta characters and mastered them. It was the same as the warriors' situation.

It reminded me of the Japanese challengers wearing Japanese swords as fashion during the competition.

The hot topic in the community now was that we had to rethink the possibility of the warriors' growth potential.

The melee weapon was known to be weaker and weaker in the latter half of the tutorial. However, if you observed the people that mainly use melee weapons, it was not true.

I agreed with that.

This place is different from the earth.

Only by burrowing into swordsmanship and mastery of mana could one gain more strength than other people.

I also gave a comment to show my support to the claim.

People were surprised that I commented.

I appear in the community for the first time after so long. I seemed to be treated like a legend among the challengers who didn't experience the competition or grand conference.

I enjoyed the attention from the community more than I thought.

I also read other posts.

The warriors shared the basic rules, know-hows, and their experiences, which were quite novel.

Some said that your mind should be like a mirror or a peaceful lake. Some said that you should treat your weapon as part of your body. Some said that you had to wield your weapon ten thousand times a day to reach the acme of the martial arts.

Most contents seemed to be copied from martial arts magazines or comic books.

It was funny, but I disagree that I should treat my weapons like my own limbs.

In the tutorial, you could obtain and repair your weapons as much as you want and through inventory, you could change and use them at any time.

You don't have to take one weapon as your partner.

The body of challenger is the most powerful weapon. However, the community disagrees with that notion.

I wanted to comment and express my opinion, but I found that this idea would be difficult to accept.

I talked a lot about how to actively exercise and grow body.

There were few challengers who actually took the advice.

I closed the community window.

The people I saw in the community looked happy.

Maybe because the crime rate and death rate decreased rapidly, tension and fear disappeared from people's communication.

Even the concern about clearing the tutorial had disappeared. Now, people could enjoy it like a game.

It was not bad.

This was rather good.

It is only during perilous situations where the peaceful mind becomes a hindrance.

If there was no danger, it made sense to relax.

Excessive tension and fear would only eat people's spirits.

They didn't need excessive tension and fear.

Kim Min-hyuk said that he wanted the tutorial become a place where everyone could pass through comfortably one day.

I was thinking about what he said was just like this.

If so, It was going really well.

The community looked very pleasant.

I don't need to be jealous of them.

The path I walked was my choice and I was willing to accept this ascetic.

I don't regret it.

Chapter 198

Tutorial 35th Floor (17)

“What are you thinking about?”

“Just some things.”

“Talk about it. If you can relieve my boredom, I’ll reward you within reason.”

The attitude of the Demon King didn’t change.

He seemed to have an abundance of time.

His attitude still shocked me.

I looked down on him and the other demons.

Although they were born with powerful body and mana, they weren’t able to utilize it to its fullest potential. I thought they weren’t worthy of them.

“Talk, quickly.”

“It’s just interesting.”

“What’s interesting?”

I was going to tell these curious demons.

Though, I was not sure whether they could understand.

Challengers have a chance at various opportunities after the 35th floor.

There were many opportunities for challengers to regret and be frustrated of their past.

It also meant that the stages of the tutorial forced challengers to make various choices.

The stage's setting is really clever.

Challengers would feel injustice when their strength is stolen and they are returned to the beginning of the tutorial.

Because of that, challengers would ignore the results and only focus on the process.

My current growth and effort is regretful.

If I had worked harder and found a direction that I hadn't come up with before, would I be better than what I am now?

I have regrets about the relationships with people I met in the stages.

I should have improved my social relationships.

I regret that I thought the strength I gained in the tutorial completely belonged to me.

This stage made people feel remorseful for the past by returning to the fragments of their past.

"I don't understand your words."

"It doesn't matter. You don't have to understand it."

The eyes of Demon King twinkled.

He was interested.

"So what are you gonna do. What do you feel in such regrets?"

“Nothing. The past is the past.”

I must confess that my displeasure to the designer of this stage has gotten stronger.

“Interesting. I can’t feel regrets inside your heart. There are only urgent desires. You’re interesting.”

I asked the giggling Demon King what he was laughing at.

“I don’t think it’s possible to have no lingering feelings about a regretful past. Aren’t you curious? Don’t you wonder, deep inside, that maybe you’re fooling yourself.”

“No.”

“Ahhhh, you are too decisive. You should think about it carefully and then discuss your questions with me.”

That’s how you fall into a mire.

I felt this on the 26th floor, this Demon King’s mental capabilities are superior to his physical capabilities.

“Well then, show me your evidence.”

“Evidence! You ask for evidence, you really amuse me.”

Only when we gained results, is the process meaningful.

If my strength disappeared and the results were erased, I could take it as a process and draw some results.

The journey on the 35th floor was not just for me to look back into the past.

The design of the 35th floor and Kiri Kiri’s advice was to escape and survive, but I fought.

I didn't want to take all of my accomplishments as meaningless processes while having this weak body.

I took it as a test where I faced a wall with no strength and I needed to regain that strength in order to get over this stage.

This is the point where I finish.

When I couldn't run away, I would use the light sword in front of the Demon King and succeed.

I set this goal back when I was on the first floor.

“Light sword.”

I didn't have a sword, not even a wooden stick, but I used my light sword appropriately and skillfully.

Because my most powerful weapon was me.

When the bright light faded, what I could only see was the corpse of a Demon King who abruptly died.

[Tutorial, 35th floor of Hell difficulty has been cleared perfectly.]

[All status ailments and injuries were restored.]

[You got 7000 points as a reward.]

[You got 7000 points as the first clear reward.]

[Most of the Gods had positive reactions. You got 7700 points.]

[Most of the Gods had negative reactions. You lost 1200 points.]

[99 gods in the Hundred Gods Temple are watching you.]

[The God of Slow is quite satisfied.]

[You'll get an extra reward according to your play records.]

[You got 120,000 points as an extra reward.]

I made it.

With this useless body, I succeeded in honing the skill to use the light sword in only 24 days.

Since I proved the results, I had also proven the process.

I don't feel fulfilled by that fact anymore.

Just as the Demon King had said, only desires surged.

I stood for a while and calmed down.

A portal appeared in front of me after only a few minutes into the 34th floor.

It seemed that I had passed all of the 34 floors, so I didn't have to wait for 34 hours.

What a relief.

Before I went out from the stage, I looked at the clear messages once again.

I found that not all of the gods in the Hundred Gods Temple, but 99 gods were looking at me.

Why only 99 Gods.

There were 100 gods before.

I have to ask Kiri Kiri.

And the 120,000 reward point was also strange.

This was really strange.

The unit was hundred or thousand before, but it jumped to hundred thousand now.

However, no matter why, this is a good thing.

“Status window.”

[Lee HoJae (human)]

Level: 19

Power: 20

Agility: 18

Health: 25

Mana: 44

Skills: Battle Concentration Lv.30, Will Power Lv.20, Awakening Lv.10, Race Lv.10, Covertness Lv.24, Extrasensory perception Lv.3, Sensation Explosion Lv.15, Energy Lv.30, Metal Wall Lv.5, Meditation Lv.11, Natural Healing Lv.10, Regeneration Lv.10, Advanced Sword Skill Lv.7, Intermediate Spear Skill Lv. 10, Weapon skill Lv.10, Intermediate throwing skill Lv.1, Intermediate combat skill Lv.15, Aura mastery Lv.4, Pain Tolerance Lv.14, Hemorrhage Resistance Lv.7, Faint Resistance Lv.3, Paralysis Resistance Lv. 9, Poison Resistance Lv. 16, Curse Resistance Lv. 3, Grand Magic Resistance Lv. 4

Others: the God of Slow is quite satisfied.

If I cleared the 35th floor, what would happen to the skills I gained during it?

Did they just disappear?

I indeed obtained something from the 35th floor, but it was still regretful.

I stopped thinking and walked toward the portal.

At that time, an awful, terrible feeling cropped up from my neck.

It was ominous rather than dangerous.

The gaze that pierced me seemed as if it was natural and supposed to be there.

[The God of Remorse is watching you.]

Was he always watching like this?

The message given by the God of Remorse was the same as the words said by the Demon King.

To look back and regret.

This is not funny.

I exhaled and entered the portal.

Even though I saw that message, I didn't feel empty, deprived or sense of loss.

* * *

"A design error?"

"Yep."

Looking at Kiri Kiri who answered me while nodding her head, It felt ridiculous.

“Only ‘yep’? Shouldn’t you explain?”

According to the lesson I learned recently, I took away Kiri Kiri’s cake instead of just urging her, so she told me quickly.

“It is because of the God of Remorse. It’s not my fault!”

She avoided undertaking her responsibility rather than clarify the confusion.

Please explain clearly.

“That stone shouldn’t of come out.”

She was talking about the stone that the goblin king gave me on the 4th stage.

Kiri Kiri was trying to explain as shortly as possible.

I told you to explain clearly.

“It’ll be better if you forget that stone. In addition, you can’t reveal it to the community either.”

“You mean I can’t let anyone else know? Is it okay to control the information like this?”

“You got points as a reward.”

So the 120,000 points was hush money.

“If it’s Houjae you’ll figure it out someday. Don’t be too distracted about it.”

Kirikiri finished speaking and concentrated on the cake again.

The black stone of King Goblin, whose mysterious power had flowed out.

The mysterious power from that stone was still in my body.

“This power won’t cause me harm, correct?”

“Not yet.”

So eventually it will be.

Kiri Kiri... You owe me a punch to the face.

I took her cake and harassed her for 30 minutes, but Kiri Kiri only repeated that she couldn’t tell me the details.

Although I didn’t get the answer I want, harassing Kiri Kiri relieved my stress.

“Hing... My cake is cold...”

Looking at Kiri Kiri who was eating her cake while muttering nonsense, I smiled.

I opened my status window.

The swordsmanship, aura mastery and hyper-sensitivity skills, which had leveled up on the 35th floor, were updated.

When I read this lengthy status window, I felt strange and funny.

I was discontent because it was so short before, but now it was uncomfortable because it was too long.

It was cumbersome.

* * *

I asked Kiri Kiri about the God of Remorse after she finished her cake.

The information about Gods are really expensive, but I must find out.

“I suggest you to let it go. Getting entangled in Time-related Gods is no good for people. The God of Remorse, the God of Slow, and the God of Slow are the same.”

Why did she say the God of Slow twice?

“Moreover, not only the God of Remorses’ doctrine is strange, but his personality is terrible. He can manipulate time based on regrets, so he likes digging people’s weaknesses and secrets.”

I remembered something I experienced on the 35th stage.

“So that’s the reason. That black stone is similar. Anyways, don’t mind it. The God of Remorse won’t appear for a while.”

The God of Remorse won’t appear for a while?

Is this related to the message that said that 99 gods were watching me, but not all of the gods in Hundred Gods Temple.

“I really cannot tell you. This information is related to the system and is too expensive.”

Kiri Kiri was so serious that her every pronunciation was correct and accurate.

Instead of questioning in a roundabout way, I passed on to the next question.

There was a question that was not very important but I was curious about.

It was about things that happened after I was poisoned on 17th floor.

I was not totally conscious before I reached the 26th floor.

I woke up a few times with flickering awareness.

It was brief, but I met Myong Myong again on the 19th floor.

Myong Myong fed me some herbs which made me fall into a coma until the 26th floor.

“Humm, it’s not poison. Those herbs were edible.”

Fortunately.

I had thought that Myong Myong was so tender that he wanted to euthanize me rather than watch me suffer from the poison.

I would be upset if this was true.

“The issue was the poison skill rather than the medicine. That skill is strange. Even taking in consideration of its level, it became very bizarre.”

“What are you saying?”

Why did she call other people’s skill bizarre?

“It is because your poison resistance level is high while your poison skill is level 1. You poisoned yourself in waiting room. So a latent period generated in you poison skill.”

“Latent period?”

“Could you describe the symptoms of this poison?”

I nodded my head.

I didn’t really know what my poison was even when I was using it.

Due to the level of my poison resistance, my poison had no effect on me.

“Your poison is special because it makes people lose consciousness and paralyze the sensation rather than threaten their life immediately.

Of course this is an extreme poison for normal people which could kill them instantly. So this poison is only effective in putting you into a coma. The latent period of this poison is around 4 or 5 days. Personally, I believe that it depends on the waiting time between the rounds of tutorial. In other words, normal people will die as soon as they touch this poison, but you are Houjae. When the latent period ends, your body begins to necrotize rapidly. This includes the important organs like your heart and your lungs. If so, you die on the spot. Detoxification is almost impossible if not handling it with magic or charms. Ah, what's more, this poison can infect others through blood."

I had no idea..... But this, this is terrible.

Seregia said it was more toxic than Hydra's poison, it's a perfect biochemical weapon.

Chapter 199

Tutorial 60th Floor (14)

I sat down beside hatchling Yong Yong who was sleeping on the bed, patted him and watched him.

Yong Yong had grown to the size of a retriever from my vivid memory where he rose his tiny little paws when he was a little baby.

He was a larger one among retrievers.

Yong Yong, who entered the hibernation not long ago, was sleeping all day long.

Dragons usually go through hibernation, but I had heard that sometimes they didn't depending on their living conditions.

Yong Yong did not hibernate often, but not long ago he suddenly hibernated.

Both Ho-chi and me had become busy, he became bored more often and for longer periods, so his hibernation naturally begun.

When Yong Yong, who had always been energetic and around me, fell asleep, the world seemed frozen.

I didn't take care of him because I was too busy at that time. I felt terrible about it.

Right now I can't wake up Yong Yong, who was hibernating, and play with him. So I could do nothing but stay besides Yong Yong.

I should have been kinder to him when he was awake.

I failed to perform such a simple act.

[Lee YeonHee, 35th floor: What about the 17th floor? I don't think I can win if I meet your mirage.]

While patting Yong Yong on his back, I received a message from Lee YeonHee after she finished contemplating.

Lee YeonHee, who was a magic caster that depended on skills and items, indeed showed a great weakness on 35th stage.

Of course, Lee YeonHee's efforts to improve her skills would enable her to pass through some gates.

I made lots of preparation for that.

The problem is the mirage on the 17th floor.

There is one fact that comforts me.

[Lee HoJae, 60th floor: It is your mirage which will exist on the 17th floor, not mine. You don't have to do the stage mission so It will be better to solve it with communication. It's also a standard tactic.]

I killed the mirage and passed the floor, but I don't think she needs to do the same.

Each man has his own ways and standards.

What's more, people would suffer from a tremendous amount of stress if they killed the mirage made based on themselves.

In my case, I didn't suffer from that. However, it is very possible for Lee YeonHee to be affected.

[Lee Yeonhee, 35th floor: What if the mirage attacks me? I've heard that if people meet their doppelgangers, they will die.]

Things on the 16th floor was not the doppelganger, but a ghost story.

The underlying idea of the ghost story was this.

If you meet another person who had the exact same appearance and identity as yourself, the first impression these two people have for each other will be hostile.

During the conversation, it was totally possible for the mirage, to become aware that she was a fake, to feel jealousy and hate and attack the real Lee Yeon-hee.

What to do.

I should make up a story to explain the situation and fool around.

Or I could say that these useless thoughts should be dismissed.

This was not good.

Lee Yeon Hee is always worried.

The evidence is how dilatory she was on the 30th stage despite having such strength.

She is currently getting through the stages without my advice.

It's been a long time since she'd asked me for advice, so it's better to relieve her worries than to make up some nonsense.

[Lee HoJae, 60th floor: Don't worry too much. I'll tell you a magic incantation. If the mirage attacks you, say 'Baruce', and you'll be fine.]

[Lee YeonHee, 35th floor: 'Baruce'? It sounds like a castle on the Heaven. Hahahaha.]

I felt that the giggling Lee YeonHee was cursing me.

It must be an illusion.

Lee YeonHee said nothing for a while.

I sighed.

Was she practicing the ‘Baruce’ incantation?

This is the problem of Lee YeonHee.

She is cautious and calm, but still careless at times.

So I couldn’t tell her that she was sluggish like an old turtle.

She could die anywhere at the slightest slip.

Zzzz, Zzzz, Yong Yong puffs from his nose. I annoy him by putting my finger in and out his nostril for fun.

Yong Yong’s nose was throbbing as if it was itchy.

After a some time, Lee YeonHee sent me messages.

She was indeed practicing the ‘Baruce’ incantation.

The moment she mutters the word, the effect built into the item will be activated.

Lee Yeon-hee will not be able to take any action because of extreme pain.

[Lee YeonHee, 35th floor: what was that?]

I could feel her embarrassment through her short question.

It was hard to answer.

What Lee YeonHee felt was not only embarrassment.

The fact that someone can harm them remotely gives great fear to humans.

For Lee YeonHee, who is on the 35th floor, it will be extremely frightening.

However, I should explain that.

Fear scales up through raising various doubts.

It will be better to let her understand.

[Lee HoJae, 60th floor: It is the strength hidden in your necklace Ruceba. (TL note: Ruceba is the name of the necklace. Korean is 루스바)]

I explained that this function was prepared to confront the mirage on the 35th floor.

It was truly for that purpose.

[Lee YeonHee. 35th floor: But this necklace... you sent me this necklace when I went to 2th floor.]

[Lee HoJae, 60th floor: I prepared for this in advance.]

[Lee YeonHee, 35th floor: Why don't you tell me in advance.]

Because you'll kick me if I talked about it.

In addition, the mirage could get the information about the function of this necklace.

I explained it to her carefully.

[Lee YeonHee, 35th floor: Okay, I see. I'll take this necklace off. Since I have arrived at the 35th floor, it's meaningless to wear it.]

[Lee HoJae, 60th floor: Alright.]

The conversation ended awkwardly.

No matter how necessary it is, Lee YeonHee's feelings will worsen.

Because I caused it.

I thought it was necessary to apologise, but to apologise was also awkward.

Because it is useful on the 35th floor.

But even so, I felt apologetic.

The necklace of Ruceba was made before Lee YeonHee came into the tutorial.

In fact, it was an experiment based on the idea that I could control the newbies who just entered the tutorial by pain, and not to confront the mirage on the 35th floor.

Another function hidden in Ruceba necklace was the remote drive that works beyond the dimensions.

Newbies who entered before Lee YeonHee usually died on the lower floors.

They died one after another as if the effort I made for them at that time was totally useless.

I couldn't figure that out at that time.

Even when I have provided detailed strategies that suit their own level, they couldn't get over the 3th floor and died.

There were many challengers who didn't want to move beyond the first floor.

Challengers wasted their time in the waiting room became stressed out and lonely and finally committed suicide. I wanted to create a means to force them to progress.

Of course, the experiment failed.

If I succeeded in experimenting with force beyond the dimensions of the tutorial stage, I would have been in Seoul now, not here on the 60th floor.

While I was sighing, Ho-chi opened the door and came in.

“Why do you look like that?”

“I’m just emotional.”

Situations where my actions are controlled by emotions occurred less often than before.

But my emotions still exists.

Without regard to the feelings of others, my emotion exerts much more influence than before.

The sense of guilt, which was generated because our consciousness were connected, didn’t reduce at all.

“How about Barrier?”(TL note: Gyeongye is a magic that can build a sealed environment to protect someone or catch someone.)

“Well, things are getting serious. You should go to see it.”

Ho-chi said while scratching at the back of his head.

It seems that some God is playing a trick with my Barrier.

They thought they just orderly knocked on the door. But in my eyes, I thought they were some guy who peed on the door and ran away.

“How about the Barrier?”

“The time axis of the Barrier was shocked.”

This is indeed serious.

If the time axis collapses, the base system of protection will also collapse.

“The God of Slow has finally come, right?”

“Nope. I found that time is going back.”

Time reversal.

Of Gods in the Hundred Gods temple that can reverse the time axis of my Barrier there aren't many.

And if this God did this directly, there is only one left.

“It must be the God of Remorse.”

“I think so too.”

If it's not the God of Slow, then I could feel reassured somehow.

Time flows forever, and this is powerful to prove eternal existence.

Regression is a transcendental phenomenon that overturns the law of the universe, but the area that changed must be limited.

The emphasis of this phenomenon is the process of changing, but not the results of changing.

This was interesting because this matched to the personality of the God of Remorse.

By the way, I was wondering if the God of Remorse was still behaving himself.

Maybe this is also part of their disciplining.

Recently, the gods in the Hundred Gods temple are taking turns to attack my Barrier.

What I'm wondering is, what did the Gods sacrifice for this much direct intervention?

Everything the Gods do comes with a price.

Or perhaps the Ten Thousands Gods temple, the Hundred Gods in the other dimension paid the price instead.

I want to know more about the Gods in other dimensions.

"The Gods related to time are fussy."

Ho-chi muttered.

I agreed with that.

Unless we know and prepare for the major premise that they are entitled to use the power of time, it is very difficult to cope with it.

"Let's go. I should go to have a look at it."

I said frankly.

It will be hard for Ho-chi to stop their attack on his own, but their attack is not enough to completely ruin my Barrier.

I built a thorough defense against their power.

Even when the God of Remorse came out to attack my Gyeongje, all he could do was to return part of my Barrier to the past and obstruct the system's normal functions. This attack is a lower level than that.

I went out from the room, which Yong Yong was sleeping in and asked Ho-chi.

“What did you do?”

“Hm? What did I do? I just left it and came back.”

Ho-chi answered with such a natural tone.

He said this so naturally that I almost felt he was right.

This is unbelievable.

“Hey, you should have at least done something to fix it.”

“Uh. I didn’t know.”

How prideful.

He was so smart that he didn’t even know he should do something.

“You really have to study. Do I hope for a lot? You should at least learn some basic knowledge. Yong Yong will be better than you if you continue to act like this. Your previous accumulation doesn’t remain a lot now.”

“Uh. I’m not interested in it.”

I wanted to kick Ho-chi who gave this perfunctory answer.

So I did.

“Ah! Shit, what’s wrong with you?!”

Ho-chi rolled round and said that I violated his human rights, abused children, and his brain cells were dead because I hit his head.

Abusing children was technically correct.

The age of Ho-chi is not much higher than Yong Yong.

Ho-chi continued to yell, but as I ignored him, he soon became quiet.

Ho-chi, who was quiet, poked his mouth out and started to read a novel book even while walking.

He had no interest in anything except reading novels.

He is becoming more and more childish.

He used to be a person who was like the other me, but now, it was different. He became a totally different person from me.

He is growing. He was also changing.

For Ho-chi, my appearance is the starting point of his birth.

He shares the same base as me, but recently, I believe he has changed too much,

Maybe because of adolescence.

Thinking carefully, it is possible he is at the age of adolescence.

It is a little early. but it's not very strange that he is experiencing puberty now if you trace his life back to his birth.

Since his words are like a Jung-ibyeong he became understandable.
(TL note: Jung-ibyeong means how sophomore acts and talks in middle high school. Normally, teenagers' acting and talking change a lot because of adolescence.)

It's time for him to do something like that.

So I determined to let this go.

If someday I hear the sound that he is kicking away the quilt, I will just jeer at him.

“Aren't you just in a bad mood?”

He disconnected the telepathic link. I even don't know how he figured that out.

* * *

It was only then that I understood why Ho-chi came back without taking any measures.

Especially, I understand his gripe.

There was a familiar face in the center of my Barrier.

“Seregia.”

“Yes, Warrior.”

Chapter 200

Tutorial 61st Floor (3)

I looked at Ho-chi stealthy who was reading a novel while walking.

Even if Ho-chi take out the book as a sign of dissatisfaction because of my criticism, he usually read it with enthusiasm.

Ho-chi likes novels so much that he wants to read novels at every possible moment.

However, he was not reading. He was just holding the book in his hand.

His gaze was on the book, but they were gazing into the void.

In my opinion, he was so distracted that he couldn't even focus on the novel.

This was surprising.

There were not many things that could distract him from reading.

Different from me, unless something had a direct influence on Ho-chi, he usually ignores it and let it go.

He didn't care about the stages of the tutorial or the Gods.

He thought these were not related to him.

So he could crazy things like stealing powers from the Gods with no hesitation.

For him, all of these were outside of his world.

So I was surprised that he was disturbed like this.

“Well, what happened to the Barrier?”

Ho-chi ignored my words silently.

I waited for a little while, but he still didn't answer me.

He was just walking forward and pretending to read the book like before I questioned him.

Perhaps he used his focused on the book as an excuse to ignore me.

I gave up because it was too difficult to get his answer.

What disturbed Ho-chi must be related to the Barrier.

I would know what happened when we arrived at the Barrier.

Even if he was disturbed by something else, when I alone look around the Barrier, I will find the cause of the problem immediately.

Ho-chi opened his mouth when we were near the Barrier.

He spoke nonchalantly as if nothing happened.

“Ms. Seregia appeared.”

After this sentence, he shut his mouth again.

I couldn't answer him immediately.

All I could do was walk in silence like him.

I forced my footsteps to move, which almost stopped unconsciously.

I tried to pretend to be calm, but I couldn't hide my agitation in front of Ho-chi.

Both of us were silent.

“Don’t worry.”

Said Ho-chi, in front of the Barrier’s entrance.

When I saw Ho-chi talking as if it wasn’t a big deal, I had mixed feelings.

Along with the relief, I felt apologetic and guilty for the past mistakes.

“Hey, Ho-chi.”

“Yeah, what?”

“You can leave here first if you feel uncomfortable. I’ll handle this.”

Hearing my words, Ho-chi considered for a while. Then he said Okay and returned to the residential area.

I should have calmed myself down while looking at his back.

The period when I would get discouraged due to agitation had passed.

However, there is a high risk of not being able to control my emotions when it is necessary to repair the Barrier.

The number of things I feel guilty about today is high.

I felt so guilty that my stomach stung.

When I was trapped in the 60th floor, I was maddened.

This was not an excuse, this was the reality.

I was so desperate to break through, but I failed no matter how hard I struggled.

After all my attempts failed, the earnest feeling and sincerity I poured in became hatred and madness.

Even so, I didn't give up while I was going crazy.

In order to find a new method, I continued to experiment.

The concept I had before was completely changed.

Now, when thinking about these efficiency and results oriented experiments I did, I would get in a bad mood.

Most objects of experiments were my body and spirit and as the experiments continued, I was only further exhausted.

I tried countless times and was so tired that I gave up everything and returned to the starting point again and again. I repeated this many times, so I died and reborn many times.

5 years.

It is the time it took for Lee YeonHee to arrive on the first floor after I was trapped in the 60th floor.

And during those five years of time, every moment of my life was accelerated.

At least hundreds of years.

I wasn't sure when the acceleration stopped, but it was quite possible to be hundreds of years considering the performance of improved time acceleration.

I didn't only do experiments on myself during that insane period.

I tried to do experiments on everything I saw around me.

I had buried many things that were unsuccessful and there were also many things that vanished completely.

There were also some things that were belatedly solved.

However, it wasn't that something you couldn't see didn't exist.

The residential area that collapsed and rebuilt for dozens of times, the necklace I gave Lee YeonHee as gift and Ho-chi, all of this proved that.

I knew I was unable to go back to the past.

And the memory of the past wouldn't affect my future.

Except, my remorse about my past remained.

* * *

There was a woman's face in the center of the Barrier, instead of a huge sword.

It was quite strange to that a face hanging in the center of Barrier.

Even if it was an acquaintance's face.

"Seregia."

"Yes, Warrior."

The calm voice was the same.

"Long time no see."

"Quite a long time."

It seemed she was the real Seregia.

The only power I could perceive was time reversal.

In other words, Seregia, who became the core axis of the Barrier, returned to her previous state.

“You look very good. Did you find a method?”

Through her words, I knew there was no problem of her memory.

Now my stomach was not stung slightly, but squeezed hard.

“I have.”

“Thank Goodness. So why did you return me to my previous state?”

I answered bitterly.

“In fact, it wasn’t me that woke you up.”

I explained the power of God that the Barrier was bearing and she understood the situation.

Seregia heard my words and smiled like this was a great fortune.

“So there was no problem with Barrier.”

“Yes. it’s only time is going back and I’ll return your state to the normal. It’s difficult to destroy their power, but not impossible.”

“I see. Please restore the Barrier now. I’m in a bad mood due to my incomplete state.”

I said Okay and started to destroy the power.

Seregia’s face just looking at me quietly.

Before the Barrier was restored completely, Seregia said.

“How encouraging. You look very good. Just like before.”

“Fortunately I do. Thanks.”

The past that Seregia spoke about was probably when I hung her on my waist..... No, it's quite weird to say she hung on my waist.

Either way, I was talking about the stage when she and I fought together.

It was relieving that Seregia took that time as a good memory.

“Warrior.”

“Yeah.”

“Have you found the method?”

“I’ve found it. Don’t worry about that.”

Seregia smiled quietly because of my confident answer.

I also smiled, looking at her face.

I became so much calmer after I met Seregia.

As soon as the Barrier was restored, Seregia would return to her original form.

A giant mountainous sword inside the Barrier.

That’s her original form.

The fact that Segeria used the form of a sword, not a human being, proved that she perceived herself as a sword.

I’ve come to a crucial realization.

The swordsmanship that Seregia desired was flexible and adaptive, agile, and complex technicality.

However, the sword that she finally selected had such overwhelming weight and power.

The difference between the process and the result was incongruous.

* * *

It had been three weeks since I met Seregia and talked to her.

Yong Yong, who slept for a long time, finally woke up.

I was very glad about that. So was Ho-chi.

Yong Yong was happy too!

Yong Yong just awoke from his sleep, but the atmosphere in residential area became much brighter.

The air was fresher when he was around.

Ho-chi, Yong Yong and I hung out together everyday which made Yong Yong very ecstatic since three of us could play together.

And today, I took Yong Yong to the 61st floor for a picnic, just as I had promised myself during his sleep.

Yong Yong was excited to get out from the 60th floor and go to somewhere he had never been before.

He prepared his outfit and had been waiting for today with his cross bag full of odds and ends since yesterday morning.

As soon as Yong Yong arrived on the 61st floor, he was so excited and ran around.

He was so cute, like an excited puppy.

He didn't care much about the poor environment on the 61st floor.

After playing around the entrance for about an hour, we headed to the palace of the Ice Queen.

* * *

“He is your son. Okay, I see. “

The Ice Queen nodded with a relieved look.

She acted like she was like looking at her cute grandson.

“When you told me you wouldn’t raise him as a challenger, I had some assumptions, but I didn’t expect he was this cute. “

Said this old woman while looking at Yong Yong who was making snowman with Ho-chi.

These two people could create more than a snowman, either by magic or whatever, but they were making snowballs the hard way and drawing a facial expression with their fingers in order to make a snowman.

“Dad! Look at this! Uncle brought a carrot! “

Shouted Yong Yong, who made a nose for snowman with the carrot that Ho-chi brought.

Yong Yong was simply happy just because there was something to make snowman’s nose.

By the way, Ho-chi seemed to like Yong Yong as well.

How could he think about bringing carrot?

“It looks good. Really. ”

“Thank you, granny ”

“Sister. ”

It was ridiculous.

What kind of sister is She?

She was alive even when Dangun grandfather set up Gojoseon. (Dangun is the legendary founder of Gojoseon, which is the first Korean state.)

She wants me to call her sister? I would feel rather better to call her queen.

“Sister. ”

“Uhh... This is kind of...”

“Call me sister. ”

“Okay, sister. ”

She chuckled delightfully after hearing my words.

The huge ice door opened, covering her laughter.

“We’re all gathered here!?”

A huge lava giant entered the Ice Palace.

Even in the lava flowing down from the giant’s body, the Ice Palace didn’t collapse nor melt.

The giant didn’t care about that and sat around us.

Although he only sat down, the earth shook as if it was collapsing.

“Why did we gather here!? Why not gather at my Lava Hall?!”

“Because Yong Yong prefers cooler temperatures over hot ones.”

“Alright! This kid must be the hatchling!”

This old man looked around Yong Yong with novelty.

Yong Yong shrank back and defends himself against the unfamiliar sight.

He smiled and sat down besides granny.

“You look delighted.”

Hearing my words, he laughed joyfully.

His laughter was too loud.

I knew and prepared in advance, but Yong Yong didn't. He covered his ears with both hands and ran to hug me.

“My ears hurt! ”

The giant laughed again because of him.

“I waited and waited for a long time and finally I was able to get out. I'm still trapped in the same world, but I'm happy that my range of actions expanded. Thank you again, King.”

“You're welcome. I just did my job.”

“Well then, when are we leaving this world?”

Why did he have to ask me such a serious question while I was enjoying myself.

I knew he would keep asking until I gave the answer, so I answered him.

“Not long. We'll escape soon. ”

“Oh, really! So the challenger is almost there, right?! ”

Not long ago, Lee YeonHee cleared the 35th floor and arrived at the 36th floor.

If she passed big crises safely and there was no accident happened, she would arrive at the 60th floor easily.

“She’s almost here. But the day we get out of here is near regardless of where she is”

“Regardless of where challenger is? How could that be?”

“What do you mean? We’ll just break through it by force in the next six months to a year. If she doesn’t make it here by then, we’ll escape by ourselves.”

PbF by: traitor/SEN

GANDARA 퓨전 판타지 장편소설

튜토리얼이 너무어렵다

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 8 -

-AUTHOR-Gandara

[WangMama]

Chapter 201

Tutorial 40th Floor (1)

“You’re late!”

Kiri Kiri, who was laying and rolling in the field, cried as soon as she saw me.

I didn’t arrive that late.

It took the same amount of time.

I promised that I would buy Kiri Kiri cake so she was waiting for me.

She was so excited that she left her seat and ran around me. However, I was so tired that I just waved to her and sank down.

I had no energy to open my mouth and say hello to Kirikiri.

I just opened the shop window and silently purchased a fresh cream cake at the top of my favorites list.

I lay down and Kirikiri cheerfully rushed toward the cake.

I took a deep breath so fresh air can enter my lungs.

The refreshing feeling made me feel alive.

My body had been healed while clearing the 39th floor, but my exhausted mind hasn’t recovered yet.

I was fortunate to have this field that refreshed and cleared my mind.

Breathing slowly, I waited for myself to calm down.

After feeling a little better, I relaxed and watched KiriKiri eat the fresh cream cake.

Without a fork, she ate happily using her hands.

Cream scattered all over the place.

I felt much more relaxed over time.

Now I could bear pain with a smile, but the last few rounds were really unbearable.

Since I found out that the Poison Energy skill was much more powerful than I thought on the 35th floor, I had focused on honing it.

Of course, in order to grow the Poison Energy skill, I had to use it on myself.

Like Kiri Kiri had said, the poison is fatal.

After the latent period, the poison started to penetrate my body, and then the tolerance and physical strength that I had painstakingly developed was totally useless. I could do nothing but groan like a patient.

Fortunately, my body adapted the poison quickly.

My quirk is self-harm. I didn't know whether my body was accustomed to the poison or was good at adapting.

On the 36th floor, it was difficult for the poison to last 10 days, but on the 39th floor, the poison survived until the 23rd day.

I drank a special antidote because I thought I would die on the morning of the 24th day.

However, even though I drank two bottles of potion, the poison wasn't detoxified, so I rushed to clear the stage.

In the state of knowing that my life was on the line, I found out that if I cleared the stage, then my body would recover, but I fainted at that same moment.

when I regained consciousness, I was already on this field.

I was still dumbfounded and groggy due to this.

I've become accustomed to the poison, but the most unbearable part is withstanding the high fever, dizziness and dyspnea that did not go away for even a moment. Compared with these symptoms, the pain or fear of the poison didn't matter anymore.

Several hours were tolerable, but I withstood it for almost three months. The stress was no joke.

Even though I cleared the stage and laid in the field, it seems that the nausea and dizziness still remained.

I remembered that one night I came home from the beach when I was young, I felt I was still swimming despite being on my bed.

Similar to that, even though the poison had completely died out in my body, I felt like I was still suffering from poison.

It was that hard and it is still hard, but also rewarding.

The stagnant poison resistance had finally evolved into poison immunity.

The level of faint resistance, paralysis resistance and pain tolerance also increased a lot.

A new skill, disease resistance has been born and the level of natural healing and regeneration also increased.

At last, being in line with the growth of resistance, the poison energy skill also raised a lot.

The situation was positive.

“It’s not positive, nothing is positive.”

Said KiriKiri, who was eating cake silently.

“The level of my skills raised a lot, this is positive.”

Especially since the level of my resistance skills increased.

This was the first time that my level of resistance skills grew this much since I cleared 1st and 2nd floor.

The levels of poison skills also increased.

This couldn’t be negative.

KiriKiri listened to my word and shook her head.

“Your poison has evolved to attack and penetrate the immune system, which is extremely dangerous. That’s why it’s called poison ‘immunity’. You must stop using the poison skill from now on.”

She had warned several times about the dangers of poison energy skill.

And I kept ignoring her warning.

“If you insist, the poison will kill you someday.”

“I won’t let that happen. Just in case, I will also have elixirs with me.”

I bought a few bottles of Elixir as the last defense for a really dangerous moment.

Only one thing, I had to consume Elixir sparingly due to the limited quantity.

"You're supposed to be completely careful. No more than 25 days. This poison is highly toxic that even though you have a strong body with poison immunity, you'll die in no more than 25 days. There is now there's no way to detoxify it besides the healing effect the system provides and the elixir. Houjae ought to take this seriously. A small mistake made in a split second could lead to an irreversible accident."

"I see, I see."

As a response to words that I had heard many times, I nodded hard. However, Kiri Kiri was not satisfied with me and pouted her mouth.

"I know you want stronger power, but you should keep yourself safe first. Don't confuse the method with aim."

The poison skill is a double-edged sword.

It's indeed strong, but it's also dangerous for me.

Because I can poison myself and endanger my life.

However, this kind of weapon is always powerful.

Although I would be careful, totally abandoning it was impossible.

The point was to test how much could I handle poison as a skill.

Or how about finding out another way to use poison rather than raising the level of poison energy skill.

I took an empty glass bottle from my inventory while thinking about this.

My finger hurts.

A bead of blood welled up.

The blood flow into the glass bottle and fused with poison energy skill.

I was careful not to poison myself.

My efforts were not in vain. The poison penetrated the blood that flowed out of my finger.

The red blood turned deep-black as soon as the poison penetrated.

It was only a few drops of blood, but no one could withstand this.

When your enemy was living being, it was far more threatening to throw a glass bottle rather than to use a siege weapon or magic.

It was effective.

The cost performance was also outstanding.

How about selling bottled poison in the auction house?

It would be a great help to other challengers attempting attack stages.

Enemies who could survive after being poisoned by this poison were few.

“No, you can’t do that.”

KiriKiri firmly objected.

“Why?”

“If this begins to circulate, the grand conference will be convened. People who don’t have poison resistance could be in danger even when they’re in the waiting room.”

Really?

Once upon a time, a potion with a strong drug effect was produced and circulated so the grand conference was convened.

I tried to think about the similarities between that potion and my poison.

At that moment, smoke began to rise from the bottom of the glass bottle with a hissing sound.

The poison melted the glass and leaked through the crack.

I didn't expect that.

“Flame.”

I put my hand below the glass bottle and used magic.

The flame magic that I was able to master not long was the magic that could use the high temperature fire, like its name expressed.

The poison blood that leaked from the crack of the bottle of glass bottle disappeared as soon as it met the flame.

Maybe the boiling point of poison was low, so it evaporated and disappeared in a flash.

The smoke that produced because of evaporation pierced the tip of my nose.

[.....!]

KiriKiri screamed with a sound that was not understandable.

Then a powerful gust of wind blew and pushed the smoke away.

Before the wind blew the smoke of poison away, my nose that inhaled the smoke for a short period had become numb.

My face and hands that had touched the smoke become sore.

It's effect was so powerful even in this field, what would happen outside the field?

It has not only been poisoned.

I believe that if I didn't have poison immunity, I would've die as soon as my nose inhaled the smoke.

It's interesting.

In Wuxia novels, fire produced by internal power was used to burn the poison out. That's why I decided to use flame magic.

However, the poison showed a stronger effect when it evaporated by the flame.

It may lose its effect in the long run, but in the short term, the poisoning has become more effective and potent.

What if I combined the poison with fire?

The greatest disadvantage of poison is that it can only infect my opponents when it touches their body.

If I could handle and control the smoke of poison's direction, then I don't have to worry about that disadvantage.

I had done some experiments on myself, but I haven't experimented anything about that.

It is regretful for not exactly understanding its boiling point and freezing point and the changes of its effect during a chemical reaction. Why have I not recognized it until now?

I kept thinking, but the rattling noise made by KiriKiri from the side interrupted me.

Glaring at me, KiriKiri seemed to be so enraged that her lips were curled up five steps away her mouth.

She looked much angrier than that time I robbed her of the Churros she was eating with no reason.

So I put the thoughts about poison aside and quickly apologized to her.

“KiriKiri, I’m sorry.”

The apology reminded me of my mistakes.

She was sad because I experimented with the poison immediately after she advised me not to.

And she would be heartbroken because the smoke diffused on this field, where she likes and cherishes.

I am reflecting.

Seriously.

“Humph!”

I apologized, but KiriKiri turned her head around.

Eventually, KiriKiri got over it after I promised not to abuse the poison skill recklessly before I could safely handle it, as she advised.

It was the advice that I had heard many times and Kirikiri had never emphasized her advice like this before, so I decided to obey it quietly.

In any case, following Kirikiri’s advice couldn’t hurt.

The situations where things did not proceed well were because I went against her advice or she omitted to advise.

“But could I handle the poison energy skill well?”

If it’s impossible, it means I can’t rely on this skill forever.

KiriKiri shook her head and said no.

“If you can use magic to detoxify it, it should be possible with a holy incantation.”

KiriKiri still looked unhappy while answering my question.

It was easy to know her mood. When her face had no expression or her voice was extremely low, she is in a bad mood.

But KiriKiri, who pretended to be mad the moment, looked strange when I looked at her face.

It had been a long time since I first met KiriKiri after I cleared the first stage.

As a person who knows her personality well, I had a question.

Is she still mad at me?

Or is she pretending to be mad in order to show her firm position?

I wonder which one was true.

“I’m angry!”

Kirikiri flew into a rage and shouted out, as if she to prove her innocence.

I nodded at her.

Yes, yes, I know you’re angry.

“I said I was angry! Seriously!”

I stared at this woman’s face. In response she rolled her eyes around to avoid my sights and finally turned her head aside.

For KiriKiri, who did her best to pretend to be mad, I opened the shop window once again.

I bought a set of macaroons to give to her.

“Hey, here’s the apology gift for angry KiriKiri.”

I seldom buy macaroon because it is not worth its price.

KiriKiri likes it because it looks cute and has beautiful colors.

Here’s the evidence. Although KiriKiri was still turning her head to the side with her eyes moving around, her gaze had already been fell on the macaroon set.

He still pouted her lips, but her mouth moved up and down. It seemed she couldn’t help but smile.

Looking at how happy she was, it was very Kiri Kiri-like.

“Is macaroon that tasty?”

When I spoke, Kirikiri hurriedly lifted her hand and covered her mouth.

KiriKiri, who was sniggering and covering her mouth, was pop-eyed and made her sight full of anger on purpose.

This was more amusing.

I didn’t hide my emotion and laughed bluntly.

“Yea, Yea, it’s a stage that you have to challenge yourself.”

Mumbled KiriKiri while putting two macarons in mouth.

She looked like a hamster more than a rabbit.

Kirikiri says the 40th floor is a stage where people must challenge alone.

It is the first solo stage since the 35th floor.

Usually, these stages are subject to a very annoying restriction or have missions that require you to prove your ability.

The 12th floor, in which challengers had to survive in the jungle for a month without the inventory or the 35th floor, in which challengers had to start from the first floor again after all their skills were reset.

Therefore, when KiriKiri said that the 40th stage was a solo stage, I got a little nervous.

“It’s not like that. Maybe it’ll cost a lot of time, but there is no annoying restriction.”

So it’ll take a long time if I’m not lucky enough.

No matter how much I thought about it, I still felt uneasy.

“Any tips for me before I enter the stage?”

“No, nothing.”

Every time Kirikiri assured me that advice was not needed, I can indeed manage to pass the stage, but in most cases the process took a longer time or was extremely annoying.

I was anxious.

“But I’m anxious.”

“Ah, you don’t need any advice.”

Though I asked several times, Kirikiri only repeated that there was no particular advice about the stage.

Eventually, I gave up asking her more about the stage and bought consumables such as food, drinking water, toilet paper and potion before returning to the waiting room.

It was dawn when I checked the time.

It was better to sleep in the waiting room for a moment and leave in the morning.

Arranging all of these things, I went to bed, opened the inventory and took the holy sword and soul sword out.

The holy sword dislikes staying in the inventory, so I take it out as soon as I enter the waiting room. Otherwise, he'll get angry.

[Long time no see! Warrior! How're you doing!]

It has been a long time.

For about five hours?

"I'm fine. Why are you so happy? It seems that you have adapted being in the inventory."

[Hoo, Hoo, Hoo, Hoo, Uhooo.]

The holy sword laughed with a low voice.

His distinctive bass sound made me uncomfortable.

It was quite uncomfortable to hear this kind of voice because the voice appeared directly my head without going through my ears.

It seemed that he didn't talk near my ears, but directly to my eardrum.

[Warrior, I've done it. I've done it.]

"What?"

[I found a way to talk with Seregia!]

Chapter 202

Tutorial 40th Floor (2)

[I found a way to talk with Seregia!]

“Really?”

This wasn’t within my expectations, so I asked Ahbooboo in surprise.

After Seregia fused with the soul sword completely, she seldom spoke.

She didn’t totally lose the ability to speak.

She still had consciousness of herself and knew what was happening around her.

Occasionally she would express what she wanted to convey.

However, she spoke too little and irregularly.

Sometimes she would say a few words a day, but sometimes she wouldn’t respond for a month.

I failed to find out any regularity in Seregia’s ways of speaking, so I welcomed every time she spoke to encourage her.

So I was surprised that Ahbooboo found a way to speak with Seregia.

[Yes!]

“So, what’s the method?”

[The method is... ho... hoho, do you want to know?]

“...I do want to know. If you can tell me right now, that’ll be great. If you don’t, I’ll throw you back into the inventory.”

I’d really do that.

There was one thing that I learned while getting along with the holy sword.

Don’t get involved in the mischief of the holy sword.

This guy doesn’t know when to stop.

Once you get involved, it will cost you hours, days and nights and if he doesn’t tell you, it will definitely drive you crazy.

[You always say that. Aye, to be honest, you’re lonely when I’m in the inventory, right?]

He was out of his mind.

[So you pretend that you’re not, but treat me kindly, right? Ah, I know what this is. You’re a tsundere.....](TL note: if you say someone is a Tsundere, you mean he/she always pretends to be indifferent and cool while he/she is totally not.)

I opened the inventory and threw the holy sword into it.

I signed and lamented my misfortune.

I had two swords that could speak. One speaks a few words only when she wants and then disappear, so it’s better for the other one to shut his mouth.

I fell asleep in the quiet waiting room.

* * *

[You have entered the 40th stage.]

I moved into a carriage from the room with bonfire.

The initial point of the stage was always rather different and insecure, so I looked around carefully.

There were horses and groom in front of the carriage.

And there were also some other carriages.

The scenery outside the window was thicket, nothing special.

So what is this situation?

Firstly, are the groom and the other carriages a collective group with me?

Since my feet and hands were free, the situation of carriage was normal. I guess that I was not a criminal being escorted somewhere.

I tried to figure out what was going on, but it was unnatural to rush out from the carriage.

Therefore, I just stayed in the carriage and waited for the mission message.

But no matter how long I waited, the message didn't appear.

In case I missed something, I opened my eyes widely and used my mana. Nevertheless, no message appeared.

At that point, the groom had heard me. He turned his head back and spoke to me.

“Have you already woken up, soldier? I was about to wake you up, that's fine either way. We will arrive at your destination soon.”

The groom was an old man.

He looked dirty, with a husky voice.

His appearance was totally different from his polite and calm voice.

[The gateway of 40th stage began.]

Description: One day, there are some rumors about abnormalities in Lake Irai. Two suns and three moons appeared in the sky, bug-eating birds began to eat people, toxins are detected in the herbs, and children in the lakeside villages disappear.

The kingdom dispatched investigation team to investigate these rumors.

This is the 3rd time an investigation team was dispatched, but most of the teams disappeared during the search near the lake.

Some surviving investigators suffered from mental illness because of fear.

They kept repeating stories, such as the one that stated that there was a monster in the forest that would rival the dragon or that the lava under the lake would explode and destroy the continent, which were all unbelievable.

As the situation became worse, the kingdom gained the approval of the temple and asked the Hundred Gods Temple for help.

The Hundred Gods Temple sent their contractors to investigate the abnormalities.

The summoned contractor, brave and trustworthy summoned contractor, please find the reason for the disaster of Irai Lake, get rid of it to restore peace for the people.

[Clear Condition]

– Please investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.

– Please protect the summoned contractors that are in the same team with you from being hurt and dead. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)

-?

-?

-?

When groom talked to me, a long message came out at the same time.

It was like I was playing a game and the episode just started while I was talking to someone.

The content of the message felt like a game prologue.

The messages explaining the clear condition of each stage were slightly different.

Message of some stages were especially short or unkind. On the contrary, sometimes there were too much jargon.

Message of the 40th stage was the one that clearly explained the setting of stage and background.

I calmly read the long message once again.

Unlike other stages, a team was built from the beginning, in addition, what I needed to search the lake and protect team members at the same time.

In the meantime, there was some hidden clear goals, showed “?”

This was a special stage.

The first thing that I pondered about after reading the message was summoned contractor.

What does summoned contractor exactly mean?

The message said that the palace asked the Hundred Gods Temple for support through the temple and Gods sent contractors.

I remembered the summon warriors that I saw on the 26th stage.

Although they were known as warriors, maybe they were different from the summoned contractors.

If I had chance, I ought to figure it out.

It was clear that the other summoned contractors were in other carriages.

It was certain looking at the strength and mana they showed.

Compared to them, the grooms that drove the carriages and the soldiers and knights that defended the team were much lower.

I organised my thoughts and awaited the arrival at the destination.

I wanted to talk with the groom to gain some information, but it wasn't a good idea to annoy someone who was driving the horse.

This was definitely irrelevant to the smell of his mouth.

I took the holy sword out of my inventory.

“Well, are you gonna tell me now?”

[You're too much, warrior!]

It's you who is too much, Okay?

The holy sword that spoke “Tee-hee, Tee-hee” has a voice that gave me way too many goosebumps.

“So you're not gonna tell me?”

[Humph, how about you just give me the leg-screw punishment? Don't give me that look, I won't tell you! I, holy sword Ahoubuch, will not succumb to your threat!]

I'll see how long you can insist.

I opened the inventory without hesitation.

“Well, let's see each other in a year.”

[...No, nonono, wait a moment. Isn't One year too long, warrior? Warrior?]

I slowly put the holy sword into the inventory, who was flustered because of “a year”.

When the half body of the holy sword entered the inventory, he changed his attitude.

[Warrior, you're not serious, right? You're joking about one year, right? It's not real, right? You won't do that, right?]

“You don't know me? I'll take you out in exactly one year. Take a nice rest.”

Hearing the screams of the holy sword, I throw his handle and all of the sword into my inventory.

“Are you mad?”

[.....]

He was mad, he was really mad.

He didn't answer me. This reminded me of a classmate who lowered his head and bent over the table.

At this time, I should lower my head and look at his face from under the table.

[I'm not mad.]

You were mad, don't deny it.

“Tell me. You said you've found a way to speak with Seregia.”

He wouldn't say something like “I won't tell you that easily” again, would he?

If he did, I would place him in the inventory for a month.

[...The method is to ask something that Seregia has to answer.]

“Something that she has to answer?”

[Yes. For example... HooHooHoo.]

Why was he so happy? His sullen voice was mixed with laughter.

[Actually, Seregia likes me. Once you were asleep, Seregia said that she loved me.]

What?

He said it so seriously that I thought there was a dog speaking language of human beings.

His unfounded words made me stunned.

How about that.

[I do not.]

Seregia spoke firmly.

I haven't heard her voice in a very long time.

[Just like that. Isn't it easy?]

I laughed because of the simple words of holy sword.

This was easy and effective.

I never thought of it this way.

“Long time no see, Seregia.”

Since Seregia finally appeared after a long time, I greeted her.

But there was no answer.

I tried to use the method that the holy sword taught me.

“You answered Ahbooboo’s question in earnest while pretending not hearing my greeting. You really do love him.”

[That’s it.]

[I do not.]

The holy sword’s a tone of ridicule blended with Seregia’s slightly annoyed voice.

Before the carriage arrived at the destination, the holy sword and I spent time making fun of Seregia.

* * *

“We have arrived.”

The expression of the groom, who opened the door for me, was weird.

[He must have regarded you as a madman. Haha.]

Treated me as a madman?

Following the guide of the groom, I came out from the carriage and asked back.

[From the groom's point of view, you kept talking to yourself and giggling. No matter how he thinks about it, you are a madman.]

I ignored his words and looked around.

There was a small village where the carriage stopped.

Including my carriage, there were a total of nine carriages lined up.

The entrances of the village looked crowded because of the carriages.

As everyone got out of the carriage, the entrance of the village, which was already cramped, became narrower.

A female magician wearing a blue robe got out of the carriage next to me.

Maybe she had some nausea, the magician's expression didn't look good.

"We arrived, magician. Are you suffering from the nausea that badly? I should have driven the carriage more carefully....."

Said a groom standing next to her, with a guilty expression on his face.

The magician's face suddenly changed.

She was about to vomit but in an instant she looked like the Virgin Mary.

"No, it's not your fault. Thanks to Mr. Egel, I arrived comfortably."

"R-really?"

The magician continued her dialogue, ignoring the groom.

"What a beautiful village. Mr. Egel, you said you were from this town, right? I never thought there would be such a wonderful village in the forest. Unfortunately, the road was long and hard, but we still have God's grace."

God's grace? What?

What she uttered didn't make sense.

What the fuck is that?

Their conversation was so ridiculous it was like an awkward puppet show rather than gripping.

The magician, who has been suffering from nausea until just now, looks stiff and talks about the beautiful scenery of the village, and the groom, who looks as if he is eating raw pig's haslet, is so moved that he is crying.

"Let's pray."

The magician made the sign of the cross, muttered to herself and began the pray while she was saying this.

The groom closed his eyes with a thankful expression, crossed his fingers and prayed.

Why is the magician abruptly acting like a priest.

What was really amazing was that everyone else was praying as well, besides the magician I saw here.

The summoned contractors from the other carriages were holding on to the people around them and praying, to praise the greatness of God.

What's more, the grooms and the people who seem to be accompanying these summoned contractors looked extremely grateful to the magicians and contractors.

Hey, Ahbooboo, do you know what's happening?

[Not at all. Let's wait and see.]

I looked around and saw the groom driving the carriage that I took was looking at me.

Now, I understood what the expression of the groom meant.

His expression seemed to ask "why don't you do that?".

"...Let us pray, too?"

"Okay!"

His reaction was the same as KiriKiri when I said I would buy her cake.

KiriKiri was cute, but looking at the elderly groom's flushed face was a drudgery.

"Ahbooboo, help me. I don't know how to pray."

[Humm, Please follow me. I'll make it easy. All under the sky.....]

"Under the protection of the God of Sky, who takes everyone equally, your son is here now....."

I followed the holy sword of the God of Sky, Ahbooboo, and recited the prayer.

It was like reading a Korean language book, but the groom was really happy as if he really received the protection of the Gods.

I don't know where the person who looked at me with an uneasily went.

The hot sights of the groom gave me nausea, which I didn't have inside the carriage.

When the prayer was finished, the knights and soldiers who were escorting the wagon parade came up.

They didn't look exactly like summoned contractors, nor did they look like grooms who showed excessive kindness to summoned contractors.

“Warrior, please come here.”

I followed the lead of knight.

The knight gathered me and other summoned contractors one by one and took us to the village.

Inside the village people gathered together and formed a crowd.

It seemed they were only waiting for us to come to the village.

As we entered the village along the main road, the villagers threw something in their hands high into the sky all together.

All sorts of flowers and thousands of ornaments poured over my head.

At the very next moment, all of the villagers cheered together.

* * *

“You can use this place as your accommodation. There are enough vacant rooms on the second and third floors, please choose one room for each of you. I will come back tomorrow morning. Please be sure to take enough rest until then.”

The knight, who finished his kind explanation, left the building with the soldiers.

It was only then that there were only summoned contractors.

I sighed without realizing it.

Receiving the respect and affection of other was more tiring than I expected.

It was a good thing to be welcomed by the villagers, but the welcome was too much.

Some villagers were crying and giving flowers to us and some villagers were happily praying

We responded by shaking hands with them one by one.

I would like to be tactful, so I accepted their welcome.

It took me a couple of hours to get to the accommodation in the middle of the town so I was sweating around the people who approached me.

All the summoned contractors who entered the quarters were exhausted, sat down or tossed luggage to the floor.

“Hah, shit, I’m so exhausted, this is so fucked up.”

Complained the magician who got off the carriage beside me.

Chapter 203

Tutorial 40th Floor (3)

“This is your first time?”

She spoke while leaning forward with her elbow was on the table.

Thanks to her revealing clothes, I could see her shoulders and cleavage.

And thanks to the poor size of her breast, I had no interest in it.

When I asked her how she knew about this, she laughed.

“I saw you reading a prayer. Do you know me? I got off the carriage just now.”

Of course I knew her.

However, I couldn't imagine that this femme fatale girl sitting on the opposite side the table was the same magician who recited prayers with an elegant face outside the village.

She introduced herself as Sicia.

I said my name was Hao.

Everyone seemed to understand this was a fake name, but Sicia just glossed over it.

Maybe this Sicia name was also fake.

After introduction, we began discussing about the arrival ceremony.

Sicia and other summoned contractors had been quite familiar with the villagers' reactions.

After arriving to the accommodation and separating from the crowd, if you were tired, you could curse or go to bed. But you had to act kind and normal when facing with the villagers.

She looked like she had experienced it more than once or twice.

I asked her if they kindly receive the welcome ceremony and pretend like this every time.

“You don't have to do this every time, but it's often like this. If you are going to stay here, you better abandon your struggle and get used to it. It's our duty to present ourselves in front of people, not a choice. You'll receive penalty points if you curse in front of people or spit on the floor. In case you don't know this.”

Although she said that, sometimes it was amusing to receive praise from people like she was a God.

It seemed that she had already forgotten that she said she was exhausted after entering the accommodation.

As Sicia said, the attitude of people meeting summoned contractors were the same as a believer.

They acted like they were greeting the messenger of God.

“Are you an Apostle of God?”

“No, no, we're different from them.”

I saw them acting like a saint, so I thought this was just like being an Apostle, so I just tried to sound her out. However, Sicia was a little annoyed

She seemed to know the Apostle.

I met someone who knew about Apostles, but I had never met people who understood them well.

I had never heard anything else besides the fact that Apostles existed somewhere. Therefore, I requested her to tell me more.

“Hum... Simply put, An Apostle is directly affiliated with a specific church. They subcontract the tasks to us and we follow the contract.”

She did know a lot about Apostles.

KiriKiri didn't reveal any information about Apostles to me, so I wanted to ask more.

“What do they do exactly.”

“Well, actually, that depends on what's going on inside the church. If they have the leisure to, the job they do is similar to ours, but they usually deal with internal jobs. Not much of their jobs are known to the public.”

This was less than I expected.

Although the information was as poor as her size, I organised what I heard.

Basically, an Apostle could do the same thing as a summoned contractor, but they had to focus on internal problems, so they didn't show up.

“This really is your first time.”

“Of course, I've told you already.”

However, it would be better to say that I acted as the “summoned contractor” for the first time.

“This will be tiring. Do I have to teach you the whole thing?”

Sicia explained that she, someone named Yata, and I would be a team from tomorrow.

“Three people?”

Sicia nodded.

“That’s why I keep talking to you. But for the newbie to be in my team else I would’ve gone into my room and take a rest like everyone else.”

It sounded like she was suffering because of me.

The wine in Sicia’s bottle decreased in quite a fast pace.

I wanted to get more information before she got drunk.

“Tell me if there is anything that a first-time summoned contractor should know.”

“What? Didn’t the church that contracted you explain anything to you?”

I explained that I didn’t know anything in advance due to some personal reasons.

While I was explaining, Sicia lowered her head deeply and muttered something.

Her words were untranslated, but the tone of it was absolutely abusive.

“Ugh... What should a first-time summoned contractor know? Ah, Gods will properly count and give you contribution points depending on your activities, don’t worry. Just do your job well.”

Contribution points.

Here come a keyword.

We clear the party quest and then we are rewarded contribution points from the Gods.

The structure was easy to understand.

Summoned contractors had to gain trust from the Gods so that they could unlock the next task.

Summoned contractors may also cooperate with each other to accomplish the tasks together.

This is just like a game design.

“Gods will reward us? How?”

“...Well, for example, giving the a promised reward or giving you a job. The reward is also possible something basic. Mister, are you not the summoned contractor that contracted with the Sky Church?”

She heard me recite the prayer to God of Sky.

“No.”

“Then which church you contracted with?”

Questioned the curious Sicia.

Which God should I say?

If I answered that I didn't have a contract with any God, things would become a little complex.

Which name should I use?

As I thought, it would have been better to say that I had a contract with the God of Sky.

I held back my regret and began pondering.

I had been asked a similar question on the 16th floor.

Even so, it is dangerous to say the name of a God whose character is too widely known.

If the God was famous, it's difficult to keep up that facade.

It was better to use an inconspicuous God.

I used the name of God of Slow on the 16th floor. Not only the knight but the others said that was their first time hearing this name.

I answered Sicia while recalling the memories.

“God of Slow.”

“God of Slow? I’ve never heard of it before. I guess he seldom appeared in public?”

“Maybe. I don’t know.”

“Fine, summoned contractors couldn’t know what’s going on inside the church.”

I was able to bypass this topic while saying these words.

It was fortunate I coped with it well.

[The God of Adventure is disappointed.]

[The God of Light is disappointed.]

I decided to ignore the people who were disappointed.

If I react to everyone, I’d be even more tired.

By the way, I expected the God of Adventure, but the God of light was unexpected.

At least the God of Adventure gave me a power as a gift, but the God of Light never gave me a gift, just wanted to get something from me.

[The God of Light is extremely unhappy.]

[The God of Light is extremely unhappy because you forgot about his present.]

Ah, well, I guess he was saying that he praised himself when I received the aura mastery as an additional reward.

However, that was the skill that I already had before, he didn't give me some new power.

He just gave his approval vote.

[The God of Light is extremely unhappy.]

[The God of Light.....]

What is he unhappy about?

I'm telling the truth, not making up.

I cleared all the messages that plastered were in front of me.

Given his personality, the messages would come in constantly for a while.

"You know your task, right?"

"To investigate the lake where the anomalies occurred."

Raising her glass again, Sicia said she was glad that I knew this.

"So, is there anything I need to know about the research task?"

I asked Sicia to tell me something important.

Sicia shook her head with a red face caused by the wine that went to her head.

She was less tolerant of alcohol than I thought.

“Nope, nope. We’re not actually a research team. We could just wait in the base and Yata will take care of everything, don’t worry about that. And.....”

“And what?”

“I should have asked about your ability, I’ll do it tomorrow. Anyways, you have more alcohol tolerance than me. Ugh, I’m drunk now.”

After saying that, Sicia stood up from her seat and staggered to her room.

According to what she said, Sicia had formed a fixed team with the person called Yata.

I followed Sicia who kept walking to ask her more questions.

I asked whether she had teamed up with Yata before.

“No, never. Another person had been with us before he left. Mister, you are new here, so it’s natural that they will arrange for you to be our team.”

I nodded my head and asked her about the people that had quit.

“Could you tell me something about the person who had left, kid?”

Sicia screamed instead of answering me.

“Why I am a kid?!”

I was just joking.

“Then how old are you?”

“15!”

She was totally a child.

I had been talking and drinking with a 15-year-old child?

It was shocking.

I thought she was at least 20 years old.

“Fifteen, you are indeed a kid.”

“I said I’m not a child.”

Sicia protested for herself by raising up the wine bottle in her hand.

Did she really think that the people who wore little and could drink were adults?

“Okay, Okay, kid.”

“I said I am not.”

“Okay, you’re a kid.”

Sicia sputtered and argued that she was an adult, and then, she returned to her room panting.

[Why did you squabble with a child, Warrior?]

That’s what I wanted to ask, why did I do this?

It was a useless exchange.

Of course, I was also a little sad when she called me ‘Mister’, but it didn’t matter, I just forget it.

[I think both of you are kids.....]

In order to shut the holy sword up, I opened the inventory and pretended to throw the holy sword into it. Then I entered my room.

I sat on the bed wrapped in my thoughts.

I was surprised that Sicia was only 15.

She looked young, but I didn't think she was only 15.

None of the summoned contractors I saw as I entered the accommodation after exiting the carriage appeared to be Sicia's peer.

On the contrary, there were some people who looked even older than me.

Maybe she is always regarded as a child and that's why she reacted sensitively when I called her 'kid'.

I was also surprised that she contracted with the church and became a summoned contractor who had to perform tasks at her age. Regardless of her identity of a summoned contractor, I knew she was extraordinary since I sensed her mana.

The next thing that I pondered about was summoned contractors in general.

To be honest, I'm worried about the mission.

KiriKiri said there would be no big problem and I thought the solo stage couldn't be too hard as well.

By contrast, I wanted to know more about the summoned contractor and the apostles that are related to them.

Perhaps God hoped the challengers who cleared the tutorial to become summoned contractors.

After killing the monster on the earth, the summoned contractor can help to deal with the problems of another world if they had spare time.

This was plausible.

I accosted Ahbooboo who was a little angry because I threatened to throw him into the inventory.

Ahbooboo is a gift that the God of Light granted to the people.

Although his character is somewhat flawed, he knew the Gods and the church very well.

I asked Ahbooboo if he had any information regarding summoned contractors.

[The summoned contractor? You're not a summoned contractor?]

Ahbooboo said that with surprise.

“...Obviously, I'm not.”

[You were summoned in order to kill the demon king when I first met you, so I naturally thought you were the summoned contractor. Although your tasks were somewhat strange.....]

So... Ahbooboo always regarded me as a summoned contractor till now.

But it made some sense to think so.

Even I had lots of questions about the tutorial system, stage, waiting room, and messages, but he never doubted those and never felt incongruous.

Based on partially interpreted information, he understood and accepted all these situations.

[Summoned contractors are not special. They are just those who have signed contracts with the church, then summoned by the help of God and performed tasks. They're the same with people from other worlds. You can call them summoned contractors, warriors or dimensional mercenaries, etc., but they are all essentially the same.]

After listening to Ahbooboo's explanation, I lie on the bed and took the time to sort the information.

He didn't tell me this before when I asked him.

Hearing about the summoned contractor and the fact that they signed a contract with the church, the information was unlocked and therefore the holy sword could finally reveal that information.

I organized the information heard from Sicia and Ahbooboo today.

I decided to gather more information tomorrow and concluded my thoughts.

I knew I couldn't fall asleep till morning, but I still closed my eyes and decided to take a break.

I was able to recognize the problem when I closed my eyes.

Without any warning, a message appeared in front of my mind.

However, ordinary people could easily fail to realize things that appear on the side of their view in an emergency.

Because of that, there is always a signal before a message appears.

It doesn't need to have a gorgeous effect or a sound.

It just needs to make people aware of it.

No matter how many people want to ignore it, but once the new message appears, people must focus on it.

It is as if the message reading is mandatory.

Therefore, when I close my eyes and prepare to have a rest, my vision became dark, and the message appeared constantly is very annoying.

[The God of Light is extremely unhappy.]

[The God of Light is extremely unhappy.]

* * *

[The God of Light is particularly satisfied.]

[The God of Light wishes you a bright future surrounded by beautiful and glowing lights.]

After I was forced to make a promise with the God of Light, the message bombing stopped.

I decided to tell Sicia that I signed a contract with the God of Light as soon as I meet her tomorrow morning.

Then I felt that the world was quiet and I pulled the quilt over it.

[The God of Adventure silently became sulky.]

Chapter 204

Tutorial 40th Floor (4)

“Hey Mister, you got up early, huh.”

Sicia, who was sitting at the table, greeted me.

The first floor was cold and cheerless.

“You got up early too.”

I said that and sat at the table.

I was a bit worried that Sicia would be mad at what happened last night, but fortunately, she wasn't.

“The other teams went out early this morning. The research area is far from here, so if they want to arrive there before it gets dark, they have to depart early.”

Sicia added that she would explain that in detail later.

I knew other teams left early.

Earlier in the morning, I heard someone walking around in a mess and packing bags. I thought something happened, so I took a glance.

The summoned contractors in other teams explained why they departed early roughly.

I told Sicia this.

“Really? Could you still sleep while hearing they were going to depart in the early morning?”

I couldn't.

Although I have insomnia and I can't sleep in the stage, but the bed here is far too uncomfortable.

Even lying quietly in bed, resting with closed eyes was impossible.

[The God of Adventure is looking at you.]

[The God of Light is looking at you.]

I didn't know if these two Gods who annoyed me were congenial with each other, but they were both were having fun all night.

I sighed.

[The God of Adventure is urging you.]

[The God of Light is urging you!]

The hasty promise I made last night in order to solve the annoying message was the cause of the trouble.

The Gods kept pestering me so I gave in and made one promise with them. However, those gods learned that bothering me was a great way to force me to promise anything, so they did.

I endured and endured, and finally, they no longer asked for more promises, but now it seemed that I had to fulfill my promises.

"Sicia."

"What?"

Although I didn't want to say this, since it was necessary to say it, it was better to say it earlier.

I said to Sicia in a mood that I was forced to do the group presentation.

“I have to tell you something.”

“Well, what’s that.”

“I said that I contracted with the God of Slow, but actually I contracted with the God of Adventure and the God of Light. And I respect and love these two Gods. The God of Light is shining and the God of Adventure is... is... is kind.”

I finished talking as quickly as rap.

Sicia seemed to be asking what I was talking about and looked at me blankly due to my words.

[The God of Light is delighted!]

[The God of Adventure is relieved.]

It was exhausting to look at the messages that flashed like a knife.

They were actually Gods who enjoyed making others lie.

In the middle that talk, I didn’t immediately think of the words of praise for the God of Adventure. I felt a little overwhelmed.

[The God of Slow is a little unhappy.]

I don’t know who should I listen to.

I just want some unity in their opinions.

Sicia said with a surprised look.

“I thought we couldn’t sign a contract with a few gods. I heard that because of some proposal, it is impossible to sign multiple contracts.”

“Hah... Really?”

...She said it was impossible.

How could I have known?

Sicia was now looking at me doubtfully due to that lie.

[The God of Adventure feels funny.]

[The God of Light feels funny.]

These damn Gods.

I didn't know if it was because I didn't answer Sicia and dealt with it perfunctorily, the seat was shrouded in awkward silence.

Sicia played with the cup in her hands and awkwardly asked me.

"Well, maybe I misremembered."

"No, you didn't."

"Ah, is this a joke that I don't know? Will you suddenly dance next?"

"No, please, just let it go."

But Sicia didn't do what I wanted. She questioned me for a long time and I had to rack my brain to muddle through.

During this, the messages that said that the God of Adventure and the God of Light felt funny appeared several times.

* * *

Breakfast was a whole rabbit that was steamed in the big petals.

Although I didn't know when the meal was made, it was still warm, so it was Okay to eat it.

The taste and texture of the dish were like stewing chicken.

When I was licking rabbit meat, I was worried that KiriKiri might hate this behavior, but since it was so delicious, I quickly forgot about it.

“Lady Yata hasn’t arrived.”

Sicia said after wiping the meat off her mouth with her sleeve.

Yata was the other team member Sicia spoke of yesterday.

“Do we have we to pull her down?”

“When should we set off?”

“We still have a lot of time. It is fine to leave tomorrow.”

I asked Sicia if this had any effects on the schedule, why didn’t we just let her have a good rest?

Sleep is a blessing.

I didn’t know if it was because my insomnia was serious, I would feel bad if I disturbed people who were asleep.

“Can you tell me about her?”

Sicia nodded.

“Her name is Yata, like what I said yesterday. She is a magician, same as me, but we didn’t come from the same place.”

The first name was Yata, and I was curious about her last name.

“What is her last name?”

“The last name? She doesn’t have a last name. She was a slave.”

Her origin was quite intricate.

“This is not unusual. The magician from the magic tower slave is not uncommon.”

“Yes?”

“The manpower in the magic tower is never enough. Among the constantly accumulating number of slaves, there were some talented slaves that appeared by chance and became magicians.”

This is special enough.

Sicia said that she didn't know any more details.

I also didn't want to invade other people's personal stories.

But if she was chosen as a magician from the slave, then she must be talented.

“How can someone who became a summoned contractor is not talented. Everyone is like that.”

This is true.

Sicia sitting in front of me is also a very talented magician.

I am looking forward to using this opportunity to learn some magic from both of them.

* * *

I had another conversation with Sicia after breakfast, but the magician who named Yata still hasn't arrived.

Sicia reached the limit of her patience. She glanced up at the second floor from time to time and finally got up from her seat.

With the clacking sound of footsteps, Sicia went up to the second floor.

I suppressed the urge to peer on the second floor with magic and focused my ears to the sounds from the second floor.

I heard the door being suddenly opened and then some noises.

Judging by the sound I heard and the clamor after the door opened, Yata may not be sleeping in bed.

It appears that she was just in the room.

After that, Sicia hauled somebody out by the collar.

The female magician who seemed to be Yata was flailing her limbs in an attempt to break out from Sicia's grasp, but Sicia firmly dragged her down.

From her appearance, she was a head shorter than Sicia, and only half of my height.

It seemed that she couldn't withstand Sicia. She struggled but was inevitably dragged to the table on the first floor.

The woman, who was dragged like a disobedient cow, hid behind Sicia as soon as she saw me.

"I beg your pardon. She is shy with strangers."

[To this extent, she's not shy with strangers. She is just afraid of you.]

Whispered Ahbooboo, who has been silent.

However, why is she afraid of me?

Have I done something?

"Hey, follow me."

“Huh?”

“Hello.”

Sicia suddenly greeted me with hello.

A voice came from behind Sicia after a pause.

Her voice was as small as her body.

“Hello.”

Sicia was getting Yata to greet me.

Sicia spoke first.

“My name.”

“My name.”

Yata repeated Sicia’s words.

It seemed harder than asking the children in the kindergarten to introduce themselves.

“My name is Yata.”

“.....”

Yata was quiet, so Sicia lost her patience because of Yata’s silence.

“Follow me. I am Yata.”

“I am Yata.”

Watching this ridiculous situation, I couldn’t utter a word.

I was speechless for a moment, so Sicia opened her mouth and whispered to me. “It’s your turn to introduce yourself.”

“...Nice to meet you, you can call me Hao.”

I greeted her in a hurry, but I didn’t hear the answer.

She didn’t say a word.

The quiet holy sword said.

[She resembles Miss Seregia.]

Indeed.

Seregia just says what she needs to say and closes her mouth for the rest of the conversation.

One difference was that Seregia occasionally convey something what she wanted what to say, but Yata only spoke because Sicia urged her.

Once again, Sicia spoke first.

“Come on, once again. I am also.”

“I am also.”

“Glad to see you.”

“Glad to.....”

Looking at Sicia and Yata made me feel uncomfortable...

At this stage, I don’t think we should converse like this everytime.

Yata, who hid behind Sicia resolutely and never spoke unless Sicia led her, was stubborn. Sicia, who persisted to finish the greeting, was also stubborn.

“I’m looking forward to working with you.”

“I’m looking forward to working with you.”

“...Yeah, well, me too.”

Ending this long greeting, I gently asked Sicia.

“Is she Okay? She seems to be awkward with strangers.”

I was very skeptical about whether she could perform her tasks well.

“It doesn’t matter, you can trust her, everyone has their own abilities.”

I nodded as a response to Sicia’s assurance.

Yata only greeted me by following Sicia’s instructions. Although she didn’t want to, she listened to Sicia’s words.

If Sicia could handle her, I had nothing to say.

After the greeting that was awkward and uncomfortable, Sicia took out a large map from her backpack and unfolded it on the table.

Even though Sicia kept walking around, Yata attached to Sicia like a tortoise shell, which made Sicia uncomfortable.

Sicia, who often gets annoyed quickly, acted unexpectedly this time. She didn’t drive away the annoying Yata or become enraged...

After finishing the setting of the table, Sicia cleared her throat and spoke.

“Now, let me give a simple explanation. If you have any questions, feel free to ask.”

So it was Sicia’s job to explain the tasks.

I nodded and said I got it.

Yata, who was still behind Sicia, wouldn't ask any question, so I guessed she was explaining this mainly to me.

"Yata is familiar with space magic, so she is responsible for the setup and management of the teleport magic circle as well as communication with the research team."

So, Yata can teleport.

Unlike her outward appearance, Yata was a fairly capable magician.

Sicia pointed at the map and continued.

The middle of the map displayed a lake and the point on the south side of the map showed the village we occupied.

"At dawn, two teams will search the west and east regions of the lake. What we have to do is to establish a stronghold on the south side of the lake and communicate with the research teams at both regions, which will be our main job."

"We don't have to research the southern portion of the lake?"

"The research of the south is finished."

The research of the village's immediate surrounding seems to be completed.

Or the mentioned research team mentioned had already finished the analysis on the south.

"Then we have nothing to do."

"That's right. In fact, it's difficult for a team consists of two magicians and one warrior to conduct the search. But if there is a request from the east or west, we still need to help them. So we need to be stationed at the stronghold at the center of the south."

And from then on, we had nothing to do as had Sicia said.

If there was no accident, we were likely to stay around the stronghold and the mission would complete without any effort.

However, that was impossible.

Then we discussed the battle strategy.

In the battle, I would be the vanguard to protect both of them and Sicia, who is familiar with the attack magic, would be rearguard while Yata behind her as support.

Sicia also told me about the road to the lake, the general schedule, and the composition of other research teams.

It might be because I did these things alone before, so now It felt outlandish to discuss future plans with others.

On the other hand, I felt that I would enjoy this stage.

Chapter 205

Tutorial 40th Floor (5)

The morning was ending so we left the accommodation.

I left the village and entered a lush forest.

It seemed that the villagers never came to the lake, there wasn't even a small path here.

Although this path was a bit strenuous for magicians who have little strength, Sicia and Yata kept up with my pace.

"This is prejudice. Don't assume all magicians have low stamina."

"Really? You seem weak to me."

"Even with spells and techniques, a magician's body is an important part of magic casting. If magicians don't exercise, they wouldn't be able to use any advanced magic because they will burst."

In other words, Sicia and Yata, as magicians who signed contracts with Gods, couldn't be physically weak.

The only particularly weak magician I met was the one on the 16th floor.

She was always sickly and weak, since then I began to have a prejudice against the magician.

Thinking carefully, the magician didn't look very weak when I knocked her out.

When the sun was about to set, we arrived at the lake.

This lake was pretty big.

I imagined that the lake would be big when I saw the map, but I didn't expect it to be this huge.

Looking at the boundary of the lake in the distance, I couldn't tell whether it was a lake or a sea.

Sicia and Yata weren't surprised by the scenery of the lake. They began to draw a magic circle on the ground as soon as we arrived.

I asked if they needed my help, but they replied that there was nothing I could do so they told me to leave them.

But I didn't leave. I walked around them and studied how they drew the magic circle.

I couldn't understand what they were doing, but I intended to memorize the whole process.

"If you are curious, I could tell you later. So don't bother us and stay away."

Finally, I was driven away.

She said she could tell me later, so it was okay to be driven away.

But I really had nothing to do in the meantime.

The tent was set up and we would eat the food we brought from the village in the evening, so I didn't have to find food either.

I wanted to explore the area, but there was nothing dangerous in the peaceful and quiet forest.

I didn't find anything strange within the range of my mana and I thought there was no need to investigate the forest.

As a result, I was determined to look under the surface of the lake.

Walking to the lake, I saw ripples of water.

I put my foot on the surface of the water and focused on it for a moment.

I moved my other foot from the ground and onto the surface of the lake, but then my body shook violently.

It would be much easier with bare feet, but I wore shoes with thick soles. So it wasn't easy to control my mana.

I wobbled for a while before gradually stabilizing my center of gravity.

When I was familiar with this, I took a step forward.

Walking on the surface of the lake reminded me of an anime I watched before.

[No matter how peaceful the lake is, this is not something that can be easily learned in such a short time. By the way, what's Naruto?]

“...You don't have to know.”

This kind of thing often happened recently.

Maybe it was because I use not only the voice but also telepathy to communicate with Ahbooboo, sometimes he could hear my thoughts.

I don't know if it was because I am too familiar with telepathy causing me to make mistakes or if there is something else that caused this.

I couldn't put my mind around this, but this time I felt a little uneasy.

It would be better to ask KiriKiri about this after clearing this floor.

When the figures of Sicia and Yata drawing the magic circle in the lakeside was becoming small, I was so far away from them that I could no longer see the bottom of the lake.

How deep would it be?

I jumped from the surface of the lake while thinking this.

And I dove into the lake.

I put my head down and my feet up so let my feet could touch the surface of the water using my mana.

Unlike standing on the water, my feet were now in contact with the underside of the water surface, like a bat hanging upside down.

[...You are so wasteful. You don't have to use magic for that, just abandon studying magic and use me.]

Voiced Ahbooboo who was afraid of his position would be threatened if I continued to learn magic.

But I won't ignore magic.

Although I could use other techniques in place of magic, there were things I couldn't do without magic.

For example, Sicia and Yata could draw a teleportation circle, but I couldn't.

I walked on the underside surface of the lake and looked around the lake.

I searched the water with my eyes and mana, but nothing strange was found.

It seemed like an ordinary beautiful lake.

I was engrossed in the underwater scenes and forgot to find abnormal phenomenon.

With this method, I walked underwater. After a while, I felt that I was out of the air so I resurfaced.

My body, hair, and clothes weren't wet. I guess it was because I was covered myself with mana.

I shook off some lingering water on my clothes and returned to the dry state just like before.

Perfect waterproofing.

[...If you are still human, please stop learning the magic. Don't you feel sorry for the other magicians in the world? This is unfair for them.]

Why I should feel sorry?

I ignored Ahbooboo's words and walked towards the tent where Sicia and Yata are.

When I neared the lakeside, I found that Sicia and Yata were staring at me.

I didn't know why they reacted like that, so I moved quicker.

"Mister."

"Yes? What is it?"

As soon as I got to land, Sicia grabbed my hand.

I was surprised by this sudden contact.

"Please take me as your disciple."

"What?"

Why did she suddenly request that?

Yata, who was beside Sicia, seemed to have seen something miraculous because her eyes were twinkling.

Maybe it was because I could walk on the water surface.

“That technique just now is not magic.”

“Even if it’s not magic, I still want you to teach me it!”

Probably because she was too excited, Sicia shouted.

It would not be hard to teach her this.

Since she is a magician, she must know more about handling mana than me.

It would be easy for her to learn it if I enlightened her a little.

“Okay, in return you will teach me magic.”

“Cool!”

I had one muddleheaded disciple.

* * *

After we installed the teleport magic circle by the lakeside, we had nothing to do.

Yata communicated with other teams once a day, while Sicia and I did nothing.

The message contents that Yata sent were fixed including some normal regards, which took 5 to 10 minutes.

In the remaining time, Sicia taught me magic and I taught Sicia my techniques.

I gradually familiarized myself with Sicia's magic, however, Sicia couldn't comprehend my teachings.

It appeared that Sicia wanted to learn how to walk on the water and how to remain dry even after diving into water.

In the end, she wanted to learn how to control and manipulate mana as I do.

But the key point was on that, the use of the mana and giving rise to the influence on the body or its surroundings was a kind of physical art.

She had to hold onto the sensation more than the mana controlling and to seize the instinctual feeling.

Maintaining a centre of gravity was as important as being familiar with her body.

In fact, the trick to learning mana control is the result of practicing physical arts.

That was exactly why no matter how I taught her my methods, she couldn't grasp it in our short time together.

Even so, Sicia's physical capabilities were pretty good and her ability to handle mana was better than me, so I had thought she could be able to understand the method quickly.

But two days passed, then three days, Sicia failed to even do an imitation.

At last, from the fourth day, I had begun to teach Sicia the most fundamental thing I know.

I taught her to hold a sword and swing it in the correct posture.

"Is this really helpful?" Asked Sicia.

Swinging her arms, she wielded the sword up and down.

Actually, I wasn't sure of it myself.

Using her body to wield the sword was just a medium awaken her senses.

The only thing I required of her was to wield the sword in the correct posture.

Sicia was doing her best to swing the sword, but her shoulder, her knees, and her head were trembling.

And the position where the sword fell and stopped was different every time, how could she succeed?

Speaking while wielding the sword proved that she didn't understand the significance of this training.

But Yata, who was also wielding sword next to her, was much better.

I didn't know since when, Yata, who was used to stay with Sicia all day, started to hang around to watch Sicia's training.

When I coached Sicia, I found that Yata learned by watching her, so I gave Yata a sword and let her join the training session.

Yata was very interested in this and followed to do the training.

After we spent a few days together, Yata became a little more familiar with me.

We didn't have any conversation though, but we were close enough to pass the salt bar to each other during meals or to poke each other's shoulder during the night watch.

"Mister, perhaps I am not talented enough?"

Sicia went straight to the point

[Yes, absolutely.]

Agreed Seregia.

Seregia, who never opened her mouth about normal things, harshly spoke.

[Meh, she is not bad. It is too harsh to say she is talentless.]

Unexpectedly, Ahbooboo gave a favorable evaluation.

However, I thought she was born to be talentless.

Of course, I didn't voice out my thoughts.

"No, you are not."

Although I said no, Sicia, who has been disappointed for the past few days, loses her momentum.

It was also possible that Sicia already realized my thoughts through my attitude.

Because several times I muttered why she couldn't grasp the trick, which perhaps revealed my impression.

Thinking about that, I felt repentant.

At the night of that day, while I was in the night watch, I considered what training methods could help Sicia improve.

But nothing came up.

I never learned from anyone, hence I could only teach her according to the training I've done.

Yet, I don't think she achieve it if I asked her to my training method.

I also consulted with Ahbooboo and Seregia, but they also didn't present any plausible solution.

In the distress, due to having no solution, I looked up at the night sky and stared at the full moon.

The moon looked especially large.

We had been camping at the lakeside for four days.

I always looked up to the night sky and the moon.

But I never realized the moon was that huge.

Looking at the moon that was shining, I had an ominous presentiment.

“Ahhhhhhha!”

From somewhere, the scream of people came.

That scream was echoing afar, as a result, my tension increased.

It's not an auditory hallucination.

However, within my mana's range, I didn't sense anything.

I was worried that I would miss other voices, so I concentrated on listening, but only to hear the sound of the wind blowing from the woods and the ripples of the lake.

Sicia and Yata rushed out from the tent.

It seemed that they had also heard the scream.

Sicia, who hurriedly rushed out, looked up at the sky and said.

“Mister... Look at this. There are three moons”

Listening to the words of Sicia, I looked up to the sky again. There were three large and bright moons in the sky, which was bizarre.

Then, the contents of the half-forgotten message came to my mind.

[One day, there are some rumors about abnormalities in Lake Irai. Two suns and three moons appeared in the sky, bug-eating birds began to eat people, toxins were detected in the herbs, and children in the lakeside villages disappeared.]

I just thought of it as an exaggerated rumor.

In the message, the survivors were portrayed as being trapped in horror and lost their mind.

KiriKiri said the task on this floor wasn't difficult and other summoned contractors also behaved calm, so I thought it would only be somewhat difficult to find the target, but it couldn't be dangerous.

What's more, I thought the message was absurd and untrustworthy, therefore I just ignored it without any deep thinking.

As soon as I learned that the content in the message was true, the restlessness loomed over me.

And in the message, there were also words as following.

[The survivors of the research team said there were monsters that could rival the dragon in the forest.]

[They repeatedly said that the lava at the bottom of the lake would explode and would swallow the entire continent.]

Kaaaaaagh!

Another strange roar came from the woods afar, and the faint ominous atmosphere had spread, making everyone difficult to breathe.

I couldn't help but feel goosebumps rising from my back.

I'm going to be attacked.

Chapter 206

Tutorial 40th Floor (6)

People usually experience at least one presentiment in their lives.

The presentiment could forebode failing an exam, losing a bet, or that today's fortune will be outrageously bad for no reason.

Anyways, everyone would.

Some believe it's just bad luck and disregard it.

Some think that awful things happen because of presentiment.

Some think it's not a big premonition.

In such a case, people don't believe in the premonition, but the ominous feeling lingers regardless.

However, once you've experienced life-and-death crises repeatedly that was present with an ominous premonition for hundreds of times, you catch onto this feeling instinctively.

My experiences is such a case.

Having been gone through fire and water for countless times, spoiling the doorsill of the hell, I unconsciously began to get used to it.

Every time before something challenging occurs, I feel as if I have my ankles in the Jordan River.

At worst, I feel as if I bathe in the Jordan River to the point that I could see my Grandpa on the other side.

As this kind of premonition happens frequently, sometimes I even feel that it is not bad to take a foot bath in the river and that it is not bad to meet my Grandpa once in a while. Soon, nerves would begin to relax, but the sense of unknowing haunts me.

Sometimes, I wished that my presentiments were not true, even though I'm accustomed to the monthly death crises.

If I continue hanging around, I would drown in the Jordan River rather be simply being soaked.

This time, I feel like I wouldn't be able to return from the opposite bank.

That is what the current ominous premonition warns me.

I can't sense the enemy, but the atmosphere is uneasy. That uneasiness that warns me that if I act rashly, I will die here.

I have often experienced this before I reached the level of strength where I easily cleared the tutorial's stages without any great danger.

I quickly checked my condition as the agitation swept through my mind.

My mind is stable.

My reaction speed and directionality are stable.

I wondered if the fear born from my excessive premonition had affected my judgment, but it didn't seem to be so.

The feeling of death would intensify when neither the fear nor the enemy's existence is felt.

Such a situation would be a perfect chance for sudden death.

I had to swiftly decide whether to escape or locate the adversary.

At that moment, the lake quaked violently.

The ripples that appeared at the center of the lake quickly turned into huge waves.

It seemed like something was struggling in the depths of the lake, trying to jump out of the water.

[The survivor of the research team repeatedly told the absurd story that lava beneath the lake would explode and swallow the continent.]

I thought again of the message about the lake.

In this case, there is only one choice for me.

[Clear Condition]

-Investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.

– Protect the summoned contractors in your team from injury or death. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)

-?

-?

-?

-?

-?

-?

The clear condition of the stage clearly required the protection of the other summoned contractors.

It wouldn't be too late to investigate anomalies of the lake after making sure the safety of the other two magicians.

Instead of watching the wave that came to us, I turned around, grabbed the shivering Sicia and Yata, and rushed into the forest.

* * *

Within minutes, we arrived at the village where we had stayed on the first day.

The whole village was empty.

To be precise, there was no one here.

The furniture and clothes in the houses were intact.

I searched every corner, but there wasn't even a dog, let alone people.

The village remained unharmed even though anomalies had occurred in the woods.

Therefore, I had thought the village was safe, but that turned out to be wrong.

There are two possibilities I could think of.

One is that the villagers predicted that there would be an abnormal phenomenon and left.

I don't think these ordinary people could perceive what I wasn't able to notice in advance though. However, they have indeed experienced such abnormalities many times and have been familiar with that.

Perhaps this occurred periodically.

If not, then there must be some sign that only they know.

The other possibility is that they've already died before we arrived.

But the village is completely preserved as if it was never attacked.

Just the people have disappeared. The buildings and gates in the village are still undamaged and the scent of blood is absent too.

Even the weakest people would do their best to resist an approaching crisis.

At least, the villagers would have raised some chairs to struggle, which is the normal response of a human.

Even if their resistance is futile, with the overwhelming fear lingering over, a desperate villager should have struggled to grab everything within reach.

But no traces of struggles could be seen.

That cannot be unless the mishap was too fast to be perceived.

After looking around the village, I took Sicia and Yata to the place where we lived the first day.

“Yata, please try to communicate with other teams as well as the temple.”

Sicia, who cheers up a little, asked Yata to communicate with others.

Both Sicia and Yata cheered up quickly.

I asked Sicia, who was looking at Yata.

“Is this a usual task for summoned contractors?”

“No. This is my first time encountering such a situation.”

So this was abnormal.

When things got to this point, I knew that my approach was wrong.

Sicia kept saying that we didn't have to go to the lake.

The message clearly put that we can stay in the village for one or two days before we leave.

Thus, we should have stayed in the village and collected as much information as possible about previous anomalies.

The message's information and the information from other summoned contractors were based on the words of panic-stricken survivors, so no one could vouch for its accuracy.

Instead, it's likely that the villagers hold the most information.

But after the first day, there was no communication between the summoned contractors and the villagers.

What's more, the food we ate before was prepared in advance so we didn't interact with the villagers since then.

The reason was simple.

This is one of the stages of the tutorial after all.

So, if I didn't ask anyone about anything, no one would gather the necessary information for me.

I should have gone out and collected some information from the villagers.

Generally speaking, villagers were very kind to the summoned contractors.

If I wanted to collect the information, I could have done it any time, even if I lacked communication skills.

But the excessive enthusiasm from the villagers was stressful, so I deliberately avoided them.

I bitterly regretted my mistakes.

It would have been a great help if I could find the precursor of the abnormalities, or find the difference between the search this time and the previous one.

Ahbooboo, does anything come to your mind?

[No, I have no idea. I guess the things came up from the bottom of the lake are the source, but haven't we examined the lake? We even examined the bottom of the lake carefully. And... uh, warrior.]

"Yes, I know."

I detected the enemies in the woods while Ahbooboo was talking.

I didn't know the exact numbers, but they were numerous.

Once I engage them, I can't guarantee the safety of Sicia and Yata, who were frail at melee range.

Rather than fighting against enemies while protecting two other people, I'd like to rush out and fight outside the village.

Sicia and Yata were still trying to communicate with the other teams.

I don't like this sensation.

"Ahoubuch"

[You only call me Ahoubuch in such a circumstance. You usually call me Ahbooboo.]

"Well then, Ahbooboo."

[Yep. Holy sword Ahoubuch is present.]

I didn't have to draw Ahbooboo, he unsheathed himself.

Ahbooboo was so excited about what's going to happen, he flew around the accommodation.

What a carefree guy.

Sicia and Yata stared at flying Ahbooboo who abruptly appeared.

When this happened, I felt there was no need to give an exhaustive explanation for them.

"This sword will protect you. Stay alive and hold on. You'd better not follow me."

I said to Ahbooboo while walking out of the door.

Do you understand? Can you do it?

[Of course. I am Warrior's weapon. I'll obey your orders without question, the ideas of good and evil are meaningless to me.]

He doesn't really seem like a sword at all.

I clicked my tongue unconsciously.

I even had doubts about myself.

I don't know who was complaining to who now.

"Mister! Where are you going alone?!"

Even though I saw Sicia running out of the accommodation, I didn't care.

They couldn't break through Ahbooboo's defense.

This was for their protection.

The Ahbooboo's mana capacity is more superior to mine and he can use aura freely.

Ahbooboo could fly at a speed close to the speed of sound and is unafraid of being hurt because he has various protection magic.

Besides, he has good judgment and is calm. He can also freely use holy magic without any cost to perform various attacks.

Even I, couldn't easily break through his defenses and hurt the people he wanted to protect.

Out of the accommodation, I entered the street in the village.

I traversed the empty street.

I felt unsettled as I walked down the streets since I lack an understanding of the situation.

[Are you okay?]

Asked Seregia.

I don't know whether I should be grateful or contrite to the worries of the usually silent Seregia.

"I'm fine."

Seregia said nothing else.

Does she really think something terrible has happened to me?

"I'm fine. Everything's ok."

When I arrived at the end of the street which was the entrance to the village, I could see enemies clearly.

The enemy was approaching the forest from the lake.

I couldn't believe such adversaries were hidden beneath the lake.

The thick forest made it impossible for me to accurately assess the number of enemies, but it must be no less than a thousand.

The problem wasn't their numbers, but their strength.

These opponents were only half of my waist-high.

They were short like Yata.

They looked like the combination of the dwarves I saw on the 20th floor and the demons I saw on the 30th floor.

Maybe I can call them dwarf demons.

They are short and had dark skin.

Each of them was exuding a strong presence.

The one who stood in front screamed out.

[@@@@!]

It was a scream I couldn't understand.

This he skills, Time before Babel, had the knowledge to translate the demon's language before.

The language that this skill couldn't translate were runes, the ancient language that was forgotten and the slang that only a few people used.

The guy who was saying something suddenly grabbed the collar of another guy beside him and threw him at me.

It was bizarre to see him flying at me like a shot put.

I immediately pulled out the Soul Sword and fired an aura.

Kuang!

With a strange noise, the dwarf demon who collided with aura fell to the ground.

Originally, I planned to use my aura to split the dwarf demon apart, but he stood up as if nothing had happened.

This guy was so tough.

Previously, my aura could cut everything apart.

Therefore, their defensive ability is at least on par with the Demon King.

Although I hoped that only a few of them could be as strong as that guy, they all looked exactly the same from the outside and all exuded a strong presence.

So it would be better to assume that they all have such a strong defense.

Even more so considering this was Hell difficulty of the tutorial,

[@@!]

The fallen dwarf demon shouted proudly.

Does this mean that he has grasped my level?

The remaining opposition all flooded the entrance of the village where I stood.

Chapter 207

Tutorial 40th Floor (7)

Pooha!

My accurate sword swing decapitated the enemy.

Blood gushed from the headless neck.

Instead of avoiding the fountain of blood, I charged forward.

I grasped the head flying in midair and threw it forward.

PA!

“Kkwek!”

The guy who was hit by the head fell backward with a ‘kkwek’ screech.

Their bodies were tougher than ordinary metal, so using the corpses as projectiles was quite effective.

I approached the fellow who had been hit by the skull and had not yet recovered.

As he struggled to recover his balance, I stabbed him in the heart with my sword.

Kuang!

The tip of the sword failed to pierce the enemy’s chest muscles.

It just bounced off with a sound similar to metals colliding.

There wasn't even slight scratches on the chest, not to mention bleeding.

But the enemy still fell backward.

My aura could cut thick shields apart like turnips, but these enemies had such a solid body that scraps didn't appear even after being attacked by my aura.

There were only two ways to do meaningful harm to them with a sword.

One way was to use techniques such as light sword to create overwhelming destructive forces.

Another was.

Split them apart.

From head to toe.

The descending sword split the enemy's body into two clean halves.

I doubtlessly knew it from my experience.

Aura could be influenced by the user's will.

Although it's still speculation, I thought aura and mana were both forces that could manifest themselves through visualization into the world using my strength.

That's how magic was defined in the magic books.

Magic is a supernatural phenomenon that utilizes mana, techniques, and will.

But even without the required mana to process the technique, drawing mana arrays or reciting spells can produce a similar effect.

As long as the release of mana is processed to manifest Aura, then attach my will to Aura, what can be called a miracle will be achieved.

Of course, because aura has been very powerful, there was no need to process mana.

From the split halves, I glanced at the fresh viscera flowing out of the body and sheathed my sword.

There were no enemies left.

This fellow was the 1,028th opponent.

I couldn't help sighing.

This was my hardest strife yet.

It's not about how dangerous it was, it's about how difficult it was.

No matter how hard I concentrated on wielding my sword, I only succeeded once every three attacks.

All of this was because my concentration has improved in combat so the hit rate had also improved. During my training, I only succeeded one in ten attacks.

In order to be more proficient in using Aura, I need more training and practical experience.

Apart from these guys, I didn't sense any other enemies approaching the village.

But the ominous air was still spreading.

It was near the lake, in the forest, inside and outside the village. I wondered where this ominous atmosphere would eventually spread to.

I even wondered if it could cover the entire continent or even the whole world.

[Ahbooboo.]

[Yes, Warrior.]

[Is there something wrong there?]

[Of course.]

[The two?]

[They fainted.]

That's weird, what?

I asked Ahbooboo what had happened.

[Because after they tried to get in touch with the temple and told them the situation here, they wanted to confirm the situation outside and get more information, so I knocked them out when they tried to go outside. It was nothing.]

After hearing Ahbooboo's words, I really had to admit that his 'nothing' was effective.

Defending against the first stage of the threat, all summoned contractors in need of protection were in the residence with the holy sword to guard them well.

What should I do next?

I've made too many mistakes in this stage, so I'm more cautious about making a judgment.

I confirmed the clear condition again.

[Clear Condition]

- Investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.
- Protect the summoned contractors in your team from injury or death. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)
- ?
- ?
- ?

Now that two summoned contractors' safety had been secured, the next goal was naturally to investigate the cause.

But the investigation was ambiguous.

Whether it's just to identify the cause, to confirm the others' situation, or to gather information and convey it to the temple.

There are no clear guidelines.

First of all, I should clarify the reasons behind the abnormal phenomena of the lake.

There's a clue.

The ominous atmosphere that enveloped the world.

Although I didn't know how far it spreads, I was aware of its origin.

[Talaria's Wings]

I spread my wings and flew up into the sky.

High in the skies, I found that the world was operating abnormally.

The three full moons still shone with a strange light, which was an incomprehensible phenomenon, but that's not all.

Strange birds, the size of a house, flew around and attracted my attention.

They had red tails with black feathers.

That's the bird I've seen countless times in my days camping by the lake.

It should be the most common bird in this area.

But its size was not normal.

There were also jagged teeth exposed in the beak and talons that seems to possess daggers.

I began to understand the sentence in the message that "bug-eating birds began to eat people".

Looking at the bird as it was now, it can really catch people to eat.

In that case, with such a huge body, it would be a bit difficult to survive on insects and fruits. It would be necessary to hunt large animals and humans happen to be included in the prey.

Under the blue sky, there were various monsters wandering around on the ground.

What could I say?

The various monsters wandering around suited the difficulty of hell, I could only chuckle.

I also saw a monster swimming near the center of the red lake in the distance.

The moment I spotted the monster whose enormous size could be seen from afar, I understood that it was the cause of the current situation.

The ominous atmosphere that had been felt since the three full moons rose was emanating from that monster.

It's extraordinarily grotesque.

It was reminiscent of the legendary North Sea monster Kraken.

Unlike Kraken, who had several giant soft tentacles and a tough look, the monster had soft limbs.

And a head as big as its tentacle.

The eyes were embedded in the vaulted dome-like head.

It's not only weird, but also disgusting to look at it.

Once you look at the freak, it's as if an invisible hand grips your heart, your chest becomes stifling, and your vision begins to blur.

Rapid breaths and speeding heart rate seems to be symptoms of a panic disorder.

What a fucking ability.

I need to get pass that in order to reach the monster.

What to do, it was really problematic.

Firstly, I decided to punish Kiri Kiri as soon as I cleared the stage, and then I planned the next move to deal with the monster.

[Can you make it?]

“Well.”

It's really hard to be sure.

“I don't think I can't kill it. It would easily die with a vigorous attack.”

No matter how ominous or powerful it was, it shouldn't be completely untouchable.

"It's just that I'm much more likely to die than it."

And I didn't know what abilities it had.

When it does use them, I couldn't guarantee that I could deal those it too.

[Sicia and Yata can support you, can't they?]

"Yes, but if I die without doing anything, there's nothing they can do."

Sicia and Yata, these two girls were both my shackles and my escape vent.

A few days ago, I trusted both myself and them confidently, but I couldn't rely on them if the rival was that behemoth.

If I took the wrong step, I would lose my life immediately.

[What are you going to do then? That thing hasn't come out of the lake yet. Another way is to ignore and avoid it while investigating it.]

That was the right judgment.

And also the safe judgment.

Suddenly, a new message came.

[Stage task update.]

[Note: It's said that there was an abnormal phenomenon in the Irai Lake area. After the Kingdom obtained the approval of the temple, it dispatched a research team consisting of the summoned contractors.]

On the fifth day of the research and the day when the full moon rose, the mission witnessed the anomalies directly.

The 1st Team and 2nd team were sent to the west and east of the lake area were annihilated before they reported the abnormal phenomena they had witnessed.

But the 3rd team who set up their strongholds on the south side of the lake escaped from the scene at the moment they sensed the foreboding.

Yata, a summoned contractor from the 3rd team, confirmed that the abnormal phenomena in the lake area were true. After confirming that the abnormal phenomena in the lake area were level 1 risk, the Kingdom and the seniors of the temple asked the Hundred Gods for support. The Hundred Gods decided to use the Eye of the Sky, a commonly used power, to reconfirm the scene through the eyes of the surviving contractors.

The Hundred Gods Temple urgently decided to mobilize the maximum available combat power immediately after the eyes of the contractor, Hao, of the 3rd team confirmed the presence of a giant ‘origin monster’ in the middle of the lake.

Among the surviving members of the 3rd team, Sicia was contracted with the God of Nature who intended to send his own apostles to destroy the ‘origin monster’.

The summoned contractors, in the case of the continental crisis, more than anyone else, could calmly dominate the current situation, convey the problem’s source, and development of the anomalies to the Hundred Gods Temple. Please help the apostles sent by the Natural Church to destroy the ‘origin monster’.

[Clear Condition]

- Investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.
- Protect the summoned contractors in your team from injury or death. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)
- Help the apostles of god to destroy the ‘origin monster’.
- ?

- ?

What's this?

I wanted to see if the clearance conditions that were covered by the '?' had changed, so I scrolled down and found that the contents of the information had changed completely.

It took a little time to read because a lot of content was not easily understood.

As soon as I figured out the contents of the information, I was very alarmed by the unexpected message.

The apostles were suddenly mentioned.

I've seen similar things before.

It was on the 19th floor.

On the stage where I met Myong Myong, I had seen a giant fox named Great Mother.

She once said that she wanted to be an apostle of the God of Goodwill.

In the face of that Great Mother, even if I fought with all my strength, I may not be able to ensure an easy victory.

Those coming directly where not Apostle candidates, but fully-fledged Apostles.

I felt both excitement and uneasiness.

[Apostles are summoned. Please be careful of the impact.]

Ow!

How kind.

I would have liked a better message.

[If the arrow hit the key point, you will die. Please be careful.]

[If you fall down, you will die. Please don't fall down.]

And so on.

Seeing that kind message, others would think it would normally kindly take care of me.

The kind message, which asked me to take care, I embarrassed me.

On the other hand, in response to the impact, I also enhanced my strength.

Although I didn't know where and how the apostles would be summoned, the message was so straightforwardly informed me that I needed to be careful. It seemed that if I was not careful, I would die because I was involved in the process of the apostles' summoning.

Chapter 208

Tutorial 40th Floor (8)

The apostles' summoning took place on the ground.

I flew high into the sky and easily pulled away from the summoned apostles.

[Warrior, what is this? Do we need to kill it?]

[It's the impact of the summoning. Leave it alone.]

I immediately stopped Ahbooboo who was asking if I wanted to kill it and continued to watch the summoning process.

The summoning location was easy to find.

I just needed to find the center of the flowing power.

With that location as the center, heaven and earth began to quake.

It's certainly a force that lines up with the message's warning.

Ordinary challengers who didn't listen to the message and wandered around the area would tire and lose their lives upon summoning.

This was how overwhelming the summoning process was.

A deep vibration sounded, space began to shake, and the apostle appeared on the surface.

The scary thing was that even after the summoning, the power that surrounded it remained.

I thought this power was the impact of the magic used to summon apostles here.

But now, it seems like it was just the apostle's energy pouring out.

This so-called 'apostle' was more than four meters high.

Although at first glance it looked like a human being, it was not very similar.

It's more like Genie, the lamp genie from Aladdin.

Its face had none of a human's 5 sensory organs and its body was translucent.

Looking at him was like looking at a ghost, making me feel that it shouldn't even belong in this world.

The summoned being looked up at me.

Then it said.

[Come down.]

It even could speak.

Although without a mouth.

I didn't say a word when I heard the command flowing directly into my mind.

Although this area was full of that violent energy, it was well controlled.

Anyways, it won't attack me for no reason. From the message, it was also an ally.

I descended quickly, landed, and the apostle spoke again.

[Hello.]

Unlike its appearance, it was a very human-like apostle.

And it even said hello to me.

“Well, Hey.”

[No honorifics? Do you know how much older I am than you?]

It's really a human-like apostle.

And also a stubborn old guy.

“Yes, hello, nice to meet you.”

[...]

The apostle was expressionless.

Even though it couldn't make any expression.

Because it didn't have the five sensory organs.

[You're the one who set the fire... Ah, yes, you're the promising challenger. You're the one who annihilated the mutants and summoned me.]

The apostle said.

A word came out of the apostles that I thought it couldn't say.

‘Challenger.’

I'm sure it's a word used to refer to people that were summoned inside the Tutorial system.

[I thought that a challenger of the 40th floor would be exceptionally strong, but it seems now that you can't bear your cultivation. You are indeed a special being.]

The Apostle wasn't talking to me, but mumbling to himself.

"Really?"

[Of course. These mutants are not made to be easily killed by a 40th floor challenger. While they wandered, you should've moved stealthily and confirmed their origin. I would've been summoned while you were getting chased in the forest. That was the intended process.]

Now I'm absolutely sure, it was talking to me.

"Mr. Apostle, do you know about the Tutorial?"

[Of course. I know a little about Tutorial, the challengers, and you.]

Its reply was beyond my expectation.

Inside a stage, I would've never think to meet someone that had a clear understanding of the Tutorial.

[As an apostle, I am here to be an assistant for the challenger. You can regard me as a guide. I can steer you in the right direction and also provide a variety of guidance for the future.]

This was all abrupt.

It was so unexpected that my mind couldn't keep up with what the apostle said.

To help and guide the challenger? Here?

Why is it here?

If only it had appeared on the first floor.

Maybe it's because it saw my emotional expression, the apostle added.

[Is it strange? Isn't it a tutorial? Since this place is a springboard for adaption and strength. Of course you need such a guidance.]

After listening to the apostle, the phrase “what the fuck” came to my throat.

I can see that apostle and I had a different understanding of the Tutorial.

The apostle thought Tutorial was literally a tutorial.

A tutorial is created to let players familiarize themselves before the game officially started...

[Let me introduce myself. I am the apostle of the God of Nature, Spirit King Alan Hal. Just call me Allen Hal.]

“Allen Hal.”

[Add ‘Mr’ to it.]

“.....”

[Challenger, what's your name?]

“Please call me Hao.”

I almost couldn't resist adding ‘zzaai’ after the name.

[Honorifics without sincerity plus a pseudonym without sincerity.]

[Anyway, it's very well done pseudonym. There are no problem so far. You should always use the pseudonym in the future.]

None of your business.

Why is he suddenly asking me to use a pseudonym.

“May I ask why?”

[The name confirms the existence of the name’s owner... As you grow stronger, revealing your real name will yield no benefits.]

I understand, I replied.

To tell the truth, I didn’t understand, but I pretended that I did.

I need to ask Kiri Kiri for the details.

[Wandering everywhere while exposing one’s real name is equivalent to exposing one’s life. If there is such a person, then he is either the arrogant madman or an overwhelming strong individual who can keep his life against the world.]

This time I also answered, “Ah, yes, I understand.”

Even if I didn’t ask, the apostle explained it one by one.

He reminds me of the Knight from before.

What a human-like apostle.

The Spirit King is evocative of calm, emotionless being.

I spoke my thoughts and the Spirit King answered that it was because he had met so many contractors before.

[I also have questions to ask you.]

“What is it?”

I hadn’t asked enough yet, but it seems he has questions for me.

[Why didn’t you nurture your spirit?]

[There is a fragrance of a spirit within you. Although very weak. You have obtained a spirit's protection and enough affinity with the spirit. There's even a spirit walking alongside you.]

He must be talking about the Wind Spirit and its protection.

It's true that I didn't care about it or use it after the beginning.

I had no plans to develop it.

[You have the ability to become a spirit messenger. Your strength and affinity is enough for the spirit to grow. Perhaps you can reach me through that spirit. It will certainly be of great help to your journey. I wish to know why you ignore that spirit.]

As if he was afraid of anyone saying that he was not the Spirit King, it mentioned something about the spirits.

The reason was simple.

Through the use of the Wind Spirit's Protection, new skills emerged one by one.

Spirit Affinity and Spirit Summoning.

I have pondered many times about making full use of those skills.

But I never committed to them because I fear I would lose myself if I constantly relied on the others such as a spirit's.

As I gain more clarity for spirit power, I become more reluctant to use it.

I was disgusted with the idea of borrowing power from others. Therefore, I focused on my own growth.

Faced with Spirit King, I deceived it by saying I wished to put my effort into growing my physical prowess.

[Is that so? I understand. So is that the same reason that only one soul is loaded inside that sword?]

Spirit King pointed to the Soul Sword clipped to my waist as it said that.

Hm?

[The number of souls that sword can load are no less than tens of thousands. Didn't you know that?]

No I didn't, not at all.

I didn't hear such an explanation when buying the sword.

Both the item window's description and Kiri Kiri did not tell me that.

I pondered over the Spirit King's questions.

Once I clear this confusion, I must punish Kiri Kiri by pinching her cheeks.

According to the Spirit King, if I loaded tens of thousands of souls into the sword, I would see the corresponding effect.

The Soul Sword will grow stronger as the number of souls it carries increases.

Not only will it become more durable and sharper, but it will also emit a bizarre ghostly air, which will cause mental damage against living beings.

It can also ward off and damage ghost-like enemies.

Seregia's soul alone has already awakened this effect. I'm not sure what effect it would have if tens of thousands of souls were loaded into it.

Of course, however, as long as Seregia does not agree with that, I don't intend to force several souls into it.

There's already a solitary tenant. I can't force a cohabitant into it.

Even if I don't load more souls in, it's good enough.

I decided to discuss it with Seregia later.

[In the future, if you have time, have a talk with the little Wind Spirit.]

"I see."

I answered tamely.

Because in front of Spirit King, it's impossible to say that I won't get in touch with the spirit in the future.

It felt like confronting my father-in-law and claiming that I wouldn't take care of his daughter.

[Help God's apostle to destroy the origin monster.]

The information appeared in front of me.

It just repeats what I've seen before.

This has never happened before.

[Anyway, I think God can't stand your conversation with me.]

"Is that so?"

[Yes. More than half of the gods think so. Let's go now. We can walk and talk.]

With that, Spirit King turned to face the lake.

He went ahead.

With its faint legs.

“What are you doing, Mister?”

[What else can I do? Of course go in the direction of origin monster.]

With a pace similar to that of a toddler.

Considering the power of the Spirit King, the distance from here to the lake should be the same as nothing.

Yet, he walked so slowly, but nonetheless moved according to the message. Moreover, he seemed to be purposely showing his procrastination.

I walked along with Spirit King’s slow pace.

“Can we do it like this?”

[Of course. This is not the first time they did this. Don’t worry. The God of Nature also ordered me to talk to you as much as possible before summoning me, so it’s okay.]

The God of Nature.

It shouldn’t be such a kind God.

On the contrary, it should be a god who disliked me.

Because I have been burning, smashing and polluting everything around me for a long time, I could not help it though.

I speculated that the Spirit King, sent by the God of Nature, would distaste me, but he turned out to be more cordial than I thought.

[Don’t you have anything to ask me? There should be a lot. I can’t answer all your questions, but I can tell you quite a lot. Take this opportunity to ask what you want to know.]

That is what he said.

There was no reason to refuse the opportunity, so I asked.

“What is the purpose of the tutorial?”

[The first is to provide challengers with the power to eliminate the origin and the second is to select the new apostle. That’s all I can tell you. I can’t tell you the third reason because you’ll be able to guess it by the end of this stage.]

The apostle told me exactly what I wanted.

I stuffed this answer into my head and asked the second question.

“Is that the origin monster that has appeared on Earth?”

[That’s right.]

“Why do Gods and their apostles not kill those monsters directly?”

This is my biggest question.

These gods created the tutorial, summoned people into a new world, let them grow, but why did they not interfere directly with the earth?

From the perspective of the tutorial’s design, these gods should have a profound understanding of the earth’s culture and customs.

Given the ability, the spare power, and the intelligence of the Earth, I wonder why they chose to summon challengers and force them to grow.

[I really can’t answer this question. To sum it up, it’s because if one God comes out, other gods may feel unhappy.]

This is not a clear answer.

It's an answer that requires careful consideration.

I need to ask Kiri Kiri once more.

Although she hadn't answered me before, now that I've gotten a little information about it, she may give a different answer.

"Next question. What does God's apostle need to do?"

[The third reason reason for the tutorial is what the apostle needs to accomplish.]

This reply gives me a lot of inspiration.

What the apostle needs to do is established the tutorial's third purpose.

And the second goal is to select the apostle.

That is to say, Gods use the tutorial to select an apostle, not simply to enhance combat effectiveness or for enjoyment, but to clearly indicate a task.

The apostle seems to have more meaning in the tutorial than expected.

"So what is an origin monster?"

[It will be easier to understand that reason when you eradicate the origin. It's near the lake. Ask the last question.]

There is a sound of water coming.

The giant monster swimming in the water tosses in the water and the lake rises waves and sounds.

"Is that all you have?"

[Do you mean my power?]

“Yes.”

[Why on earth did you ask me this?]

“Please answer me.”

My mind is a mess.

The unexpected happens one after another and more alarming information is pouring in.

I’m busy enough just remembering, sorting out, and analyzing the information.

But even so, I couldn’t easily concentrate on all this information.

Since Spirit King was summoned, my mind has been preoccupied by one thought.

Can I kill this Spirit King?

I think I can.

Chapter 209

Tutorial 40th Floor (9)

[About 80% of my power. However, some of it was lost in the summoning process.]

Eighty percent.

It was ambiguous.

[Of course, you can only sense 30% to 40% of my actual strength. There is an immeasurable and inevitable difference in power between us.]

A meddlesome explanation was not absent this time.

But he said that I can perceive only 30% or 40% of his actual power?

I don't think so.

The Spirit King's that I have sensed actually accounts for most of his power.

But I intentionally did not correct his misunderstanding.

"How do you compare to that?"

I pointed to the monster who started to go mad after seeing me and the Spirit King.

The Spirit King seemed a little unhappy and made a "chi" sound.

He has no mouth and nose, so it's hard to discern whether he snorted or did something else. But it was clearly a gesture of annoyance.

[It's as powerful as me. It's a given that a monster of that level possesses such power.]

The Spirit King words, contrary to what I thought, recognize the monster's capabilities to some extent.

I wonder if I should ask more about the monster's power.

But that's no longer necessary.

Because the Spirit King has begun to explain.

[That thing, even among origin monsters, is an anomaly. It has the ability to manifest of mental attacks and an illusory world.]

I know what mental attack is, but I know nothing about illusory worlds.

Thankfully, I didn't need to ask this time either.

[Where we are now is the illusory world of that fellow. Two suns rise in the morning and three moons rise after sunset. The water that fellow is staying in would be dyed as red as blood. It also catches humans to transform them into variants for the purpose of inspecting the surroundings, as well as ferocious beasts that resemble the animals that inhabit here. Everything here belongs to the world created by that fellow.]

I slowly understood the Spirit King's instructions.

It's really very strange.

In the absence of any symptoms, all kinds of strange phenomena occur at the same time.

And they are some strange and obvious phenomena that I have never noticed.

But it makes sense that at some point, we have been transferred to a place that looks roughly similar to the previous one on the surface but is actually another world.

[That monster exists only in the illusory world created by itself, so it's very difficult to find it outside. Moreover, its ecological law is to swallow up people who wandered around the gate of the illusory world for a period of time in secrecy and use them to strengthen its force by turning them into its underlings. In this case, the lakeside should be the entrance to the illusory world.]

His explanation was so detailed and cordial that it felt like listening to the announcement 'Pokedex of MyPoke is Updating'.

[As a monster with such amazing abilities, it spends most of its power on those tasks. So once it reveals its true form, it becomes a giant prey.]

"Really? So there shouldn't be a problem to get rid of it."

[Right. Of course, but because it's so huge and durable, it will take some effort to fight, but it won't be too dangerous. It is the most suitable enemy to pit against the challenger at this stage. Isn't it a tutorial?]

I nodded vigorously.

"Then Mr. Apostle can also kill it alone."

[Right. But it would be easier to deal with if you aided me. Also, if you want to clear the objectives, you'll have to go with me to destroy that thing in the end. You fight it in person.]

"I see."

Because I kept nodding, the mood became strange.

Suddenly a wave came upon me and the Spirit King.

There was not much water coming in, but neither I nor the Spirit King was swept away by the waves.

[It looks like we have to move now. Let's go.]

The Spirit King said as he strode forward.

I nodded to him for the last time.

Then instead of following the Spirit King, I stood still and said.

“Okay, please take care.”

The Spirit King turned around to my voice which was behind him, not besides him.

[...Hmm? Didn't you hear me just now?]

“I did.”

[I just said explicitly that you have to fight in person to destroy that monster before you can clear the stage.]

That's bullshit.

I said to the Spirit King with a smile.

“No, you didn't say that. That's not what information said. The content of the message precisely stated to help God's apostles eliminate the origin monster. There is no mention of personally fighting.”

[.....]

I wondered what the silent Spirit King was thinking at the moment.

If I could know what expression would appear on its face in such a sudden situation, I could judge its character.

But I could not see any expression on blurry face.

But that's not to say it's impossible to predict the Spirit King's mood.

He felt like he was stepping on shit. Obviously.

“Don't think this place is just a simple tutorial. How many people do you think died here? Most of the people who died after being kidnapped here without getting any explanation committed suicide because of despair. The rest died of ignorance.”

[...So what?]

“For us, the message's information is our only guide. So we will analyze every word in it. Fortunately, this information has a logical pattern and consistency. I know it very well. The message commands me to help you destroy the monster, so it also means that i can cheer you on while you fight.”

[.....]

“I will be here to cheer for you with all my heart. That's enough.”

[.....]

That's what the message said.

The Spirit King didn't say a word. It stood still in front of me. So I added.

Pointing to the monster on the lake.

“Go ahead. Don't beg for my help, just do your thing.”

[...Won't you regret your attitude?]

“Of course won't.”

Think about it humanly, you bitch.

I have nothing to regret.

Anyways, I have not been with the God of Nature for a long time.

Since the time when I ignored God's warnings many times while the jungle was burned happily.

What's more, God's apostles can't hurt me as a challenger at all.

Even if the God of Nature protects him, no other Gods would.

I'm sure.

[I had thought you were an exceptional challenger, yet you are now evading the challenge itself. Do you think there's a high chance we can safely kill that thing with you as my assistant?]

I laughed off his words.

The Spirit King probably said a few more things before realizing that it was impossible to convince me and then turned toward the monster.

[It seems that your bellicosity is picky. Since you're so scared, just cheer me on like you said.]

The Spirit King threw that sentence and flew to the monster.

Sure enough, his brain was not very good.

He knows I'm bellicose, but I haven't shown it yet so there should be some doubts.

Who am I aiming for?

The Spirit King couldn't hear my inner ridicule and confronted the monster.

Thus began the battle between the origin monster and the apostle of God.

[99 gods of Hundred Gods Temple are watching you.]

Long-lost information appeared.

Recently, the interests of the gods had waned.

Those gods can read my thoughts.

This is a ridiculous stage.

* * *

[What happened, Warrior? It feels like it's going to explode here.]

[Hold on. The apostle is fighting with the monster.]

[No, that doesn't matter to me, but what about them?]

Ahbooboo is talking about Sicia and Yata who were frozen by him.

Indeed, the impact here would be a bit unbearable for delicate magicians who are already unconscious.

Even if the distance from the lake to the village increased, the forces that are surging would make that distance meaningless.

But then again, that Spirit King.

This stage wants a 40th-floor challenger to assist in a fight between these two monsters?

Are you serious?

The Spirit King's confrontation with the monster seemed to turn this place upside down, literally.

The water from the lake spewed up into the sky and the surrounding land rose with it.

The ground flew up into the sky in an instant, blanketing the sky, then falling down back to its original position.

The air became a sharp blade that tore the surroundings into pieces and then suddenly burned.

The Spirit King controlled everything in nature causing a clash of destructive forces.

Of course, that thing didn't even have time to think of a counterattack.

It was just being beaten unilaterally and enduring it.

But that itself was remarkable.

If it was anyone else, let alone hold it up, it'll die the moment it's exposed to the Spirit King's attack.

I have to reconsider my previous judgment.

Could I really kill the Spirit King and that monster?

I'm genuinely unsure.

Because I've never tried to push my limits before so how can I be certain?

(TL's note: Maybe the author messed up here, GodlyCash and I think it should be 'It has been a long time since I've pushed my limits so how can I be certain?')

The only time I was pushed to my limit was on the 35th floor when I met my mirage.

At that time I was in a weakened state.

If I pushed my limits now, what degree of attack can I output?

It can only be roughly estimated.

Interestingly, not to mention the Gods, even Kiri Kiri didn't know exactly how powerful I was.

In a stage like this, she always told me that it would be dangerous to fight head-on.

Normally, it was true in a stage where more than 20 people were needed to challenge.

But it was never as dangerous as she warned.

The information that the Gods gave in the stage messages agreed with Kiri Kiri's judgments.

It was an interesting fact.

Since I've concealed my capabilities to that point that even I can't measure it, the Gods and Kiri Kiri have also begun to make incorrect judgments about my potential.

The Spirit King has information about the tutorial and me.

So, like the Gods, it should have misjudged my abilities.

That's why, while showing his back is to me while also using his powers to his content.

No matter what happens, I'm not a threat to him.

As far as I am concerned, I am very grateful.

As the Spirit King said, such opportunities are really rare.

The opportunity to kill that kind of being by hand will not come easily.

Unlike the power I already have, my experiences can be another weapon for me.

I don't want to lose this opportunity without attempting it, even if I can't guarantee what the outcome will be.

I watched the Spirit King and the origin monster confront each other and perform this mythical scene while waiting.

* * *

The vague translucent body of the Spirit King looks more like an invisible soul.

Although it's hard to find him because he has been unilaterally manipulating the surrounding environment to attack, it's easy to observe when debris flies to him or when the monster's soft tentacles attack him.

When the monster is physically attacking the Spirit King's body, it passes straight through his body.

Like crossing a void with only air.

He used the surroundings to launch his attacks while his rival could not even touch him.

It's a real cheat ability.

* * *

I discerned a bizarre axis of power in the Spirit King's body.

Whenever he exerts his abilities, there is a central part.

That's probably the core of the Spirit King's power.

That core is well hidden.

I even wanted to ask myself how I perceived it.

Perhaps it's because I've watched the scene of the Spirit King pouring out his power without stint for such a long time or maybe it's due to my affinity with spirits that the Spirit King mentioned.

Anyway, the important thing is that I know his weakness.

As long as I can attack that core and cause it meaningful harm, it will hit whether his body is intangible or gas-like.

Although the core has been found, its location has been constantly changing inside the Spirit King.

Given the speed of the Spirit King's reactions, it's better not to make an obvious attack.

Even if he hides the core well, he will certainly be prepared to protect that core.

Even if an ordinary attack can touch that core, it certainly can't do any harm to it.

There are only a few attacks I can launch.

And there is only one technique that can make good use of the most out of a surprise.

[Ahbooboo.]

[Yes, Warrior. Hold on. They haven't awoken yet.]

[Well done. Now work harder. Summon out holy spells and prepare to withstand the impact.]

[Is the Apostle of God is going to cause a huge explosion?]

[No, it's me.]

Chapter 210

Tutorial 40th Floor (10)

[I feel very uneasy. I don't know what you're going to do, but can you not?]

[Well, no way.]

Anyway, I've warned Ahbooboo.

He'll be able to take care of the rest.

The battle between Spirit King, the apostle of the God of nature, and the origin monster was still raging on.

Although the Spirit King is pushing the monster step by step with his mythical power, the monster is huge and durable after all.

It waved its numerous tentacles to hinder the Spirit King, so the battle did not easily end.

Of course, the damage has been accumulating.

On its giant body, dark red blood flowed and countless injuries covered it.

Over half of its soft limbs were cut off.

But the battle showed no sign of ending, which meant that the Spirit King's strength is actually more or less depleted than it was at the beginning of the battle.

Even if the battle is one-sided oppression by the Spirit King, if it continues at this pace, the battle will last more than 30 minutes.

This will hold unless the Spirit King has a hidden card I haven't noticed.

I thought about waiting a little longer until both sides were more wounded and tired, but it seems better to launch an attack immediately.

[Talaria's Wings]

I spread my wings and flew into the sky.

When I first got this skill, I felt it was a bit unreliable, but it turned out to be my most used power skill.

Even though I limited my use of power skills, a skill that allowed flight could not be abandoned.

Although I have used magic to float and then paced the space with my legs, its speed pales in comparison to actual flight.

[God of Adventure is delighted.]

Those Gods' reactions had always been like this. I ignored him and continued flying.

I flew high to try to get a good view of the battle between the Spirit King and the monster.

Because the scale of the fighting is so large, so it was more appropriate to observe by magic rather than by vision.

[Indomitable Spirit]

[Designate Opponent]

These two power skills can work with the Talaria's Wings for strengthening my capabilities.

One most important common point these skills have is that they enable me to match the force of the enemy I intend to face.

I used Designate Opponent on that monster and the Spirit King.

I thought this might not work for the Spirit King, but the effects took place.

At this point, the Spirit King and the monster are very fatigued, but they've much energy to spare.

As I am now, I am unable to easily kill both of them by myself. I have to maximize the Indomitable Spirit and Designate Opponent by attacking at this moment.

I took a deep breath and then exhaled.

Thanks to the power skills, my body contains tremendous potential.

The Spirit King and the Origin were on a different level compared to the other enemies I encountered on the 40th-floor stage of Hell Difficulty.

If that monster focused on simple combat rather than consuming its power to create an illusionary world; if the Spirit King did not appear here as an assistant to fight for me against that monster, I would not be so lucky to make such an attempt.

My body trembles from the external magic is flowing in that my body doesn't recognize.

My body was warning me that I can't control it at my level.

Ah, what a torturous situation.

[Are you really going to move?]

[Of course.]

I coldly responded to Seregia's question and activated my skills.

Indomitable Spirit and Designate Opponent were used in conjunction to concentrate my power, the technique can be launched at the fastest speed currently possible.

This should prevent the Spirit King and the Origin Monster from sensing my attack and properly respond to it.

I targeted the technique between the monster and Spirit King so I can maim both of them at once.

Since I started to use the advanced mind power skill of aura, I have named every skill.

Just like what the female student on the 1st floor had said, whose name I can no longer recall, it's not for the sake of being cool or for some romantic fantasy.

Because mind power skills are very difficult to handle, so in order to use it, I must firmly engrave its nature and concept in my mind.

After all, the important thing is not the name, but the fact that I recall the skill's techniques through the name.

So I had to keep the strange name of the technique.

Anyway, it's better than Yeodeuleum Pyo.

“Sibam Boom.”

I threw a red dot in the middle between the Spirit King and the monster.

It was a bright, clear, and unusual red sphere like the red dot of a laser pointer on an oil painting.

The Spirit King and the monster stopped fighting almost at the same time.

In order to escape the sphere between them, they moved in the opposite direction.

In that instant, the sphere began to expand.

The flame blades from the sphere shattered everything around it and the ensuing explosion illuminated the whole world.

I tried to withstand the impact, but felt that the defense erected by my aura was broken and fainted immediately.

[The God of Light cheers enthusiastically.]

[The God of the Sky feels satisfied.]

[The God of Nature utters a cry of sorrow.]

[The God of Dueling falls silent.]

[The God of Dueling seems to have something to regret.]

[The God of Death looks at someone with great expectations.]

[The God of Chaos is a little excited.]

[The God of Chaos feels very happy.]

[The God of Chaos is urging somebody.]

[Vote started.]

[Approval: 7 votes, Disapproval: 71 votes, Abstention: 22 votes.]

[The vote was rejected.]

[The God of Chaos is laughing at somebody.]

[God of Nature is very angry!]

[Are you awake?]

As soon as I opened my eyes, I heard Seregia's voice.

"How long have I been out?"

My voice is stable.

My mouth, throat, trachea, and lungs are in acceptable condition.

[You woke up 13 seconds after the explosion and 4 seconds after the fall.]

Thirteen seconds after the explosion.

That's quite a long time.

It's enough for an angry enemy to cut my neck.

But considering the scale of the explosion, 13 seconds was short.

The trigger for faint resistance is required so that I can use it when I'm on the edge of dying.

If the impact can not really make me faint or near faint, it is impossible to trigger faint resistance, so in order to really activate faint resistance, I must repeat it many times. Even I feel lucky for myself that I have done so.

Fortunately, my body did not suffer any significant damage.

Although I have suffered numerous slight burns, they did not hinder me at all.

The joints in my waist were sore, but it's not a big deal considering that I have fallen from such a height.

There seem to be some signs of a mild concussion, but it's not dangerous.

I took out my recovery potions and drank it while sending a telepathic message to Ahbooboo.

[What on earth have you done, Warrior?]

[What else can it be? Sibam Boom, of course.]

[...As far as I know, the technique with a stupid name should not have such terrible power.]

[Well, now it does. What happened to them?]

Ahbooboo paused for a while and then answered.

[What happened?! Of course, they died!]

At Ahbooboo's words, I was silent.

I was too impulsive to consider the safety of Sicia and Yata.

I thought I had told Ahbooboo to protect them.

In fact, I knew that they could die.

I didn't want to put any more thought into it.

But, if they die, then I would fail to clear the stage.

The mission goal clearly states that I have to protect them.

Do I really need to go back and start it over?

I've come so far.

All I can see now is the burning jungle.

Indeed, in this case, it is difficult for them to survive.

Because the impact radius is likely reached the village.

[If it hadn't spread to the village, how could it have been completely blown up?]

Well, it's a fact.

[But...]

Hm?

[The lovely me saved them all! With the holy spell rivaling power skill levels – Recovery!]

You saved them?

[Isn't that obvious?]

Although there are countless enemies to kill while traversing through the stages, there are occasional those who need to be saved.

As far as I know, Ahbooboo can't use Recovery to resurrect people.

We've tried before.

[How could that be?]

[Actually, A holy spell is essentially to borrow the God of the Sky's power with his permission. Of course, for some insignificant holy spells, as long as the users are qualified for his permission, no matter how they used the spell, he will not care. But when it is the Recovery spell, all of that changes. I wonder why the God of the Sky agreed so readily this time.]

Well, let's talk about it next time.

I relaunched Talaria's Wings again and flew near the lake.

The scene was full of inferno flames that suited a hell-like environment.

Everything around has been burnt to the ground, but lingering flames remained on the surface.

The impact of the explosion, which had launched the laker water into the sky, is now pouring down like rain.

As soon as the droplets hit the ground, they immediately evaporate into gas and return to the sky again.

I see the wrathful head of the Spirit King.

[You bastard! How dare you!]

I also saw the squirming and dying monster.

With underhanded tricks, I tried to kill both of them, instead they both survive.

[Do you really want to be killed by me?]

The Spirit King's skull shouted angrily.

The Spirit King, how once had a giant imposing figure, now has only a fist-sized head floating in the air.

Perhaps no matter how fatal the damage was, he would not be wounded. Instead, part of his body and strength would disappear.

His strength decreases every time he is attacked, but even after withstanding such a tremendous attack, he is not as dead as the Origin monster.

[Are you ignoring me now!?]

I am.

In fact, when I first recovered from my unconscious state, I had already detected the energies of the Spirit King and the monster so I knew that they were still alive. However, I'm not worried.

I don't have to worry about those who had so little power remaining.

What's more important is after that.

[Why on earth did you attack me?!]

"How can you call it an attack? It's just a misunderstanding."

[Misunderstanding!? Look at me now!]

"I was just delivering the final blow. Didn't you want me to help you? It was so frustrating that I had to give you a hand."

The Spirit King shut up.

This excuse is more useful than I thought.

Anyway, there's an excuse for the attack.

But if I attack this weak Spirit King again and wipe him out completely, I will have no excuse.

What shall I do next?

[I will never let it go so easily!]

I pulled the soul sword halfway out scabbard and asked the Spirit King.

"What should we do then?"

The Spirit King calms down again.

Seeing the Spirit King quickly calm his anger in the face of real threats, I also make a final decision.

It's not necessary to kill him.

I already know his limits.

As well as how much my power has increased and the types of enemies it could defeat.

That's enough.

The Spirit King is so weak that I don't want to attack him anymore, which might create greater troubles in the future.

Of course, it may be too late to think about the aftermath. Maybe it's because his excited brain has cooled down allowing it to make a better judgment.

[...This time, only this time... I'll let you go.]

"Only this time?"

[I'll let you go forever.]

The Spirit King's anger may have subsided a little, his responses were wise.

Although I don't know if this is a suitable expression for a guy with only a head.

"Let you go?"

Note: Here is a repetition of the Spirit King's words, the Spirit King didn't use honorific words, so the MC repeated to ask him. In the next sentence, the Spirit King uses honorific words.

[Please let me go.]

While the Spirit King replied, the occasional squirming of the monster's body suddenly dropped down after the odd whine.

The three moons in the sky disappeared and replaced with one bright moon.

The fire-stained sky is once again shrouded by a dark blue dome and the cries of insects replaced the sounds of the burning forest, echoing calmly.

Everything has returned to what it used to be.

Only the Spirit King and me, as well as the huge body of the monster, that seemed to be alien in this ordinary world.

[Stage task update.]

Chapter 211

Tutorial 40th Floor (11)

[Stage task update.]

[Clear Condition]

- Investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.
- Protect the summoned contractors in your team from injury or death. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)
- Help the apostle of god to destroy the origin monster.
- Obtain the essence of the monster's origin.
- ?

There was no lengthy explanation, only the clear conditions has changed.

I think I can guess what the essence of the monster is.

Because after the monster weakened, the essence's energy began to leak out.

I also know its location.

It's at the center of the monster's enormous brain.

A piece of cake.

“Mind Slash.”

Standing at a distance, I cut the monster's huge body into pieces with Mind Slash.

If the monster had to be slaughtered like an animal, it would have taken years.

I brandished Mind Slash in successions. While I methodically disintegrated the monster's body, the Spirit King is stared at me.

I ignore him.

Just like the previous battle, when the Spirit King thought I could not be a threat to him and ignored me.

The Spirit King current condition poised absolutely no threat to me.

He is too weak to make any changes.

On the other hand, I felt very lucky.

Its name is Mind Slash, rather than something like Yeodeuleum Pyo.

With the Spirit King staring at me, I would have been embarrassed if the name of the technique was Yeodeuleum Pyo.

Immediately the thing called the 'essence' emerged from the body of the monster.

It's a fist-sized black stone.

I used magic to dig that thing out of the corpse and bring it in front of me.

"Is this the essence of it?"

I ask the Spirit King.

But he doesn't answer me.

I looked at him, who is in silence, and pulled half the soul sword out of the scabbard.

[Correct. That's the essence of the origin.]

His judgment of the situation is in time.

The Spirit King once said that he had met many human contractors and learned a lot from them.

I don't know from whom he learned, but that person taught him how to behave himself well.

Intriguing.

From the essence of the origin monster, I felt a familiar power.

The power of that essence is very similar to that in the Spirit King's little head and the power hidden in my chest.

When I defeated the Goblin King on the 35th floor, I got a stone that had a similar power with this one.

When I tried to absorb the power in the essence I failed to draw it out unlike my time on the 35th floor

Then a message shows up suddenly.

[Stage task update.]

[Clear Condition]

- Investigate the abnormalities in Irai Lake.
- Protect the summoned contractors in your team from injury or death. The summoned contractors you have to protect are (2/2)
- Help the apostles of god to destroy the 'origin monster'.

- Get the essence of the monster's origin.
- Present the imitated essence of the origin to the altar of God.

[The Imitated Essence of the Origin 34]

Explanation: Please dedicate this offering to the altar of God to increase your contribution.

I am more concerned about the “essence of the origin” explanation rather than the change in clear conditions.

The word ‘imitated’ is In front of the ‘essence of the origin’.

The difference between the stone from the goblin and this one is probably because it's ‘imitated’.

Imitated.

The word implies a lot.

In fact, most of the contents in the tutorial is an imitation of other things.

The stage of this tutorial is a kind of a recreation of the region, people, and events from somewhere.

But the word ‘imitated’ has never been used for these things.

How should I think of this word?

Does it mean that the stage failed to perfectly replicate those things?

Or maybe it failed to reconstruct their prototype?

It's not known yet.

Maybe even if I ask Kiri Kiri, she won't give me any answers about it.

It should be related to the fact that after I absorbed the power of the stone, the God of Remorse was voted out of his voice.

Now I have to take the next step.

“Spirit King, what does this power have to do with divine powers?”

[I can’t answer you accurately. I can only tell you that it matters]

It does matter.

It’s enough to know that.

[Have you finished? Then I’ll leave.]

“Wait a minute.”

[Ahbooboo, it’s almost over. Come here now.]

[OK. The Lovely me is coming.]

I wish that fellow hadn’t said the word “lovely”.

While waiting for Ahbooboo to come, the Spirit King suddenly spoke again.

[You don’t have to covet this power. Anyway, this power is meaningless for the non-Divine being.]

“Really?”

In other words, this power is meaningful to a God.

Although I don’t know what this meaningful power is for a God, that can prove how valuable this power is.

[The same is true of the power hidden in your chest. It’s useless.]

Strangely, the Spirit King's tone seemed to be a little more gentle.

Although what he said may be true, I can't find any reason why his attitude became mild after I stabbed him in the back.

[If you give this power to the gods, the gods will give you great favor. And it will certainly give you the reward beyond your expectation.]

I just nodded and said I knew it.

The Spirit King's words make me even more convinced. The essence is indeed a valuable thing.

And if that's the case, then I don't have any ideas of giving this thing away easily.

Even if it is a worthless thing to me.

[And.....]

The Spirit King continued gingerly.

A strong desire was felt within his quiet prayer.

[If you have any idea of giving it to me...]

“No.”

I said resolutely.

Hearing my response, the Spirit King shuts himself up.

[The Lovely me is coming!]

Just then Ahbooboo flew over.

When heard it said itself 'lovely', I laughed out watching Ahbooboo.

Ahbooboo was surprised when the sudden laughter broke out, while the Spirit King beside me expressed strong displeasure.

I knew he was too kind.

Although he has been exerting pressure on me, everything I asked was answered completely including the questions I didn't even ask.

Now I can understand why he wants to fight origin monster with me.

He's supposed to show his power while waiting for the chance to save me.

I also began to understand why he had been abusing his gorgeous skills excessively and expended his strength quickly when fighting the origin monster and why he always held gentle attitude toward me, who stabbed him in the back, and explained everything to me.

It's because he ultimately wants to gain something.

Thanks to this human-like Spirit King, I've gained another piece of information.

Although the essence of the origin is meaningless to the non-divine being, because it can only work on Gods, the Spirit King wants its power.

The Spirit King is not god, that is for sure.

Although he is full of divine energy, I know it's not his, but the God of Nature's.

In other words, the essence of the origin is not only helpful to Gods, but also of great value to the beings that are God-like or God-related.

[Let's move.]

Hash emotions are contained in the Spirit King's words.

I couldn't help laughing again because of the angry tone I've never heard before.

[Imagine a God in your head while we move to the altar.]

Play no tricks, I follow his words and think about a god.

The God of Slow, whom I have claimed to Sicia and Yata that contracted with me.

[99 Gods of the Hundred Gods Temple are watching you.]

[The God of Nature's anger is gone.]

[The God of Chaos enjoys it.]

[The God of Death thinks it's a pity.]

[The God of Dueling falls silent.]

[The God of Adventure feels sad.]

[The God of Light.....]

A series of messages that appeared in front of me were cut off a moment later.

Then my body moved to a dark space.

It's a place where there's no light, no ceiling, no floor, no wall.

The Spirit King looked around and said.

[This is the temple of the eternal vagrant. Why we are here? I have to go now.]

I asked the Spirit King, who suddenly announced that he was leaving, what he meant.

[I don't want to meet the God of Slow. I have no plans to sing in front of the river. From now on, you can do it by yourself. The way to the future and forward.]

Note: For '앞으로', there are both "forward" and "future" meanings. It may be a pun here. One means that the protagonist can walk out of this space without looking back at him now. The other is that the protagonist has to do it by himself as for how to complete the clearance.

The Spirit King left behind this sentence and disappeared.

Is he serious leaving me like this?

Although I try to protest in my heart, nothing happened.

"Ahbooboo, do you know what's going on?"

[No, I don't quite know. Let's move first.]

"Where do we go?"

There is no light or gravity, no distinction between front and back, left and right, up and down. I didn't find anything that could be used to guide me.

I'm afraid I'll get lost in this space.

[Go in the direction you think is correct as a Warrior.]

I think about it for a few moments and went towards one direction as Ahbooboo said.

Then a huge stone gate appeared.

Surprisingly, the shape of the stone gate is similar to the one I saw in front of the boss room on the first stage.

A little observation shows that this gate is not just similar to that stone gate, but exactly the same.

I close my eyes and open them again.

Now, the huge stone gate has become a small one.

It's the stadium booth door that I used to see when I was an E-sports player.

The next instant, the booth door become a school classroom door.

The strange thing is that it's not the classroom door of the school I used to study in, but the classroom door of a school I went to when I took the college entrance examination.

In this way, every time I blink, the appearance of the door will change. It became the door to a single bedroom and the door of the ward where my father was lying.

It seems to have been showing me what the door looks like in my mind.

After sorting out the ideas that came to mind, I blink again.

The door disappeared and a passage appears ahead.

As soon as I enter the passage, I see an altar made of black stone.

I put the essence of the origin on the square altar.

[Welcome.]

The voice of this dark and hollow world formed a sentence.

I felt overwhelmed before such a great presence.

“Are you the God of Slow?”

[Yes, I am.]

Then Ahbooboo flies out of the scabbard.

Ahbooboo points the blade at the void and shouts at me.

[Warrior, please escape. I.....]

I sense the chaos of Ahbooboo, so I can understand its reaction.

Without a word, I grab its handle and threw it into inventory.

[That's the toy from the God of the Sky. The being that wants to be above others and always sees only one side of things.]

Spoke the God of Slow.

I don't agree with God's words.

I don't think Ahbooboo can only see one side of things.

The other side is too vicious.

I thank Ahbooboo for being able to think of me in this situation.

[An interesting judgment.]

[You said that goodwill is bound to be accompanied by sacrifice, the God of Goodwill should be very happy.]

Exactly.

Even though I killed countless lives while clearing the stage, the God of Goodwill did not reduce his concern for me.

[Interesting. Don't you fear me?]

I do fear.

That overwhelming power.

It's totally different from what I sensed when met the Spirit King.

I have neither the intention to risk my life hastily, nor the plan to compare my power with it.

The feeling is similar to looking at planets and the universe with astronomical telescopes.

[So you don't want to kill yourself?]

Chapter 212

Tutorial 40th Floor (12)

When she asked me if I wanted to commit suicide, I was silent for a moment.

After arranging my thoughts, I replied.

“At least, not now.”

The God of Slow laughed.

Although the sound itself caused the space to vibrate, I can feel that she was laughing.

[Interesting. Don't you think you look too miserable and shabby in front of me?]

“That's true.”

[Even so, you still don't want to die?]

“Must it be now? Doesn't everyone usually die eventually?”

Laughter came again.

[Yes, that's usually the case. In my presence, most people will go mad or become disgusted with themselves. If neither is true, they will abandon themselves and dedicate their lives to me in awe. Those who claim to be gods are no exception.]

After listening to the God of Slow, I wanted to ask questions, but God didn't give me the chance to speak and continued.

[I still remember when you were anxious to die. How interesting. Motivation is a very important thing if one wants to survive, whether it's for immortality or the ultimate death. But I've never seen a being such as you, regarding your survival motivation so highly. Can moths that burn themselves to become sparks of fire really keep themselves in front of me?]

[Human beings need those reasons to survive. Is your life your own or just a means to achieve your goals? Don't you think it's strange? Don't you think the purpose and the means are reversed?]

I don't know why. I want to answer her immediately.

But I restrained myself and sorted out my thoughts.

This is God's question.

So even if I couldn't give a perfect answer, at least I need to answer her discreetly.

I suddenly felt that I have heard those same words before.

Not long ago, but I remember when I heard this sentence.

It wasn't a question then, but a warning.

'Don't confuse ends and means.'

Kiri Kiri had said that.

It was the warning she gave me when she saw me practice the Poison Energy Skill for my growth regardless of danger.

Seeing me like that, Kiri Kiri had advised many times that I was too obsessed with my growth that should've been just a means.

I needed to clarify my goal for my growth.

Although Kiri Kiri's theme is different from that of the God of Slow, when I think about it carefully, they are similar.

[Nothing is different. If you don't want to be brandish as someone else's sword, you can't be manipulated by your own sword first.]

[Well, if you know, Then there is no need to answer again because nothing is fixed at the beginning. Our role is to warn you not to trip over yourself. That's enough.]

The God of Slow concluded the conversation by reading my thoughts without giving me the chance to answer.

Unconsciously, my taut body relaxed and my tension eased.

Then a message appeared.

[Tutorial, the 40th floor of the hell difficulty cleared.]

[All abnormal phenomenons and injuries were recovered.]

[9000 points for clearance award obtained.]

[9000 points for first clearance award obtained.]

[There is a God who is optimistic about you. 1000 points obtained.]

[The God of Slow is watching you.]

[The God of Slow wants to give additional rewards. Will you accept them?]

I was a little alarmed at the sudden news of clearance.

It's totally unexpected that clearance will be successful at this point.

“Yes.”

Although it was whimsical, I responded to the message asking if I would accept the additional award.

Just then, instead of the next message, the God of Slow appears and asks me.

[What kind of reward do you want? You have accumulated a lot of contribution points in this stage. I'll give you what you want within the limit.]

The answer has been clear for the God of Slow's question.

There is only one thing I want from God.

"I want information."

[Go on.]

The first thing I want to know is all about God.

But I have cleared only one stage and there is no way to get such high-level information.

So I decided to get some information that could be the clue.

"Is this one of your many appearances?"

I asked, pointing to the seemingly endless void.

[Correct. Why do you think so?]

"I've seen a message where you picked up your pillow and threw it at the God of Adventure before. If your appearance is just the void, you can't throw a pillow. So I can guess that you may have many different appearances besides the void. "

Space vibrates and makes a sound again.

It's laughter.

Slightly different from the laughter I heard before.

The laughter lasted for a while and then suddenly stopped.

After a moment of silence, the God of Slow said.

[Forget it.]

“Ok.....”

She spoke so decisively that I couldn't find any more fault.

To be exact, I dared not to find fault.

If there are other appearances, then where, what are they, and how do different appearances interact with other gods, there are a lot of things I want to ask.

But the God of Slow forbids me to ask any questions related to this subject.

[Ask something else.]

I ask the God of Slow who wished to hear something else.

“Aren't you reading my thoughts? Can you explain what I want to know within the scope of permission? I'm afraid the scope of your explanation will be narrowed down by my questions.”

[No. Anyways, it's a reward. I can't explain it to you without asking me. By the way, that one just now also counted as a question. I have deducted the corresponding contribution points, keep that in mind.]

Suddenly I felt that she is somewhat deliberately provocative.

Is it because of the pillow I mentioned just now or something else?

[Words that make me feel uncomfortable will also cost your contribution points. Again, I told you to forget that.]

So it is.

Before the contribution points are consumed again, I stop thinking and ask questions I had prepared.

“Are the monsters that appear on Earth the same ones as the origin monsters that appear on the 40th floor?”

[Yes. but there are few monsters with the essence. Other monsters may have similar things, but is nothing compared to the essence.]

“Then what God asks the apostles to do is to collect the essence and present it to the temple.”

[Yes.]

“Then is the essence of the origin necessary to become a God?”

[Correct, but it doesn't mean that one can become a God even if one owns the essence of origin.]

[Additionally, the essence of the origin is not the only method to ascend to divinity. There are also many people who used other methods to gain the qualifications to become God. My divinity was completed before the power of the origin was sprinkled all over the dimension]

As I expected, it is a necessary power to become a God.

It's also worth the Spirit King's greed.

What the God of Slow mentioned after is something I haven't questioned or thought of at all.

After contemplating for a while, I think it's just a piece of crap that the God of Slow said in order to boast about herself.

So that answer should not consume contribution points.

[But those your rude thoughts will cost contribution points.]

Now I know that the God of Slow I understood through the messages is the same as the God of Slow present.

After struggling to control my laughter, I continued my questions.

[Stop. Your contribution points are almost exhausted. Only ask what you want to know most and what you've been most worried about.]

The God of Slow advised me to carefully consider my questions.

This is the same as Kiri Kiri.

Understanding my thoughts and experiences, I knew the questions I want to ask and the things I needed most.

“I have no intentions of becoming an apostle.”

[I knew it.]

“I have another goal.”

After clearing the 20th floor, all the gods in the Hundred Gods Temple have been watching my every move every time I opened my eyes.

But as time went by, their interests for me began to diminish.

Whenever I cleared a stage, their negative reaction to me will increase accordingly.

Because they know that I'd rather devote myself to other goals than to be their apostle.

And that goal is contrary to Gods' intentions.

[Of course, I knew that too.]

“Even so, there are several gods, including you, who have always trusted me and supported me. I am curious about the reasons. Is it because you don’t know what my goal is? If not, do you think I will give up my goal?”

God of Slow laughed in a low voice.

[I can’t tell you why. It’s not because of the lack of your contribution points. There will be undesirable outcomes, as a result, my words reaching the world. That’s all I can tell to you.]

As the God of Slow answered, a portal appears at my feet.

The luminous portal that appeared in this place void of light, did not shine.

The God of Slow spoke.

[Go and think about my answers carefully.]

I feel that the portal is starting.

Before my body is transferred, the God of Slow finally added.

[Come again.]

As soon as her voice fell, my body left the dark space and moved to the bright field.

* * *

“Hou!”

“Huh?”

“Houjae!”

I see something running toward me through my frown as I suddenly transported to a bright place.

Of course, it's Kiri Kiri.

Kiri Kiri comes skipping over and clings to my back.

Although she welcomed me enthusiastically before, she was too enthusiastic this time.

I grab Kiri Kiri's back neck, clinging to my back like a leech, and pull her off.

Kiri Kiri clings to my hands like a cat, joyfully.

"I'm glad that Houjae is safe."

I'm also glad

In fact, it wouldn't be surprising if I suddenly died at any time and anywhere.

Although I have gained a lot, there are also corresponding dangers hidden in every corner.

I've even exacerbated my danger due to successive misjudgments.

I thank her for worrying about me.

But at the same time, it reminds me that Kiri Kiri was stubborn enough to say that there were no suggestions for the 40th floor.

If she was truly worried about me and informed me in advance, then there would have been no danger.

The seesaw battle between gratitude and hatred soon ended as the balance fell to one side.

I raise my hand and hit the grinning Kiri Kiri on her forehead.

Kiri Kiri's cheeks were stained with tears, but she had already stuffed the lollipop into her mouth.

Although I hit her on the head in anger, I didn't think it was excessive. Kiri Kiri cried a little too much.

In order to coax her, I had to buy her a lollipop.

As soon as the lollipop was stuffed into her mouth, the tears abruptly halted. She pretended to cry for the sake of eating candy.

"He-he."

Kiri Kiri's mood is particularly volatile today.

I don't know what joyful event happened, but she seemed to soar to the sky in happiness.

"Explain to me why you would rather lie than inform me about the 40th floor. Didn't you say that there's definitely nothing dangerous?"

Hearing my question, Kiri Kiri answers me as if it was no big deal.

"Of course, that's because all of the information is excessively expensive. Even if I wanted to tell you, they'd be useless because that information becomes available during the process of clearing the 40th floor."

"So in order to save information costs, that was a natural choice?"

"Yes, that's right."

Anyway, Kiri Kiri made the best choice so I couldn't rebut.

Although Kiri Kiri's lie was a bit of a shock to me, it's awkward to blame it now.

"Now that you have saved up so much information points, you can ask a lot of questions."

“I see. I’ll ask you if I do.”

“No. Ask now, Hurry up.”

Kiri Kiri’s urging surprised me.

I mulled over any immediate questions I might have.

Or anything I missed.

No matter how much I mulled, nothing came to mind.

Resting my chin on my fist, I calmly pondered.

Then I see Kiri Kiri staring at me with bright eyes, waiting for me to ask questions. I understand the reason for her haste.

“Want to answer my questions now?”

“Uh-Huh!”

She didn’t seem to be urging me to ask questions for any reason.

Since there is no need to look for Kiri Kiri’s hidden intentions, I relaxed and began to think about what I wanted to know.

But in the course of clearing the 40th floor, almost all my questions have been answered.

However, there is one question I wanted to ask Kiri Kiri.

“I’ve been thinking about when I used Sibam Boom on the 40th floor. If I added the Poison Ki to it and mixed them together, it would become very powerful. Is there any way I can safely test it?”

“No!”

Kiri Kiri shouted.

Chapter 213

Tutorial 40th Floor (?)

[It looks interesting.]

Ahbooboo spoke as he looked at me silently.

It may look interesting since I'm playing catch marbles.

“What, would you like to try?”

[You know I can't do it. But you play it well, marbles catching.]

“Because it's a game that is to be played with others. Since I was a child, I have been reluctant to admit defeat for this kind of thing. So I made up my mind to win and my skill in turn grew.”

[Oh... so you played since childhood.]

What was that attitude?

[If you lose one round, you'd be the annoying kid who declares it invalid and restarts the round. There are always such people. In order to get the results they want, kids struggle desperately, scream, and make trouble.]

The description is very picturesque.

Maybe it's because I've seen so many children who act shamelessly after losing to me that I can imagine that scene immediately.

But that's not usually the case in my childhood.

“Regardless, I haven't done that.”

[Forget it. Everything has its first time. Anyways, the games played with other people should be lost in order to learn. You still refuse to admit defeat even now?]

“No, you swine. I’ve hardly lost anything like that so far.”

It’s true.

If I see someone playing catch marbles, I will observe the rules and methods of the game before consulting that person.

Then I’ll practice by myself and invite that person to play when I think I can win.

Since I was a child, I prefer winning games rather than enjoying them.

If one’s eyes are only set on victory, it’s impossible to make a fool of yourself when challenging someone without knowing the methods.

[Yes, yes. You are right.]

What should I do with that nasty mouth?

“Wait till I learn silencing magic one day, you just watch.”

[Then I’ll dispel it. You can’t touch me unless you’re better at magic than I am. Ho, Ho, Ho.]

I think that’s the biggest reason this guy doesn’t teach me magic.

Damn it.

Speaking of the long-lost childhood stories, I can’t help recalling that time I lost to an older kid in my community at a fighting game.

That is a very rare memory.

Note: It means that the MC seldom loses, so there are few such memories.

I put my bag in the seat next to the game console and was brushing past instance zones, but very few people moved my bag aside to challenge me.

I didn't practice it enough then and that kid was a very good master.

If I could win, pigs might fly.

After losing two games in a row, I ran out of coins and had to go home.

By the time I got more money and returned to the arcade, that kid had disappeared.

My revenge for that lost has not yet been completed.

Because I haven't seen that kid since.

I chose to be an E-sports player as my profession, which must have been influenced by this memory.

In a sense, that experience had a great impact on my life.

I pick up the scattered marbles.

After about 10 minutes, I think I've played enough.

"Is this all right?"

[No. You must check for even slight symptoms of poisoning. The toxicity can penetrate into the body through the surface of the skin.]

Ahbooboo is right.

Every time this happens, I feel inconvenienced by my excessive resistance.

If my resistance is weaker, I could react immediately at any level of incubation.

After leaving the waiting room, I have to spend some time experimenting.

I was just playing catch marbles with crystals made from Poison Ki and aura.

This is what Kiri Kiri advised me to do.

When I asked Kiri Kiri about the development of the Poison Ki, she got angry with me at first, but then told me that I should improve the safety of my Poison Ki rather than its power.

She added that enhancing the power and flexibility comes after this.

She suggests that I should liquefy Poison Ki for coating first.

As soon as I return to the waiting room, I make poison blood and started testing.

But whether it's glass, plastic, or steel, it's not easy to directly coat things with dissolved Poison Ki (poison blood).

Magic couldn't control the Poison Ki, so I had to store it as solidified aura crystals.

Making aura crystals was more difficult than I thought.

After several days of hard work, I was able to produce crystals of the shape and size I wanted.

As the final work, I made several crystals with black venom dangling inside and red aura wrapped outside.

Now it looks like a gem.

[Yes, it looks like a gem, a gem mined from hell. The surface is as bright red as blood and there is a dark sticky liquid slushing inside. The only person who can see these things as gemstones is you.]

I ignore Ahbooboo's murmur.

That is just my personal feeling.

I appreciate the aura crystal, I was making sure my hands will not be stained with poison.

I should confirm it again outside the waiting room where I can try more experiments.

Kiri Kiri's advice was helpful.

Have I known that even if she has asserted that there were no tips for me, I would eventually get useful advice if I just approach a subject without going straight to the point.

Another thing is that just one cake won't entice her to make suggestions.

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: Hey, are you available?]

Kim MinHyuk's message after such a long time.

No matter what happened, it's usually Park JungAh who sends messages to me.

I have rarely talked to Kim MinHyuk since I handed over the personnel management of Hell Difficulty to Lee Hyung Jin.

Although we occasionally chatted, since he didn't have to meet with me to discuss the Order of Vigilance and he had nothing to report, the chatting time naturally decreased.

[Lee HoJae, 41st floor: I'm available.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor:... When did you go up to the 41st floor? Well, forget it. I got information from the newcomers who entered this round. It's said that the government is investigating the status and the location of the challenger's family. It is estimated that they will get the information next cycle or the cycle after that.]

That's a long time.

When those graduating from the tutorial come into contact with the government, their first action was to confirm the status of their families.

It's been months since graduates began to appear. It looks like the government is finally starting to work.

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: It seems that there are several graduates who are dissatisfied with the government. There is a rumor that they intend to go to other countries and because of this, they are now accused of being traitors or something. I guess it was because of this that the government rushed to action.]

I can roughly imagine the circumstances outside.

Although I can't predict accurately, how the world works is always similar.

Even if the monster comes out and the world is in ruins, what should remain unchanged will remain unchanged.

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: What, do you have anything else to say? You're too indifferent.]

[Lee HoJae, 41st floor: That's all. I have nothing to say.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: Alright. See you later.]

Kim MinHyuk ended the message with an agreement to meet next time.

I don't have any interest in knowing the life or death of my family.

Even if South Korea suffers minimum losses, the death toll exceeds one million.

It's really crooked to be optimistic that my family won't be one of those countless victims.

But it's not bad to hope.

I call Ahbooboo to confirm whether other people think of me.

"Ahbooboo."

[Yes, Warrior.]

"Do you have a family?"

[What are you saying? I am not an orphan.]

Ahbooboo uttered angrily.

Maybe it's because I suddenly asked that, he feels unhappy.

"Tell me about your family."

[Family? When I was a child... no, the story is before I became a sword, so this is a story from the distant past. Let me think...]

I asked Ahbooboo to talk about his past.

Ahbooboo held no secrets and enjoys telling others his stories, so he starts talking about it without any complaints.

All in all, it was a story of Ahbooboo's childhood.

Ahbooboo said that he paid more attention to the sword than his family ever since he began practicing with his sword.

Nevertheless, Ahbooboo's narrative still showed his deep yearning for his family.

I'm contemplating as I listen to Ahbooboo's story.

Why can't I share the same feelings as Ahbooboo?

Even now, when I hear some news about my family, why am I so indifferent?

* * *

[Tutorial, the 40th Floor of Hell Difficulty Cleared.]

[Take care, have a good day.]

With the farewell from the God of Nature, I stepped into the portal.

I left the temple of God of Nature and moved to Kiri Kiri's field.

After moving, the sight of the gods, which has disappeared for some time, back to me.

[Many gods of the Hundred Gods Temple are watching you.]

The number of eyes now exceeds 3,000.

These gazes that watch me often make me feel uncomfortable and frightened

But at least the existence that is opposite to me at the moment isn't as worrisome.

"Kiri Kiri."

"Hello!"

I see Kiri Kiri hopping toward me as she waves her hand.

Her smile was still so naive that it felt creepy.

"Hee-hee, look at that, you're a little late this time."

As usual.

Smart, lovely, pure.

Looking at Kiri Kiri eases my tension.

Even if I still have a bad feeling about her.

I'm sure that my feelings for her have changed and it's not because I like her, but because of her ability.

Kiri Kiri and the uncle on the 60th floor were my life-saving straws when I fell into the hell difficulty alone.

If even one of them was missing, I would never have climbed to the 40th floor.

I look forward to meeting Kiri Kiri after clearing each stage because I can hold her tightly and cry.

We can also chat over tea and cake while playing together like children.

For me, Kiri Kiri is not only a parent, but also a teacher, a friend, a sister.

So I still can't easily accept the fact that the smiles she gives to me with an innocent face were fake.

Even though she has been reading my thoughts at this very moment, she still maintained that innocent face as if nothing had happened which made me feel even more terrible.

Faced with the smiling Kiri Kiri, I am filled with frustration.

I wanted to scold her and be angry at her, but I can't do it at all.

"Kiri Kiri."

“Yes, what?”

Aren't you reading my mind?

Don't you know what I'm going to ask? I jeer at her.

I'd rather she be frank with her thoughts.

“You explained to me about information control in the tutorial before, correct?”

“Yes, I did.”

“You told me about privacy. If one spends points and information fees to set specific information as private, then nobody can peep at this private info without paying a higher price. So please set what I want to be private.”

Kiri Kiri nodded.

Information privacy has been released in large quantities.

Since it's still in its infancy stage, every conversation protocol day held in Korean servers has been related to the privacy settings.

I know everything about privacy.

I also know some of the secrets that uncle hides.

But this is not because I paid enough information fees to see uncle's private information, but because the information is open to the challengers of Hell Difficulty.

“This time I heard from the God of Nature. There is another method, a method to control a specific people's information access.”

Kiri Kiri's curious eyes shook in anticipation of my next words.

I began to fear her innocent face.

I don't have to explain that method.

Because she knows all about it.

I accelerate the progress of this dialogue.

I want to end this dialogue as soon as possible.

“He asked me if I had exposed the trigger to the floor manager.” [1]

I close my eyes tightly.

I held my trembling hands behind my back and spoke my next words.

“Kiri Kiri, tell me what you're hiding.”

No response.

I peeked at Kiri Kiri only to see her staring at me with a smile.

Note [1]:

The idea behind the trigger is that Lee Yeon Hee triggered something related to the “Specific Person Information Control” is what it'll dub it for now, which caused Lee Yeon Hee to be unable to access certain information about Lee Ho Jae. This trigger was activated when speaking to the floor manager, in this case, Kiri Kiri.

Chapter 214

Tutorial 60th Floor (15)

I had nothing to do, so I decided to lie on the bench quietly to kill time.

Having been so busy the past few months, it felt strange to rest.

Although I wanted to take this opportunity to visit the 61st floor, the other two seem quite busy.

First, Yong Yong is building his own house.

Yong Yong has always attached great importance to his personal life, so I'm not surprised when he wanted to have a house of his own.

But I didn't expect that he would build the house himself.

Of course, Yong Yong is unaccomplished in architecture.

Not only has he not learned about it, but he doesn't even know about the concept of architecture.

He asked me for help before building the house.

After teaching him the basic structure of a building, he asked me for information about the structures of buildings I knew.

He wasn't asking about ordinary houses or buildings.

He wanted to wonder about the historic buildings on earth. I thought for a moment and introduced the Tower of Babel to him.

It is said that it was built by humans in order to touch the world of God.

In fact, there are many people think that the Tower of Babel is only a rare high-rise altar during the period it was built, but Yong Yong likes the story very much.

So he's building such an edifice now.

I lie on the bench and look up at the sky, but I couldn't see the top of Yong Yong's building.

If we were on Earth, his building would have broken through the troposphere.

Although Yong Yong proudly said that he wanted to build it to the end of the world, but this is a sub-dimensional space, there is neither the sky nor space.

The breadth and height of space can expand infinitely through my mind.

I look forward to Yong Yong reaching the boundary of my conscious world.

Of course, he can't.

But then again, Yong Yong is talented.

It can now be said that he has surpassed Ho-Chi.

The disparity between their capabilities can be clearly distinguished now.

I turn around and find that the stupid guy has been surpassed by his nephew.

Ho-Chi is lying on a bench slightly further away, giggling alone.

He looks like someone playing with social networking software (SNS) on a smartphone.

Not long ago, Ho-Chi said he was bored and wanted to connect the community.

It was cumbersome when Ho-Chi looks at my community right beside me, so I give him my terminal.

So Ho-Chi can view the community, message window, and auction window at any time.

Ho-Chi easily incorporated himself into the community.

He gives valuable advice to other challengers for free. He's probably seen me giving away equipment on a first-come, first-served basis.

People in the community became curious about Ho-Chi because he was much more easy-going than me so they were quickly acquainted.

And that's what happened.

He stares at the community all day.

Anyways, he has a smart-phone addiction now.

I don't know who he's talking to or what topic can be so interesting.

It never occurred to me that my clone would grow in such a different direction.

I eventually failed to overcome my curiosity and approached Ho-Chi.

"What are you looking at? Is It really so interesting?"

Ho-Chi is just smirking and it took him a while to answer me.

"Chatting with Seok Hyeon."

Who is Seok Hyeon?

This is my first time hearing this name.

Looking at the message history, I see them enjoying themselves.

“Who’s this kid?”

Note: South Korea often uses the term “kid” when referring to people of their peers or those younger.*

Ho-Chi briefs me on his friend Seok Hyeon.

“14 years old?”

It’s really a kid.

Well, that’s what it would be like to play with Ho Chi.

Unlike Ho-Chi’s words and deeds, that kid’s mental age is only 14 years.

“What? What’s wrong with being young? Oh? There is no correlation between age and behavior, okay? There are many children who are more talented than adults.”

Ho-Chi defended Seok Hyeon adamantly because he was sulking.

“Yes, yes. Little kids can also be very mature. Like you.”

“Hey! How come I’m a kid?! I have held several memories.”

He is indeed just a kid.

People who become agitated when being called a kid are kids...

Ho Chi moved to a farther bench with a look of impatience.

Looking at him, I sigh.

It feels like I'm raising an immature teenager.

It's been harder to raise Ho-Chi than Yong Yong.

“Hey!”

From a distance away, he heard my mental thoughts so Ho-Chi shouted at me.

Ignoring that shout, I lie on the bench again and look up at Yong Yong's building.

Although it is nothing but a big building, its size is beyond imagination, so it's still a spectacular view.

So perfect to stare blankly.

I feel like I'm sunbathing. While I stare blankly, Ho Chi approaches me.

Thinking about what might have happened, I get up.

“What's up?”

“Lee Yeon Hee sent a message.”

Long-time no see.

A truly long time.

There were times when we exchanged messages several times a day, but recently, the exchanges became near non-existent.

It may be because she no longer needed my help after she began to receive God's help.

It is also for that reason that I intend to abandon Lee Yeon Hee and escape from the tutorial alone.

Since she has reached this level, she should have known.

“She said she reached the 46th floor.”

“Oh.”

I’m surprised.

Stages after the 40th floor are all related to divine power.

The purpose is to instill beliefs in people and attract them to specific religious groups by means of God’s salvation, help, and guidance.

Obviously, it is part of the process to cultivate apostles.

I spent a lot of time from the 41st to the 45th floor.

Because I’m neither good at dealing with divine power nor very clear about what to do.

Without Kiri Kiri’s detailed advice, I would have wasted twice as much time as I did.

But Lee Yeon Hee cleared all five floors at once.

Her clearing speed is unprecedented.

There must be reasons behind that.

Maybe the gods who supported her intervened blatantly to help her clear the stage.

If not, then she has the ability to clear it by herself but has been wasting time in the lower floors.

The last reason could be that those floors are just her strong points.

“What else did she say?”

“She asked you to wait for her. She would come up soon.”

After listening to the message from Ho-Chi, I chuckled unconsciously.

The latter reason is more convincing.

Apparently, she was intentionally wasting time.

We have done the right thing to send Lee Yeon Hee the message that we decided to move on rather than wait for her.

Lee Yeon Hee would never have thought to herself that we would escape the tutorial alone without her.

Or that she would be trapped alone in the tutorial.

In all respects, she is a very positive person.

“She’s optimistic. What are you going to do?”

“Now that she’s so confident, we’ll have to wait for her.”

“Confident? She must be crying and running with mustard.”

Note: 울며 겨자 먹기 is kind of proverb that means you do something you don't want. Literally speaking, to Eat wasabi crying.

Ho-Chi, who had thrown out those words, seems to have said enough and returns to the distant bench again.

Although he passed me the message, I don’t think he wants to be involved at all.

I continue to look up at Yong Yong’s building.

I have no sentiments for this place.

Although it is a pity to abandon what I have built during this period, they can be recreated wherever I want if I spent the time.

But it will be different for Ho-Chi and Yong Yong.

The day we leave is around the corner, but that guy is still working hard to build his own house.

Despite recent clues about ways to destroy the boundaries of the tutorial and escape, this space will never survive whether we succeed or fail.

If possible, it's best to keep the space as it is while we clear the tutorial and escape.

I still look forward to Lee Yeon Hee's performance above all.

In fact, that's the biggest reason why I stay here.

Although Ho-Chi is cynical about Lee Yeon Hee, I'm sure Lee Yeon Hee has confidence in herself.

Because that's how I trained her.

If the situation is bleak, I trained her to hold onto victory rather than lament.

Unlike Ho-Chi and Yong Yong, who grew up following their own wishes, Lee Yeon Hee is my protégé.

I trained Lee Yeon Hee according to my wishes and needs while she grew up in the direction I set for her.

Although she's my only disciple that I've never seen before, I know her very well.

“Oh!”

Ho-Chi suddenly shouted.

I wonder if my telepathy accidentally communicated something that brought him sadness, but nothing comes to mind.

“Oh oh oh!”

Ho-Chi runs to me while he shouts.

Rushing to my bench, Ho-Chi shouts.

“I heard that the tournament is going to be held!”

“I know. Did you know that has been talked about for several years? It’s a large-scale competition on the dimensional scale, the preparation required is extremely long. I haven’t received any notifications from the manager yet, so it’s estimated that it won’t be scheduled until three years from now.”

This Tteokbap bait has been shelved for a long time.

Note: 떡밥 = Tteokbap = Originally used to describe the paste bait used to catch fish, but now is a metaphor to describe something popular and hot like a hot topic, hot issue, or hot information that will catch people’s interest.

Regardless of the future, we won’t stay here for the rest of the year.

“I know that too!”

My heart is in a mess when I hear Ho-Chi shout in anger.

Why does he have to screech so loud?

Is he really going through puberty?

Ho-Chi continued to speak out as if he didn’t hear my thoughts.

“The competition is next month!”

“Ah?”

* * *

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Yes. The manager suddenly notified me about it. We didn't ask for it ourselves. It's managers who told us first. I knew that the tournament would be held soon, but it was totally unexpected that it would be held in the next round (when new members come in).]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: I see. Challengers will be busy then.]

[Park Jung Ah, 90th floor: Now that you know, do you mind giving us a hand?]

[Lee Ho Jae, 60th floor: Yeah, no.]

I sent a message to Park Jung Ah and confirm it again.

It seems that the tournament being held the next round has been finalized.

“Is that because of Lee Yeon Hee and me?”

It's not impossible.

While that idea came to me, Ho-Chi glared at me with disgust.

“...This is a grand event held with the whole dimension. You, you're that aren't you? what's that phrase? Excessively self-conscious?”

I bat the back of Ho-Chi's head.

“No, you pinhead.”

Ignoring Ho-Chi's idiotic conjecture, I sort out my thoughts.

But Ho-Chi doesn't stop his mouth.

“Hey, we’re going to participate too, right?”

Actually, this is Ho-Chi’s first chance to meet someone.

I planned not to attend, but if I did, I’d make this kid cry.

Yong Yong will also be disappointed.

I have to think about it before deciding.

“Let me think about it again.”

“Hey, we have to go, please.”

I ignore Ho-Chi’s words and reach out.

“Now give me the terminal back.”

“What!? I have to talk to Seok Hyeon about what we are going to do during the tournament.”

“And I have to talk to Jung Ah. Hand over the terminal and leave.”

Ho-Chi makes a reluctant expression and goes away without saying any more.

Ho-Chi hates it when he sees me chatting with Jung Ah saying that he had goosebumps.

Following his direction of flight, he’s probably headed to where Yong Yong is building the house.

He seems to be trying to tell Yong Yong about the tournament.

I’ll feel guilty if I don’t let them participate now.

In this case, even if I don’t go, I have to find a way to have them attend.

Chapter 215

Tutorial 49th Floor (1)

[Are you going to challenge the next stage right away?]

Ahbooboo asked.

Ahbooboo has a good understanding of the tutorial's system now.

Not only does he know how the stages work, but he also understands what the waiting room can do.

Although he can't reveal it because he is restricted by the system, he actually knows more than what he lets on.

"I will."

I just cleared the 48th floor, so I had the choice to take a break in the waiting room, but I wanted to leave immediately.

I want to end these boring 40s floors (40-49) and go up to 50s floors (50-59) as soon as possible.

The themes of these 40s floor stages are all related to denominations [1] and faith.

The challengers were forced to play the role of apostles of God to evoke faith in people's hearts.

I felt very uncomfortable because of my personality.

Sometimes it goes beyond discomfort and becomes unpleasant.

It occurred quite often.

Fortunately, Kiri Kiri said that these types of stages will no longer appear after the 49th floor.

I stand up after confirming my armor and luggage.

I use the portal to move to the next stage.

[You have entered the 49th stage.]

I am wrapped in a bright beam and moved to the roof of a high-rise building.

When you are summoned to such an open and high position, you must quickly observe the surrounding situation and create countermeasures.

I look around with haste.

The terrain here is special.

The building's location is surrounded by rugged cliffs.

This place is like an island.

The only difference is that it's not encircled by a river or sea, but isolated by the cliffs.

There is a massive bridge that connects this unusual terrain to the area outside the cliff.

Even looking down from this tall building, the bridge looks quite vast.

A group of monsters stood beyond the bridge.

There are people below the building.

They piled up furniture such as tables and chairs to block the bridge while each of them held a makeshift weapon.

Although this defense took a great deal of effort, I don't think they can stop the dense pack of monsters beyond the bridge.

This situation is easy to understand.

My task must be to protect these people from the monsters coming from across the bridge.

I expand Talaria's Wings and descend to the bridge.

Once the monsters arrive at the barricade, a massacre will take place.

I should position myself in the middle of the bridge so that they can't reach those people.

A message appears along the way to the bridge.

It will be too late to take action after reading the message in this kind of stage.

[The 49th-floor stage begins.]

Description: 13 years ago, the planet called Gaya, encountered an unprecedented threat.

After decades of struggle to secure dominion, the origin monsters finally conquered their own territory.

The origin monsters that occupied territory immediately cast infectors [2].

The epidemic began to attack all the lives around them and turned those lives into parts of themselves.

The infectors quickly occupied the mainland.

Because of the power and speed of the proliferation, the mainland's intelligent lifeforms had completely abandoned resistance.

They gave up their cities and fortresses in order to flee.

The last remaining intelligent lifeforms had fled the infection for the past few years.

Their number had been reduced from hundreds of thousands to tens of thousands to a few thousand and lastly only a few hundred.

In the end, when they finally reached the end of the road, they found a glimmer of hope in an ancient book that was discovered by chance.

The book said that on the edge of the Aba Continent, the largest continent of this planet, there was a shrine that had been lost for hundreds of thousands of years, that was, the Holy Land of the Denomination of Hope.

All the denominations on the mainland had collapsed by that time. After the intelligent lifeforms discovered the clues to this surviving holy land, they set off with one last hope.

After several years of difficult journeys, the intelligent lifeforms repelled the pursuit of the infectors and reached the Holy Land of Hope. By this time, there were little more than forty of them.

After a few months of hiding within the Holy Land, the infectors followed their traces and finally caught up with them.

Fortunately, the Holy Land of hope preserved a great deal of divine power. The intelligent lifeforms resisted the infectors for a period of time using the Holy Land's power.

But now, even the protective power of the Holy Land is becoming exhausted.

Faced with the despair of death and the end, the intelligent beings prayed to gods for new hopes.

In light of the earnest prayers of these forty intelligent lifeforms who were more devout than anyone, the God of Hope decided to send the apostle to redeem them.

The God of Hope summoned the apostle before the protection of the Holy Land completely disappeared.

Yes, the apostle is you.

As an apostle of the God of Hope, please become the hope of the remaining survivors.

Please protect them and eliminate their despair.

[Clear Conditions]

- Protect 40 believers.

- Maintain a 20 or above reliability with the 40 believers.

- Destroy the origin monsters that control this planet.

- ?

It is not necessary to read this long message carefully.

Stages like this have been repeating recently so I could roughly guess it's contents.

I land in the middle of the bridge.

After confirming the situation of believers and monsters on both sides of the bridge, I open the reliability window.

[Reliability: 41]

Unsurprisingly the initial reliability is more than 20.

It is not very high.

Kiri Kiri has described to me that a 40 reliability is similar to the feeling one gets from meeting the inn manager for the first time.

That means it's almost nothing.

Seeing me expanding the colorful Talaria's Wings while descending from the sky only amounted to this level of reliability indicates that the believers are in very bad condition.

Because it means that no matter what happens, they can't get rid of despair.

Due to that, I have to fight glamorously.

At that moment, the sound of broken glass vibrates in the air.

This sound comes from the collapse of the Holy Land's barrier, so the monsters across the bridge began to rush.

Instead of using my usual soul sword, I draw and brandish the holy sword.

[Ho, ho, ho, it's time for this body to work.]

Although his voice was annoying and irritating, I need him for this stage, so I stayed silent.

Instead of wielding the sword, I raised toward the skies.

“Go to work, Ahbooboo.”

[Go to work? That's far too cold.]

Although he's complaining, Ahbooboo plays his role.

White lights fall from the sky as a result of the holy spells, surrounding me and the holy sword.

The clouds which seemed sacred are enveloping the entire area.

The holy magic seemed to grant the user tremendous power on the surface, but in reality, it had no effects.

These holy spells are just a performance in order to look sacred in the eyes of the people.

The holy sword ascends from soft light to an intense light that made it difficult for me to open my eyes.

I had hoped that he would do it in moderation.

Such a blinding light is unwelcoming to all except the God of Light.

Although I really wanted to batter and scold him to reduce the brightness, I know that Ahbooboo will not listen.

I held a sword that is brighter than anything else in the world just to end as soon as possible and rush the monsters.

* * *

[Reliability: 83]

Reliability has risen a lot.

I appeared as an apostle of God and overwhelmingly eradicate the monsters so this was natural.

While I was clearing the 40s stages, the reliability messed with my mind.

No matter how inspiring my words were or how hard I took care of them, the reliability refused to increase.

I tried to treat them kindly, but that led to suspicion, decreasing reliability.

Each person had a different standard so if one person relied on me more, another's would decrease, resulting in unchanged overall reliability.

According to my experiences, there is only one definite way to increase reliability.

Overwhelming power.

People become frightened if the power displayed was mediocre.

Even if it is to protect them, but they do not know when that power will be directed at them, so they become worried.

But if the power that protected them was so overwhelming that it removed all thoughts of fighting against it, people will call it a miracle.

They won't think about what that power is or what kind of purpose is behind it, they will only idolize and worship it.

Even if that power rushes to them.

“Alright, you take care of the rest.”

I say as I throw the holy sword into the air.

Instead of falling to the ground, Ahbooboo starts flying around and asks me.

[What? Me? Even if I am awesome, I'm a little reluctant to deal with so many monsters.]

Ahbooboo said something regrettable.

Indeed, It's impossible for Ahbooboo to deal with monsters that numbered from several million to hundreds of millions.

“Block the bridge. You can do that, can't you?”

No matter the number of monsters, they still have to cross the 'narrow' bridge.

As long as the bridge is protected, the monsters have no other way to invade the Holy Land.

Ahbooboo replies slyly that he gets it.

Therefore, I leave the rest to Ahbooboo.

To be honest, I'm a little annoyed.

Despite the holy sword's queer quirks, Ahbooboo's capabilities are extraordinary.

This remains true even from my standards.

If Ahbooboo draws out his latent abilities to fight, It'll be difficult to tell if I was fighting or Ahbooboo was fighting.

Ahbooboo can strengthen me through the power that he transmits and eradicates the enemy with the power that he instills.

I just need to move my arms and legs at the right time.

As a result, the battle becomes uninteresting and it will inevitably lead to boredom.

Ahbooboo can soar through the air and eliminate the monsters even without me. I watch him for a while and turn around.

I move towards the building where I was summoned and where the people gathered.

* * *

Unsurprisingly, people were shouting "A Miracle! A Miracle!" continuously and kowtowed to me and Ahbooboo behind me.

Many emotions were mixed with tears on their faces.

There were reassurance and joy as well as uneasiness and fear that have not dissipated.

It's all for me.

At first, they were really unsightly and unpleasant, but after a while, I've become indifferent.

When I approached, I find that these people have many different body types and skin colors.

It seems that there is a mix of different races.

It is no wonder that the phrase "intelligent lifeforms" was used instead of "humans" in the message.

In this case, using "people" to describe them may not matter, but the word "human" may cause some resentment.

I don't remember if it was the 44th floor or 45th floor, however, I misused the term "human", as a result, I was discriminated and the reliability fell to the bottom.

In the end, I failed to clear the stage and had to start all over again.

Just because I said something wrong.

That was a chilling stage.

As I approached them, the people at the temple stopped and began to stare at me.

At first, I thought I should give a speech.

Like, what is God or what is justice?

But with my eloquence, it won't work.

So I decide to say just one sentence.

The strange wails of the monsters from behind are echoing around.

The 40 survivors don't say a word and just stared at me.

There are people who stood bowing their backs and those who maintained their kowtow on the ground with only their heads lifted to look at me.

In this case, it would have been convenient if one of them stood up as a representative.

But it seems that there are no such people in this stage.

In order to break the silence, I speak.

“Uh, everyone.”

I am faced with the eagerness of 40 survivors and speak.

“Let's go inside first. The weather is so cold, why are you outside? Go in.”

Chapter 216

Tutorial 49th Floor (2)

After taking them into the building, I had the chance to examine them carefully.

They were in better shape than I expected.

There are no signs of starvation or illnesses.

It was said that they've been hiding in the Holy Land for several months. Have they been recuperating during that period?

At least food has been secured without issues.

The building's structure reminded me of a high ceiling cathedral.

A pedestal adorned with symbolism stood opposite to the entrance, which gave the impression of a divine temple.

People gathered around the pedestal I reached so I can begin my speech.

I wanted to speak in an informal and comfortable manner, but in order to ingrain my might into their minds to give them a sense of security, I stood in this position, not to satisfy my superiority, but for them.

“Uh, everyone.”

But it was hard to speak like a bishop.

A friend from my childhood told me to follow him to the church so he could give me a chocolate pie. If I had followed him to church back then, it would have been helpful for this.

What a pity.

I had no choice but to speak line by line.

“You will now be safe for a while.”

They blankly stared at me.

I'd like to say something melodramatic to arouse their cheers

Really... I hate how my eloquence can't match my ideas.

“Do you guys have enough food?”

The silence was filled with a mix of “yes” and “no, not enough”.

Opinions vary.

It seems necessary to keep abreast of the food situation.

“...Can a representative come out and speak?”

Silence lingered again.

People just turned their heads to look at each other, but no one came out.

I was shocked.

There is usually a leader to lead them in such a dire situation.

Since people have crowd psychology, it's natural to have a decent leader who has a huge impact on the survival rate.

But among the survivors, there wasn't even an operational captain or an elderly advisor, let alone a leader.

Note: The operational captain is a leader of a group who acts personally to achieve goals.

I scrutinized the composition of these people.

Strangely, most of them were women, children, or the elderly.

Those with blue skin have women with strong physiques.

Only that ethnicity contained many unusually short men.

How bizarre.

What was the reason the weak members survived in their respective ethnicity?

Did they instinctively prioritized the protection of the weak for the continuation of the race?

Or was it coincidence?

“Please select a representative. I’ll go out for a while.”

After saying that, I leave the cathedral.

These people were so passive.

I’ve encountered a lot, but this was the first time I had been asked to protect a group of people who were so honest and obedient.

The crisis should have stimulated their survival instinct.

Ordinarily, people would not accept such a crisis so they would have strived to survive to their utmost limits.

Therefore, the chances of meeting a madman who riots for no reason are higher than meeting a quiet and honest man.

These people were a little strange.

If there is a cause, we must identify and resolve it.

As soon as I opened the door and went outside, I spot Ahbooboo soaring about and slaughtering monsters who wanted to cross the bridge.

I reread the goals of stage.

To protect these people.

This is a must.

The next objective is to eradicate the origin monster.

That's the problem.

I was allowed to kill the monster without any support, which showed that its combat capabilities were lacking.

The origin monster wiped out the planet's population not by its own power, but through monsters called infectors, so my prediction is most certain.

But it will be difficult to locate and eliminate a single origin monster on a planet dominated by infectors.

This may take several rounds.

This stage is difficult.

I had to seek out the origin monster in hiding and slay it while protecting the survivors.

Even if Ahbooboo stayed there to guard the bridge, the difficulty remains if these people didn't take their own initiative.

At least they can hope for my return.

If such a lifeless group was locked up in the building, they would commit suicide one by one.

I'm sure they would do that.

I've witnessed this situation several times happening in real time on the 1st floor of Hell Difficulty.

The 1st floor of Hell Difficulty was literally became hell.

Although the government had forbidden people to enter Hell Difficulty, there's always one or two people who enter by accident or by their own foolhardiness.

As the people accumulated, the population of the 1st floor of Hell Difficulty exceeded 30.

This population is the same as a small village.

The Order of Vigilance decided that they could build a society among themselves to continue.

I did too.

But this was not the case.

They had become more and more decadent.

Instead of uniting together to comfort each other, they divided and hated each other.

Then someone committed suicide and left a will.

Since then, like a relay, there would be two or three suicides in each episode.

There are only five people left on the first floor.

I understood the despair they were experiencing.

Because I had experienced it.

Just being isolated from the world and locked up in the waiting room was enough to drive people crazy.

After the waiting room's time limit is reached, the challengers are deported to the stage which was the beginning of another hell.

Even if you sat at the stage's entrance and did nothing, it was simpler said than done.

It's never easy to spend a month alone at the end of a dark corridor.

In a single step, there would be hidden arrows eager for their hearts flying over.

The challengers on the 1st floor felt death hidden within the darkness as they looked ahead from the stage entrance.

I still remember the moment when I first returned to the waiting room after an arrow shot me, then immediately challenging the trap a second time.

I really felt like I was going to die.

Overcoming that fear lead me to become who I am now.

The God of Adventure first became interested in me during that time.

Perhaps the fear they faced is greater than mine.

The amount of fear accumulated is correlated to the amount of time the challengers lamented and stayed on the 1st floor.

After a month, they will be locked in the waiting room again.

On a positive note, they get to see each other's faces, but only staring at each other for 3 days while nibbling on dried meat would make them question their survival.

Living only on dried meat and water each day would negatively impact their morale.

Although the waiting room's restorative abilities can heal the body, bland taste in such a situation can have a great impact on their lives.

I had to live on dried meat and water until Idy cooked for me on the 12th floor creating a new experience.

Ultimately, there's no hope for a better situation.

The Order of Vigilance would only be able to send support if they go up to the 2nd floor.

Because the auction window is available only after the 1st floor is cleared.

There's no escape from the mire of despair.

Suicide is the only hope for those trapped there.

Their deaths would be like the "GAME OVER" screen from video games, returning to the main interface after losing.

They have the delusion that death will free them from hell.

Or they believe that death is a better alternative than being trapped in hell.

It's such a pity.

Their whole situation is pitiful.

However, Lee Hyung Jin, who managed them and had a close relationship to them, was different.

Since the beginning of the suicides, Lee Hyung Jin has tried his best to stop them, but now he is also suffering from lethargy and depression.

Although he did not tell me directly, I clearly understood his self-disgust in our conversations.

Lee Hyung Jin is isolated in Hell Difficulty like those planning to commit suicide.

But unlike the challengers on the 1st floor, he is trying to move forward like me even if it's only bit by bit.

Fortunately, Lee Hyung Jin is on the 13th floor.

He said that since his abilities encountered a bottleneck and he planned to give up clearing for some time.

He wants to challenge the 13th floor repeatedly until he can achieve meaningful growth.

The monks on the 13th floor are friendly and generously offer valuable advice to the challenger.

I hope that the monks can offer some meaningful guidance to Lee Hyung Jin.

Because I don't think I can do that.

As soon as I appeared, I saw holy sword soaring like a fly.

Although it looks frivolous, a large number of infectors are slaughtered each time he flies over and uses magic.

[How's it going?]

After spotting me, Ahbooboo flew over and asked.

"It's a mess. Get some rest. I'll take over."

[Ok. Perfect timing because my magic was running out.]

I turn my head to the retreating figure of Ahbooboo.

There's another thing Ahbooboo needs to do.

"Ahbooboo, sorry, you need to set up a barrier."

[Barrier? What are you doing?]

"An instant massacre."

After a moment of silence, Ahbooboo grumbles.

[Do you need to do that? I said my magic is low.]

"Yeah, no."

After hearing me, Ahbooboo muttered something I didn't understand, perhaps some ancient swear words, and then responds with a sigh.

[Please go as far as you can before you release it.]

Wait, why does he sound like he's letting me go to take a shit in the woods?

Now that I think about it, he isn't wrong, so I go anyways.

After getting rid of Ahbooboo, who has been muttering, I walk towards the other side of the bridge.

It wasn't long before I was face to face with the infectors that were rushing towards the building.

Each Infector had different appearances.

Some looked like wildlife, some looked like monsters, and others looked like people.

They are literally just monsters as a result of mutations after being infected.

They are no different from zombies in movies.

I raise my hands to them and draw a line from left to right in the air.

“Mind slash.”

Infectors are cut in half by the blade of the invisible aura.

I felt a strange sense of catharsis after the row of infectors split in half and rain blood.

[What was the point of drawing a line in the air?]

Seregia asks.

“It’s cool.”

When people see it, they’ll think the infectors were bisected by my hand gestures.

If I must explain it, then that’s why.

The rest of the infectors will still rush towards me without hesitation regardless of their allies’ death.

Their foolish judgment is ironically their advantage.

Faced with pawns who believe that they can win by blindly rushing forward with numbers, large-scale magic is the solution.

“Fire wall.”

Flames flares up from the ground.

The rushing infectors are burnt beyond recognition.

The infectors are temporarily halted so I take this opportunity to pull out the soul sword and shoot it forward.

After flying hundreds of meters, Seregia hit the ground and asks me.

[Start?]

“Yes, release it.”

As soon as I said that, the soul sealed in the soul sword was released into the world.

These were souls gathered through my soul collecting skill.

Although I can't control them, Seregia can since she is assimilated with soul sword.

The souls running out of soul sword attached themselves to the infectors.

I don't know the infectors' numbers, but I'm sure it won't exceed the number of souls sealed in soul sword.

I'm certain.

Because the number of infectors gathered here does not exceed one billion.

After confirming that the souls are firmly attached to the infectors, I activate my skill.

[Soul Steal]

This is the power skill that the God of Death gave me.

A skill I often used after I obtained it on the 6th floor.

It weakens the enemy and restores my strength upon their demise.

It can also cause fatal damage to the enemies' mental form or soul.

The souls attached to the infectors are no exception.

The souls will writhe in pain and in turn impact the infectors.

Due to the torturous pain, the souls are forced to cling to themselves.

In brief, it's like attaching the scotch tape to the soul and tearing it off.

I don't know what the principles are.

I learned this technique through the clues from the God of Death and Kiri Kiri's advice during training, so I knew that it was feasible. But that's all I knew.

It will take a while to fully understand the technique and make good use of it.

All of these infectors fell to the ground and began to twist and convulse. Only then did the view became wider.

I kicked a couple of infectors that were moaning and struggling.

They did not respond to external shocks.

To avoid troubling Ahbooboo, who is preparing the barrier.

I retrieved the soul sword and spread Talaria's Wings to fly into the sky.

I start my flight in order to find a suitable place to slaughter them all at once.

Chapter 217

Tutorial 49th Floor (3)

“Zit Pop.”

Note: Sibam boom as been changed to Zit Pop.*

Unlike my chant, the roar of the explosion was earthshaking.

Instead of enjoying the explosion, I move to escape from the blast radius.

I had released my technique while floating high in the sky.

Although the explosion point was set to be as far as possible, distance meant nothing in the face of this technique.

I felt the intense heat and impact behind me.

Even with the endurance, I cultivated for so long and the flight speed of Talaria’s Wings, I still couldn’t completely negate the explosion’s impact.

I would have been reluctant to use the technique if not for Talaria’s Wing’s support because it has developed to such an extent.

Actually, should I control the explosive force?

But I’m unwilling to do that because the skill would lose its charm if the destructiveness decreased.

[The God of Light is excited!]

Of course, he is.

His reaction has always been consistent.

I like consistency.

[The God of Harvest is satisfied.]

This God became interested in this skill not long ago.

The God of Harvest.

I may know what this God likes.

The God of Harvest was mentioned in the message when the Demon King was summoned on the 26th floor, so I learned a little about this God.

According to Kiri Kiri, the God of Harvest is no different from the well-known God of Death.

His most important characteristic is harvesting as many lives as possible in the simplest and easiest way.

I knew why the God of Harvest felt satisfied after seeing my technique.

Because every now and then, I would see a message saying that “the God of Harvest is looking forward to it”.

Anyways, I’m escaping desperately to avoid being affected by the explosion.

I couldn’t afford to look back and fly perilously towards the Holy Land.

* * *

“Sigh, I almost breathed it in.”

It took a lot of effort to get into the barrier that Ahbooboo set up.

I'm panting for breath.

If I took a breath carelessly, things would've become troublesome.

"Ahbooboo."

[Ah, don't talk to me. I'm busy.]

Ahbooboo spoke to me bluntly while he maintained the barrier.

"I need to be cleansed."

Ahbooboo whined to express his feelings.

Despite his murmuring, he cleansed my body with holy spells.

Although not completely removed, the poison stained on clothes and skin were cleaned.

Looking back, an overwhelming scene unfolds before my eyes.

Outside of the wind barrier that Ahbooboo constructed, thick dark blue smoke fills the air.

After I increased the explosive force of Zit Pop to its maximum, I added poison ki to the aura of the explosion's source.

So after the explosion, the poison smoke began to spread, causing extensive secondary damage.

The scene became more appealing to me than the lethality of the smog.

The days when I dodged flying arrows are still vivid, but now I can trigger a supernatural disaster.

At this point, I'm beyond even those considered to be superhuman.

This moment made me realize that I've never stopped growing.

“Not bad.”

[Not bad!? Are you serious!? Is that what you're talking about!? That's a disaster! Warrior, would you like to maintain the barrier!?]

“I don't know how to use a barrier.”

Spells like barriers and seals are some of the most difficult spells even among the most advanced magics.

If you want to use this kind of magic, you have to transcend human magicians or borrow the help of Gods.

I once told Kiri Kiri that I wanted to learn sealing magic.

I didn't even know Wind Arrow at that time, but in retrospect, I'm glad Kiri Kiri didn't laugh at me.

[Ah... really, that skill wasn't intended to be used in this way.]

Ahbooboo grumbled.

Zit Pop was developed after I adapted Ahbooboo's Spatial Rift Mind Slash to my own tastes.

It is now impossible to see Zit Pop as a prototype born from Spatial Rift Mind Slash.

[I don't know where the monster that Warrior is going to destroy is, but this continent is doomed.]

“Probably not the whole continent. I'm not sure, but it's said that this is the largest continent on the planet.”

No matter how widespread the explosion was, no matter how far the smog spread, it wouldn't encompass the entire continent.

It would be impossible to measure it by the standards of Eurasia, the largest continent on Earth.

It may not even fill all of China.

[No, it's truly done for.]

Since he's so convinced, I ask Ahbooboo to explain it to me.

[Where do you think the smoke will go? The planet's climate has been destroyed. If it rains, it will be poisonous, rivers, lakes and seas will be contaminated. There's nowhere to hide. The smoke can melt steel as long as there's enough.]

Is that so?

I didn't mean to destroy the ecosystem.

[It's not over yet. If you want the smog to disappear, you have to wait for time to slowly dilute it. And the most ridiculous thing, isn't that poison contagious? The poison that can cause instant death is contagious. As the poison slowly dilutes, infectious diseases will sweep across the planet. Didn't you confirm that it was contagious last time through a corpse?]

[As I said, It's a disaster. Warrior, you've just destroyed a planet.]

I felt thorns in Ahbooboo's words.

It's not like grumbling that I've made him suffer helps.

Did he resent me for destroying the ecosystem?

I had no idea.

Regardless, the planet is doomed.

There are 40 survivors.

All the other creatures on this land has been infected, joining the mass of infectors released by the origin monster.

It may not be limited to land creatures, the same could be true for underwater life forms.

In my opinion, it is impossible to go outside until all the poisonous smoke has gone away.

No matter how powerful my resistance is, it's not a wise choice to break through the smoke blocking my view.

It looks like we'll have to wait for the rain or wind to disperse the poisonous smog before we go out.

The situation is not bad.

Anyway, the initial plan was to get rid of the infectors, create a relatively safer environment, and then rectify the survivors.

Then we will find the origin monster.

The infectors around here should have been wiped out, so I can embark on the journey without any concern.

After sorting out thoughts, I move forward again.

Then there is Ahbooboo's voice behind me.

[Warrior, where are you going?]

"I'm going to see the building inside."

[...What about me? What should I do?]

The answer is obvious.

"You have to stay there and maintain the barrier."

This is of course.

If Ahbooboo removed the barrier, the poisonous smoke would pour into the Holy Land.

I don't know what will happen to me, but all survivors would die.

[Who knows when the smoke will disappear!?!]

"It's hard to say, I don't know, too. Maybe 3 days?"

Hearing what I said, Ahbooboo was gasping for breath. I ignored him and held up the door handle.

[Warrior! Warrior? You'll be out in a moment, won't you? Right? Will you stay in for a few days? Warrior?]

[Warrior? You'll come out later, won't you? Warrior? Warrior... hey, you!]

Listening to Ahbooboo's eager plea, I thought of the past.

When I first met Ahbooboo on the 26th floor, he had been begging me not to leave him alone, and eventually even said vulgar language to me.

Whether in the past or the present, Ahbooboo hates being left alone.

Looking at Ahbooboo's reaction as always, I feel a little better.

It's fun to tease him.

As soon as I enter the building, I slam the door shut.

I laugh again at the thought of Ahbooboo, who starts swearing after seeing me do so.

Going into the building with a happy heart, I was stunned on the spot as I turn my head.

An unexpected scene awaits me inside the god temple.

I ask hurriedly when I see people standing on chairs with ropes hanging from the ceiling around their necks.

“What are you doing?”

When people see me, they begin to weep and salute, which makes me nervous.

After hearing what they said, I realize that they thought I was dead after they saw the abnormal phenomena outside.

Because no one can survive in such a big explosion.

I don't know why the explosion happened, but now that I, the apostle who has been summoned, have disappeared, there was no hope for them. That's what they think.

Before the aftermath of the explosion disappear, the infectors come together and decide to commit suicide.

I opened the door and came in before they committed suicide.

Hearing what they said, I sighed unconsciously.

Although sighing may not look good in front of them, I can't help it.

“Fortunately, I am alive.”

I saw a boy nodding his head after listening to my words.

The boy is the representative chosen by the survivors.

I ask them why they choose the boy as a representative when there are still older people. They reply.

Because he is a nobleman.

The world is going to perish. What's the point of the class system? At this time, they even chose this little guy as a representative based on his noble origin.

I shouldn't have expected anything from the survivors.

With regret, I take the boy to walk around in the Holy Land.

The boy introduced the situation of the survivors according to my request.

Who survived and why.

Nothing special.

Then I asked about food.

"We can get food from the center of the Holy Land."

We walk towards the center of the Holy Land under the guidance of the boy.

There is a beautiful courtyard behind the building in which the temple is located, with a spacious space in the middle of the courtyard.

"You mean the food can be summoned here?"

"Yes. Thanks to the mercy of the God of Hope."

"How much is it?"

"...Forty people eat only one meal a day. "

When I asked about food before, opinions were divided.

Some said that food is enough, others said that it is not enough.

If one meal a day, it's not enough.

“Because some people think they’re lucky enough to have a meal.”

Yeah, yeah, it’s possible they would think so.

No, it’s impossible.

I come here as an apostle of God and a savior.

If I ask them, they should have a higher ideal than “survival”.

If I were in the same situation with them, I would reply that the food was enough to sustain me.

I’m not sure I would say that.

From the boy, I can probably guess how weak these survivors are and how many times they have been betrayed by the people they depend on.

“Have any apostles been summoned before?”

I have seen the sentences on the message that other denominations have died out.

Those denominations may have summoned apostles before they collapsed.

“After the monster appeared, many people were summoned by the denomination and the kingdom. But not apostles, there are saintess and warriors.”

Then they all died.

My reliability was so low from the beginning because of them.

If this kind of stage comes up again, there’s one more thing I need to pay attention to.

A variable, the predecessors summoned before, may have damaged the summoner's reputation.

“Don't worry. I...”

I wanted to say I would protect you, but I stopped in the middle.

I'm just a person who disappears after the clearance.

I don't want to tell such a lie anymore.

“I will kill all the monsters.”

“But monsters will keep appearing. Master Apostle, no matter how strong you are, it's useless.”

The boy adds quickly.

“Please keep watch over us all the time. This is relatively safe for you.”

The boy's trembling voice is full of earnestness.

This is the safest way from the standpoint of survivors.

The young man trembled so hard that he firmly said what he wanted to say. I think it's a correct decision for survivors to choose him as their representative.

“No problem. As long as the root cause – the big monster, is killed, other monsters will never appear again.”

I said while touching the boy's head gently. But the teenager did not feel at ease, his eyes were full of deep uneasiness.

[The origin monster has been destroyed.]

[Stage mission updates.]

“Look, the origin monster is already... dead?”

“Yes?”

“Yes.”

Chapter 218

Tutorial 49th Floor (4)

[Stage mission updated.]

-You have achieved incredible results in a small time frame.

You've eliminated a considerable amount of infectors spread across the planet.

As if you were unsatisfied, you've also eliminated the origin monster that started to take root on the planet.

This legendary feat will be passed down for thousands of years.

As the Apostle of Hope, you are the warrior who saved the planet from its catastrophe, but there is one last task you must accomplish for the survivors.

Although the origin monster has been eliminated, there are still many monsters roaming the land on the planet.

Help the remaining intellectual lives rebuild their homes on this ruined land.

[Clear condition]

– Maintain a reliability of 40 or above 20.

– Protect the survivors until they have laid a solid foundation for their new homes.

Things have just gone south.

As I scratch my head, I notice a boy staring at me in a panic.

“Hey... what’s going on?”

“No, nothing.”

Yes. Damn it.

As Ahbooboo said, the planet’s ecosystem is on the verge of extinction.

Due to the contamination caused by the poison that I mixed with Zit Pop.

Having to build new homes in this situation was unexpected.

And I have to protect them.

That’s ridiculously difficult.

It would take at least a few days for the poison to dissipate.

It’s uncertain how many months or years for it to be completely diluted if the gas has spread to the entire planet.

Even if it’s diluted, Ahbooboo said that it is capable of causing an epidemic plague.

It will take a long time to dilute the gas to a harmless degree.

Putting aside whether it’s even possible to dilute it to a harmless degree.

The survivors need me to protect them until they build the new homes instead of collecting supplies or food, so it seems that they don’t need my assistance to build homes.

Survivors should be knowledgeable and skilled enough to build new homes, so protecting the survivors from leftover infectors who would’ve attacked them is the theme of the stage.

As the Apostle of Hope, I would earn additional points if I can lead them to become faithful believers.

Therefore, the stage's focus is to lead the unusually incompetent survivors to start their new life on their own initiative.

This is really troublesome.

There seems to be no solutions.

I can't wait to death for the planet to be cleansed.

[The God of Nature looks at someone and gloats.]

Ugh, the annoying person, he really is.

That god most fervent every time I use Zit Pop.

I don't know if it's because nature was destroyed or because I had attacked Spirit King.

Probably both.

"Go in."

"Ah? Ah yes, okay."

I pondered as I saw the boy go back inside the building.

The only option is to purposely fail and try again.

I collect my thoughts as I walk through the Holy Land.

After planning my next challenge, I move to the bridge to reclaim Ahbooboo.

[Warrior! I knew you would eventually come out. Huhuhu, were you bored without me Warrior?]

“Bored”, what bullshit.

I was much better alone.

“Ahbooboo.”

[Yes, warrior.]

“Things got messy. We’ll have to fail this time.”

[Oh, yeah. Um... shall I undo the barrier?]

I nod to Ahbooboo’s words.

Ahbooboo immediately releases his barrier.

The transparent holy wall guarding us from the outside air disappears.

Soon the poisonous fog will roll into the Holy Land.

As a result, the survivors will instantly perish, failing the stage mission.

Although it’s a pity to overturn the game when we nearly reach the end, I can’t progress with things this messy.

[Uh?]

“Huh?”

As I watch the smoke pour into the Holy Land, a new curtain of the divine power surrounded the Holy Land.

I thought Ahbooboo might have reapplied the barrier, but seeing his flustered state rendered that guess invalid.

[The God of Hope intervenes in his Holy Land.]

[Clear condition has been met.]

[The God of Nature is panicked.]

With the sudden news, my body was forcibly moved.

I was moved into darkness.

I'm used to it because I've experienced it several times.

This means I was moved to a God Temple.

I try to scan my surroundings.

The darkness here is different from the nihility I experienced at the temple of the God of Slow.

It's only darkness without light.

Thanks to my night vision, I can still dimly see my hands.

There is nothing around me.

Only the floor.

This kind of temple may be common.

This is the best god temple I've visited since stage 40.

Because it's just dark and empty.

No, it's not empty.

I feel another existence.

It's very weak, like a fruit fly flying alone in the dark.

[Fruit fly? Are you talking about me?]

“Are you the God of Hope?”

[Yes.]

My metaphor may have been too offensive causing a deduction of points.

[Don't worry. I'm in a good mood thanks to you.]

“Do you like fruit flies?”

[No... That's not the reason.]

I can hear a panic in God's voice.

So I first apologise.

But I think he might really like fruit flies.

The Gods I've met before all exude a strong presence.

But now the sense of existence of the God of Hope is so low that it reminds me of flying insects.

[Of course. If gives people a strong and huge feeling, it can not be called hope.]

“I see.”

[Do you truly understand?]

Actually, I don't.

I just wanted to keep the conversation going.

“I want to ask you something.”

[Oh, my ideas and actions are consistent. What is it? Tell me.]

“I want to know how stage was cleared.”

The God of Hope laughed at my question.

Laughter sounds light, as if it was tickling around my ear.

When the laughter stops, the God of Hope asks.

[It's all over, is it necessary to know?]

“I want to know.”

[I set up a barrier to protect the Holy Land and subordinated the survivors. The result is the same as if you've protected them while they built their homes, therefore satisfying the clear condition.]

Although the God of Hope answered me, it doesn't resolve the fundamental question.

I had intended to ask again, but the God of Hope interrupts me.

[Stop. Don't ask again. If you want to ask more questions, you'll have to pay contribution points.]

As soon as the God of Hope says this, a series of messages appear before me.

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty 49th Floor cleared.]

[All abnormal phenomena and injuries are recovered.]

[Awarded 9000 points as a clear reward.]

[Awarded 9000 points for the first clear reward.]

[There are Gods who have good impressions of you, as additional 1000 points are awarded.]

[The God of Hope is watching you.]

[The God of Hope wishes to pay additional rewards. Do you accept?]

I ignore the clear messages and focus on the God of Hope.

[Ok, what do you want to know?]

“I want to know why and how you saved those people.”

[Why? Do you even need to consider the reason? Someone wanted to remove the barrier and kill the believers in my Holy Land, so I saved them.]

That reason is not enough.

“I don’t think so. You have no reason to care about the life or death of your believers.”

The God of Hope’s doctrine pursues hope.

Whether the believers face setbacks or salvation at the end of their hope has nothing to do with hope itself.

Although he may be reluctant to have fewer believers, I didn’t expect him to interfere with the stage personally.

What’s more, people in the tutorial can’t be regarded as real believers.

[Well, you understand Gods quite well. I saved the children just because I liked the situation.]

The God of Hope reveals his thoughts.

[In such a short time, you brought them hope and despair over and over again. Your presence alone was hope for them, but at the same time, your disappearance has become despair. The power you possess symbolized their hope to survive so they become nervous when you leave.]

The God doesn't stop explaining.

The reason is longer than I thought.

[They can only live on my mercy in a world polluted by your poisonous fog. They will never return to their hometown and will be trapped in the Holy Land forever. Even in such a dire situation, they will not lose hope for the future. It will eventually pass and their safety in the Holy Land is guaranteed. That's what I like. You brought them new despair when they were ready to start anew. Because of that, they will never lose hope.]

The story should have a happy ending, but a poisoned world becomes a variable.

So it brings people new despair, but at the same time, it gives rise to hope.

[Although it's just a world trapped in the tutorial, I like the ending of the story very much and want to give it a clean finish. In fact, I don't even want those children to escape the despair and start a new life.]

“So you want people to despair forever.”

[Of course. Hope cannot be established without despair. Those who free themselves of despair will praise the power that saved them, but no one will praise hope.]

I knew that the God of Hope was not interested in salvation, but I had no idea that he would so actively push his believers into despair.

The God of Hope, who was supposed to be more righteous, now seems nefarious.

[Evil, are you still distinguishing between good from evil? Why don't you put such a troublesome and useless standard on yourself first?]

I don't really want to.

As the God of Hope said, the standard is troublesome and useless.

“Now can you tell me the method you used?”

Regardless of how the God of Hope wanted the stage to end, this is blatantly an act of interference.

I have never heard that a God can end a stage without a vote.

[It's my holy land. That kind of decision is possible.]

“Can you explain it in detail?”

[That's fine, but it could cost contribution points.]

“Fine.”

The God of Hope is silent for a while.

Are you calculating contribution points and information prices?

[What do you think is the greatest characteristic of the Holy Land?]

“I have no idea.”

[...Can you at least try to think about it?]

It has to be answered by the God of Hope regardless.

I don't have to rack my brain for an answer.

[A Holy Land is the place where God lives and where no other God can interfere with it through divine power.]

I have two questions.

Ahbooboo had set up a barrier with the power of the God of the Sky.

[That sword set up the barrier just outside the influence of my Holy Land, which is smart.]

One question is why has a meaningful place like the Holy Land appeared in the tutorial.

Next, I ask the God of Hope if it was really okay to put the Holy Land in the tutorial.

The God of Hope gives me the answer immediately.

[It's not a real Holy Land, but it's not entirely fake either. To put it simply, it's like having a second home change for the public to use as a villa. Since I am nominally the owner of the building, I can exercise the owner's right to interfere.]

I feel that this statement is controversial.

[Don't ask too much about it. You won't get an answer even if you spend all your contribution points.]

The God of Hope ends the topic with this sentence.

It was a poor explanation for what would've consumed all my contribution points.

I wondered if there is anything more to ask.

No.

I'm about to let him send me away, but the God of Hope asks.

[You still have some contribution points left. Do you have any questions left to ask?]

The God of Hope has been asking me questions in turn, inducing me to answer them, or answering in a very general way, in order to reduce the consumption of my contribution points.

I don't know why.

I wonder if there is anything else I want to ask the God of Hope.

“Yeah, no. I’m going to leave.”

[Really?]

The God of Hope asks again.

At this point, there was nothing left to ask so I think the God of Hope wants to tell me something.

[You’re right. I have something to tell you.]

The God of Hope laughs, tickling me.

Although the voice is still very light, it focused the nerves in my ears.

[Don’t you want to ask me about that?]

“Are you talking about?”

[About your plan.]

Chapter 219

The Tutorial 49th Floor (5)

[Ask me about your plan.]

I take a long and gentle breath.

I don't want to be perturbed.

Even if the God has been reading my mind.

I didn't expect the God of Hope to know about the conversation I had with the God of Slow in her temple.

I thought that God could only read my superficial thoughts at best and would not know what occurred at other temples.

I finally understand why the God of Slow didn't want to answer my questions.

The God of Hope's laughter tickles my ears again.

He gave a soft smile after his chuckle.

The gentle and ambiguous murmur draws all my attention away.

“What do you mean?”

[You didn't want me to ask me about your plans? My apologies.]

“You're sad?”

[Yes, I am. So why don't you ask me about your plan?]

Pitiful.

No God would be sad for such a thing.

[Tell me.]

There are two reasons.

First of all, there is no need to obtain the answer from other Gods if I've already gotten it from one God.

And the second one.

"I don't think you will like my plan."

[Why do you think so?]

"The hope you understand is stronger than anything else in the world. Therefore you'd actually like the System's constraints and wouldn't be bothered by it."

I've been able to distinguish the Gods to some extent with my recent experiences.

Laughter echoes in my ears again.

[It's rude to say so. I am hope.]

I disagree.

That's just a personal interpretation of it by the God in front of me.

[Your thoughts are unimportant, ignorant, and foolish, human.]

"No, the only thing that matters are my thoughts. Just as you judge hope by what you believe."

The laughter around my ears stops.

Even the sound I didn't recognize disappears, what remains is a silent world that spread endlessly.

[I have something to tell you.]

"I've heard all I wanted to hear. Now I wish to proceed to the next stage. Please send me away."

A portal appears by my feet as soon as I finish my words.

I didn't expect the portal to appear by my will regardless if the God permitted it.

I hurry to the portal and to move onwards, but the God of Hope murmurs.

[Are you going to run away?]

"....."

I keep silent by the portal for a while.

The laughter of the God of Hope, which had disappeared, echoes again.

[Interesting. But it is inevitable. Your judgemental abilities are too bizarre to be human.]

"Tell me."

[Now you dare to even command a God.]

The God of Hope's presence began changing.

His presence that had felt like a small, frail insect in an open space became overwhelming and oppressive.

I can't stop the force from pressuring my body.

I dare not even think about it.

Because I am still in this space.

Now I am the fruit fly standing before a God.

[Yes, I wanted to treat you like a disposable toy just as you worried. When the time is right, I will drop a fishing line for you who continues to swim deeper and deeper into despair. But it seems that you won't bite my hook even if you died. It's incredible to be in despair and refuse the hope. This helped me understand you better than any other God.]

The God of Hope is sending out ferocious power.

The voice of the buzzing little insect has been replaced by that of a giant monster with tusks exposed roaring around my ears.

[How does it feel to be oppressed by my power? Are you not happy? Aren't you excited about the height of the wall you are going to climb?]

The roaring God of Hope continues.

[Of course, I know about your ambitions. All the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple know of it. I only ask you one question. Is this goal truly for that Lizardman? Be honest, perhaps it's just for your self-satisfaction. If you really want to save that lizardman, it is not too late to become an apostle of the God of Slow. You should accumulate enough contribution points to trade with the Hundred Gods Temple. It'll only take 300 years.]

Hearing what the God of Hope said, I understand his intentions now.

“...So this is what you wanted to tell me.”

[Yes. You are accustomed to fighting in despair, so I'm going to give you a little hope. There is nothing more harmful to a deep-sea fish than light.]

The God's goal is clear.

It doesn't matter if I'm unpersuaded right now.

What the God wants is to leave a scar in my heart.

When the day where I tire and give up comes, this scar will whisper to me and tempt me to take a shortcut more comfortable than the current one.

[I used to think so too before. But now that I see you, you won't waver so easily. The God of Slow spoke of your essence, a moth that wants to be a fire. For you, despair is not the darkness, but the light.]

The God's vicious presence becomes as warm as the sun.

Then the God of Hope whispers with heat that would've melted my body.

[I'll tell you what the God of Slow didn't mention.]

[As you thought, the poor souls who are locked in the system are not only goblins and lizardmen, but also Gods.]

[There is certainly a God among us who wants to be released from that bondage. You should also know who that is.]

[You don't have to feel anxious, go ahead. The most powerful God of the Hundred Gods Temples will support you.]

* * *

I pondered about it for a while.

"I don't understand."

[What?]

"I don't understand why you told me this."

[Are you curious?]

“Yes.”

The God of Hope's presence returned to that equal to an insect. Then he chuckles again as if it's very interesting.

[In that case, you'd want to grasp the essence of it through a phenomenon. It's a great method because you tend to focus on results. Very well, I'll tell you. Since your curiosity hasn't been aroused, your contribution points were not used.]

[You know, the number of Gods who are interested in you are decreasing. We've determined that your core essence is struggle. We know that you've set an unrealistic, dangerous, and difficult goal for yourself with no intentions of giving in. That's why they abandoned you.]

Because they think I'm just a moth that will burn down.

The God of Hope adds.

[Your analysis isn't wrong. In fact, you also know that your goal is impossible to achieve, right? That's why you would make it your objective. If it was a goal you can achieve in a few years, you wouldn't have targeted it in the first place because life will become meaningless after it is achieved. This means that life before achieving that goal is also meaningless.]

[The Gods think your goal is as absurd as your idea. The truth is, a mortal man who is fated for death will never accomplish such a task. But the problem is...]

[You've been trying to carry out that impossible goal the whole time.]

[I know humans very well. I've seen how fragile they are and what they've craved for. So I know how many obstacles you have to overcome and the height of the mountains you have to climb in the future.]

[The gods don't value you greatly because there are other Hell Difficulty challengers in other dimensions. Even the God who supports you doesn't think you'll achieve your goals. In my eyes, you are very likely to fail, but I think about you more sincerely. Although the hope is slim, there is still a possibility for you.]

After a long explanation, the God of Hope announces in a low voice.

[Now go.]

The next moment, my body is moved from the Temple of Hope to Kirikiri's field.

Before I could adjust to the sudden light, Kirikiri came running and screaming.

“Houjae!”

* * *

Kirikiri is especially annoying today so I buy her a cake to stop her pestering me and send her away to sort out my thoughts.

I'm not yet certain of what the God of Hope truly desires.

But I still need to organize the information he gave me.

First, the God of Hope revealed that there are several Gods who are disgusted with the system's control and sincerely support me.

From his performance, he hopes I can optimistically accept the Gods' assistance.

Optimism will be a stumbling block to my future obstacles.

I look at Kirikiri.

She is eating cake while staring at me.

I can't tell whether the cake is being eaten from the mouth or the nose.

The dialogue with the God of Hope made it clear that the Gods were also restrained by the system.

Kirikiri's attention is no longer on the cake, she stares at me.

Most of the Gods think that I will one day renounce my goal or finally compromise with reality.

But there are also Gods who continue responding to and support my actions.

As the God of Hope said, they also want to be freed from the system's constraints.

They must hope that I can create some variables in their favor.

"Right?"

Kirikiri giggles, then picks up the plate of cake as if nothing had happened.

The next one is information about the Holy Land.

But I don't need to ask Kirikiri about it right now nor is it available or useful at the moment.

I just recall what the God of Hope had mentioned.

Next, I speculate how the Gods read my mind.

First of all, the God of Hope knows about the conversation between the God of Slow and me.

"That's because Houjae is not an apostle of a God. As a challenger without any affiliations, your actions can be observed by all the gods in the Hundred God Temples."

“Yes, I know that. I just think it’s a little strange for him to be able to observe what happened in other temples.”

“Gods don’t observe challengers by viewing the spaces in the tutorial. They observe by sharing challengers’ views and ideas through challengers’ point of view.

There was an error in my speculation.

I thought the Gods watched the challengers with something akin to CCTV, but in reality, their observation method is actually closer to peeping at the challengers’ thoughts through the first-person point of view.

There is one last clue left.

I know Gods can read my mind.

Because they will feel lost, happy, and sometimes angry because of my ideas.

And what they can read is limited to the surface of my deepest thoughts.

But I had misunderstood the extent that they could read.

Through many conversations with Gods, I realize that what they can read is just the surface content of my mind.

The reason for my illusion is Kirikiri.

I always regarded her as the standard for these Gods, which led me astray.

Compared to the Gods, Kirikiri can read my deepest thoughts.

The difference is obvious.

“Hehe.”

“This is not a compliment.”

It is not yet known whether she is just a manager or something else.

Anyway, even if I wanted to ask, I can't pay the information fee.

“Yes!”

Regardless, I am sure now.

There is no way for these Gods to accurately read the thoughts that I deliberately hide.

I know that the goal I am challenging is an endless abyss.

But I'm no lunatic who dedicates themselves to meaningless challenges.

I started the challenge in order to achieve my goal.

Chapter 220

The Tournament (20)

“Anything else you want to ask?”

After listening to the information about the 50th floor, Kirikiri asks.

“Anything else?”

“Yes.”

I think it over.

What should I ask Kirikiri?

I’ve been forced to inquire lots recently so it’s become hard for me to come up with the right questions.

“Relax. I’m not forcing you.”

Kirikiri seems a little disappointed, so I ask.

“Is it time to replace my equipment?”

The holy sword and soul sword do not need to be upgraded.

Their performance is good enough, but most importantly, the difficulty of the stages can’t keep up with my strength.

So there is no need to find more powerful weapons.

However, I will change my armor pieces periodically.

There’s a fine line between actively promoting risk for growth and completely ignoring safety.

I ask Kirikiri if it's time to replace my armor, but she shakes her head.

“No.”

“Has my potion stock dried up? Let me see.”

I open my inventory and check the remaining consumable items.

The stock of potions are still sufficient.

There haven't been many opportunities to drink a potion lately, so naturally, there are more left.

“Tissues... plenty. Ketchup. Mayonnaise. Ah, there's no mayonnaise.”

I met some people and received their hospitality at a stage after the 40th floor.

Naturally, I ate the food they provided.

Some of the foods were tasty and some were not.

I would secretly add some seasoning or sauce if the food wasn't tasty.

“No, not that.....”

Kirikiri shakes her head while looking despondent, so I ask.

“Then, what is it?”

Kirikiri sighs before answering me.

“Nothing, you don't have to know it. It isn't important enough for you to pay for it.”

Kirikiri says that, but I'm unconvinced and curious.

We try to pinpoint the right answer by exchanging questions as if we were playing Twenty Questions, but couldn't reach a conclusion.

Note: Twenty Questions is a game in South Korea in which one side asks a question and the other side guesses the answer by asking 20 questions in reverse. – JiuJiuBa

* * *

[Welcome to floor 50's waiting room.]

Seeing the welcome words after entering the waiting room deeply touched me.

It's just halfway.

50 out of 100 floors.

It's ridiculous that I've only come halfway in 2 years, approaching the 3rd year.

I finally managed to get here.

I don't know how long it will take until I get out.

It may take less than a year at my current pace, but Hell difficulty cannot be easily judged.

I don't know when and where a time-consuming obstacle may appear.

In order to deal with such a situation, I must be diligent to improve myself.

I pull Ahbooboo out of the inventory to study magic.

[Huh? It seems you've cleared the previous floor. Are you in the waiting room again?]

“Yes.”

Ahbooboo is now speaking like a full-fledged challenger.

I'll ask him about how much he knows about the world one day.

I'm about to study with Ahbooboo, but a magic circle appears on the ground.

To be precise, it appears by my feet.

[Round 32, Day 0, 00:00]

[The Tournament will commence.]

[Please enter.]

[Time left until mandatory summoning: 29 minutes and 59 seconds]

[You can leave at any time after entering.]

“What’s this?”

* * *

[Lee HoJae, 50th floor: What’s this?]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor:... What’s this? You bastard, it’s the tournament.]

[Lee HoJae, 50th floor: Why has it started now? I haven’t been informed.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor:... You were informed. The managers have notified us and I personally told you. Round 33! Today! The 3rd tournament! You answered absentmindedly no matter how many times I told you, which is odd. You didn’t remember it at all!]

Did you say that?

I don't remember.

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: As per your request, the Order of Vigilance doesn't need you to do anything. The Order has created a system that can work well on its own. You can enter like everyone else.]

[Lee HoJae, 50th floor: I see.]

Lying on the bed in the waiting room, I recalled something.

It seems I've gotten information about the tournament from Kim MinHyuk and Park JungAh in the past.

Did KiriKiri want to pass the information about the tournament to me?

That makes sense.

The information fee is expensive.

After pondering about it, I jump out of bed.

Kirikiri watches other challengers as well as me.

If the challengers connected me had the information already, she wouldn't have mentioned it deliberately.

That means there is the information that no one in the Order of Vigilance knows, including Kim MinHyuk and Park JungAh.

The information might have something to do with the tournament.

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: What? I feel uneasy now. I didn't expect that we would miss a piece of information. You said you don't exactly know what it is?]

[Lee HoJae, 50th floor: Yes.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th floor: I'm sorry. Although I promised I wouldn't ask you to do anything, I have to break that pledge. Can you get in as soon as possible? Just in case something happens. We'll try to find out what piece of information is missing as soon as possible.]

[Lee HoJae, 50th floor: Okay.]

After the conversation with Kim MinHyuk, I start checking my equipment.

After making sure I didn't miss anything, I stand on the portal.

[Time left until mandatory summoning: 13 minutes and 22 seconds]

A while has passed since the portal opened.

[Hu, hu, hu. I'm looking forward to it! I heard that people like Warrior are gathered there? A Shuraba will descend.]

Note : Shuraba means the scene of carnage. According to myth, it is the location where Asura and Sakra devanam Indra fought. – GodlyCash Ahbooboo mutters eerily.

Well, it won't.

It's not so much a group of people like me, but rather a gathering of townsmen.

Instead of correcting Ahbooboo's misunderstanding, I stand on the portal and spoke the iconic word.

"Transfer."

The space around me starts shaking.

Although I have been able to detect the change a while ago, I haven't applied the experience to magic.

I don't know how long it will take to learn the rudiments of space

magic.

It's still far away.

[Welcome to the Tournament.]

[Tournament Day 1, 0:17]

I'm moved to a secluded forest.

How unexpected.

Previous tournaments were held in the residential areas like floor 30 or floor 60.

I thought this one would take place in the residential area of floor 90, but instead I'm transported to a forest...

More importantly, there is nobody around.

I thought it would be crowded with people, but I can only sense a woman and a man.

Only two people.

[Lee HoJae , 50th floor: What's this?]

[Kim MinHyuk , 30th floor:... Hey. Tell me honestly. You pretend to read all my messages, then ignore them, right?]

Yep.

I decide not to send a reply to Kim MinHyuk after seeing his message.

"Hello?"

The woman pacing around comes to greet me.

“Yes. Hello.”

I greet the man who approached late then request the duo to explain the situation to me.

The woman speaks with embarrassment.

“Didn’t you read the guide? The Order of Vigilance informed us last month.”

No.

I haven’t been in the community in a while. How could I have read that?

“Why don’t we proceed? You can listen to the rest as you go. I can deal with all the monsters enroute alone anyways.”

Boasts the man a step behind us.

He looks to be in his early 20s.

After entering the tutorial, challengers will not suffer from natural aging.

Given that, the man can be two or three years older than he seems.

But that’s unlikely.

Because they don’t recognize me.

This proves that both of them are challengers who have only recently entered the tutorial.

“Yeah. Let’s head on first. I’ll explain it as we go.”

While walking along the forest road, I get a detailed explanation from the woman.

The woman tells me her name is Lee Jin

I think it is a pseudonym, but she insists it's her real name.

I didn't tell her my name.

According to Lee Jin, this time the Tournament has lots more content than before.

As a result, the rewards has increased correspondingly and the duration has been increased to one month.

"First of all, if you want to enter the venue, you need to get there with two randomly assigned team members."

"Why increase the meaningless process?"

"I'm not sure, but many people in the community are saying that the content was prepared for players who have not experienced party play yet."

I heard the laughter from the man ahead.

This bastard is starting to annoy me to no end.

You, one strike.

Disregarding him, there is something I don't understand in Lee Jin's words.

"Player?"

"Yeah."

I expressed doubts about the strange word, but Lee Jin says nothing.

Player?

She used the word so naturally, I'm embarrassed to ask again.

I take the chance to ask Kim MinHyuk instead.

[Lee HoJtae , 50th floor: Hey, What's a player?]

[Kim MinHyuk , 30th floor:... Please. Why do you sound like an old man? That's what people call challengers in the community.]

Kim Minhyuk told me that people who challenge the stages are called players, while the challengers who stay in residential areas or specific stages are called NPC.

[Kim MinHyuk , 30th floor: I'm really, really busy, Okay? If possible, ask the people around you about this kind of thing or wait till evening. Let's meet tonight. I'll give you a lesson on common sense.]

A lesson on common sense?

That really does make me sound like an outdated old man.

[Kim MinHyuk , 30th floor: Don't you think so?]

Kim MinHyuk truthful message stabs my feelings so I close the dialog box.

Lee Jin probably likes to explain and educate others because she's always talking about something.

In addition to the simple combat competition, the tournament has a variety of new content.

For example, you can try to complete the labyrinth within a limited time or tackle a Time Attack Stage as a party.

There are lots of activities.

“We can’t finish all the events in time. Everyone in the community says it’s best to challenge two or three events.”

The Tournament this time has changed in many aspects.

If the previous tournament is like a colosseum, this one is more like a comprehensive amusement park.

I haven’t seen it with my own eyes yet, but I felt it from Lee Jin’s description.

“What do you want to challenge?”

“I don’t know.”

My plan was to return to the stages after a few days without challenging anything.

Of course, this is no emergency.

I just don’t want to spend a month here wasting my time since the items and elixir rewards in the championship prize pool are useless to me.

I tell Lee Jin that I’m just going to meet some friends and take a few days off.

“Why? Just try one. This is the first time this has happened, who knows when we’ll have this chance again? Do it for the experience. I hear that some events aren’t dangerous.”

After listening to Lee Jin’s words, the man walking in front says sarcastically.

“Hey, looks like he hasn’t been here long, just leave it. Since his equipment is all shiny, he may have found a patron among the top ranked players. I’ll handle it.”

Erm... Let me think.

Is that a strike?

Then two strikes.

There's still one count until a strikeout.

But I'm in a bad mood.

Okay, let's think of it as a bean ball.

Note: A bean ball is when a pitcher throws the ball directly at the batter's head.

[KEEEK!]

Then an ugly monster pops out in the middle of the forest.

The unusual creature looks like a combination between a dog and frog.

“Back off! I'll handle it!”

After his roar, I stare at the man's face as he draws his sword...

The man turns to me and asks.

“Yes? Do you have any complaints?”

“Get down.”

[keek!]

The horrendous monster immediately falls to the ground.

It watches me from the ground, it seems quite intelligent.

Even if it could understand me through my skill, Time Before Babel, it's honestly commendable that it can grasp the power gap between me and it.

In the face of a sudden situation, the flustered man sends alternating gazes at me and the monster.

This guy is even less intelligent than the monster.

It's hard, but I say it again mercifully.

“What are you doing? Get down.”

Chapter 221

The Tournament (21)

“What are you doing? Get down.”

“...What?”

The man ignorantly asks. Perhaps he hasn't figured it out yet.

I thought he would get down on his own initiative, but he is incapable of understanding words, so what am I supposed to do about it?

“Suddenly...”

“Get down.”

I couldn't wait any longer, so I force him down.

It was easy.

I just released magic above the man and use it to press him to the ground.

Pretty simple.

This is the usual method I used to suppress isolated and weak enemies in the stages. Now I've mastered the essentials and can use less magic to achieve the same results.

The man forced to the ground lost his ability to speak.

Usually, there are no groans when I press people down.

There are occasionally some squeaking noises, but this is involuntary.

I decide to put him on hold before starting the conversation.

I hope he can make progress during this down time.

However, I understand the man's feelings.

After all, it's not the first time I've seen such a poser.

Above all, it's two men and one woman walking together.

In the limited space of the tutorial, I can understand why he would have that mindset.

So I can understand.

I also understand why I'm being irritated by the man's tone.

The tone of speech is terrible. Who wouldn't be angry after listening?

I just want to calm down.

“Right?”

[keeeekkeek!]

Hearing my mumbling, the monster agrees with me with a cry.

What is he doing?

The monster looks like a mixture of dog and frog.

His head is as smooth and shiny as an amphibian, but the limbs are hairy like a dog.

He stares at me with fear in his eyes.

“That, that.”

“Emm?”

I forgot about the woman.

Lee Jin looks at me with flustered eyes and asks.

“Well, what’s going on...?”

She doesn’t understand the situation.

I think the current situation can be easily understood, but for others it doesn’t seem so.

I decided to explain it to her from the beginning.

“The monster is discerning. As soon as he jumped out, he knew that he should lie down. This guy is lacked observational skills, influencing my mood, so I force him to lie down.”

My explanation is simple and easy to understand.

There should be better ways to explain it, but I’m not greedy for a higher standard because of my poor vocabulary.

“How did you do that?”

You want to know how?

I roughly explain the principle.

“How else? He has control force. How else can it be done?”

“You can push down from a space that is out of reach, so as long as you have magic, you can do it.”

It seems that Lee Jin wants to keep asking. So I say something casually.

She talks about control force all the time. It seems she is interested in theories.

At the current level of these challengers, this is an area they couldn't reach or should even care about.

This woman likes to explain. Unexpectedly, her thirst for knowledge is so strong.

It seems that she has no interest in the man who lies on the ground in the frog position or the actual frog monster who lies on the ground in the same position.

[This is a scam. Anyone can do it. Warrior, you're putting on airs.]

"So noisy."

"What?"

Ignoring the nagging Ahbooboo and the woman who is questioning me, I bend down.

I lighten the pressure on the man and speak.

"How do you feel?"

Of course, he doesn't look like he can hold on.

He doesn't reply.

I've weakened my power to the point where he can speak.

His attitude is still bad.

I stand up and say.

"Our meeting is fate. Take this opportunity, I will educate you. If you want to live with this attitude all the time, you should have the corresponding strength. Follow the training methods I teach every day and your strength will increase naturally.”

Of course, he will not want power or anything else in 10 minutes.

This is none of my business.

“Hey, you did it wrong, didn’t you?”

[keekkeek !]

“Not you.”

[keekkeek !]

“Ok,I get it. Stop being noisy.”

[keekkeek !]

The monster constantly barking, so I hit him.

I had thought its intelligence was high, but it only had excellent crisis handling abilities so I corrected my judgement.

[keekkeek !]

“Well, I know it’s an accident. Shut up. Now I’m talking to him.”

[keekkeek !]

Finally, I turn my head away from the monster.

Turn to the man with his head down in sweat.

Not long ago, he was in a state of mental distraction. It seems that during the time when I talked with the monster, he has recovered his spirit.

Physical strength and recovery are good.

But it isn't enough to endure my training.

The man is bathed with sweat and his legs are shaking.

If you keep on pushing your limits for an hour, even the challenger who is physically superior will become like that.

He did it exactly according to the no-equipment sports I had practiced before. Now I think his internal organs are shaking.

If you leave him alone, it may cause shock. I have to give him a potion.

I will give him it after torture him.

“Hey, did you do wrong or not?”

“Yes, I'm in the wrong.”

The man answers quickly.

After suffering for an hour, the man has the same attitude towards me as the frog monster who keeps glancing at me in horror.

It would be nice if it stays like this.

By the way, his voice is still very strong.

Not enough torture.

“Why did you do that?”

“I...”

“Still no answer? Down.”

The man fell down on the ground in a rush.

I'm not sure if it's because he's done it so many times, but his body moves like lightning to the familiar movements.

The dust is blown away by his violent movement.

The silent holy sword speaks

[You're more capable of torture than I thought.]

[Really?]

[Really. According to your personality, people would be immediately killed if they caused you discomfort. I thought you were preparing to behead him when he lies on the ground, but instead you torture him.]

Ok, all right.

I now know what you think of me.

[It's a pity that I can't torture you like this. If only you were human.]

[Ah, what did you say!? Why!? Is it because I'm not coquetry enough?
]

There is a rush of butterflies in my stomach. I resist the urge to vomit...

Although I can't torture this crazy sword, there is still a way to punish it.

Since the noise from Ahbooboo has damaged my hearing, I throw it back into inventory for it.

About 10 minutes later, I pull up the man who rolls on the floor, struggle to stand.

I ask again.

"Have you self-reflected?"

The man gasps and answers yes.

“Hey, you laugh at others when they speak to them miserable, Is that right?”

“No!”

“Then why would you do that?”

“Because...”

“Down again.”

The man rolls over and finally faints.

It's not good to wake him up just to torture him again. Since my anger has subsided I decided to let him go.

After pouring a potion into the man with rolled eyes, I put him on the back of the frog monster.

“Can you carry him?”

[keeeekkeek !]

Yes, I know.

I unintentionally got an obedient carrier.

We continue along the forest path while listening to Lee Jin's explanation of tournament.

She explains more enthusiastically than before.

“With Japan and Australia ? ”

“Yes. It's probably because there are too many participants, so the residential area is divided.”

We will share a residential area with Japan and Australia who have participated in the second tournament with us together.

I not sure about Japan, but among the challengers in Australia, there should be some people who have a grudge with us.

Another conflict may happen.

There are many participants in the tournament this time along with many kinds of events. Perhaps due to this, we can take the residential area where the dormitory is located at the center.

Lee Jin says that if you want to participate in the tournament, you need to form a team in a residential area and sign up together for the competition.

You become an official participant once you and your team move through the portal.

It sounds complex.

We listen while walking in the woods.

Several hidden traps and magic circles are found along the way along with other frogs.

These monsters talk to the frog monster walking by my side for a while and then run away.

“Can you understand what the monsters are saying?”

“Just a little bit.”

Lee Jin asks me.

After walking together for several hours, our relationship has become a little closer allowing us to casually ask each other questions.

“I can’t understand them completely. What they say is very vague.”

“Why?”

“Because they know I can understand them.”

The knowledge of the time before Babe is bidirectionally compatible.

Although the frog monster can't understand what Lee Jin says, he can fully understand what I say.

So they speculate that I could understand their language accurately.

I'm not certain, I just believe it so.

While explaining to Lee Jin, I also affirm my hypothesis.

Because the frog monster freaks out after listening to my explanation.

“But are you really not going to participate in any event? I hear there are prizes in the tournament.””

I reply that I would not participate.

I can guess what kind of rewards will be given.

Maybe give an item box with good weapons or some statistics.

But they are useless to me.

Especially elixirs, I wouldn't feel any change after its consumption.

Drinking an elixir is similar to consuming vitamins, it's of little help.

There's no need to beat others for such a prize.

I don't expect to compete with other challengers.

Although I believed I would before, I have lost my expectations.

I don't know the level of other challengers, but they are certainly not as strong as me.

If you fight other challengers just to experience a sense of urgency, you may accidentally kill them causing some trouble.

“What a pity. If we can participate together, the prize is as good as ours.”

Even if I wanted to participate in the tournament, I would not form a team with Lee Jin.

If I have to, I could consider joining Park Jong-Sik.

Because even without me, that team is most likely to win the championship.

Lee Jin seems to have a clue on the way and asks if my name is Lee Hojae.

I affirm her suspicion.

Since then, Lee Jin has been asking me to participate in the tournament.

But more concerned about how she is unwavering after learning my identity.

She becomes more interested to team up with me and win prizes.

To be honest, I'm surprised.

I thought that if I revealed my name, the normal response would be her fearing me. However, I didn't expect her to be so joyful.

This makes me strangely confused.

Is it because I haven't interacted with other people for a long period of time?

People have forgotten me.

Perhaps it's simply because she's not a challenger from the early periods.

Maybe it's just because she's an unusual person.

In any case, it's convenient for me to have a good conversation.

In addition to the tournament, I also ask some questions about the community and other challengers' trend.

So I don't have to annoy Kim MinHyuk anymore.

After walking for three or four hours, we come to the end of the forest path and see the portal.

Seeing the portal, Lee Jin says.

The portal will take you to your residential area.

I send a message to Kim MinHyuk notifying him that I will arrive soon.

Kim MinHyuk replies that he would send someone to pick me up at the other end of the portal.

He adds that I don't have to hurry over because there is nothing to do, but I have nothing to do but to find him.

The place I arrive through the portal looks like a residential area.

There are beautiful brick buildings along the street.

It looks like a floor 90 residential area.

Nothing special.

“It’s clean.”

[keeeekkeek !]

The frog monster behind me expresses his approval.

...Why did this guy follow me here?

I pull down the man onto my back, wondering whether to send the frog monster back through the portal when there is an explosion in the sky.

Bang! Bang!

I’m frightened and hurried to look up to the sky. The sky is full of colorful fireworks.

It’s fireworks.

What’s this?

Firecracker in the tournament.

I don’t think it’s arranged by the system.

I see a lot of people walking around with firecrackers and ignition tools on the buildings.

I don’t know how it’s prepared, but it’s spectacular.

Different from the sparks and flashes that occur in the battle, the colorful fireworks appearing one after another are very beautiful.

Fireworks continue.

I am enjoying myself when a notification comes up.

[The God of Light is excited!]

[The God of Light decides to bless his apostles.]

[Voting begins.]

[For:1, against:98]

[The God of Light feels that he is losing face.]

Chapter 222

The Tournament (22)

[The God of Light feels ashamed.]

It's ridiculous on one hand, but it's normal on the other.

I'm accustomed to the occasional foolishness of the God of Light.

I chuckle upon seeing the God of Light's message, but soon I realize that I'm not alone.

At least, those who also watched fireworks outside the buildings have received the message.

In addition, some people are not laughing, but cheering.

Those cheering are the ones who stood on the roofs and set off firecrackers.

Are they believers of the God of Light as the message says?

I thought the message referred to them as believers because they set off firecrackers, but on second thought, they may be truly believers.

The people on the roof are all excited and elated.

I don't know why.

Under the system's sanction, the God of Light fails to give the blessing. Logically, I wonder if they should be depressed.

But people are cheering as if they have been blessed.

Someone comes towards me while I watched them.

It's a normal-looking man.

“Hello!”

The greeting is also normal.

I respond to him perfunctorily.

The man says he's a member of the Order of Vigilance sent by Kim Min Hyuk to be my guide.

Surprisingly, the man knows me.

“Have we met before?”

“Yes. I've seen you before in the grand conference and tournament.”

After listening to him, I begin to recall.

Of course, I don't have any memories of the man in my mind.

“A previous grand conference... the third or fourth time?”

“The fourth time. But it was the first time for me.”

It seems that he joined not long ago.

The members of the Order of Vigilance that I've been in contact with are those who entered in the early days. So it's possible that I don't remember him.

If you ask me if I remember all the early members, I would deny it.

“But what about the frog? Is it the guy I met at the intersection?”

I ponder about it Instead of answering immediately.

I choose an answer that would cause trouble as little as possible.

“...Taming.”

“Wow... You really can do anything up at that level. It’s said that you are a warrior, so I didn’t know you such an ability. It’s amazing. There’s no problem walking around with this guy, right?”

“Probably.”

Probably, I think.

So long as this guy doesn’t suddenly cause trouble.

I can subdue it on the spot even if it does.

In fact, if I want to avoid trouble, I can deal with it at any time. However, this is the first time a monster has followed me for no reason.

So I want it to stay with it as long as possible to its reason.

The man suggests I follow him to Kim Min Hyuk.

Before leaving, I pull down the man on the back of the frog monster.

At this point, he should be able to take care of himself, I think. Then I lean him against the wall

I say goodbye to Lee Jin.

Although Lee Jin feels a little sad, she doesn’t pester me anymore.

It seems like she stopped not because of me, but for the members of the Order of Vigilance around me which felt a little strange.

When I walk around with the man, we get people’s attention.

It's normal.

Because there is no one else who walks around with a frog monster.

It would naturally attract people's attention.

People gather together to see the frog monster.

Interestingly, people are more interested in the tamed monster than me.

What they desire to know is how the taming is implemented.

Occasionally, people ask me questions or say hello directly.

After continuing my way, I reached the building where Kim Min Hyuk is located.

The building is big enough for the frog monster to enter.

In front of the building stands a gatekeeper.

After talking to the man who brought me here, the gatekeeper lets us in.

The gatekeeper's attitude is a bit strange.

What's stranger is his attitude towards me, which resembles people's reaction to me in the past.

As soon as he knew my identity, his body stiffens.

It's gone beyond tension and became anxiety.

That's a normal response.

"What's your name?"

[Keeekkeek !]

The frog monster who follows me quietly shows presence.

I turn my head towards the frog and speak.

“Not you.”

I’m not curious about the frog’s name.

The man disturbed by the frog says.

“Jeong Myung-chul”.

I ask him in which time did he come in, he says the second time.

Then we walk into the building.

I am led to a large conference room.

The meeting is in full swing in the conference room.

Unintentionally, I get in the way of the meeting.

“Long time no see. How are you?”

Suddenly an old man comes to talk to me, I contemplate who he is for a while.

Luckily, I remember him.

“Long time no see, uncle.”

The Japanese uncle with a long beard still seems to be the core of Japanese challengers.

Most of the other Japanese challengers in his party only offer assistance so the substantive propositions are put forward by the Japanese uncle.

He says Australian staff are arranging the dormitories.

No wonder I didn't see any Australians along the way. It turns out that they had all gathered elsewhere.

I am dazed throughout the meeting.

They are talking about how to enforce the rules, how to communicate and get along with foreign challengers who haven't met yet, but I it doesn't matter to me.

Actually, it is.

I just need to sit here quietly.

Kim MinHyuk tells me that if I feel bored I can go outside, but I refused.

Because there's nothing to do outside.

It would be really annoying if someone recognizes me.

So I'd rather stay in the conference room.

It's not that there's nothing that arouses my interests at all.

"Religion?"

"Yes. It's been spreading fast lately."

The bearded uncle says religion is spreading among Japanese challengers.

The funny thing is that it isn't a pseudo-religion.

What they worship is the real God.

“Various denominations are springing up, but the scale of believers of the God of Light seems to be the largest. I don’t know how many there are.”

“The God of Light? Insane...”

I curse, but I hurriedly stop myself. I don’t know when the Time before Babel skill has reached level 15. It seems that half of the swearing has been translated.

One of the Japanese challengers gets angry with eyes wide open.

It’s rude to belittle or slander others’ religions, but since I have already offended them, I want to take this opportunity to solve the problem.

I ask the Japanese challenger, who is especially angry after listening to me.

“Why the God of Light? Since you want to believe in God, shouldn’t you believe in a God more dignified and decent?”

“You mean to say the God of Light is not decent?”

The hard question comes back to me.

I didn’t get the answer I wanted so I end the conversation with an apology.

But the man continues to mutter in anger even after hearing my apology.

“Hum, these stupid people don’t understand the God of Light.”

...Wait a moment?

I think I heard something wrong.

Before I ask again, Kim MinHyuk stands up.

“There are quite a few people in Korea who believe in the God of Light.”

Really?

At this point, am I the weird one?

Is there anything worth worshiping in the God of Light?

In the end, I couldn't hide my doubt and ask why people believe in the God of Light.

The answers come from all over the conference room.

“He is cute.”

“Because of his loveliness.”

“And his divine magic is amazing.”

“I think it is because the nature of the God of Light is a fresh shock to those who are used to the religions of the earth.”

Somehow I think that the first two reasons are the main reasons, but I decide to move on.

I don't deny the benefits of religion.

Religion can become a great moral support for the challengers who are trapped in the tutorial.

The world is full of monsters, even if you leave.

Indeed, it is natural to search for a God who exists in a world where God's salvation is needed.

Although I am surprised that the object of worship is the God of Light.

The discussion about the God of light reminds me of the fireworks.

“Oh? really? It’s good to know that you love it. In fact, that was just a rehearsal. The formal fireworks festival will start tonight according to the arrangement.”

Most of the challengers on the Japanese service side are looking forward to the event, explains bearded uncle.

The uncle seems to have been trying to bring some entertainment and happiness to the challengers.

That’s probably why he gets along so well with Kim Min Hyuk.

I also mention the shame of the God of Light at the end of fireworks.

The Japanese believers of the God of Light are calm and don’t lose their temper, instead of nod and smile joyfully.

Their smiles makes me a little upset.

The meeting is finishing up anyway.

After thinking about it, it would be better to tell them.

“That... The religion I mentioned earlier.”

“Em? Do you have other questions?”

It is okay to believe in religion.

The problem is that they don’t know the nature of God.

I’m afraid that when they finally understand the nature of God, they would be trapped in a situation where they can’t escape.

“It’s a good thing to worship God, but I hope you will restrain yourself from trying to get close to them.”

“May I know why?”

“Well... The biggest difference between the religions on earth and the gods here is accessibility.”

“That’s true.”

People can confirm and feel God’s existence at close range through the messages God sends to them in the tutorial.

Although these gods aren’t physically close, they give the feeling of being close.

Thus a group of believers will sprout.

They want to be closer to God.

“There will be people who aren’t satisfied with their status as believers, so they try to be apostles or subordinates of the Gods.”

I’ve seen this type of person many times in the course of the clearing the 40-49th floors.

There are countless people who intend to let go of all the troubles in the world in order to be subordinates of the Gods.

As the God of Slow once said.

“We have to stop it.”

“Well... Can I ask why? I think it’s personal freedom, not something we can ban or control.”

“The problem is that we know nothing about the nature of God, especially the God of Light.”

The God of Light is mentioned once again and the Japanese challengers who look like believers show their displeasure.

I ask them.

“What do you know about the God of Light?”

He likes glittering things.

He likes explosions.

He’s cute.

The answers are all like these.

“That’s one-sided. You don’t know what the God of Light represents. When we think about light we often think about sunlight or light itself. For us, light has a positive significance like illuminating the world or driving out darkness.”

“Is that so?”

“Our knowledge of light is limited to what is available on earth. But what light is in the universe can be completely different. According to the Gods’ interpretation, light can be both good and bad.”

The challengers become silent. I continue.

“The most dangerous thing is that the light contains the concept of brightness according to the definition of the God of Light, which involves relativity. Brightness no longer determined by an absolute value, but by the contrast. In this case, it will be a very dangerous thing to be an apostle of the God of light.”

I explain to those who do not understand the relationship between God and relativity.

I’m explaining, and Kim MinHyuk next to me says something in a low voice.

“What’s wrong?”

“Er... One of our people who wants to be an apostle of the God of Light.”

“Who?”

“Lee Joon Suk.”

Ah... That guy, he’s the blitz wizard.

Chapter 223

The Tournament (23)

“If it’s as you said, then Lee Joon Suk might be in trouble.”

Kim MinHyuk lowers his head and whispers.

Kim MinHyuk words remind me that Lee Joon Suk’s main skill is lightning.

He is one of the top contenders on South Korean server.

He’s been a high profile rookie since the inception of the Tutorial, as people expected, he’s been growing rapidly.

He would indeed get a reaction from the God of Light every time he launches his skill.

I answered that I understood.

I’ll have to talk to him alone after the meeting.

I turn back to others in the conference room.

It will take too long to tell them everything I understood about the Gods and I wasn’t sure what I knew the correct.

But I should at least be warn them at a minimum.

So I chose a topic that would alarm them the most.

“Think about it. The God of light is a God who enjoys explosions, so if a bomb explodes in the center of the city, he would not mourn for the death of the people.”

The Japanese believers express their displeasure.

Their facial expressions makes me uncomfortable.

“Admit it. The laws and morals we know don’t matter to Gods.”

Of course, God can’t interfere with us.

There has never been a sign of God on earth.

The communication between God and challengers is also limited to messages and receiving powers from them through divine spells.

“That’s something we humans need to cope with and guard against. If an incident breaks out, a message saying that the God of Light is pleased will shock the believers, but it won’t break their contact with God.”

The bearded uncle retorts.

“The problem... it’s not the Gods, but the people who want to imitate God. As I’ve said before, people like that will surely appear.”

“Could you explain it a little more?”

I decide to explain it to him in detail.

“There will be a lunatic who becomes more and more like the God he worships because of their way of thinking until they finally identify themselves with a God. For example, although the God of Light likes explosion, he doesn’t purposely create explosions. But he’ll become excited when an explosion does happen.”

Clearing my throat, I continue.

“It’s the lunatics that will cause explosions everywhere to gain the favor of God. Furthermore, they can become delusional and start regarding themselves to be a God or the incarnation of God, worsening the issue.”

It is especially dangerous for superhuman challengers.

If such lunatics have a certain level of strength.

And if a lunatic clears the tutorial and leaves.

Uncontrollable damages will occur.

I've seen this kind of person many times throughout clearing the 40th floors.

My own experiences is an example.

Those are the lunatics who judge and kill people while claiming to be God's spokesman or slaughter livestock as offerings to God.

So many maniacs.

Although not as extreme, there are also many people who just want to imitate the Gods they worship.

I've seen this outside the 40th floors.

For example, the empire on the 26th floor that worshipped the God of the Sky.

The Demon King on the 35th floor who worshipped the God of harvest.

The Great Mother cultivated a race that sacrifices their relatives to all the people in the world to become an apostle of the God of Goodwill...

"It's not religion that's dangerous. Given the situation in the tutorial, religions will play a positive role in many cases. However, there are always a few dangerous lunatics."

The biggest problem is that we can't get rid of the maniacs who have been completely blinded by their religion or God simply because they have dangerous ideas.

Because that's their belief and justice.

The challengers are distributed on different levels of the tutorial, so the believers can't preserve order.

"Well....."

I told the bearded uncle who seemed to be in deep thought.

"I hope you can handle it well. It's not something I should be involved in nor am I interested in it."

The bearded uncle nods.

"Thanks for your advice, I've noted it."

Subsequential topics in the meeting did not interest me...

There were some topics I understood, but I didn't intervene since they handled it themselves.

After the meeting, only Kim MinHyuk and I are left in the conference room. I pulled out the matter I wanted to ask.

"As far as I know, Lee Joon Suk is very capable and wouldn't fool around."

If Lee Joon Suk is receiving the attention of the God of Light and getting his abilities acknowledged, Kim MinHyuk would not have specifically mentioned it.

"It is true. But..."

Kim MinHyuk briefly explains.

Lee Joon Suk certainly doesn't have to worry about it as he is still a promising prospective star.

As a hard difficulty challenger, it's not usual to worry about your strength.

But his situation is much more serious since his level exceeds the potential of the stages.

"To what extent?"

"His level is second only to you."

"What about Jong-sik?"

As far as I know, Park Jong-sik is a leader of the Order of Vigilance and a top challenger in hard difficulty stages.

I remember because Park Jong-sik brought Lee Jong Suk when we met before.

"That guy has been overtaken long ago. Although I am not sure, there is probably a huge gap between them."

Is that so?

Park Jong sik's time with the Order of Vigilance may have delayed his growth.

"Even if it's not related to Gods, his overall behavior is disturbing."

"What?"

"He has a tendency to judge people by their strength. More importantly, it's suspected that he instigated the public opinion in the community to support this idea."

If Kim Min Hyuk said that, it means he may have been at odds or had conflicts with others.

Well... the solution isn't difficult.

“I’ll fix him before the tournament ends.”

I didn’t think Lee Joon Suk had personality problems.

I’ve met him several times and even talked with him. I have never felt anything strange about him.

It seems that attitude sprouted naturally because his growth was too swift, widening the gap between him and others, causing him to look down on them.

Just tell him that he is no more powerful than others or that he is nothing special, his pride will easily sink.

Of course, you have to torture him to get that message across.

“Thank you.”

“So are you done?”

Kim MinHyuk shakes his head.

“I’ll be busy until night. I’ll have a meeting with Australian side after they’ve arranged the accommodations.”

Oh, them.

I’d better stay out of his meeting with the Australians.

I think a lot of those people are still uncomfortable looking at me.

“Okay. The person who brought you here just now will send you to the dormitory. Take a good rest. I’ll stop by in the evening.”

I affirmatively nod.

I’m about to leave when I suddenly remember one more thing to ask Kim MinHyuk.

“The people are a little unusual.”

“What are you talking about?”

“They don’t fear me.”

Of course, those who’ve been in the tutorial since the beginning still fear me, but those who’ve joined recently treat me like a normal person.

In the past, the new challengers would be weary of me after hearing about my hype , but now it’s different.

“Of course, we’re all working hard to beautify your public image.”

“What, that’s all?”

“Hired supporters. Just give them some points and they will make comments to stir up the community and turn the public opinion towards the direction we want.”

“Hey, why do you do that? It’s not the NIS.”

Note: NIS is used in the raw. It’s an acronym for the National Intelligence service. – GodlyCash

“Are we better than the NIS?”

Kim MinHyuk replies with a chuckle.

I look at him and shake my head.

“It’s a fact that your notoriety will fade away with time. It’s because you only periodically displayed your strength so your terror will fade with time. What’s more, the overall level of challengers has improved. As an object of comparison, you no longer appear in front of the public. The most important thing is that other members such as Jung

Ah also have notoriety, which means that they have split your share. Those hired supports are just confusing the public.”

After listening to Kim MinHyuk’s explanation, I think it made sense.

With nothing more to ask, I get up and leave.

I shake my head at the sight of Kim Min Hyuk taking over piles of documents from the inventory after he bid me farewell.

An incomprehensible passion.

The allocated dormitory is as narrow as before with only one bed and table.

I am told that there are some larger and more luxurious rooms, but the Order of Vigilance allocated the lowest class rooms for the officials to maintain fairness.

I like the room and don’t care about whether it is good or bad, so I just take it.

I left the frog in front of the dormitory.

I can see the frog squatting in front of the dormitory through the window of the 2nd floor.

[keeeekkeek!]

The frog turns around. Maybe he heard the window open.

That’s cute because it’s like a dog.

If only the head was not a frog.

Leaning against the window frame, I open the inventory.

I pull out Ahboobooboo who was imprisoned for spitting out rude remarks.

Ahbooboo is very sad, so I comfort him for a while.

When he's in a better mood, I ask.

"Release a blessing in the room."

[Why do you suddenly want a blessing?]

"To experiment with my solidified poison ki."

The stabilization of my poison ki crystal is nearing completion.

It's not complete enough to give to other challengers, but it's enough for me to use.

You can bury the solidified poison and use it as a booby trap, it works well as a grenade too.

Work on the crystal focused on changing its shape and reducing its size.

My devoted hard work causes the time to fly and soon it's evening.

After eating the food from my inventory which served as dinner, I resume my study on poison ki crystal.

After a few hours, someone knocks on my door.

I am concentrating so I don't check who is outside the room.

"Come in."

I thought that Kim MinHyuk would come in, but it's Park Jung Ah instead.

I smile at her.

"Long time no see."

Park Jung Ah smiles and says yes.

“Kim MinHyuk will come later. He says that I lack common sense and intends to teach me. Why don’t we just call Jung-sik too and have a drink together?”

Park Jung Ah shakes her head.

“He’s not coming.”

“Huh?”

“He’s coming. I told him not to come.”

“Hm?”

Park Jung Ah mocks Kim MinHyuk by saying that he sometimes has no insight.

Then she comes towards me with a smile.

Park Jung Ah grabs my collar without scruple, noticing her hand movements, I understood what she wanted.

Was this her personality?

Yes, it is.

“Wait a moment.”

I pull my hand before Park Jung Ah touches it.

I say to her who seemed very puzzled.

“We haven’t seen each other in a while, let’s catch up first.....”

“What? Why?”

I needed to explain the situation to Park Jung Ah who is wide-eyed and embarrassed.

Park Jung Ah looks hurt to see me avoiding her.

It was just a simple step back, but it seems to have a drastically different meaning to her.

My instincts warned me to convince her as soon as possible.

I explain my poison ki skill like rap fired from a machine gun.

Tell her how dangerous and contagious the poison ki skill I've been studying is.

"Then... you don't hate me. right?"

Yes, of course.

I nod vigorously.

Park Jung Ah told me that when I stepped back, she thought I had changed my mind because I hadn't seen her for a long time, so she felt very uneasy.

She also said that I went to Kim Min Hyuk first and then towards the dormitory directly as if she was sadly the only one looking forward to our meeting.

If thought that way, that's true.

Although I've recently talked a lot, I was unintentionally ignoring her so I apologized.

Fortunately, Park Jung Ah eases and beams her smile again.

Then she asks me to wait a while and suddenly sprints out the room.

[Is this warrior your lover?]

“Yes.”

[My God, so it turns out that warriors can love, but I can't. It gives a real sense of how absurd the world is.]

“If you spout bullshit again, I'll throw you into inventory.”

However, Ahbooboo only laughs at my threat.

[She's back, the warrior of love! So she hurried to get that, she's quite adorable.]

Before I could ask Ahbooboo what he meant, Park Jung Ah swings open the door.

I immediately understand Ahbooboo's words.

Park Jung Ah has a large glass bottle in her hand.

She puts the glass bottle on the desk and speaks.

“This is a superlative elixir. It doesn't matter, right?”

After that, Park Jung Ah comes straight to me so I speak in a hurry.

“Jung Ah, how expensive is that elixir is? Why don't we just wait a few days.....”

Before I finish speaking, she pushes me down to the bed.

Park Jung Ah is clearly weaker than me, but for some reason, I cannot resist.

Was this her original personality?

Yes, it is.

“Now keep your mouth shut. Oh wait, don't shut your mouth, leave it open and stay still.”

[Oh my lord.....]

Chapter 224

The Tournament (24)

“Cough! Cough!”

Coughs mixed with whines fills the room.

Kim Min Hyuk sighs at the sight.

“Is that OK?”

All eyes turn towards Park Jung Ah in bed.

Park Jung Ah is hiding under the blanket with a face reddened from a cold.

“Don’t worry. You don’t have to mind it since you can’t even do that.”

According to the symptoms of my poison, this is what happens near the end of the recovery period.

If it was truly serious, it would be hemoptysis instead of just coughing.

Past that would be death.

“Well, she’s not a newbie, it’s the first time I’ve seen a 70th floor challenger catch a cold.”

Park Jong-sik says.

That’s right.

Even easy difficulty challengers become immune to mild colds once they’ve passed the 20th floor.

In addition, Park Jung Ah has put a significant effort training her resistance skills such as Poison Resistance because of assassination threats.

“Why don’t you send her to a better room first?”

Park Jong-sik made a conjecture.

Would that be better?

“It’s okay.”

Park Jung Ah’s hoarse voice is heard from within the blanket.

What’s there to do if she says it’s fine?

“Then we’ll leave. Thanks to a certain someone, we’ve become busier. Please take care of her for a few days.”

“Alright, I have nothing to do anyway.”

They reminded Park Jung Ah to take care of herself and then bid farewell.

As they leave, Kim MinHyuk sends a message to me.

[Kim Min Hyuk,30th floor: Jung Ah may feel sorry for us and insist on getting up. You make sure she rests as long as possible. Just take a week off.]

[Lee Ho Jae, 50th floor: Aren’t you flooded with work now?]

[Kim Min Hyuk, 30th floor: Yes, but not that much. Take this opportunity to give her a break.]

Kim Min Hyuk tells me that Park Jung Ah always pushes herself on a daily basis.

Her perfectionism had exhausted the people around her, although things have recently improved, she's still harsh on herself.

Kim Min Hyuk also says it's worrying because even though she doesn't exhaust the people around her, she is still too cruel to herself.

[Lee Ho Jae, 50th Floor: Okay. There's a good medicine for that.]

[Kim MinHyuk, 30th Floor:... I don't know what it is, but I'm anxious.]

I spot Kim Min Hyuk and Park Jong-sik walking outside the dormitory building through the window.

I wave to them when they look towards the window, then sat down beside the bed.

Park Jung Ah's face peaks out from hiding within the blankets.

"I told you to wait a few days."

She hides in the blanket again.

"...Sorry."

Don't say that.

I open the blanket and put my hand on Park Jung Ah's forehead.

If a normal person had such a high fever , they'd be sent to the emergency room immediately, but it's not so serious for Park Jung Ah.

She'll be fine after some medicine and a nap.

"Ahbooboo, release another blessing. The previous one is no longer effective."

[Okay.....]

Ahbooboo replies.

He's been like this since last night.

The talkative Ahbooboo had become gloomy at some point.

[Hey, what's wrong?]

[It's nothing... Just a little uncomfortable.]

This bastard is a sword isn't he?

[Hey, look at Seregia. She hasn't said anything. No agitation, as silent as always.]

[Actually, I was also a little shocked yesterday.]

The quiet Seregia suddenly spoke.

Ah, you were shocked too?

[Yes. Warrior, is this the way the world is?]

Seregia asks

That's unusual.

[What?]

[Nothing...]

Somehow Seregia seems gloomy too.

Ahbooboo says she wants to be the plant in the fishbowl while floating around in the air. I scold him and tell him to release the blessing.

The scent of poison that has been vaguely lingering around the nose disappears.

“Haven’t you harmed yourself or something lately?”

The still Park Jung Ah asks.

I nod.

“It’s been a while. What’s up?”

“Nothing... I am just asking. I’m afraid I’m getting in your way.”

She’s asking me if she’s taking up my training time.

Of course not.

I came to the tournament with thoughts of taking a rest for a while.

If the schedule was really tight, I would’ve already returned to the stages by now.

“It’s amazing. I’m always busy accelerating my growth.”

“I’m doing it now.”

“Yeah?”

Training is always a must.

I’m adjusting aura in midair while chatting with her.

“Then... Even last night? ”

“...Of course not last night. That’s dangerous.”

[It is.]

[It’s awesome.]

I ignore Seregia and Ahbooboo are particularly in sync today.

Dealing with aura is different from playing with clay.

A mistake during its operation could lead to a disaster.

I don't know what Park Jung Ah is happy about, she is laughing

It is good to see her laugh.

I take the herbal powder from the inventory, put it in a bowl, and mix it with water.

Fortunately, it was grounded in advance.

When the powder is completely dissolved, I hand the bowl to Park Jung Ah.

“Drink it.”

“My sense of smell tells me not to drink it.”

“It's good for you. Drink it quickly.”

Park Jung Ah drinks it in one breath.

It should taste like hell because it's far too bitter.

As expected, Park Jung Ah's face crumples up and coughs.

I quickly take out another drink from my inventory for her.

I've drunk it before, so I know how nauseous it is.

“What's this?”

“An herb called Sanguncho.”

This is the herb used by Myong Myong when I was poisoned.

In addition to detoxification, it has a sleep effect. It is the perfect herbal medicine.

I saw it in the store so I bought some.

“You’ll fall asleep for a while. You’ll feel better when you wake up.”

“Sleep?”

“Yes.”

She won’t sleep for days like me.

I adjusted the dosage.

She’ll only sleep a day or two so she can get up and eat...

Maybe.

I move the chair to the bedside and wait for Park Jung Ah to fall asleep.

It’s been a long time since I looked after someone like this.

It’s the first time since I’ve looked after Myong Myong.

“I don’t feel sleepy.”

Park Jung Ah says.

I can see her trying to keep her eyes open in order not to fall asleep.

It’s clear she’s drowsy.

Park Jung Ah asks me to talk to her.

I ask her wanted to hear. She says she wants to hear about what happened since the end of the last tournament.

I decided to talk about what happened to me as I cleared the 40th-49th stages.

I had many stories to tell because those stages were different since I met many people instead of constantly slaying monsters.

These stories might be interesting for Park Jung Ah and can help her in various ways.

As I talk, Park Jung Ah falls asleep.

She tried everything to avoid sleep like biting her mouth or pinching her legs, but lethargy eventually consumes her.

I properly cover her in the blanket.

I get up from the chair and head to the window.

There was a lot of disturbance outside just now...

Because of the frog monster in front of the front door of the dormitory.

A frog is sitting in front of the building where people pass frequently would definitely will cause a stir.

That guy is frozen like a haetae statue.

People probably knew the frog would truly not attack or hurt them so they watched and touched it.

Fortunately, no one attacks it.

It's like watching animals at a zoo.

I can see that people have changed a lot nowadays.

Compared to before.

They no longer have a kind of ruthlessness...

Although they haven't reached my level, I felt that everyone was tumbling over dangers in the past.

Everyone stayed sharp and built mental walls against each other.

I knew that breaking those walls was the goal of the Order of Vigilance and Kim Min Hyuk, but it is strange to see people so docile.

It looks like another world.

"Frog."

[keeekkeeek!]

I call the frog over the window and it answers immediately.

This guy is more dog than frog.

It's usually a person's mind that determines their identity rather than their physical bodies, but this guy doesn't seem like that...

"Roll around."

The frog begins to roll around at my command.

It doesn't roll casually, but follows the movement of the man I had tortured before...

People seem to have fun watching the frog.

Those are the same reactions to seeing a little dog performing tricks on his master's instructions.

[Why are you abusing the poor frog again?]

[It's not abuse. It's an effective exercise.]

Of course, it will cause some muscle pain afterwards.

That's because it doesn't exercise normally, so it can't be helped.

I stop the frog threw it some meat chunks from my inventory.

The frog begins to eat.

I'm worried about whether I should've given it worms instead of meat.

People seem to enjoy watching the frog eat the meat.

This makes me feel like a dolphin keeper.

They ask if they can feed the frog.

I reply that it is okay so long as the food is not harmful to the frog.

In fact, I don't know what is harmful to it, but the frog should be able to distinguish edible food.

People take all kinds of food from their inventory and give it to the frog.

The frog refuses food with strong fragrances, but eats lots of raw meat and vegetables.

[How surprising.]

“What?”

[You get along with people better than I thought. Is it because you're all fellow countrymen?]

“Hard to say.”

I don't think so.

I recall when I met people in the past.

It was during second tournament.

I was nervous at that time.

I was afraid I would never get along with others.

I was afraid that I would be a loner even after returning to earth from tutorial.

My psychology at the time was to get along with others, I didn't want to be different from them...

I didn't want to leave the tutorial anymore.

Naturally, I lost my passion to grow and to clear the floors. I became more comfortable with the status quo.

Maybe in my heart, I intended to fail the stages.

[How about now?]

Ahbooboo reads my thoughts again.

Next time you meet kirikiri, ask her what happened.

"It's different. The distance between me and them is much further now than then."

Although I think the distance between me and the public is getting further, it's interesting to see that Ahbooboo thinks it the opposite.

[How...?]

How are we becoming further apart?

It's difficult to explain.

After pondering for a while, I decide to use my attitude towards the people in the stages as an example.

"I used to treat people in the stages different from those I met here. That's because they're actually different types of people."

They are not the same.

Even if I can get along with the people in the stages, They will eventually leave me.

In Idy's words, they are imprisoned.

However, there was an exception on the 18th floor after the end of the tournament.

I was very discouraged at that time.

[How about now?]

"The same. I treat them the same way. Because they are not different."

So I gradually became alienated from people.

I treat the people I meet in the stages and the other challengers the same way.

I can laugh and converse with people I meet in the stages.

I can eat with them, understand them, and resonate with them.

Under the condition that it doesn't negatively impact me.

Even now.

The sound of someone turning over came from the bed behind me.

[But you don't seem to treat people that way.]

[Of course. I'm human too. Even if I only meet people once or twice a year, there will be people who are more welcoming]

[Is that so? Those people should really be thanked.]

[Yes.]

Chapter 225

The Tournament (25)

Before heading out, I check my clothes and subspace bags.

Nothing is missing.

“Are you going out?”

Park Jung Ah asks me while lying in bed.

Park Jung Ah is still bedridden after a week.

This is taking longer than I expected.

I made a miscalculation because I’ve never experimented on anyone aside from myself. Park Jung Ah has also been pushing herself before this which had caused a lot of stress and fatigue.

“Um. I’ll be late today because I have things to take care of.”

I’ve been consistently patrolling daily, but today I’ll return late.

I took the wet towel on Park Jung Ah’s forehead and replaced it with a new one.

“Do you want me to buy anything before I return?”

There are many small street vendors near the dormitory.

Even though there was contention in the previous tournament, the Japanese are conducting their business in earnest...

After their business became prosperous, Koreans and Australians followed suit and began to sell their own food.

Food quality improved as a result of the rising business competitions...

Points were used as a form of currency and the food was inexpensive so even newbies can afford them.

Park Jung Ah told me to buy as much as I want.

I exit the room after saying that I understand...

[Is it time to finally start some shit?]

This is the first thing Ahbooboo asks right as I leave the room...

“Start some shit? What did I do?”

Ahbooboo doesn't answer.

His silences strangely makes me feel bad.

[keeeeeek!]

The frog happily greets me as I exit the front door of the dormitory.

“Ah, Good morning.”

I walk along the main road with the frog in tow.

I feel like I'm walking a large dog.

Many people played with the frog during our walk.

Some were Koreans and others were foreigners.

The frog has become a small celebrity among the challengers in this residential area shared by challengers from the South Korean,

Australian, and Japanese servers...

It's a monster, it doesn't attack people, you can feed it, it can respond to you, it's absurd.

No one would hate that.

"Frog!"

[keeeek !]

A girl from from a distance calls the frog who in turn responds to her vehemently.

The frog is quite famous.

So I've also become famous.

As the owner of a cute frog.....

My public image has become quite different.

We arrive at a huge square after continuing along the street for a while.

There are two portals on this square.

One is connected to the residential areas of challengers from other countries, the other is an entrance to the tournament.

This tournament has attracted challengers from all countries on earth.

The tournament is huge because the tutorial system has summoned players from every country to participate.

Not all servers and residential areas are as peaceful as ours.

There are also some dangerous servers.

Some residential areas have conflicts between each server while other residential areas have different alliance factions in strife with each other.

Some of them are in discord because of past or recent international situations that happened on earth.

An example of this would be the relationship between North and South Korean servers.

Fortunately, there is no real war between them.

Regardless, there's a monster crisis ongoing on earth, The players gathered here are key figures who can deal with the situation and bring hope back home.

Some servers say that they'll stop any bloodshed at all cost.

The American server is a prominent example of this...

Some servers are trying to mediate disputes, while others are establishing military alliances with other servers to prepare for war.

Those servers vowed to war if something happened to their allies which in turn made it difficult for others to wage wars.

This is the case with Latin America, West Asia, and the Middle East.

South Korean server policy adheres to the idea that so long as the rules are not violated, they will not initiate an attack.

I have never united with any other country whose alliances were in constant turmoil.

South Korea was accused of being stubborn at the joint conference involving the nations of the world. But our delegate, Mr. Kim, left them only one sentence: "We have a player who has reached the 50th floor of Hell difficulty".

That's me.

As a result, other servers became very grateful for the South Korean server's noninvolvement policy.

Since then, Korean server has been recognized a neutral area so joint conferences are held every day in the Korean residential area.

Not only that, other servers seem to have learned that the South Korean server has a safe residential area so many people who live in dangerous areas come over...

They bought street food, some would even move here.

As the population grew, so did the street market in the area.

The center of the city is starting to resemble a shopping mall. No matter where you go, it's crowded and bustling.

Although everyone welcomed this atmosphere, the leaders of South Korea, Japan, and Australia are very busy maintaining security everyday.

"Hyung! Here you are!"

There is a man shouting at me from a corner of the square.

It's Lee Hyung Jin.

It's inconvenient to walk around with a big frog in tow in the bustling square.

Somehow, I successfully reach Lee Hyung Jin.

"Hyung, let's get in. The others are waiting."

As Lee Hyung Jin said that, I enter the tournament stage through the portal.

[You have entered the Tournament Stage – The Field of Survival.]

The Field of Survival.

It's the stage with the most challengers recently.

However, it's not quite the same as the 12th-floor of Hell difficulty where a person must survive in extreme conditions.

Ten teams who enter the field of survival must capture instance dungeons every hour while the system calculates and ranks their cumulative points.

With each ranking, the team with the lowest score will be eliminated.

Only the team that maintains the highest score until the end wins the rewards.

Many players prefer this because it's safer than other stages allowing them challenge with ease and have the chance to win even with relatively weak power.

When I move to the waiting room, I find three people were waiting ahead of me.

Some I know and some I don't know.

“Hyung, it's been a while.”

“Yes.”

Lee Joon Suk greets me first with an energetic face.

I'm here because of him and Lee Hyung Jin so it's natural that he greets me.

There's another person I know.

It's Lee Jin, the person I met as soon as I entered the tournament.

“We meet again!”

Lee Jin is very happy to see me again.

I respond moderately.

Lee Jin asks me what I’ve been doing recently.

I roughly answer and turn to Lee Joon Suk.

“How do you know each other?”

Although I want to ask why Lee Jin is here, I have to be a little more tactful.

Lee Joon Suk tells me that he met Lee Jin while patrolling the streets and became friends.

I began to see how this situation was drawn after listening to him.

The spot that Lee Joon Suk is standing on makes me uncomfortable.

He ambiguously stands in the range of my attack.

I don’t know if this guy knows that his life is at the mercy of my sword.

Of course not.

Anyways, that’s how I interpreted it from my point of view, but objectively he actually quietly squeezed between me and Lee Jin...

It’s clear what this position means.

After a few pleasantries, I turn to the last person.

A Western looking man offers to shake hands with me.

“I’m John Overton.”

The man introduces himself as an American server challenger.

I notice that neither Lee Joon Suk or Lee Hyung Jin knew that this man was joining us.

“I’ve gained permission from the Korean Order of Vigilance. I know it’s impolite to join you without talking to you in advance, but I wanted to join you here to witness your capabilities.

It seems more impolite to state that he wants to see my capabilities rather than to join us in silence.

Before I say something, I ponder if I should persuade him to go away or just walk away ourselves.

He shouldn’t have come here because he doesn’t believe that I’ve reached the 50th-floor of Hell Difficulty.

The system should’ve sent a message long ago authenticating my achievement...

“I’m also a challenger of Hell Difficulty.”

“Which floor?”

“6th floor.”

Ah.....

Lee Hyung Jin and I both show sympathy.

It’s a very difficult stage.

I openly accept John Overton joining us.

[The 1st round begins.]

[Please choose the difficulty of the Instance dungeon.]

The list of dungeons are shown on the information windows.

A dungeon's difficulty is marked by the number of stars.

No accurate value is displayed, so it is impossible to know how difficult each star represents.

“Even rankers of hard difficulty are hard pressed to pass 4 stars.”

Lee Joon Suk seems to have cleared a dungeon before.

“Yes. In addition, My best performance reached a 5.5 stars dungeon.”

It feels a little awkward to look at the proud Lee Joon Suk.

There are 10 star dungeons on the information window.

He only succeeded in clearing half of the stage.

I'm disappointed with his satisfaction at attaining a meager result with no intentions of going further.

He should attempt higher difficulty levels since he still has room for improvement.

And finally I have a chance to tackle this stage with Lee Hyung Jin.

So why bring along Lee Jin?

There is no need to evaluate Lee Jin's strength.

She can't be counted as a combat strength at all.

I don't understand Lee Joon Suk's intention to bring her, but it's a pity.

I ask the experienced Lee Joon Suk to choose a dungeon with a moderate difficulty.

There is no need to challenge the highest difficulty immediately.

I also have to monitor Lee Joon Suk's and Lee Hyung Jin's fights.

Lee Joon Suk chooses a dungeon with a difficulty of 3.5 stars.

[Please wait patiently for other teams to make their choice.]

A 10 minute wait time is displayed above.

The system provides much more time for consideration than I thought.

Since there's nothing to do, we begin to talk to pass time.

John Overton and I naturally talk about Hell Difficulty.

"Yes. Fortunately, there is a person who is close to my floor. He is on the 11th floor."

In addition to John Overton challenging 6th floor, there is also a challenger on the 11th floor in the American server.

"He's been bottlenecked on the 11th floor for a long time. It's a stage where you have to find something."

"Ah, knocking down the wall behind Ji Jeo Wang's throne will reveal a secret space. Please tell your friend next time."

Lee Hyung Jin recently passed the 11th floor so he reveals the answer.

I recall that fact after listening to him.

We soon get close to John Overtonn.

He became a precious friend who we can share and resonate stories about Hell Difficulty with.

“What is the most challenging obstacle you’ve encountered in Hell Difficulty?”

John Overton asks.

“There’s a lot, but I think the most challenging obstacle for me is the 1st floor boss room.”

“Yes. Although I have heard about it in advance, it was still speechless when I faced it. Since I didn’t have enough courage to resist Hell Difficulty so I tried to escape through the door, but it wouldn’t open...”

“Yes. Hahahaha. I knock down the door, but it didn’t even budge.”

Anyone who has seen the lava pond in the 1st floor boss room will resonate with this.

Standing on a stone bridge just over shimmering lava is a completely different experience from just reading about it in a message...

“The 4th floor boss room dropped me on a mountain without saying anything. I didn’t know which way the Goblin King was so I accidentally went in the opposite direction when descending the mountain. I wandered the hillside for 4 days until I located a fortress that lead me to the other goblins.”

Lee Hyung Jin and I both laugh at John Overton’s confession and comfort him.

I recall how perturbed I was since I was suddenly sent to an open mountain from a confined space.

“But I was very happy then. I was on the verge of mental collapse at that time. I was able to progress alone to 3rd floor, but I was suddenly asked to kill goblins on the 4th floor. I felt better after being able to see the moon and sunrise outside.”

“Yes, me too.”

I nod and expressed sympathy with them.

Despite the fact that I was focused on killing goblins at that time, I remembered the admiring the wonderful night sky.

“Are there absurd or quirky things on the other stages?”

“A lot. Tell your friend on the 11th floor to buy a subspace bag filled with food and toilet paper before entering the 12th floor. The Inventory cannot be opened in the 12th floor.”

“Inventory?”

“Yes. I was prepared and suffered less because of a Hyung’s warning. However, there are way too many oversized bugs.”

“I had a different problem. I went in naked of any preparations. I’ve had a lot of trouble trying to take a shit...”

Once the conversation ball started rolling, all the things I kept in my heart began pouring out.

It was fun to complain to each other about the disgusting designs of Hell Difficulty.

It’s like drinking with friends and complaining about the hardships of military service.

Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin are really close to each other, but we are too immersed in the conversation to pay them any heed.

Chapter 226

The Tournament (26)

“Good idea.”

“Yes, it is.”

John Overton asked me to organize a gathering of Hell Difficulty challengers to hold various discussions about Hell Difficulty.

It is definitely a good proposal.

The gathering would bring great help to those suffering alone as Hell Difficulty challengers in the servers of other countries.

Just like me, both Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton enjoy talking to each other.

What they need is empathy.

It would be beneficial for the people trapped on the 1st floor of Hell Difficulty.

Most challengers of Hell Difficulty are stuck on the 1st floor just trying to survive.

They think they are completely different beings from me and Lee Hyung Jin.

They treat me and Lee Hyung Jin like mutated geniuses to justify their stagnant behavior.

I wonder if they would gain some motivation if they see people besides us challenging Hell Difficulty.

There must be challengers on the 1st floor in other servers, so communicating with them may improve their lives.

I should seek Kim Min Hyuk for advice.

The event is in everyone's interest.

The suffering challengers from servers of various countries can improve their mental state by gathering together, but there are other purposes as well.

No one knows when conflicts between servers will erupt.

Although the tournament will come to an end soon, we still need a way to alleviate or eliminate these conflicts.

We don't know when the next tournament is and, most of all, the situation may be the same outside the tutorial.

And at the center of that discord are the challengers of Hell Difficulty.

Even if the main force in every server are the Hard Difficulty rankers, Hell Difficulty challengers can't be ruled out as combatants.

Even if they are in the minority, their potential cannot be ignored because they challenged the highest difficulty.

It is of great significance for these people to unite with each other since they will play a leading role in political conflicts.

I'm at the top of the Hell Difficulty challengers.

With me as a symbol, it's not unreasonable to host a party just for Hell Difficulty challengers.

And it wouldn't be hard to convince the other server's Hell Difficulty challengers to gather together.

They'd all be eager to get some information.

So long as they want to avoid death and continue progressing, they'll definitely want to learn from my experiences and know-how.

Just like John Overton right now.

I can easily subdue any disturbance that may happen at the party so it wouldn't be a risky venture.

The proposal is completely beneficial in many ways.

Obviously I can't do it alone, so I'll put this matter on the agenda and ask others for their suggestions.

"Ha ha!"

Lee Joon Suk's voice comes from afar.

And then there is the sound of something breaking.

"You really work hard."

Lee Hyung Jin says.

Somehow he doesn't seem as friendly as his words sound.

His tone is curt.

"I feel the same way."

Said John Overton.

His words might have a double meaning for some reason.

While we were talking, Lee Joon Suk focused on the instance dungeon.

He wasn't like this at first.

No, on second thought, he was like that at first.

As soon as the stage starts and enemy monsters appear, me and the other Hell Difficulty challengers quietly step back.

Unlike us, Lee Joon Suk charges swiftly forward the moment he sees the monsters because he will handle this battle alone.

Although it's considered cowardly to leave the fight to your teammates, Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton receive this willingly.

I understand them.

No matter how feeble the enemies in the front look, there is no need to unnecessarily waste energy...

You never know when an unexpected threat will come.

This is how we survived and we'll do the same in the future.

I step back to watch Lee Joon Suk and Lee Hyung Jin fight.

Lee Joon Suk fights alone, not only because of us poor Hell Difficulty challengers, but for another reason as well.

It's the female challenger named Lee Jin that he brought along.

Looking at Lee Joon Suk who is exaggerating his skills against enemies that can be easily subdued, his intentions can be easily guessed...

"He'll die an early death if he continues like this."

Lee Hyung Jin mutters.

That's no way to talk about a colleague who is pushing himself ahead.

I ask in a tone of surprise when I hear those harsh words.

“Do you hate him?”

“Absolutely.”

His quick response rivals that of a robot.

I ask John, who is nodding.

“You too?”

“Of course I do.”

I’m surprised that even John Overton hates him despite being from a foreign server.

I ask them what kind of history they have, but it was brushed off as nothing.

Then I ask why if there is no history.

“It’s not just him, all Hard Difficulty challengers are bastards. “

“It’s more annoying since that behavior is typical for Hard Difficulty challengers.”

Both Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton spoke their minds.

The issue isn’t their personal feelings, but the overall public image of Hard Difficulty challengers.

I continue to inquire.

“I don’t like them. They are far too arrogant. The level of Hard Difficulty can only be taken with a grain of salt. “

“Yes, it’s clear that instance dungeons are not very dangerous, but they act like they’ve miraculously survived.”

That seems to be a common feature among Hard Difficulty challengers.

If even John Overton said that, the same could be true for other servers.

There are some people among the Hard Difficulty challengers who love to show off their superiority.

It's a characteristic that everyone knows about, causing the Order of Vigilance to be concerned about this problem.

According to the Order of Vigilance, Hard Difficulty challengers are boasting about themselves too much in the community, causing other people discomfort.

It is said that the factions that make up the Order of Vigilance are mainly composed of Normal Difficulty rankers.

Although Park Jong-sik is in charge of managing the Hard Difficulty challengers, there's a limit to sanctioning them because he is also a Hard Difficulty ranker.

Kim Min Hyuk asking me to keep an eye on Lee Joon Suk is an extension of this problem.

I'm well informed about this problem, but I thought that only Easy and Normal Difficulty challengers would be troubled by this matter, I never thought that this matter would also disturb Hell Difficulty challengers.

After listening to Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton, I learned that the higher difficulty challengers seem to be more displeased than the lower difficulty challengers.

"American servers will directly determine the whole server's direction of development according to the wishes of Hard Difficulty challengers. I found out how serious the problem was after seeing their tourism."

"I hoped they wouldn't brag to the community as veterans who've overcome the adversities of hell. It's really embarrassing to see that kind of thing....."

"Although the translator didn't translate the meaning, I'm able to interpret it. It's disgusting to see how hard they work to comfort each other as if they've done something extraordinary. "

"They're just eating each others assholes....."

Note : They're just sucking up to each other in a sense. The raws specifically say assholes/buttholes so I'm leaving that. – GodlyCash

Emm...

Let's stop here.

Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton have been complaining about Hard Difficulty challengers for a while.

They began to swear as they talked, for no reason.

After listening, it turns out that their discomfort doesn't stem from being challenged by those of a lower difficulty.

They feel dissatisfied because these people have something they don't.

Colleagues who can challenge the floor together and spend time in the waiting room.

Their difficulty is relatively less dangerous.

So they have a higher hope of surviving into the future.

I understand them.

"Is that what Hell Difficulty challengers from other servers think as well?"

"Yes."

“Of course.”

There’s another reason to bring Hell Difficulty challengers together.

It seems necessary to resolve their sense of relative deprivation.

The party can only be held in the irregular tournaments, but the companionship they’ll feel will reduce their solitary pressure.

“Hyung Jin, John, don’t compare yourselves to challengers of other difficulties. This is not a good habit. Especially at Hell Difficulty. Nothing changes just because you compare what you don’t have to others. What’s important is how you overcome each obstacle in your situations.”

I’ve rambled on for a while, but both Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton aren’t convinced.

I think I am a bit too old-fashioned when I finish my speech.

However, I am speaking the truth so I hope they heed my words.

It’s impossible to move to another difficulty regardless.

The number of Hell Difficulty challengers will not increase abruptly and the actual hazards will have no significant drop so it won’t be simple to tackle.

As we move forward in time, things will only worsen.

I know that these people are in a hell-like situation, but only their actions can free them from their own hell.

Unfortunately, this is the only way.

After my sermon, the originally lively atmosphere suddenly cools down.

The enthusiasm and sympathy they’ve experienced after such a long time probably caused their enraged behavior.

The thoughts that had been hidden deep inside their heart suddenly rises to the surface.

I would know.

* * *

After the battle, Lee Joon Suk comes over.

He's completed almost the entire dungeon alone, but there is no dissatisfaction on his face.

On the contrary, he is grateful to have a chance to stand out.

“We have to divide the team into three groups here. We should split into three teams and then rendezvous at the last stage of this dungeon.”

There are three branched paths in front of Lee Joon Suk.

I ask if we could maintain a single group, but Lee Joon Suk informs me that there are 3 tokens we must collect at the end of each branched path in order to complete the dungeon...

The description is quite detailed.

This guy may have known about the dungeon beforehand.

“You and Lee Jin will be a team. “

“Yeah, got it.”

Seeing him answer so readily tells me that it was meant to be arranged this way.

“I'll go with Hyung Jin to this branch. “

“Do I have to go alone?”

John Overton asks.

“No.”

I turn my head and glance at the frog who has been silent.

“Keeek ! ”

The frog raises his forelimbs in a swoop as if he was waiting for my signal.

What a flexible frog.

“You’re with the frog. It’s just the right amount of participants.”

John Overton starts to look like death after being told to team up with the frog.

It’s easy to work with the frog.

Obedient and discerning.

You can also mount it.

His torso is furry because his body is a dog’s instead of a frog’s...

“But I came here in order to witness your strength...”

“Keeek!”

“Look, the frog wants to be with you. Go with it. “

“...No, I...”

“Keeek!

“OK, fine.”

Chapter 227

The Tournament (27)

[You've obtained the token.]

After breaking through all the traps and reaching the end of the branch path, we finally retrieved the token in the form of a blue gem.

[You're not allowed to enter yet.]

[Please wait until all teams have retrieved their tokens at each branch path.]

It seems that there's a team that hasn't retrieved their token yet.

Maybe it's John Overton and the frog.

The frog would be of little practical help.

Or perhaps it's Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin's group who hasn't obtained the token yet.

Because Lee Joon Suk must want to proceed slowly.

Lee Jin may think the same way.

"It's quite interesting."

I nod after hearing what Lee Hyung Jin said.

I can see why everyone repeatedly challenges the tournament stage to gradually raise their records.

The tournament isn't just competitive, but it's also fun.

It felt like playing a virtual reality game, solving puzzles, avoiding traps, figuring out the correct direction, they were all enjoyable.

“Do challengers of other difficulties use this method to clear stages?”

Asked Lee Hyung Jin.

I shake my head.

“No. They would never find the stage enjoyable this way.”

What if the stages in the tutorial were designed just like this?

The tournament is able to maintain a relaxed and joyous atmosphere to increase motivation among challengers regardless of their difficulties instead of inducing tension and fear...

Challengers may achieve higher results in the future due to this.

On the contrary, the opposite may occur as well.

In any case, there won't be as many people dying due to the new design.

“Big bro, What's wrong?”

“Nothing. I'm just pondering something...”

As I am in deep in thought, Lee Hyung Jin beside me asks.

This guy is talented at reading faces, which is not always a good thing.

The other two groups haven't finished their branch so I give Lee Hyung Jin a break.

Then I continue my internal strife.

My end goal is to escape the tutorial system.

I don't want to escape alone, I want to also liberate others trapped in the tutorial.

As long as they want to.

The problem in this case is that the tutorial system itself could crash.

No matter how superhuman I am, it's an almost insurmountable challenge to destroy the system created by the Gods with a human body.

But I still want to consider the consequences of that.

Because I'm toiling away to achieve this goal and making this futile dream a reality.

So I want to scrutinize it in advance.

If the tutorial truly disappeared.

The tutorial exists for two purposes.

One is to cultivate the apostles of God and have them collect the essences from origin monsters.

The other purpose is to cultivate superhumans through the tutorial so that they can suppress the monsters in the external world.

The first reason is trivial, but the second is a necessity.

If I completely get rid of the tutorial one day, people who have nothing to do with it will suffer.

I'm concerned about that.

If the tutorial is destroyed, a new tutorial needs to be created so I'm pondering how I can incorporate the tournament's design into it.

It should be enjoyable so that it can stimulate the interest of the challengers.

Just make it more like a game.

Naturally, problems concerning the tensions and the mindset of the challengers may arise, but there are also those who risk their lives to play games.

Overall, it shouldn't be a pressing concern.

Above all, this will prevent people from committing suicide if they can't withstand the despair.

For now, the concept has been sorted.

It is pointless to worry anymore.

I haven't even completed the first goal of escaping the tutorial so I shouldn't think too far ahead.

Now is the time to solve the more urgent issues.

“Hyung Jin.”

“Yes, Big bro.”

“Have the other teams arrived yet?”

“No.”

“Then stand up. Let's spar.”

“...Huh?”

“Hurry up. It'll only take 10 minutes.”

Lee Hyung Jin's face loses blood after hearing what I said.

He calls me as he unconsciously retreats

“Big bro.”

“What?”

“Give me a break.”

* * *

“You always have this problem. It’s good to be realistic and intuitive, but it’s not good to constantly avoid danger. Am I going to kill you, huh? ”

“Th-That’s dangerous!”

“Hey! It’s dangerous to go to the supermarket in winter! Many people die when they fall on the icy roads. We all bear that risk when going to the supermarket. It’s natural to be at risk when you’re trying to gain something. “

Although I’m the one who said it, I find my metaphor a little strange.

So I change the topic.

“Before thinking about how dangerous it will be to spar with me, you should think about how valuable it will be to you. This is an opportunity that no one else will ever get. “

“Still...”

“Sparing is no more dangerous than walking on icy roads. The gap between our strengths ensures that there won’t be any dangers. “

“But there could be accidents.”

That’s what the skill difference ensures that there are no accidents.

Everyone is afraid of the potential damage and the death that follows danger, but Lee Hyung Jin's avoidance of danger is surprisingly high.

It's even more surprising since he's a challenger who has made it to the 13th floor of Hell Difficulty.

I question how such a safety oriented person made it to the 13th floor.

It took me a while to convince Lee Hyung Jin to stand up.

Others would think I'm pestering him like a teacher if they saw this.

I give Lee Hyung Jin a little time to warm up.

His warm up lasts more than five minutes.

"Let's get started, big bro. Please."

Ugh, this coward.

After his words, Lee Hyung Jin makes a quick leap towards me.

I'm a little shocked.

I didn't expect him to come straight at me.

And it's quite swift.

He would be faster than the past me if I didn't have Blink.

I put out my hand and ready a counterattack.

As Lee Hyung Jin rushes towards me, he sees this and swerves to the side.

But because of his inertia, he goes past me.

This bastard, what is he doing?

His sprint puts him all the way back creating a huge distance and then rushes up again.

I turn around to prepare for his attack again.

However, Lee Hyung Jin changes his direction again as he approaches me.

Then he runs far behind me a second time.

“Hey, bitch, stop messing around!”

“But as soon as I close the distance, I feel like I can’t do it! What can I do!?”

Lee Hyung Jin protests.

I ask him to explain in detail, he claims he would feel impending death once he enters a certain range so he felt he couldn’t do it at all.

I smack my lips at his explanation.

A wonderful intuition.

“Ahbooboo, help him.”

[Yes, warrior.]

Ahbooboo comes out of my waist and flies towards Lee Hyung Jin.

Lee Hyung Jin mistakes it for an attack upon seeing it and starts running away.

I feel a headache at the sight of him.

Eventually Ahbooboo catches up to Lee Hyung Jin by tripping his leg, thus ending the game of tag between a sword and a man.

Then Ahbooboo is clasped in Lee Hyung Jin's hands.

Although Ahbooboo acts like that, he is a holy sword gifted by God.

His main feature isn't his own attack prowess, but assisting the wielder and supplementing his strength.

In addition, Ahbooboo has a very special ability.

“AHHHHH!”

Lee Hyung Jin screeches in madness.

That's the response of the person holding a holy sword for the first time, how amazing.

Being directly connected with a holy sword and feeling the power its transmitting is not a common occurrence.

Interestingly, people tend to regard this power as their own.

Those who wield Ahbooboo become powerful and arrogant, in turn, Ahbooboo will lead the wielder to become more savage.

That's what happened to the warriors on the 26th floor and to those on the 40th floor who accepted Abooboo in order to be safe.

He is not so much a holy sword as a magic sword.

Lee Hyung Jin swings the sword horizontally.

I know what he's doing.

This is the skill with the over exaggerated name called Spatial Rift Mind Slash that Ahbooboo uses to deceive people with.

In order to encourage him, I take this move directly with my body.

Lee Hyung Jin shows an unbelievable expression upon seeing the sword's effect.

I'd be surprised too if I could suddenly launch a sword attack across space.

But the skill doesn't actually cut space.

After struggling with his thoughts, Lee Hyung Jin comes straight at me.

Lee Hyung Jin sprints straight forward and crosses one interval, the next interval, and the final interval at melee distance.

I'm satisfied with the result.

Lee Hyung Jin chooses to stab me.

"Boowoong", there is a sound of vibrations in the atmosphere as he brandishes the sword.

I don't dodge and instead counter it directly with a precise jab from my hands.

Bang!

A slight shock wave occurs followed by a roar.

I rub my hands and retrieve Ahbooboo from Lee Hyung Jin, who has fainted because of the shock wave.

"Thanks for your hard work."

[My pleasure, but is that the end? He doesn't know what he just experienced.]

Ahbooboo comments.

Obviously Lee Hyung Jin wouldn't understand that technique.

He would still be lost even if I explained it to him.

“Forget it. I wanted this guy to have the courage to face death even if only for a while. “

[Really?]

I don't want Lee Hyung Jin to risk his life to clear stages like me.

But Lee Hyung Jin may face an inevitable situation someday.

If Lee Hyung Jin is faced with the worst possible situation where he can't escape, I hope he'll push himself a step further instead of giving in to frustration.

Although his move was made in the rashness of emotions, he did take the initiative to approach death.

Remembering that feeling will help him a lot.

[Well, ordinary people don't grow in this way.]

“That guy is not an ordinary person.”

[Is that so?]

That is so.

He's a challenger who's climbed to the 13th floor of Hell Difficulty.

Sometimes I think about it.

Would I be able to do as much as Lee Hyung Jin in Hell Difficulty if my only goal was to survive?.

I doubt it.

I would have perished early.

I can recall how tense I was back in the days of the 18th floor when the curse disappeared.

[Your team members have retrieved their tokens.]

[You're not allowed to enter yet]

[Please wait until all teams have retrieved their tokens at each branch path.]

It seems another group has obtained the token.

There is one group remaining.

Maybe it's John Overton and the frog.

It's going to take a while.

Lee Hyung Jin is still in a coma so I lay him down in a comfortable position and examine his condition.

There is no abnormality.

[I'm surprised.]

Ahbooboo says.

I heard him say this not long ago.

I was in my dorm room watching people play with the frog.

[I didn't expect you would teach others in this way. You not only figured out what's most important for him, but also helped him overcome his shortcomings.]

“Why, do you think I'm incapable as a teacher? Eh?”

I am in a bad mood for some reason.

[No. It's not so much that you can teach, but rather that I just didn't expect you to devote so much effort to such a weak person. Although he has some potential, he is too insignificant compared with other beings you have met before. Is it because he is your fellow countryman?]

"Is there a trend? Did you think I would treat the weak like rubbish?"

[Do you not?]

Holding back my anger, I try to come up with a response.

"...No. Haven't you seen the people who exist simply to be protected? Those are the weakest beings you can ever meet."

[I thought that your humanity had not degenerated to that extent at that time, so I brushed over it.]

I get a reflexive urge to throw Ahbooboo into the inventory.

But I resist.

I'm answering his questions and have a dialogue with him right now.

"When I judge a person, their weaknesses don't matter. I don't care how strong or weak others are."

[But...]

"I'm usually angered if my opponent's strength does not match my expectations, especially when they have higher capabilities than me."

Ahbooboo becomes silent.

Is he reflecting on my words?

Or sorting out his thoughts?

If not, is he doing something else?

[Warrior, it's typical and normal to look down upon the weak. The world belongs to the mighty. I don't think it's wrong to worship power. It's inevitable that we consider the weak unnecessary. It's even stranger to be angry in front of weak enemies.]

Ahbooboo is a gift from the God of the Sky.

It's quite natural for Ahbooboo to act this way considering God's character.

But since I agree with him, my way of thinking is not normal.

"I think so too. I want my enemies to be stronger because I want myself to be in more perilous situations."

I'm insane.

"Perhaps that's the difference between me and this guy."

I point to Lee Hyung Jin, who is still in a coma.

[What does it mean?]

"This guy tries his best to clear stages in order to survive, but I constantly rushed towards my death back then. As you said, this is not a normal way of thinking, but paradoxically, that's how I survived. "

[Except you don't think so anymore.]

"Yes."

Although not completely different, there have been some changes.

I'm nothing but a moth according to God of slow.

But now I don't want to die trying to achieve my goals.

Ahbooboo calms down as if he had nothing left to ask.

Now it's my turn to ask questions.

I call him.

"Ahbooboo."

[Yes, warrior.]

"Don't you think you've been questioning me excessively lately?"

He replies a bit late.

[What?]

"You always dig into my intentions. I had thought you just wanted to understand me more since you're my companion, or that you were worried about my well-being because you cared. However, recently you've been trying to dig into my most intimate thoughts."

I get a feeling of silence from Ahbooboo.

This never happened before.

Perhaps this only happens when he is disturbed enough.

A link between me and him has opened in a way I don't understand.

"I feel like you're investigating me."

[I... Warrior, that...]

"You'd better think of a good answer if you don't want to break in two right here."

Chapter 228

The Tournament (28)

“You’d better have an adequate answer.”

Ahbooboo’s feelings are conveyed to me through my hands as I hold him.

The more Ahbooboo shakes, the more vivid and rich his feeling becomes.

[Warrior, that... I...]

He seems to want to say something, but he stops as if he hasn’t sorted out his thoughts.

He stutters a few words, but then becomes silent again.

I’m willing to wait.

I’m not in a hurry, so I hope Ahbooboo can give the answer his full consideration.

Ahbooboo doesn’t answer me until a low snore comes from Lee Hyung Jin, who is still unconscious.

His answer is very simple.

[I’m sorry, warrior.]

An apology.

That answer has many meanings.

I am satisfied because he doesn't deny what he's done.

I've spent a few months observing Ahbooboo before asking this question.

In order to ensure that my suspicions were correct, I revealed certain information about myself to sound him out.

It wasn't just a suspicion, It's confirmed that Ahbooboo was spying on my intelligence and thoughts.

Like Ahbooboo, I keep silent for a long time before I reveal my answer.

Ahbooboo must be burning up inside while waiting for it, but I wanted to give the answer only after a lot of deliberation.

But maybe I've already made this decision.

"You know, I understand your situation, but tone it down."

The words after my deliberation are dry.

I wanted to say something cool and powerful, but when people try to do something they don't usually do, their brain refuses to function.

[Yeah... Thank you.]

I nod after I listen to Ahbooboo.

I have solved another problem.

The issues concerning Ahbooboo have ended.

I've also considered other outcomes. For example, Ahbooboo may give me unsatisfactory answers, but that doesn't mean that he'll justify his behavior or fight to prove his innocence.

I got to know him through our time together since meeting on the 26th floor.

Ahbooboo knows me as well.

So I don't believe that he would do those things.

I'm glad and relieved.

His approach was obviously wrong, but considering the relationship between the Gods and Ahbooboo, I can understand his intent to improve his understanding of me.

I'm being watched by the gods for 24 hours a day.

Ahbooboo's behavior doesn't make me uncomfortable.

Most of all, I don't think Ahbooboo was just spying on me during the time I spent with him.

That's why I did this.

I had planned to turn a blind eye to this matter to let it turn over as soon as possible, but I still needed to tell him.

I wanted to warn him in advance.

Before he crosses the line.

I wanted to tell him that this was as far as I can allow.

The link that transmitted Ahbooboo's feeling disappears.

I have a new hypothesis regarding this link.

Perhaps Ahbooboo didn't clear the link between us, not because he was too agitated, but because he wanted to convey his feelings to me.

He may've had difficulties articulating his words.

I'll need a better grasp on this link.

The entire space becomes quiet after Ahbooboo becomes silent.

I can only hear my breathing and the low snoring of Lee Hyung Jin, who is still unconscious.

Seregia remains silent as usual.

I wake up Lee Hyung Jin.

Lee Hyung Jin reflexively opens his eyes as soon as my hand touches his body.

“Get up, man. How long do you want to sleep?”

Lee Hyung Jin stands up and looks around without saying a word.

He probably dozes a lot while clearing stages, so he is very alert when he wakes up.

I can't help but think of the timid herbivores because he has the habit of closing his lips and holding his breath to confirm his surroundings.

Lee Hyung Jin sits next to me and scratches his head.

“That... Have the other two teams not arrived yet?”

I nod.

I thought the remaining team would be John Overton and the frog.

But this is taking too long.

Even if he's teamed with the frog, John Overton shouldn't have this much trouble dealing with the instance dungeon.

If so, he wouldn't be able to pass the 6th floor of Hell Difficulty, let alone live to the present.

So it seems that Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin are the ones who haven't retrieved their token yet.

I decide not to think about what's keeping them from proceeding.

It's rude.

"How did it feel to face death?"

Lee Hyung Jin laughs maniacally after hearing my question.

"I don't know what to think about it. What's the matter with that sword? It drives me crazy."

I chuckle at Lee Hyung Jin when he asks me if it's better to throw away the sword.

Ahbooboo would usually pop out a comment or two, but he is unusually quiet now.

"I don't know. The moment I rushed in felt incredible. How should I describe it? Joy? It might be closer to pleasure. Why is that... I felt like I was going all-in on a gambling party. I had a similar feeling when I was climbing the floors, but this is the first time it felt so intense."

"Do you gamble?"

"No, I'm just saying."

That pleasure is closer to suicide jumping off a roof.

This is caused by hormones secreted by the brain in the face of death.

I advise him as someone who has experienced it countless times.

"Don't get addicted to that feeling."

I warn him in advance even though I don't think Lee Hyung Jin would fall into addiction.

Lee Hyung Jin replies that it would never happen.

“Hyung, I'm not sure of myself. Can I really do it?”

Just like the last tournament or during the Day of Great Harmony*, I'm asked this question every time we meet.

Used to be translated as Grand Conference before, but Day of Great Harmony (the first translator's version) is more closer to its original meaning. I'll keep it in following chapters. – Jiujiuba*

“You can.”

“But I don't have the confidence to be like you.”

That's for sure.

“It'd be too greedy to aim for my level. There are too many differences in our efforts.”

“Is that so...”

“Hyung Jin, you've come a long way. Most of your upcoming floors follow a set theme so it's relatively easy to clear them with information alone. It'll be different from the 6th and 11th floors.

As long as there is enough information, some stages can be cleared in a day.

So I believe Lee Hyung Jin can make it.

“The most important thing is that you're on the 13th floor. Purposely fail the floor until you're able to reach the room where Armout is. You'll experience countless failures, but also countless paths to grow. The 13th floor monks are extremely powerful relative to the floors nearby and are very welcoming. They'll advise you whenever possible.

If you can achieve a significant growth on the 13th floor, the future floors will become less threatening. Spend a year or two on the 13th floor. You'll be unstoppable in the next few floors as a result."

Note : Armout is the name of the Master Monk who resides in room 33 at the end of the 13th floor trial. – Godlycash

Lee Hyung Jin is silent to my advice.

I believe the 13th floor is the safest way to develop oneself in hell.

Going through the 11th and 12th floors improve a challenger's survivability while the 13th floor improves a challenger's personal skills.

Even challengers who depended on long range attacks or recovery abilities for a party to clear the 11th floor would gain the strength to fight alone after spending enough time on the 13th floor.

This would take a long time to hone, but it's better than climbing floors because the monks are friendly enough to communicate and advise the challenger.

Lee Hyung Jin brightens up after hearing the hopeful and practical advice.

I continue to talk to him about the 13th floor and make suggestions for improving himself. At this time, the message that the last group has obtained the token pops out.

[You've obtained all the tokens.]

[You may proceed.]

* * *

The last ones to retrieve the token are Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin.

No one asked them why they were so slow.

Everyone can easily guess.

It's just that Lee Hyung Jin and John Overton were giving uncomfortable looks to Lee Joon Suk.

They really despise Lee Joon Suk.

Lee Joon Suk doesn't mind, on the contrary, he seems to be enjoying himself.

It's not that he doesn't care about those two, he's just too distracted to pay them any mind.

He is really enjoying himself.

“Keeek ! ”

The frog says “long time no see” to me while looking energetic.

Long time no see?

It's only been two or three hours since we separated.

After thinking about it, the frog seems to be satirizing because Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin were late.

It's a pity that I'm the only one who can understand the frog.

In the final room of the dungeon stood a towering golem.

Golems usually take the form of stone statues in video games, and their actions are sluggish.

It's fine to relax right in front of it.

“It'll be difficult for me to combat that with my ability. Electric shocks won't do much I'm afraid.”

Lee Joon Suk mutters.

This guy's reliance on his power skill is making him vulnerable to enemies who are non-conductive.

He'll need to prepare counter measures against throwing weapons in the future...

I'll talk to him about it later.

"I'll do it."

Neither Lee Hyung Jin or John Overton seem to want to step up.

Most importantly, Overton only came along to witness my combat prowess.

[Woah.]

The golem roars and charges towards us.

I stretched my hand and drew it in a downward motion.

"Mind Slash."

The golems split in half vertically like tofu.

The magic crystal in its chest has been cut as well in that process so it'll never rise again.

[Was that necessary?]

Seregia breaks the silence and asks.

Seregia strangely dislikes it when I do pompous things when I activate a skill.

Of course it is necessary.

[Stage cleared!]

[Calculating results.]

[Points earned: 390]

[Current rank: 4th.]

[Please wait patiently until the next stage begins.]

The stage has been cleared.

4th place.

According to the rules, the lowest score of 10 teams would be eliminated.

But I'm not satisfied with my rank.

“Let's challenge something a little more difficult.”

I tell them while they are still staring between me and the golem's remnants.

After a while, John Overton asks me in surprise how I did it and if I could teach him, but I stop him and speak to Seregia.

[Look, Seregia. It's meaningful.]

[No, it's not.]

* * *

“Let's challenge 10 stars.”

Lee Joon Suk is shocked at my declaration.

“Big bro, let's challenge 6 stars. The most difficult dungeon I've challenged is only 5 stars. I have no clue what we'll have to deal with at 10 stars, besides we have plenty of opportunities so shouldn't we go up one by one? “

Note : Changing “hyung” to “big bro” because that's what a previous translator did and honestly there is someone with the word Hyung in their name. – GodlyCash

“Very well, then. choose a stage we can challenge together.”

“Alright.”

Lee Hyung Jin and John aren't dissatisfied with the difficulty choice either.

John's eyes are brightening in eagerness to witness more of my strength.

It didn't feel good to be watched by a man with burning eyes.

We picked a dungeon and waited to start when an unexpected message popped up in front of us.

It's a voting message.

[Voting begins.]

[For: 13, against: 0.]

[In order to test the challengers, the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple have decided to randomly change the stage.]

[Stage information]

Explanation: This is a stage specially designed to test emerging challengers from Earth.

Because of the rush of production, this dungeon has no special features.

Difficulty: ???

[Voting begins.]

[Do you want to challenge the new stage?]

[Please choose for or against.]

“For.”

[For: 1, against: 0]

The message window has been updated.

I agreed as soon as I read the message.

Voting ends when one side has the majority.

It's the first time I've encountered this situation, but other challengers who fight in parties have experienced it many times before.

“Keeek!”

[For: 2, against:0]

The discerning frog votes for it.

I didn't even think frogs could vote.

“This... this is far too risky. The difficulty level is question marks. That means it's more than 10 stars. Wouldn't it be better to just veto it and challenge another stage?”

Lee Joon Suk asks.

“Just approve it.”

“I'm for.”

Lee Hyung Jin votes in favor.

It turns out there's another discerning guy.

[For: 3, against: 0]

Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin are hesitant because they are panicking so I turn to John.

The stage can start after one more vote.

"I came to witness your powers, but isn't this too risky? No, it's dangerous because we get the chance to vote. Let's follow your friend's advice where we refrain from it and challenge something else."

"Vote for it."

"But..."

"You'll be forced to abstain if you don't."

Chapter 229

The Tournament (29)

[For: 4, against: 0]

[Entering the stage.]

We arrive on a desolate wasteland.

Under the cloudless blue sky and the boundless wilderness, I can't help thinking that this place was haphazardly made by the gods.

Fortunately it's very spacious because the horizon can be seen no matter which direction you look.

Our opponents stand 200 meters away from us.

Those guys should be the stage's targets.

I was a little surprised when I saw the message showing that the gods created this stage specifically to test me.

The gods are unable to accurately measure my capabilities.

It's been like this for quite a while.

Kirikiri, who had warned me that a stage would be extremely difficult, had to shed tears of sadness in front of me when I returned after easily clearing the floor.

Although, she only cried because we had betted on cake.

It is unknown what gods have prepared to test me or whether their arrangement can properly measure my capabilities.

So I believed that my opponents on this stage would adapt to the corresponding strength of the challengers.

But the gods' method is way simpler than I thought.

They prepared a welcome ceremony for me.

My enemies are donned in the same clothes with the same two swords as me.

Using my face and body, they exude the same pressure as me.

It's a great choice.

The most recent actual threat I faced is the mirage on the 17th floor during the 35th floor trial.

The easiest method to measure my strength is to create a mirage with the same powers and magic as me.

The mirage I met on the 17th floor had better equipment and abilities, but I still managed to get the upper hand.

However, I'm not confident I can surpass these guys.

[In 600 seconds, the stage will start.]

"Big bro... Those things look just like you."

"Right?"

There are 6 mirages.

It matches the number of contestants.

Do I have to overcome not only my own mirage, but the mirages that spawned as a result of this party?

I don't know why there are six mirages.

"Listen, everyone."

"Yeah?"

"Run away. Don't look back. Don't stop until you reach the end of the stage."

I point in the opposite direction of the mirages.

"Keeek!"

The frog begins to run the moment I finish speaking.

Soon after, Lee Hyung Jin also starts sprinting.

The frog is quickly overtaken by him.

The next one to run is John.

It becomes clear which players are from hell difficulty based on who's escaping immediately.

Oh, I see. They both just hate Lee Joon Suk.

Maybe they don't like Lee Jin either.

"What are you doing? You guys should go too."

Lee Joon Suk and Lee Jin, who are dazed staring at the two hell difficulty challengers and frog fleeing, start running away themselves.

Lee Joon Suk sprints with Lee Jin in his arms.

Flashes of electricity and light on his body seem to come from a mobility technique related to his lightning power skill.

After seeing them off, I slowly walk towards the mirages.

A transparent barrier between us blocks me since the stage has yet to start.

I lean close to the barrier to observe my mirages.

“How exciting.”

[This could be extremely dangerous, warrior.]

[Why don't you call those people back? They can be used as disposable shields.]

[Or they can be used to test the capabilities of the mirages.]

Ahbooboo and Seregia say one thing after another.

“No. Their presence will only hinder me.”

[We don't know what kind of mirages these are. On the surface, they seem to have the same level of strength as you, warrior, but I can't estimate their hidden potential. Since they're the creation of gods, they may be stronger than you, so your choice needs to be carefully considered.]

[The stage will begin after 540 seconds]

“Don't be a wimp.”

[Huh?]

“It doesn't matter if they're made by gods or whatever. As long as they only equal me in power, I'll win.”

* * *

[Stage will soon begin.]

[What's the plan?]

“To try my best.”

I don't know since when.

I have been concealing my limits.

I don't know my upper limits because I've never come close to it, so even the gods should be unable to calculate my limits either.

What was my reason for it?

Maybe it's because a martial arts magazine had advised readers to keep their skills hidden.

Or maybe it's because I didn't want to show off everything.

But more important than that, I have yet to meet a situation where I'm pushed to my limits.

No matter what kind of situation I come across, there is no need to preserve my spare energy if it's dangerous enough to warrant my full strength.

What's more, I have no reason to hide my potential when the gods gracefully sent six mirages to measure my strength.

My soul sword exits her sheath.

Ahbooboo soars around my area to assist me.

[This is bad. Those mirages possess the exact same swords as you. Are they all fakes? Just copies of me, right?]

Ahbooboo complains.

Perhaps they are.

I first met Ahbooboo inside the stage, but he became my reward for successfully clearing the 26th floor.

Maybe the Ahbooboo that the God of the Sky gave me is genuine.

Maybe not.

[The stage commences.]

As soon as the message appears, I rush forward.

I rush towards the mirage positioned on the far right.

The mirage spreads Talaria's Wings and brandishes his swords.

It's not surprising that the mirages possess the same power skills as me.

I activate my skill as our sword auras collide.

[Blink]

Blink is one of my oldest skills, I received it after clearing the 2nd floor.

I'm experienced enough to use it as easily as breathing.

I blink in the same location, but in a different stance to slash down the mirage's blade.

But the mirage wields his sword again without yielding to my offensive.

I underestimated the enemy.

I sacrifice my right arm to brandish the sword with my left arm.

My slash creates a trail of aura that tears the space along with the mirage into pieces.

The mirage shatters upon death.

“.....”

A trivial end.

Vital organs like the heart and neck are in pieces so his resurrection isn't a worry.

“Isn't he much better than I've heard?”

One of the mirages whispers.

Despite losing one of their comrades, the other five are indifferent.

“He's more reckless than the rumors stated.”

“We're reduced by one from six, but he sacrificed one of his arms in turn. I can't count that as a fair trade.”

Listening to their snarky remarks, I'm furious at how dense they are.

I snatched my right arm that was sent flying in the sky.

I ripped off the sword equipped on my right arm by holding the arm in place with my mouth and grabbing it with my left hand.

“Don't be too hasty, challenger. We only came to measure your limit. We have no intentions of harming you. ”

“Are you guys apostles?”

I inquired about the mirages.

“Why do you think so?”

“If you guys were truly my mirage, you would not be so weak.”

Several mirages laughed.

What a bunch of nuts.

If these guys were truly my mirage, they would never die so easily.

In fact, the mirage who just died had sensed the attack from my left hand.

But he couldn't resist it.

I would have stopped it.

I'm capable enough to stop it.

But the mirage couldn't.

He had the leisure to react and should've recognized the attack beforehand.

Despite knowing this, he still didn't react so he must've believed he could've resisted it.

He must have thought he could take or evade my attack and then he prepared his next move.

My true mirages would've stormed me the moment I rushed over to one of them.

Instead of standing there and laughing like this.

They are not my mirages.

They're just people who put my body on.

So it's easy to guess who these people are.

Gods cannot directly interfere to that level, so their disciples must be in control.

“Correct.”

One of the mirages confirms my suspicions.

Their arrogant tone is really unpleasant.

I recall the mirage I faced on the 35th floor.

My current situation is opposite to the 35th floor.

My mirage rivaled me in skills and power, but my experience was superior.

This time they have superior experience.

I calmly analyse the situation.

They can use my powers from a higher realm, but they also have limits.

Note: This is a repeat of floor 35, I'll try to look at the world again to see if it's truly realm. I recall one of the definitions we had was “state of being”. I believe it something like “different dimension” or “different level” in terms of power scaling. I'll continue to work on this. – GodlyCash

My limit is their limit.

This is a confrontation between apostles who can use my powers from a higher realm and me using my powers more skillfully.

“This will be fun.”

Firstly, let's upset the situation.

I mold my aura in the air and spin it.

“Stop, challenger! We’ve only come to test your limits! “

“Lalala, I can’t hear you~.”

“We should subdue him before testing him.”

The mirages speak a few words to each other then spread their wings and rush towards me.

Aside from them, I sense an additional threat from a different direction.

I know what that threat is.

My technique, Spatial Rift Mind Slash, unfolds before me.

When I used it, I never noticed that the technique was so conspicuous.

It seems necessary to improve this skill to be more covert.

After breaking through the barrage of Mind Slashes, I calmly attack the apostles.

It’s clear that the apostles have yet to familiarize themselves with my strength.

They’re trying to unleash attacks that exceed my limits, so they repeatedly miss opportunities.

I can’t overwhelm all five of them at the same time, but I can maintain aura spheres with one arm alone.

Designate Opponent, that increased my power proportionally to my opponent’s level, and Perseverance, which increased my strength proportional to the number of enemies, are very helpful here.

Zit Pop is almost finished.

The apostles that had rushed at me in irritation and impatience start to form faces of discomfort and embarrassment.

Now, they step back with obvious panic, unlike the beginning.

However, they did not try to stop my Zit Pop.

The apostle formed their own aura spheres.

They were invisible, but those must also be Zit Pop.

You guys want to perish with me?

Good.

“Let’s go to hell, you bastards.”

The invisible aura spheres start to glow from the generated heat.

“Zit Pop.”

* * *

Another flash.

Under the collisions of Light Swords, everything burned and everyone was blinded, but those problems were insignificant.

Everything in this area has already been consumed by flames.

The empty wasteland can no longer be found as a result of being melted by flames.

Sensing that the whole space is filled with light and heat, this is what I envisioned hell to be like.

No, the God of Light would enjoy this so it’d be heaven to certain gods.

I can leisurely sort my thoughts thanks to my light sword.

The first two forms of Light Sword can be simplified as stabbing and slashing.

As the friction between the accelerating aura intensifies, so does the dissipating light and heat.

The destructiveness of this skill is far beyond the capacity of the users.

If used improperly, the user will be in a more perilous situation than the enemy. The user will not be safe even if the technique is used successfully. It can still be considered a suicidal technique.

It's very powerful, but it requires too much focus and skill to use.

By the time I mastered the first two forms, I considered discarding the technique.

If the knight on the 16th floor hadn't mentioned the peculiar third form, I wouldn't have continued to hone it.

The third form of light sword returns to its foundation as a defensive swordsmanship.

Light Sword is a technique that burns and destroys everything including the user, but the third form is a defensive technique.

It is counterintuitive.

I once thought that this insane technique was created to destroy the world and see who would survive in the end.

The completion of the third form requires me to rotate the energy.

The third form is the sustainable use of Light Sword.

An omnidirectional attack.

It doesn't matter where I direct the technique, everything will be destroyed by the Light Sword.

So I twist and rotate this force, turning myself into the eye of a typhoon to escape from the storm.

When I was left with no power and a weak body on the 35th floor, I used Light Sword to slay the demon king.

“Time Confinement.”

I use Time Confinement again.

As time slowed down, everything else slowed along with it.

I've lost count of how many times I've activated Time Confinement since the beginning of this battle.

Our initial confrontation feels like distant past.

One of the apostles' Light Sword is being absorbed by our immense chain of energy.

Compared to the intense concentrated rings of energy, the Light Sword seems weak and insignificant.

I don't sense this with my eyes.

Because of the strong light, my eyeballs are in a constant state of recovery and can no longer function.

Even if my eyes were still functional, this is not a fight that can be observed with the naked eye.

The world through the eyes of magic is magnificent.

The six rings formed by intersecting light and heat are slowly rotating.

Time is supposed to slow to a near halt through Time Confinement, but the world around me continues to move slowly.

Six rapidly rotating rings are absorbing everything in the surroundings.

Little by little we close in on each other.

The five apostles and I initially tried to distance ourselves, but the force of attraction pulled us closer together.

But I can't withdraw any energy.

I'll die on the spot the moment I hold back.

On the contrary, I need to pour more strength to keep it under my grasp for fear of losing all of it.

The end is approaching.

The rings of energy will collide soon.

The result is obvious.

Everything will be engulfed in flames.

It is fun to imagine a landscape filled to the brim with the inferno.

I observe the massive flow of energy in Time Confinement.

Time Confinement abruptly ends and the rings of energy that were moving slowly now rotate violently.

[Warrior! We'll die if it goes on like this!]

Ahbooboo screams.

We understand each other so well.

Despite the fierce clash, his voice is conveyed with clarity.

[It'll be fine.]

After leaving him with that sentence, I reactivate Time Confinement.

I feel Ahbooboo nearing his melting point so I wanted to safeguard him in the inventory like I did with Seregia, but I don't have that kind of luxury right now.

I continue examining the clash and flow of energy within the slowed world.

I don't know how many times I can use Time Confinement before we die together.

Perhaps I should worry more about my concentration and mental limits rather than the time limit.

The efficiency of Time Confinement has vastly improved compared to the past.

I don't know if it's due to the improvement in my concentration or simply the will of the God of Slow.

If I can maintain this efficiency, I'm certain I can use Time Confinement thousands of times more before my death.

In other words, if I can't maintain my concentration and mental strength, death is inevitable.

If I persist, I'll be able to enter a new realm.

PDF by: traitor/1ZEN

GANDARA 퓨전 판타지 장편소설

튜토리얼이 너무어렵다

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 9 -

-AUTHOR-Gandara

[Centinni]

Chapter 230

The Tournament (30)

[Lee Joon Suk's Perspective]

Bang!

I couldn't guard against the shock waves that came from the distance.

I'm trying my best, but I'm limited to simply surviving.

The shock wave's impact tosses me into the sky and sends me rolling on the ground.

"Eaguh..."

I feel like one of my ribs popped out.

The explosions have been going on for more than ten minutes so nobody in the party escaped unscathed.

We should just be thankful that no one has died yet.

I trip during my rush to escape, I pause, then examine my surroundings.

The battle zone in the far distance is shining a light so difficult to look at, it feels like a second sun has appeared.

Thanks to this light, the world in front of us dyed white.

Whether it's lush green trees or bright red fruits, all of them become painted in this single color.

The earsplitting roar continues like a song.

The rumble felt like the sound of the wind acting as background music in this white world.

The heat wave scorches my back.

The source of the heat wave is so far from me and yet I'm burned to this level, it's incredible.

"Hey! Lee Joon Suk! Come on!"

Cries Lee Hyung Jin.

Lee Hyung Jin is surrounded by a white barrier he has set up to withstand the shock waves.

Everyone is hiding under his shield.

I grab my waist and stagger towards Lee Hyung Jin.

My heart feels sluggish.

Am I really going to die like this?

Meanwhile, another shock wave from the explosions hits my back.

I almost lose consciousness because of the sudden impact.

I'm sent flying by the force and into Lee Hyung Jin's protective barrier.

"Be careful landing! Mass Teleport!"

Lee Hyung Jin rips the scroll and shouts.

In the next moment I'm teleported into the air.

It's literally the void.

There are no walls, ceilings, or floors.

We're in the air tens of meters from the ground.

Lee Hyung Jin teleported us into the sky using his vision instead of specifying coordinates in order to prevent anything from overlapping.

We could've overlapped with birds, but Lee Hyung Jin ignored this risk and continued to teleport several more times.

Besides, no ordinary bird would live to fly in this environment.

Teleport is a very dangerous spell because it forcibly moves the body without any precautions, but we've used it so often today that there is no need to worry.

My ribs are dislocated, but I manage to stand on the ground.

The frog lands safely with Lee Jin on his back.

Although the frog's body is a dog's, it is still a frog after all since he's unharmed after falling from the sky.

We arrive to a high mountain ridge through teleportation.

Our current location is quite far from our previous point so the heat was nowhere near as dangerous.

While I scanned the surroundings, I felt something come up my chest.

A washbasin of blood spews out from me.

After spitting out the rest of it, I drink an elixir from my inventory.

The nuclear weapon-like explosion could contain radiation which could explain my weakness and exhaustion.

I'm a man of great endurance, but despite being supplemented with high quality potions, I still couldn't prevent my condition from declining.

The moment I exposed myself to the poison, my eyes, nose, and mouth started bleeding along with my skin melting.

My visceras feel like they are being burned over fire.

If Lee Hyung Jin hadn't warned me to recover by drinking an elixir, I might have died on the spot or committed suicide to escape the pain.

“Are there any elixirs left?! “

Lee Hyung Jin shouts.

We are very close to each other, but I'd have to shout at him to communicate.

So instead of shouting back, I just shake my head to tell him that there are no more elixirs.

Lee Hyung Jin's face darkens.

He points to Lee Jin, who's convulsing on the ground.

Lee Hyung Jin and the frog were protecting Lee Jin this entire time, but she still crossed the threshold of life and death many times due to the secondary poison released by the explosion alone.

She's already consumed six bottles of elixir.

She doesn't have any elixirs left, neither does Lee Hyung Jin so she's no different from a corpse.

Lee Hyung Jin ponders for a while, then takes out a strange sphere from his inventory and brings it right in front of Lee Jin.

Then Lee Jin disappears, leaving behind only the sphere.

“What is that!?”

Lee Hyung Jin answers with a yell.

“A monster ball!”

“.....”

I was stunned for a while, then Lee Hyung Jin clarifies himself.

“It’s a life support device contained in a subspace! This is my only one!”

Lee Hyung Jin delivers me the important information as short as possible.

John Overton is wearing something akin to a gas mask and gives Lee Hyung Jin a thumbs up.

Suddenly, the mountain begins to shake.

The ground fluctuates up and down as if it were an ocean wave.

Having experienced such a strange earthquake for the first time in our lives, everyone looks back reflexively.

There is no need to hear this as it can easily be seen.

We see the vast expansive forest just down the mountain where we had just teleported from.

The forest is on fire.

The shock wave from the explosion is rapidly flattening a city-size forest.

The forest was already burning down and now it’s being swallowed by the shock waves leaving behind no trace of it behind.

It looked as if God took an eraser and started erasing the vast forest off the face of the world for his own amusement.

Looking at the scene from the mountaintop felt like watching an invisible monster devouring the world.

“Mass Teleport!”

After shockwave flattened the whole forest, it begins to close in on the foot of the mountain, so Lee Hyung Jin readies against it with another teleportation.

I look around after another successful and dangerous landing.

This time we arrive on a shoreline.

I look back, but the mountain range blocks my view.

They're the mountains we were just on.

The explosion's roar became more manageable with the mountain in between, but most importantly, we're no longer directly exposed to the extreme light.

Chapter 230.15

The Tournament (30.5)

The invisible shockwaves caused by the explosion reached the mountain then slowly lessened.

“Ughhh.” John Overton scrambled to remove his gas mask and emptied his stomach’s contents. The absence of blood in his bile ruled out the possibility of poisoning.

I checked my stomach. I didn’t feel like vomiting after puking out a massive amount of blood a moment ago.

“Hah...” I let out an exhausted sigh, and a symphony of sighs and gasps surrounded me. “Are we safe?”

“Not yet,” Lee Hyung Jin mumbled while shaking his head.

“How many more times are we supposed to teleport, and how far are we?” I asked.

“On the other side of the planet,” said Lee Hyung Jin while taking out another scroll from his inventory. Even though my vision was blurred and my legs trembled, I readied myself for another round of teleporting.

* * *

“How’s the situation?” I asked.

Lee Hyung Jin took a look around before replying, “We should be on the other side of the planet. Any further, and we’ll start to feel the heat’s intensity increase. “

The environment here was too extreme, and one could feel the temperature rising regardless of whether you took a step forwards or backward. The coolest area here was located on the other side of the planet, where the fight had taken place.

The power I had used was real, even though it seemed blasphemous, and my ability shocked even myself. Was I even human? It wouldn't be inaccurate to call myself a god, no? If I used this kind of strength on Earth... ah, I'd kill everyone without a doubt.

Even if I used a quarter of my powers, humans would still bow to me and treat me like a god. As someone whose skills could change a planet's geography, what better word other than god could describe me? Ah, my power was too divine.

I used to think that I was only strong enough to clear the Tutorial's stages and save people from the monsters appearing from gates on Earth; I never imagined that my power could be so devastating.

"Hey," Lee Hyung Jin, who was holding a shovel, called out while I was thinking.

"Yes?"

"What are you thinking about? Here, take this." I took the shovel from him, confused. He also handed John a shovel.

"Kea-ek!"

"Sorry, I don't have an extra shovel, but you can use your paws." Shockingly enough, Lee Hyung Kin was somehow able to understand the frog.

"What is this shovel for?" I asked.

"What else? It's for digging the ground," Hyung Jin said as he began digging with John and the frog following in suit. I also shovelled into the ground.

Around 30 minutes of digging later, we dug a pit so deep, that no one would be able to escape out of it easily. We were all challengers who worked together, so of course, or work should be beyond satisfactory.

We had been fretting about what to do, but since Lee Hyung Jin made us dig, I assumed he must have thought of an escape method.

“This much is enough for now. Let’s take a rest. I’m tired.”

Exhausted, three men and a frog sat together inside the pit. Even though we wanted to rest, there wasn’t enough space for us all to stretch our legs and sit comfortably. If we had the strength to move, we would have widened the hole, but since no one did, everyone just sat in a cramped manner, without complaints.

Surprisingly, the frog’s body was rather warm and soft; it was rather comfortable to lean on. Soon, warmth filled the pit. Along with it came the stench of blood and sweat. Lee Hyung Jin took something out of his inventory and sprayed it; it was a bottle of deodorant.

I inwardly laughed. He reminded me of Doraemon.

“I’ll call you Doraemon from now on.”

“Shhh. “

I wanted to crack a joke to put all of us at ease, but Lee Hyung Jin gestured for me to shut up. He placed his ear against the bottom of the pit and waited for a bit.

“I’m going crazy,” He mumbled and got back up. With an uncomfortable expression, he took out a small ball from his inventory; it was the space Lee Jin had just gone into. Clutching the ball firmly in his hand, Lee Hyung Jin sighed, and John stood up with a helpless expression.

Lee Hyung Jin immediately reprimanded him, roaring, “Sit down.”

I was about to ask why he was acting so bellicose when a message window suddenly popped up. It was a notification about a vote.

[Voting commences.]

[For: 99. Against: 0]

[The Gods of the Hundred Gods Temple have decided to send you back outside the stage. Your stage score will be decided after the remaining members pass or fail the stage.]

[Voting commences.]

[Do you wish to exit the stage?]

[Choose Yes or No]

“Yes.”

“Kea-ek!”

“Yes.”

Before I'd even finished reading the message, Lee Hyung Jin, John, and the frog had all chosen Yes. The majority of the five members had voted in favor, so the voting session ended immediately.

[Your wounds have healed and your magic, restored.]

Within seconds, we had been moved from the pit to the center of the tournament square, a peaceful place with no reverberating explosions or the haunting fear of death hanging above your head.

“Ah! We made through! “

Hearing the shout, people in the square looked over in wonder. I realised that we had actually returned when I saw people making teams and purchasing food as if nothing had happened.

Could they even imagine what we'd just experienced? Even if I told them, would they believe it?

“Are you okay?” Lee Hyung Jin, who had fallen to the floor with outstretched legs, asked me.

“Yes. Thank you very much. I survived because of you,” I said thankfully.

“If you’re that grateful, get me some elixirs,” He said as he took out the space ball where Lee Jin resided. I immediately remember Lee Jin’s state before entering the space. There was a chance that she may not have received the system recovery while staying inside.

“Wait here for a bit,” I said, and Lee Hyung Jin nodded. Standing up, I began sprinting.

Although I’d been running for the whole day and previously exhausted, the relief of surviving that brutal stage gave my legs a burst of energy.

While I ran to the headquarters of the Order of Vigilance, I thought about how grateful I was for coming back alive. It was just like a movie. No, such an extreme event wouldn’t even have appeared in a film, but I supposed that was the closest comparison I could come up with.

When we had escaped the stage, everyone in the team should’ve been healed and happy, but they still looked as though they were having a midlife crisis. Ever since John had taken off his mask, he’d been in a trance-like state. Lee Hyung Jin’s expression was even worse. He was deathly pale and still held a despaired expression, although the impending death-threat had disappeared.

Chapter 230.2

The Tournament (31)

[Let me go back.] said Ahbooboo.

I wasn't expecting Ahbooboo to ask to be put back in the inventory, but I guessed it was reasonable since his blade had melted.

Instead of putting him back, I told him, "Wait a little while longer. We'll be done soon."

Ahbooboo's melted parts wouldn't get repaired even if he was kept inside the inventory. Now that I had full control over my power, he wouldn't melt any further.

[Can you fix me?]

"I can."

Ahbooboo settled down after hearing me reassure him. I planned on consulting Kim Min Hyuk as soon as I returned. Maybe he would know how to repair Ahbooboo.

If not, I'd have to ask the administrators. Maybe I could find out how after the tournament finished up. I was confident I could fix him.

After reassuring Ahbooboo, I scanned my surroundings. The region we were in looked terrible. Was this planet created to be a stage? I wondered if it would survive after exploding.

The heatwaves around me disrupted the air and made the air currents run wild. Even though everything was burnt to a crisp, black and sooty smoke was still rising from the ground. I was right to circulate the explosions around my sword since the explosions protected me.

The problem was that the other five illusions had adopted the same tactic. I hadn't expected our Light Sword explosion rings to merge, though. The illusions shouldn't have failed like this.

We increased the distance between us, escaping before the huge energy rings collided, avoiding its impact. We could only add more power to our energy rings.

At that moment, the six energy rings collided with each other and exploded, and the shockwaves greatly overpowered me. Even if I had my current strength six times, my power would still pale in comparison to the explosion.

Witnessing this enormous strength was a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

The heat from the attack still hasn't subsided. If it had been me from before, just being here would be enough to kill me. If it had been the me from before.

I moved the heat aside using my mana.

The tall columns of flames that had been ascending upwards were swept aside by mana, creating an awe-inducing sight. I was more awed by the fact that I could create such a situation.

Generating heat with power was the foundation of magic, but dealing with heat generated by other people was an entirely different story. It was a matter of dominance.

All beings in the world could exercise control within a particular zone. This wasn't just the case for humans but also beasts and tiny insects.

Magicians could shoot fireballs, but they couldn't burn their opponents' bodies or boil the water in their bodies. To do so, they would have to intrude on their opponent's domain and exert influence on it.

The scope of one's domain was not limited to their body. Domains could be extended depending upon whether mana can be used in a long-distance range. That's the reason why magicians blocked fireballs thrown at them rather than cooling the fireball down.

The ring of energy I made to protect myself against the heatwave and oppose enemy attacks was made of my mana, so it was under my domain.

However, the illusions protected themselves and attacked others in the same way. It forced me to control the energies released by them as well.

Had I not been able to control their energies, I would've died from the explosion.

Maybe it was because they were my illusions that I attempted a move like this and successfully pulled it off.

“Impossible.” A voice rang out from below. It was my voice. One of the illusions was speaking.

[How come he's so far from us?] Ahbooboo asked.

I couldn't determine his position accurately, so I used my mana to help me clear the smoke and see the illusion better. Finally, I could see him.

He was inside the ground. The magma had engulfed half of his body.

“Absurd. This is impossible,” the illusion growled.

“What's impossible?” I smirked.

“We're perfect replicas to the point where we even have the same power and strength as you. You shouldn't have the ability to control this explosion, let alone save your life.”

“And you do?” I asked with a smile.

He remained quiet for a few moments before he muttered again. “This is impossible...”

I was a little amused after hearing him.

“There’s no difference between you and us,” the illusion said.

Was that really the case? They were mere duplicates of me, which was why they couldn’t feel the fear or dread of impending death.

There was a vast difference between us.

Their actual abilities were incompatible with the bodies they were using, which changed the mana and strength they could use. Well, that was something they couldn’t change.

“Why is it that you’re still alive?” I asked. Although he was stuck in the magma, he still had enough energy to talk to me.

“I drew up energy from my own powers,” he answered. It was too short of an answer, but it implied that he wouldn’t have suffered like this if he was in his original body.

It didn’t matter to me what he was. The most important thing was that I won today’s fight, and I’d win against them next time, even if they were in their original bodies. I was confident.

The last apostle was still talking to himself, but his words all sounded like nonsense. He’d soon be dragged into the magma.

As he died, I chuckled in satisfaction. I attempted to stifle my laughs, but I couldn’t hold back.

Yes, it was rude to laugh at someone dying, but so what? They were just illusions. It wasn’t like they were actually dying.

[Are you enjoying it?] Ahbooboo asked.

I responded to Ahbooboo affirmatively. I was elated. It had been a long time since I’d fought like this. It had been a long time since I’d experienced such a win, too. I was delighted with my success in this fight.

Wasn't it great? I was cheerful while the world was being consumed by flame.

[You have successfully cleared the stage.]

[Your mana and body are fully restored.]

[Calculating results.]

[Points earned: 6,900,390]

[Current rank: 1st]

[Please wait for the next stage]

How many points was that?

It would've been great to have been awarded a gift along with the scores, but according to Lee Joon Suk, the score only showed your rank.

[Your team members have left the stage.]

[Remaining team members (1/6)]

[Do you want to continue to the next stage?]

It looked like everyone escaped, which was fortunate. They could have died inside this stage.

I was glad they were alive. Maybe the system had let them leave beforehand? Maybe there was a way to let team members leave the stage first and wait.

I'd ask later.

I pressed on 'No' and tried to leave.

[The God of Adventure offers to let you become their apostle.]

[The God of Slow offers to let you become their apostle.]

[The God of Duel offers to let you become their apostle.]

[The God of Death offers to let you become their apostle. The God of Death deems the apostle trials as being of no use to you. If you accept, you'll become the God of Death's apostle without having to complete any trials.]

[The God of Light offers to let you become their apostle. The God of Light deems the apostle trials as being of no use to you. If you accept, you'll become the God of Light's apostle without having to complete any trials.]

[The God of the Sky offers to let you become their apostle. The God of the Sky deems the apostle trials as being of no use for you. If you accept, you'll become the God of the Sky's apostle without having to complete any trials.]

Some of the gods listed often interacted with me, and some, I had rarely been. All of them asked me to become their apostles. The God of Harvest, who I often saw within the stages, and even the God of Nature, who I was not friendly with, also offered me positions.

What a surprise.

My struggles for survival forced me to control my powers on a level higher than anyone else. I didn't expect that my increase in skill would make the gods send me endless offers. Perhaps my leap in power had shot beyond the standard power level the gods expected from challengers. Or perhaps the speculations regarding my true limits had finally been revealed, so they finally made the offer they initially put aside.

It made sense that after several gods gave their offers simultaneously, others simply followed their lead. Either way, I could never know for sure.

I decided just to let it go. It was surprising to see gods I'd never interacted with. Gods who disliked me, and even the God of Slow, who knows that I'll refuse to become an apostle, all gave me their offers.

What were they thinking? I was about to ignore it, but then I remembered something.

Kirikiri told me that no stages after the 49th floor allowed me to meet the gods. If I had known this, I would've challenged the 49th floor after the tournament.

"Tsk-tsk." I clicked my tongue and approached the floating portal.

Before I left, I took out my clothes from my inventory. The armour I'd been wearing was burnt to a crisp. I changed my clothes and checked my body's condition. The system ensured full recovery.

The surrounding heat was enough to ignite my clothes, but now, I had full control over my powers.

I entered the portal only after confirming there was nothing abnormal happening. I didn't forget to reject all apostleship offers before I left.

After a moment, the portal took me to the residence square. I was standing amid a crowd and could feel the world narrowing again.

I could identify anyone's domain the moment I saw them. I had some ideas regarding the invasion of domains, so I wanted to test them out.

Could I lift people up? I wanted to lift the person themselves without wrapping their body in mana or using physical force. If I could, I'd be able to wield my sword in its pure form.

I could burn it, freeze it, or even make it glow. I only knew a few kinds of magic, but I was curious about what kind of effects would be produced when magic invaded someone else's domain.

"Keek!" The frog welcomed me warmly.

"Yes, I'm happy to see you alive."

Was the frog the only one waiting for me? The others weren't here.

"Keek!"

"Yes, thank you."

The frog's best wishes made me feel much better.

I looked at the crowd once more. The people were enjoying themselves like today was the last day they had to live. It was a rare sight, and I was reminded of my time on the 18th floor.

Every time I saw people celebrating, the scene came back to mind, even though it was something I desperately wanted to forget.

What did I do back then? Memories of that time filled my mind.

"Keek!"

"It's loud, right? Let's head back to our room." The frog didn't like noise. He must have gotten tired, waiting for me all alone. We walked through the boisterous road, and as I walked, I recalled the words I said.

'Let's go back.' That was the wrong choice of words. I shouldn't have been heading back.

I was happy, and a sense of calm overtook my mind, but it wasn't a pleasant feeling.

Chapter 231.1

The Tournament (32)

[Lee Hyung-Jin]

As I laid on the bed, I repeatedly threw the monster ball up and down. I was dazed, frustrated, and lethargic. A strong sense of exhaustion and fatigue eroded my whole body.

It had been like this ever since I came to the competition stage. Was it because I was feeling helpless? I didn't think I could or should do anything.

It wasn't like this when I had taken part in the stage with Ho-Jae. With him, I was motivated after the struggle. After I suffered so much, I became so motivated and decided to survive by myself, thinking about my future plans.

That was until the gods became involved in the competition stage. After that, I had to run as far away as possible. I couldn't remember the exact situation at that time; I just knew I had to run. I did everything that I could to escape the endless explosions and the heat scorching the planet's land. Nevertheless, I almost died several times. If I had reacted just a moment too late, my party and I would have died in an explosion.

At the last moment, when I was buried deep on the other side of the planet, I felt a stable vibration underground. If the gods hadn't sent the party out in time, could they have survived? Probably not.

That's how I had judged it back then. The moment the tremor reached where I was, it would kill me. So I took out the monster ball, which had saved the female challenger named Lee Jin. I knew that if I stayed out there, I couldn't protect myself. But if I was in a monster ball, maybe I could live.

The monster ball could only fit one person, and at the time, I wasn't worried about Lee Jin. I was wondering whether I should kill the other members first or just go in. After I went into the monster ball, the others could take me out. After the explosion, if they still survived, they would have blamed me. Then, I thought it would be the right decision to kill everyone and then go in.

When I came back to the hotel after all the fuss, I had a lot of thoughts. I felt strange. Of course, I knew I was different. Trapped in this crazy hell, I couldn't help but change.

But I couldn't believe I thought of killing others so quickly. If the situation hadn't ended there, I was sure I would have executed my thoughts. Even if I regretted it in the future, that moment would still have taken lives.

I felt that I was acting strange. As if I wasn't being myself.

I felt a sense of scepticism and futility. Why was I struggling to survive like this? Was it right to live by hurting others?

I had never thought about it in the tutorial stage. No one had ever appeared on the 12th floor, where I was. It was dangerous, but at least I didn't have to kill the monster and feel guilty. I would gladly kill my party and then rejoice in the pleasure of my survival.

But was it okay for me to try to kill a person and treat them like a monster? Even if I was in danger of dying? The most painful thing was that if I were to be in the same situation again, I would likely try to kill another person. It was clear that I would make the irreversible decision faster than anyone else.

It wasn't just scepticism about myself that was bothering me. I was not confident in going through the stages of Hell's Difficulty. It was scary.

The fear I felt on the run seemed to be the same on the stage. It was not a question of whether I could clear the upper stages, but a fear that I would die if I went in.

[Lee Ho-Jae, 49th floor: Sorry.]

The message came at dawn, and we had quite a long conversation, but there were no feelings of resentment or disappointment.

I didn't hate him or feel bad about him. I was too scared to bear such a trivial feeling. I just repeated that it was okay, like a broken record.

"It's alright..." I breathed in deeply.

My chest felt hot and stuffy as if I had swallowed a lump of iron, and then, it suddenly became cold. I grabbed the monster ball, which had been repeatedly thrown and caught. The monster ball had done its part that day. It was the first time I had ever used this monster ball.

The monster ball wasn't bought in the store window; it was obtained after I cleared a stage as an additional reward. At first, I sneered, criticising the trash item they had given me.

This monster ball was seemingly useless to me, who was confronting the stage alone. Just because you had a monster ball, didn't mean it'd clear the stage for you. Instead, things would only become more dangerous while staying inside the monster ball.

But that day, the monster ball proved its usefulness admirably. When I was about to pass out, the monster ball helped me, and thus, I was still alive.

Without it, I would have died on the competition stage. Maybe I could use it again. The most problematic floor in Hell's Difficulty was the 17th floor. If I put myself in this monster ball and give it to Ho-Jae, I could skip the 17th floor and move upstairs. Wouldn't my chances of survival be much higher?

The question was whether this is possible. Damn it. I had to ask Kirikiri about this. I wished I had come up with this idea earlier.

Anyway, I'd take this and ask Hyung. I was supposed to meet Hyung and the vice president of the Order of Vigilance this afternoon.

Feeling a little more optimistic, my complexion improved. As I was leaving, I remembered the god who gave me this monster ball as a gift. I once resented them for giving me useless items, but now I was really grateful.

The God of Hope.

The God of Hope really smiled at me.

[Kim Min-hyuk]

The book keeping is strange.

One or two figures were missing.

I tried to re-calculate it myself by checking from the beginning, but the end figure turned out to be quite different from the books.

This is not a mistake that an accountant would usually make.

Mistakes like this would inevitably have resulted in an abomination of a book.

This is a book written by a man who can't even write his diary properly, let alone a book.

What on earth was the author thinking?

Was the book keeper a preschooler who had yet to learn private accounting?

It's highly likely that it was written as a development token because it was associated with the market.

He probably wasn't interested in writing books in the first place.

I don't know who it is, but I'll have to tell whoever's in charge of the person who wrote this book that they are not to be entrusted with paperwork in the future.

I let out a sigh and pinched the bridge of my nose.

My eyes are burning and feel like they are about to pop out any moment. Maybe because I've been overworking them.

I took out a couple of potion bottles from the inventory.

After drinking a strength recovery potion and a wound healing potion, the pain slowly lessened.

I stretch out while seated on my chair, trying to release the stress from my tense shoulders and stiff back. Stretching made my body feel heavy instead.

I need a break.

I would usually drink a bottle of elixir at this point, but now that the elixirs' owned by the Order of Vigilance are out of stock, they've become a commodity I can't get my hands on.

The Order of Vigilance was suffering from a shortage of manpower.

As the population grows, the work to be done increases, but the number of people handling it remains the same.

We need reinforcements.

In fact, many people want to join the Order of Vigilance as clerks.

But the required standard was far too high.

I asked Park Jung-ah several times to ease the qualifications required a bit, but she refused.

I even put it on the meeting agenda, but most of the members, like

Park Jung-ah, rejected my proposal.

All the members who opposed were unrelated to office work.

Damn it.

I let out a deep breath.

I thought I'd be able to sleep tonight, but I still haven't accounted for the overnight account for this bill.

I really want to quit everything.

It's an idea that comes to mind several times a day.

I wanted to give up everything and just enjoy the festival. I craved more time with my lover.

Just last night, I was scolded for not paying attention to myself.

Since I work in the Order of Vigilance, most of my time was spent there. It was clear that other people wouldn't even understand what we were doing.

I briefly check the time and lean back on the chair.

I examine the items I had in advance in the inventory, to see if they were still fine, and then change my clothes.

There was a place I have to visit before writing these badly-written books from scratch.

Lee Ho-jae.

A few days after the tournament began, he ended up getting stuck in a training stage. Now, I need to visit this guy who didn't come out till the tournament ended.

In the first few days, Jung-ah spent her time in her room and strolled around the market. But a day after participating in the tournament stage, she entered the training stage and never came out.

At that time, I had to try persuade him to go to the tournament first, using the training stage as an excuse.

Since then, I had to visit him in person every time.

I had lost my appetite.

My body slackens as memories of the past fill my mind.

When I neglected other things and only focused on my growth.

Maybe I should have postponed entering the tournament stage.

I put on my new clothes and fix my appearance in front of the mirror.

I always care about my appearance when I set off to meet him.

Even when we meet for a short walk at night, I prepare for a few minutes before that.

I need this appearance whenever I meet him.

He's always cautious of people.

It wasn't because he was timid.

If you're timid, you don't look at people that way.

Those eyes were one of a predator's, who looked at his opponent without any qualms.

While confronting that gaze that could peer deeply into someone's mind, I wanted to look more relaxed.

I wanted to maintain the attitude I held towards friends, not the attitude towards superiors.

I didn't want to be caught having a hard time dealing with him and getting nervous from time to time.

He wanted it, too.

Contrary to his behaviour, he is quite lonely.

It's a story that no one on the Korean server would believe, but it was true.

He was very, very far from normal, but he liked a relationship that would make him converse normally. One that made him comfortable.

I'm trying to create such a relationship.

It wasn't easy to talk to someone who could kill a person with a slight move of his hands if he wanted to, all the while cracking bad jokes.

I wasn't all that comfortable, but I had to pretend to be comfortable.

Sometimes I wish that he was the head of the Order of Vigilance so the hierarchy would be established more firmly.

Of course, if that were the case, the Order of Vigilance and the Korean server would become a mess. But at least it would have been easier to deal with him.

Knock, knock

Knock.

I step away from the mirror and head for the door.

The only person who would knock in my room was a guest.

The Order of Vigilance would rather just send me a message than knock on my door and waste time.

And there was only one guest scheduled for today.

When I open the door, I see Lee Hyung-jin standing in front of the dark ebony door.

“Shall we go right away?”

“Yes.”

I leave the room with Lee Hyung-jin.

Outside the room were members of the Order of Vigilance working on the desks.

There was also Park Jung-ah.

I tried to assign her a separate room because she was the leader, but she hated being left alone in a small room.

.

She did so even though she knew that such behavior was uncomfortable for her subordinates.

Park Jung-ah, who was reviewing something while reading, raised her head to look at me.

“I’m going out for a minute.”

Park Jung-ah nodded and turned her eyes back to her file.

I didn’t say exactly where I was going.

I came out of the Order of Vigilance headquarters, being greeted by people on the way.

Each and every one of them asked me where I was going, so it took quite a while to get out.

I wasn't even going out for any work-related issues.

Damn it. Is this really the place I work for?

They really are family friends.

I walked out of the headquarters and onto the quiet streets.

It was time for everyone to fall asleep, so no one was seen walking around.

Lee Hyung-jin only walked silently.

Was he always this quiet?

I remember him as a more chatty friend.

I don't even know if I'm worried about something.

Walking down the street reminded me of the old days.

When I first created the Order of Vigilance and started this job.

Looking back now, it was amazing.

The Order of Vigilance began with Park Jung-ah's determination to beat all criminals and give the death sentence to those who deserved it.

At that, I had said, "Uh. Yes," and thus, the Order of Vigilance formed.

Although I had played a part in forming the Order, objectively speaking at the time, it was highly likely that the Order would become another criminal group.

It had been like that for some time since its formation.

The fact that it was able to come all this way, meant that we tried our best to prevent it somehow and managed to reach our goal.

I soon reached the front of the square.

Rather than being on my way to meet my friend, I felt like I was going to either worship at a temple or shrine, or to even meet someone high up.

The stress made my steps heavy.

“Are you okay?”

Damn it.

Was it that obvious?

“I’m fine.”

There’s no way I can be alright.

I’m working myself to death.

If there was a way to end this fucking tournament any faster, I wanted to sell my soul and find out.

“Do you remember John Overtone?”

“Do you remember John Overton?” I ask Lee Hyung-jin.

He nods his head.

It was a few days ago, so of course you’ll remember.

“Did he cause any trouble on the stage?”

“On the tournament stage?”

“Yes, I did get a report from Jun-seok, but I was wondering if there was anything missing.”

Lee Hyung-jin ran into the portal with a weird look on his face.

After a while, we were moved from the middle of the square to a burning forest.

“What is this?”

Why is it burning?

I was thinking about going out again and sending a message, but then I see a figure walking through the fire.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

Kim Min-hyuk frowns at me as soon as I come.

I wanted to ask whether he came after making up his mind to nag today.

“Why are you ripping off the arm of a healthy American challenger? He was maintaining a good relationship with us, and was the only American kid here, so did you have to ruin that atmosphere?”

...I was right again, but when he snaps at me like this, I feel annoyed.

“What is it? What’s the matter? I’m sure there’s a good reason? There is one, right? ”

“There is a reason.”

“It should be a good reason. Enough to help us at the negotiating table.”

I’m sorry, but this probably won’t be of any help.

Why did I pull out John Overton's left arm?

This forest-themed stage is the one I've been using as a training ground since the day I entered and left the tournament stage.

Since that day, I've been training to recall and use that amazing power of being able to control the flames, with my will.

I was so engrossed in training yesterday, that I completely ignored the burning trees and the poor squirrels.

Meanwhile, John Overton visited my training stage.

That lunatic came over to me, drunk as a fish.

Listening to his irritating drivels of "I'm going to die." made me angry before I knew it.

So I grabbed his arm and yanked it out.

"Ah, how crazy."

Kim Min-hyuk rubbed the bridge of his nose.

Now that it's like this, I feel a little sorry.

"Please explain why..."

"For him."

Kim Min-hyuk looked at me with an absurd look, but it's true.

That's all I could do for John, who was half-mad, crying like a baby.

Hell difficulty's challengers are the ones who are most exposed to danger and death than anyone else.

This is for sure.

There is a huge difference in risk compared to other difficulty levels.

But that didn't mean that Hell Difficulty challengers wouldn't be scared or nervous while facing death and suffering.

Rather, other Hell Difficulty challengers, except for me, focus on avoiding attacks and respond sensitively to pain.

All of the Hell's Difficulty Challengers who have survived so far have done it like this.

Of course, John Overton is one of these challengers.

In Hell Difficulty, when you can't evade an attack once, or when you make a wrong judgment in a battle, you face a death crisis.

You can't get through it without having a firm attitude.

As a result, Hell Difficulty Challengers tend to be extraordinarily self-conscious.

In addition, their long-time escape from danger and death makes them even more cowardly.

The longer they're exposed to death, the more the fear of death accumulates in them.

In fact, there is no one who is not afraid of death, but Hell Difficulty Challengers should be able to overcome this fear.

It is impossible to clear the stage easily, avoiding all risks.

In the end, there will be a moment when you face danger and have to fight it head-on.

"...Why did you pull out his arm?"

"You've never had your arm pulled out, have you?"

Kim Min-hyuk nodded awkwardly at my words.

I knew it.

The sense of the arm being pulled out, especially the feeling of having the left arm being pulled out, is quite special.

When I lie in bed trying to force myself to sleep, I can't help but think of this feeling.

“When my left arm was pulled out, the cross section got filled up with blood. When you feel the blood spewing out of your blood vessels, your senses awaken.”

“...Awaken?”

“I could feel my heart thumping against my chest, as my left arm throbbed, blood pouring out. It feels like...”

When was it that my left arm first got cut off?

It was probably on the sixth floor.

A skeleton knight had cut off my shoulder.

Unlike a regular skeleton soldier holding a rusty sword, this one had quite a sharp sword.

My shoulder was sliced off in one stroke.

I felt the sensation for the first time then.

“You can feel death most cleanly and calmly.”

“...That's why you pulled John Overton's arm out.”

“You'll understand once you feel death.”

“What?”

“There’s nothing more I could do. Nothing would work better, other than fixing his rotten state of mind.”

Kim Min-hyuk continued to say something with a tired look, but I was able to get his approval by saying that I would solve the problem myself if I took it to the U.S.

Kim Min-hyuk may have nagged me in the first place in the hope that I would clean up my own shit.

“What’s that?”

For some reason, Lee Hyung-jin, who came with Kim Min-hyuk, had a ball in his hand. It’s something I have never seen before.

Lee Hyung-jin hid the ball behind him, jumping in surprise.

“Oh, nothing.”

Lee Hyung-jin put the ball back in his inventory, saying so.

I think he was going to give it to me.

I shouldn’t have asked.

* * *

While I and Kim Min-hyuk were talking, Lee Hyung-jin asked if it was okay to look around for a while.

I have no problems, so I say yes.

He’ll see nothing but cut, broken and burned trees anyway.

Ah. If he goes deeper, he may find many animal carcasses.

“Here. Taming scroll and ring. You can write your name on the contract and agree with each other.”

Kim Min-hyuk hands over a scroll and a ring.

Certainly, the scroll contains the detailed provisions of the necessary orders and contracts.

Kim Min-hyuk didn't tell, but I could read as much.

Is it over if I wear the ring after finishing the contract?

It seems simple.

“Kea-ek!”

The frog, who's quiet next to me, cries out.

The frog must want to sign a contract too, after seeing me.

“You follow very well, frog. I've heard about it, but it's amazing to see it in person.”

“Yes, it's a female.”

I answer lightly, but Kim Min-hyuk's response is strange.

As if embarrassed, he holds his breath quickly and stammers.

“What, what, what does that mean?”

What do I mean?

I decide to explain before there's a bigger misunderstanding.

“My face is usually favoured by amphibians and reptiles.”

It's a face that could easily be liked by similar humans with frog or lizard heads.

If you ask me what kind of face it is, I can't explain.

I don't know why they like it either because I'm neither a reptile or an amphibian.

"Oh, my God. I see now. You have a wide defense range."

I chat with Kim Min-hyuk for a moment.

"Oh, and I think we need to look out more for repairing the holy sword. It's not hard to fix the weapon itself, but since it's a holy sword, the task's a bit tricky."

Kim Min-hyuk explains.

"But it's not like there's no way out. If it doesn't work, you can ask the managers later."

I'm relieved by Kim Min-hyuk's words.

It seems that the same is true for Ahbooboo.

Ahbooboo flew around frantically.

I want to get him to quit because his constant flying is annoying, but I couldn't say anything since I, too am excited.

"The sword is so cute."

"Hah, cute. If you hear him fucking talk, you'll never say that again."

"What's he saying?"

Kim Min-hyuk asks curiously.

I thought I'd explain, but I shut up.

I didn't want to harm my mental health by telling him.

"Lastly, the gods I spoke to you about. You said it isn't good to be too involved with the gods." Kim Min-hyuk says, scratching the back of his head.

"Yes."

"I'd like to ask which god would be best associated with."

Kim Min-hyuk says, "It's a question that I've heard a lot from hard-difficulty challengers."

Certainly, the degree of the apostle, the attention, and the skill reward is a positive factor.

Which god would be the most beneficial?

I can't tell him about a god I don't know of, so I answer only from the gods I've had experiences with.

"God of Duel and God of Nature."

I further explain in detail to Kim Min-hyuk, who asks why.

"There's a clear desire for the challenger, and the god he follows, needs to help him fulfil his desire. It's not particularly bad to hope, and above all, the skills and power involved will be beneficial to the challenger."

The gods that could be of help are the gods of duel and the gods of nature.

"God of adventure? I had the most opinions about him."

I'm sure you have a lot of opinions.

He looks the most generous.

But he was the most formidable.

“You’d better rule him out as much as possible. The god of adventure loves to achieve something against adversity, so you may think it will help, but the process of enduring adversity will be a problem.”

[The God of Adventure is disappointed.]

“The interrelationship with others will also be a problem. The most unusual thing about the god of adventure is that he has deep relationships with humans and understands them. It’s quite unique considering the way the gods usually treat humans.”

“Isn’t that a good thing?”

“Not necessarily. God of adventure values the process, not the results. He isn’t a god who tolerates a relatively wrong process for the right result. He doesn’t ignore the people victimized, but rather wants to get closer to them and feel the anguish, all for the sake of understanding them.”

“Hmm...”

It seemed like the explanation didn’t really satisfy Kim Min-hyuk.

“To explain it in a bad way, he’s a god who wants to walk on thorns both physically and mentally. Don’t be fooled by him. It’s better to just skip the god of adventure.”

[The God of Adventure is disappointed.]

Why do you feel disappointed?

For other challengers, the god of adventure is the worst.

[The God of Adventure is perplexed.]

“Oh, and if there’s a challenger associated with the God of Hope, tell him to stop interacting right away. It’s a terrible thing.”

Chapter 232

Tutorial 55th Floor (1)

“What? Is it over already?”

I think it ended too soon.

I felt empty because it ended more easily than I expected.

The theme of the 55th floor stage was simple.

To save Young-ae from the curse, I have to challenge the worst sealed dungeon to retrieve the jewels hidden at the heart of the dungeon.

I was counting on this stage not because of the concept behind it, but because of what Kirikiri told me before entering the stage.

When I told Kirikiri that I would be back soon, she had said that I might not be able to meet her soon.

She sounded very confident, so I guessed that the difficulty of the 55th floor stage was quite high.

But it was too easy.

Dungeons, which were filled constantly, crawling creatures that kept trying to hide in corners, were obviously tricky.

It would have been a pretty tough dungeon for someone else, but not for me.

The fact that Kirikiri said it would take a long time to clear was strange.

I check the time, and it has been less than a day since I entered the stage.

“Ahbooboo, look around for any hidden thing around you.”

[It looks normal.]

“Are you sure?”

[I'm sure]

Hearing Ahbooboo say this, I am pretty sure.

Still, just in case, I had him look for a hidden space beyond the walls, ceilings and floors.

Ahbooboo mumbled in complaint, but still looked around and searched the area.

He was no longer in the form of a sword.

Ever since he got badly damaged on the tournament stage, his blade had yet to be repaired.

Now, Ahbooboo is floating around, leaving behind some glowing crystals that were his blade's core.

Although his function as a sword has been completely lost, it was not too big of a loss.

He has high intelligence and magical powers and can even carry out divine magic in case of emergency.

In fact, ever since I got Ahbooboo, I've been using him more like a magic aid than a sword, so there's not much difference.

Rather, he was small and quite easy to carry around.

Of course, he himself was very distressed.

His dignity had disappeared.

He grumbles so much when he was tied with a purple silk handkerchief to a core the size of a child's fist.

At first, he hated it because it was strange, but now he was flying around well, silk handkerchief appearing like a cape.

After receiving a message from Kim Min-hyuk that he could not find a way to repair him, I asked Kirikiri. But she replied there was no immediate way.

I was a little shocked because I thought it would be possible to repair him.

Ahbooboo is disappointed.

Kirikiri advised to go up to the 60th floor and find a way again, just as the store window had been updated once after crossing the 30th floor.

I was waiting to see if there was no other way of fixing him.

Perhaps Ahbooboo was relieved to hear it from me, and his grumbling greatly reduced.

He was wandering in every corner of the dungeon, with a purple handkerchief flapping behind him.

I can see that the handkerchief is getting dirty.

I'll have to buy him a new handkerchief or wash that handkerchief.

[No.]

“Then is this dungeon really normal?”

[I told you so.]

Ahbooboo was sure, but I was still suspicious.

Tutorial stages sometimes fuck people with different elements of difficulty.

I thought this might be the case.

The fake goods turn into genuine articles, or in fact, leave not even one gem to collect.

“Well... I doubt it, but let's go for now.”

It could be the kind of stage where you have to make a fool of yourself to open the next stage.

Oh, that's right.]

Chapter 233.1

Tutorial 55th Floor (2)

[You have cleared the 55th floor.]

I had cleared the 55th floor in the Hell's Difficulty level.

[All abnormalities and injuries have been recovered]

[You have earned 10000 points as a clear reward]

[You have earned 10000 points as the first clear reward]

[There are many gods who responded positively towards you. You have earned 84,000 points]

[There are many gods who responded negatively towards you. 11,000 points will be deducted.]

[You have earned 3,300 points as compensation.]

“Hmm...”

[See, it's real.]

The jewels were genuine, and as soon as I returned to the castle with them, Sung-Joo accepted them. It was an incredibly easy ending.

“If you don't have any other plans, why don't you take a few days off and stay at the castle?” said Sung-Joo.

As soon as Sung-Joo accepted the blue jewel, his face twisted with tears that wouldn't stop pouring out.

The 55th floor's mission was to find jewelry materials for treating the cursed spirit. And the old man, Sung-Joo, who repeatedly blew his nose in front of me, was the father of said spirit, the lord of this region.

Sung-Joo, who had begun to act unnecessarily clingy, kept saying that it was too late to go anywhere and that he wished to repay me in any way possible.

His attitude was abnormal and made me increasingly exasperated. His eagerness to keep me at the castle was certainly questionable.

"Fine, I won't go anywhere." I'd given up.

With my compliance, Sung-Joo was thrilled enough to do a somersault.

He really was a burden.

It was late today, and I was tired of getting jewelry, so I told Sung-Joo that we'd talk again tomorrow.

I was led to the room by a servant of the lord.

It was only after the servant left that I escaped, to explore the castle.

In the past, I'd always went straight to the dungeon, so I never had time to look around the castle properly.

Along the spacious corridor were various artworks including paintings and sculptures.

Even in the evening, bright lights shone throughout the hall, so there was no shortage of exhibits.

One could easily tell how luxurious the castle was just by looking at the exotic, textured carpet and high ceilings.

But what caught my eye more than that was the night view.

The castle was home to countless buildings reminiscent of skyscrapers on Earth, each of which was decorated with bright lights and decorations.

The scenery from the top of such tall buildings was gorgeous. Standing atop the tallest tower in Seongju, one could see the entirety of downtown.

I opened the window, stuck my head out, and looked down. I could see that this building was only about 20 stories high.

If we can develop science and magic together, the result could be similar to modern cities like this.

I've seen many wonderful panoramas while clearing stages, but the problem was that I was never able to appreciate it properly.

I'm a little disappointed to think that I've been too focused on clearing floors and ignored these wonderful sights.

* * *

"Where is the bathroom?" I asked.

"Do you need guidance?" a servant gently responded.

"No... Never mind."

I refused the servant and began to look around the room once more. The room was so humongous that just calling it a room didn't do it justice. It would take some time to look around the room.

I walked around, confirming the location of the bathroom and the kitchen, and went to lie down on the huge, soft bed.

When I did so, the strength in my body drained away.

Soon after, I felt a sense of refreshment, and it was as if my head suddenly cleared up.

“Ahbooboo. It’s magic, isn’t it?”

[Yes, it’s all on the bed. They’re too clever, actually managing to fit magic in a bed. It’s great.]

I can’t believe they have a magic bed to relieve a user. It was quite an unexpected luxury. I don’t think they’d sell this kind of bed in the in-game store, so couldn’t I just steal one of these?

As I was thinking, Seregia, who had been quiet, called out to me.

[Warrior.]

“Yes?”

I often talked to Ahbooboo or KiriKiri, but Seregia never spoke to me first, so I answered immediately.

[Won’t you go to the next location? The portal has already been created.] Seregia nagged.

I put the armor I was wearing in my inventory and changed into more comfortable clothes.

The spirit sword, which is usually at my waist, was also pushed to the edge of the bed.

“I’m going to get some rest.”

[What?]

I’ve already cleared the 55th-floor, and I’m thinking of taking a few days off here. I really needed a break, but I’m still concerned about Kirikiri’s words.

And if I’m going to rest, I want to rest in a lively place like this, not in a solitary waiting room.

I heard that there would be some servants who would come to take care of me tomorrow morning.

I want to learn a little more about this place, which has high standards of living and uses technical skills, like magic.

Challengers who have cleared the tutorial are moving to Earth one by one. It was inevitable that magic would spread to Earth through challengers.

That's what I explained to Seregia.

[Okay.] Seregia replied in a stiff tone.

After Ahbooboo's blade repair plan failed, it became harder to see him as the person who once monopolized the main position in his party.

I laid in bed, rubbing my chin while thinking.

Come to think of it, I'd often told myself I wanted to know more about cultures on different floors. I'd often thought I should spend more time at each level, appreciating their unique culture. But I'd never actually been interested in their culture. It was just an excuse to take a break, as I was obsessively pushing myself.

For the first time, I felt a genuine interest in the culture of this floor. I was curious and asked Kim Min-hyuk to collect more information if he could. Above all, I felt that I really needed a break.

Heading on to the next floor immediately didn't seem like the right step in this case.

Chapter 233.2

Tutorial 55th Floor (3)

“Yes, thanks to you, I’m resting well.”

The old butler’s face glowed when he heard my answer.

“Thank God. If you have time in the evening, the lord has requested to have a meal together.”

“Oh, that’s a bit tough. I’m still tired, so I want to rest more.”

“Yes, then I will tell him,” The old butler said, trying his best to mask his disappointment.

“Then tomorrow...” The butler attempted again.

“No.”

“Oh, alright...”

There was no sign of disappointment, but I could sense his tenacity.

“Well, I’ll see you again at lunchtime.”

“Are you going?”

The butler and other servants had prepared a rather sumptuous breakfast, so it was a shame and a bit embarrassing to eat the food alone.

After staring at other people who were eating, I gently suggested that we all eat together, and they gladly agreed.

During mealtime, I became increasingly familiar with the butler's mentality. He was a gentle, calm man, possibly because his task was to serve other people. Above all, he provided detailed explanations of the culture and knowledge of the surrounding area.

If possible, I'd like the old butler in my room all day.

"Yes, there are things we need to prepare. If you have urgent business, please call us."

When he sensed my hesitation, the butler handed me a small cube-shaped object from his pocket.

"It's a calling machine. When you press the red button here, you'll be able to get in touch with me, and I'll respond as soon as I can."

The surprisingness of the object didn't result from its performance, but its unusually compact size and small weight.

It was so light that it seemed as though there was nothing in it; it was no bigger than a finger, and it seemed like it would be easily lost.

"Can I press it once?"

The butler nodded in response.

When I pressed the red button, a similar button within the butler's clothes began to vibrate; it was like a pager. The only difference was that numbers could not be sent.

"Are there other buttons connected to this pager?"

"Yes, and you'll know who called you by the positioning of the button. The button that's vibrating right now is the second one from above. We all have a fixed location."

"Who does the first button belong to?"

"Sung-Joo."

This was fun. The staff who cleaned the castle and the soldiers around Seongju all wore buttons, so I'd thought it was merely a fashion statement here, but it served for practical reasons.

"Do you need anything else?" the butler asked before leaving the room.

There was one thing I needed. "I want to learn magic here. Is that possible?"

Magic was a closed practice in any world, and in some cases, sharing knowledge and trying to purchase magical artifacts were considered taboo.

"Are you interested in Mado Engineering?"

"Yes, will it be okay?"

Was it not magic, but engineering? I became curious.

"Yes, of course. We have a variety of curriculums. Do you want a detailed guide on each curriculum?"

"Just give me one that's beginner-oriented."

I didn't know the content or organization of the curriculum, and it was likely that I wouldn't understand it.

If possible, it'd be best to learn the basics first.

During the break, I wanted to learn as much as possible, but there was a possibility that I wouldn't be able to get anything from being greedy.

"Then I'll see you again at lunchtime." Before the butler left the room, he said his farewells once more, and in response, I returned the gesture.

"Kee-ek!"

When I said bye, the frog, who had been sitting quietly in the corner, began to follow me. The butler politely said farewell to not only me but also the frog before he left the room. After his departure, the room became eerily quiet.

Although several servants remained in the room, they worked quietly, not daring to make a sound. It seemed that even though we shared a meal, our relationship didn't become any more intimate.

"Frog."

"Kee-ek!"

"Would you like to come in?" I asked while raising my hand, showing the taming ring I'd received from Kim Min-hyuk.

The best aspect of the ring was that it was able to form subpoenas with others, allowing me to summon them whenever I wished.

It created a sub-dimensional space of the summoned's most desired environment. For a frog, it'd be more comfortable to rest in the sub-dimensional space rather than this room.

"Kea-ek!"

"Okay. Just stay here, then," I exasperatedly told the frog, and laid back in bed.

As the bed applied magical effects to my body, I quickly slipped into a deep slumber. It wasn't long before I had to wake up, but the exhaustion that weighed down my body made me want to continue to sleep.

Getting out of the bed proved to be a more difficult challenge than I'd expected.

[What are you going to do?] asked Seregia.

"I told you I'm taking a break."

Seregia didn't respond to my answer, but its silence didn't mean approval; it meant that it expected a more detailed explanation.

"I'll be learning magic when the time comes. Oh, let's go outside and look around from tomorrow. This is a pretty unique place."

The characteristics of the area that I saw when I first entered the stage were unusual.

I wanted to see how it truly was with my own eyes.

Chapter 234

Tutorial 55th Floor (4)

“Do you understand?”

“Yes.”

After lunch, a teacher called by the butler came by. Supposedly, he was a teacher who instructed the basics of Mado engineering, a rather arduous subject.

“Ahbooboo, do you understand this?”

[Yes.] Ahbooboo, who was in class with me, dressed in a flapping handkerchief in the air, replied.

Damn it.

[It's normal that you don't understand at your level.]

“What do you mean?”

I'm at a level where primitive people who work with stone tools are forced to memorize the equation of ballistics. How big of a difference is that?

The 26th floor, where Ahbooboo was located, was a world where the war between humans and tribes was fierce, so they actively used magic shells and weapons.

If you look at it, it's Mado engineering in a way, so it wouldn't be that hard for Ahbooboo to understand, since he's familiar with the magic of this world.

That's how I got Ahbooboo to attend the class, but I became uninterested after being unable to understand a single word. I never thought that I wouldn't be able to even understand the basics.

[What did you expect from someone who doesn't even know the basics of magic? You're a primitive man here.]

"I'm not a primitive man at all. I know how to use the elemental series of attack magic."

[That's like a primitive stone axe.] Ahbooboo mercilessly commented.

I think he wanted to brag about himself rather than make fun of me.

I asked the teacher, who was watching me and Ahbooboo talk, if he could proceed with class without me.

"Yes, of course." He gladly accepted, saying it would be fine.

The teacher, who had been openly showing interest in Ahbooboo the first time he saw him, didn't miss this one-on-one opportunity.

I don't think I can do well in the Mado engineering class, even if I learn it.

It's not like I can study it for months or years; I was just here for a few days.

Judging from the pacing of the class, it seemed impossible to learn something in depth in just a few days.

I thought it would be better to let Ahbooboo, who could understand the class, remember the concepts here, and then teach me later.

[No.] Of course, Ahbooboo didn't want to teach me magic because his presence was fading.

"I won't fix you."

[Of course I will! Hmph... Your true self is showing.]

“There’s nothing free in the world. Everything comes at a price.”

After a brief scuffle, I was able to get Ahbooboo’s consent. In hopes of getting his blade fixed, Ahbooboo had no choice but to obey me.

[In spite of your wickedness.]

“What?”

[Keeek!]

“What the fuck?!”

[Keeek!]

“Kee-ek!”

When Ahbooboo mimicked the frog, the frog couldn’t stay still, telling him not to copy what he says.

* * *

After dinner, I came out of the room and headed outside the castle.

Ah, of course, I left Ahbooboo back in the room. He was still in the room with my teacher.

When I climbed onto the walls and looked out, I found the ground covered with red spirit stones.

There’s always a certain amount of power coming out of them. Naturally, it was very harmful if a person was directly exposed to such power.

People laid huge floors on the ground covered with pebbles, and the city was built on top of it. Here, the city was regarded as a single building.

I’d heard the backstory of the castle, something that was quite pitiful.

Outside the castle was a huge minefield; spirit stones covered the ground, stretching beyond the horizon. Workers, who looked as small as ants, labored throughout the day, transporting spirit stones to the city by railroad. The workers were all dressed in white, protective clothing.

I'd have to check out that protective suit later, and I'll take one if possible.

“Kee-ek!”

“Yes. It really looks like an island.”

It was as the frog said. The castle looked like a small island isolated in a sea of spirit stones.

Of course, no other cities or villages existed around here. Ordinary people couldn't live in such a harsh environment.

The dimension gate managed by Sung-Joo was the only thing that connected this solitary place to the outside world.

It was a sort of mining city. Through the dimension gate, people mined products, sold spirit stones, and imported other daily necessities.

It was a dangerous, lonely environment, but as rumor had it, people who dug up spirit stones could bring home quite a bit of money. As time passed, those who mined together formed their own society.

That was the history of this castle.

[What's wrong?] Seregia asked.

Seeing this, I'm worried.

Perhaps the most valuable thing that we have gained from the tutorial was information about Earth. In Korea, the occurrence rate of monsters is low, so the damage caused wasn't significant. Perhaps, because of that, there's relatively little information about monsters.

There are two main threats that are now threatening Earth, gates that appeared unexpectedly, and monsters that were either leaked or naturally occurring.

When a gate appeared, nearby animals and plants would morph into aggressive monsters. Therefore, it was said that gates are most dangerous when formed in ranches or forests where livestock are abundant.

Maybe humans could be affected by the gate. This possibility was still being researched.

One more important piece of information was that small stones came out of the bodies of such monsters; the stones could be used as fuel.

When monsters began to appear around the world, the most dangerous spawning locations were power plants. The appearance of monsters in such areas caused unimaginable terror.

Supply of crude oil had been cut off. Mining, distillation, and distribution of crude oil all became difficult. In places like Korea, the main issue wasn't aggressive monsters, but the inability to secure fuel and natural resources.

Against this backdrop, stone fragments from the monster's body have become major sources of energy that can be procured anytime, anywhere. Even if I were to go back to Earth, kill all the monsters, and destroy the gates, not all the problems would be solved.

If they can't find new energy sources, Earth would have to continue to rely on monsters. I imagined that Earth would look similar to this isolated castle. The people there were like the miners here, only able to secure a certain amount of safety with protective walls, while risking their lives to take spirit stones.

Of course, I wished that all the problems would be easily solved, but I've never seen things end well when I want them to.

Chapter 235

Tutorial 55th Floor (5)

“A banquet?”

“Yes, it’s this evening.”

Why are you telling me this now? I guess it’s because you’ve started to understand me.

Ever since I’d decided to take a few days off from the 55th floor, Sung-Joo had been relentlessly inviting me for meals. Of course, I refused many times.

After those repeated rejections came an invite for a banquet hosted by Sung-Joo.

The guilty feeling of continuously turning down Sung-Joo’s invitations had been nagging at me, so I was about to suggest having a meal together, but it seemed like attending the banquet would also serve to ease my guilt.

When I asked the butler, he’d said he’d already planned for the impromptu banquet a few days in advance.

The butler assumed that I was interested in the banquet, and he explained the event logistics in significant detail. He chattered on for minutes about the status of the preparations, how many people had been invited, and how many days the banquet would last.

After listening to the butler’s droning, I felt an inexplicable urge to simply stand and run away from all his babbling, but I resisted the urge and listened to him some more.

“And this banquet will be attended by Young-ae.”

“Is she well? After suffering from that curse and what not.”

The clear mission of the 55th floor-stage was to get jewelry from the Dungeon to save Young-ae from the curse.

“Yes, thanks to the apostle. You’ve recovered much faster than expected.”

(T/N: apostle here refers to Lee Ho-jae, in case you didn’t know.)

Continuing his rambling, the butler began to narrate Young-ae’s features in detail from how beautiful she was to the nature of her mannerisms.

The sight of an old man portraying a girl in her late teens as a goddess sent shivers down my spine. I’d seen him numerous times in the past few days, but I still couldn’t get used to him.

Next, the butler also told me about Young-ae’s role in the banquet.

“Letter?”

“Yes, this is a letter from Young-ae to the apostle.”

“...Will that be recited in the banquet hall? In public?”

“Yes, it’s one of the main events of this banquet.”

That was weird.

Going to a crowded banquet hall was already intolerable enough, but I could force myself to endure.

Honestly, I was curious about the banquet. But damn, that letter reading was going to be disturbing.

First of all, I replied to the butler that I understood and quickly sent him out. The sooner he left, the better.

The butler exited with great joy once I agreed to join the banquet.

[Are you really going?]

“Are you crazy?”

As long as there was an event of Young-ae reciting the letter, I wouldn't go to the banquet. You wanted me to listen to a letter in front of people? At the banquet's main event? I couldn't care less about the content of the letter and just knew that there was no way in hell I'd be going there.

Of course, I could just be overreacting. Young-ae's letter could be a thank you note for my services. But then, isn't it more natural for Sung-joo to be the one giving his thanks?

I remembered the recent actions of the butler, such as praising Young-ae excessively, trying to keep me informed of Young-ae, asking if I could meet Young-ae, who was lying in bed, and tell her about me, and on and on.

I recalled confessing to my crush in front of the whole school when I'd been a student. It was an old memory, but it amazed me that I was able to recall the event with such detail. No matter how I thought about it, the banquet reminded me too much about that dark memory.

“Let's make a run for it.”

[I knew it! Hu Hu Hu Hu. Seregia, I'll grant you a wish later.]
Ahbooboo chuckled.

[If it's a strange wish, I'll say no.]

I guess the two of them even made a bet.

Ahbooboo, who'd already lost his chance to get fixed, often flew around, but usually hung on a handkerchief tied to a soul sword possessed by Seregia. Perhaps because of that, I felt like the two were getting close recently.

Are they dating?

When I was awake, I could hear what they were talking about, but I had no idea what they were talking about while I was asleep. Just like how I didn't know about the bet they made.

I'll ask them later about their relationship. If the relationship they have now is still in the stage where they maintain a subtle distance from each other, then my question could unintentionally strike a sore spot.

"Ahbooboo. You remember Mado Engineering right?"

[Yes, yes. I remember everything I learned. I also remember what parts I didn't understand.]

"Don't forget or get confused later."

After confirming that Ahbooboo knew about Mado engineering, I called the frog.

"Hey frog, we're going to use the ring."

"Kee-ek!"

The frog disapproved, but the ring activated to bring us back to the sub-dimensional world.

Ever since I'd cleared the 55th floor, there'd been a portal hovering around me.

"Move."

* * *

[Welcome to the waiting room on the 56th floor]

"What is this?"

After using the portal, I thought I'd naturally be moved over to Kirikiri's fields, but the place where I'd gotten transported to was near a waterfall.

Before I entered the 55th floor, I remembered that Kirikiri said I wouldn't be able to see her soon. I assumed that she meant I'd have to stay longer on the 55th floor. But now that I see it, she didn't mention the process of clearing the 55th floor.

"This is awkward."

[What's wrong?] Ahbooboo asked, but for now, I remained silent.

Was it because I had to learn something from the 55th floor or did Kirikiri think I needed a break? Even though I was grateful, I had questions.

If after clearing the stage, the process of being transported to Kirikiri's field had been omitted, then when would I be able to see Kirikiri again? What kind of place is this?

The notification indicated that this was the waiting room, but there was no sign of a portal for the next stage. In the waiting room, there was no furniture, such as beds, that would've usually been there.

There was just a massive waterfall. Releasing my mana, I looked around, and found out that a huge cave lied behind the waterfall.

I went into the cave, but it ended up being eerily empty. Even small creatures such as bugs and bats couldn't be seen. The only thing in the cave was a crystal ball that layed, discarded, near the bottom of the cave.

[Hello.] A resonating voice came out of the crystal ball and greeted me.

"Who are you?"

[Challenger, I'm Karin, who will guide you till the 59th floor.]

The voice from the crystal ball had taken the name ‘Karin’. The most important thing was that the voice referred to me as a challenger.

“Are you part of the Tutorial System?”

The voice didn’t answer my question immediately. After a brief pause, it spoke.

[You may see it that way, but it’s more of a vaccine than a tutorial.]

What? I’ve been hearing a lot of strange stories today.

“Then, are you like a manager?”

There was a manager for each difficulty level in the tutorial. In the case of Hell’s difficulty, Kirikiri filled that role.

[From your point of view, it’s similar, but the reality is quite different.]

It was similar. But the reality was different. But from my point of view, it was similar. Are you saying that you belonged to the same system? That you’re an equal? Firstly, I don’t think this thing can ever replace Kirikiri.

I asked for a detailed explanation from the voice. Fortunately, the voice began to explain as I’d requested.

[My role here is to decide which stage is right for you.]

“Stage?”

[Yes, I will decide which stage you will go to, from the 56th floor to the 59th floor.]

It meant that the content of the stage could change depending on the voice’s intention. I decided to ask more about this later, and appreciated the fact that there was an end to the 59th floor.

“After clearing the 59th floor, can I meet Kirikiri again?”

This was the most important question. A new store window would open as soon as I entered the 60th floor. I yearned to listen to Kirikiri’s advice, preferably before entering the 60th floor.

[KiriKiri?]

“Hell’s Difficulty Manager.”

[Oh. Yeah, as you said, once we clear the 59th floor, we’ll see her again.]

Kirikiri’s position in the tutorial, no, in the vaccine, seemed to be quite high. It was a predictable statement, but quite puzzling to learn it this way.

“Then are you an apostle?”

I didn’t think it was God. Apostle came to my mind first when she said she belonged to a vaccine war.

[No.]

No, she’s not. There’s nothing that fits today.

[I don’t belong to one God. I’m just working for a vaccine war. To put it bluntly, it’s a slightly higher position than a typical apostle.]

You needn’t explain something that I didn’t ask... I continued to ask more questions.

“Why are you talking through the crystal ball? And also, why was this important crystal ball discarded on the bottom of the cave?”

[The gods said it would be better to talk through the crystal ball. I don’t know.]

It's better to not question a God's advice.]

It's better to not question a God's advice? What a funny remark. Maybe it was because people usually get disappointed or embarrassed when they hear the reason.

I became even more interested in the reason. The voice, "Karin," was seen as a member of the vaccine war and interacted comfortably with the gods.

I was curious about the identity of the voice. "What exactly are you? What do you usually do other than the role of giving a stage?"

Listening to me, Karin gladly introduced itself again.

"Dragon?"

[Yes.]

Karin's voice showed pride in its race. It wasn't a sin to be proud.

I remembered the people on the 20th floor worshipping dead dragons like gods. For them, dragons were divine beings. After hearing the word dragon, it felt strange to think it was related to the vaccine war.

On the other hand, I was happy. Dragon.

Oh. My. God.

"Hey."

[Huh?]

"Come out for a second. Let me see your face for a moment."

[...Can I hear why you want to meet me and why?]

"Why? Because I want to see a dragon in person. It's been a dream since I was a kid."

[Don't lie to me.]

Damn it. Was it that obvious? Suddenly, it became alert.

“You have to decide which stage is right for me. Wouldn't it be better to meet me in person? You know, to measure my combat capabilities.”

[But the gods advise...]

“Scared?”

At my words, Karin sounded embarrassed and shouted, [What coward! I am a dragon! Even though you're a challenger, do you think I'm going to be scared of you?]

“Then come out for a moment, yea?”

[...]

“Scared?”

Chapter 236

Tutorial 56th Floor (1)

[No, I will heed the advice of the gods.]

Despite my continuous provoking, Karin remained firm in her stance. That was too bad, but I'd thought that provoking Karin would've been an effective method.

If Karin kept trying to refuse me so stubbornly, I'd have no choice but to use force.

“Alright, alright. I won't ask you to fight, so come out.”

[No.]

I wondered if I should, once again, try to taunt Karin with an “Are you scared?”, but I refrained from doing so in fear of pissing off the dragon. It'd be disadvantageous if I did something stupid in this circumstance. I was already told that my actions here would determine my next stage, so I'd have to watch my mouth.

“But we have to talk face-to-face. Come out. I promise I won't come at you.”

[You're a terrible liar.]

Damn it. It must have been obvious again. I'd never thought that my lying skills were this horrendous, but I guess my excitement about meeting a dragon was hard to mask.

For now, I'd have to give up on my dream of fighting a dragon; after all, you can't fight someone who refuses to meet you.

Gripping the crystal ball in my hand, I maneuver my way out of the cave.

[Where are you going?] Karin asked through the crystal ball.

Was it possible that the crystal ball could transmit not only voices but also visibility of the surrounding environment?

“It’s better to talk in front of a waterfall than a smelly, dreary cave full of year-old bat shit.”

Karin remained silent as I plopped down in front of the waterfall. I rummaged through my inventory to pull out a simple chair and tent as space for me to think.

Currently, Karin seemed upset. One of my friends used to sulk in silence, and it seemed as though Karin was doing the same.

By the time I finished propping up the cave, Karin hadn’t said a single word to me.

Settling myself down into a comfortable position on the chair, I picked up the crystal ball and asked, “Is the cave your home?”

From rumors, dragons were supposed to live in obscure places, and this waterfall cave fit that very definition. It was massive and had a high ceiling with no stalactites that could interfere with movement. In addition, it had a familiar stank, a dragon’s unique, subtle smell.

It was similar to Idy’s smell that I’ve become able to recognize after living with her for a long time. The smell emanating from the cave was slightly different, though. It had a much stronger fishy smell that Idy’s body odor, and at first, I’d thought it was merely the cave’s natural odor, but now that I think about it, it might’ve been the smell of a dragon.

[...] Karin mumbled something incomprehensible, and then, once more, reverted to being dead silent.

Shortly after the question left my mouth, I realized I’d made a mistake. The question could’ve been taken in two possible ways. Was the cave her home? Or could the cave be even considered a house?

I thought of ways to relieve the dragon's bad mood, but gave up and just decided to have a meal. I made a bonfire and took out a package of food from my inventory.

* * *

After eating my fill, I went inside the tent to lie down and peacefully watch the hypnotizing waterfall.

It was a bad habit to lie down right after eating, but I was too tired to care that much.

Suddenly, Ahbooboo whispered into my ear, [Warrior.]

Come to think of it, I'd completely forgotten that Ahbooboo existed. Once the stage was cleared, Ahbooboo and Seregia were automatically moved into my inventory. Perhaps that was why Ahbooboo had remained quiet.

[Warrior, is it really a dragon beyond that crystal ball?] Ahbooboo asked.

[That's what it says, yes.] replied Seregia.

Ahbooboo's whispering made me feel anxious, and I hummed in response to his question.

[Couldn't it be a lie?]

[No, I don't think so.]

I didn't think it was a lie either. Ahbooboo hesitated for a moment before saying to me, [If it's really a dragon, then it's best to make him feel better.]

[Why?] Seregia questioned.

[Dragons are very stingy creatures.] Ahbooboo complained and elaborated on various stories about stingy dragons.

One of the slanderous stories that Ahbooboo mentioned was about a founding emperor who called himself a dragon. When a dragon came to visit the emperor's funeral, it had endlessly spouted sarcastic and unflattering comments on the emperor. The stories portrayed dragons as cheap and shameful.

I decided to take Ahbooboo's advice to lighten up Karin's mood that had been damaged in the cave incident. But it was slightly too late to apologize for my slip of the tongue.

"Hey," I spoke to the crystal ball.

[What?] Karin answered, and a wave of relief washed over me.

"You're not upset, are you?"

[...No.]

"Right? You didn't get offended when I asked if that cave was your home, did you?"

Somehow, the things I said to the dragon ended up being pretty similar to the things I'd said to my silently sulking friend back in middle school.

"I knew it. Is there any person who would get upset about that?"

Oh wait, Karin's not a person. Damn, I ended up talking too much again. Fortunately for me, Karin didn't point out my mistake.

[Of course not! That cave is not my home!] Karin exclaimed indignantly.

This was unexpected. I hadn't thought Karin would deny the assumption that the cave was her home since it harbored the scent of a dragon. Even a couple hundred cave salamanders wouldn't have been able to make the cave smell that bad.

“Yes, I see. I thought you were offended since you didn’t talk all of a sudden.”

[There was just a lot of work to do!]

Karin had previously mentioned I was a lousy liar, but it seemed that she, too, was also pretty awful at lying. Unlike her usual meek manner of speaking, she had angrily shouted when she lied.

“You must have a lot of responsibilities to work for the Vaccine as someone who has a higher position than a regular apostle. That’s amazing”

Although my praise for Karin was insincere, the dragon seemed to enjoy it thoroughly. Through my nonsensical talking and not-so-subtle compliments, I was able to change the atmosphere into a more friendly one.

However, I was curious about one thing. In comparison to other apostles, Karin was rather kind. Other apostles didn’t even attempt to hide their feelings of contempt when they saw me. They treated me, fought me, and saw me as a mere stepping stool. I would’ve thought that Karin, being a prideful dragon, would’ve also been more inclined to have this attitude. Maybe the preconceived notion that dragons were all arrogant wasn’t all that accurate.

I decided to ask Karin about it.

[The world is changing. You can’t be obsessed with that outdated idea forever. There are dragons that are sticking with the attitude you mentioned, but I am not one of them.]

The world was changing?

[The world is beginning to judge people by their abilities rather than their species. Take a lower-class tribe, for example. Can you say with 100 percent certainty that every member has descended from that ethnic group? The time has come for us to evaluate individuals based on their skills.] Karin said, and I listened to her quietly.

[Of course, your species does have an impact on your behavior and abilities, which makes it difficult to avoid the resulting stigma. Typically, the rumors aren't too far off from the truth, so it's easier to judge people based on species. I also have prejudices, and you've reminded me of the preconceptions I've had about the human race. But the world is evolving rapidly, and I'll try my best to keep up with it, too.]

Karin's voice took on a serious edge, and listening to the story, Karin finally began to seem more like a dragon.

Looking back at it, it seemed that I also had strong prejudices based on race. It was something Idy had pointed out several times, but I paid her opinion no attention.

Most of the people I met while clearing stages had strong tribal characteristics. But, there was very little difference in the behaviors of various species. For me, who'd have to face various types of people in the future, it was an opportunity to rethink my preconceptions.

There was still one more thing that Karin mentioned that had bothered me. "The world is changing."

"What do you mean by the world is changing?"

Of course, the Earth was facing a cataclysmic upheaval, but it wasn't likely that the dragon, who belonged to the influential vaccine war, would say the world was changing because of it.

[I've heard you're one of the first challengers to enter the planet's source and generate tutorials.]

"No, I'm not asking about the change of the Earth, I'm asking about the change of the world you're talking about."

[It's not that different. I'm changing, just like your hometown is changing. The wind of change is beginning to blow. Think about it like that.]

Karin's words made it seem like the monster of the source, the vaccine war, and the tutorial system had just appeared. Was it only that monsters were spawning and tutorials were being carried out, or were the gods and systems changing, too?

I asked for more details, but Karin drew the line there. The dragon told me that changes were taking place, but didn't care to elaborate on them.

[You should take into consideration that the concept of change I mentioned is slightly different from how humans understand it.]

I supposed that was inevitable; our lives and experiences were different. It was natural to view things in a slightly different manner.

I thought for a moment about what Karin said, and how the information would affect me.

In some ways, a change was beneficial. For my goal, it'd be better to have a chaotic situation where the conditions were continuously changing than to have everything already solidified.

* * *

After a good night's rest, it was time to start working again! Following breakfast, the sleeping bags were put back into my inventory.

[Want to go to the next stage?] Karin asked.

I folded up my tent and nodded my head in response to her question.

[Then, I'll decide which stage is right for you. Is there a kind of stage that you want to avoid? If there is, I 'll make sure you won't encounter it.]

I was amazed; what a nice thing to say. Maybe it's because we'd gotten closer after spending a night together.

"Remove a stage where I need to lead and motivate a lot of people or where I need to maintain good relationships. Oh, and religious ones, too."

Hearing my answer, Karin asked why.

“Why? It’s just awkward and uncomfortable.”

I wasn’t confident in those situations. Leading people had never been my strong suit. It was a stage theme that had appeared several times on the 40th floor, but I cleared it by using brute force at every critical moment.

[Okay, I’ll consider it.]

I thanked Karin and climbed into the portal that had appeared on the floor.

“Move.”

* * *

The 56th floor was a place with stunning scenery. Under the brightly coloured sky was a vast field that stretched far into the horizon. And, there was a crowd? People had gathered beneath the tower I stood on.

“Apostle!”

“Apostle! Please take us away!”

“God’s apostle!”

Below, the crowd had been shouting at me. When I saw a mass of over a thousand people screaming at me, I felt motion sick,

[The 56th floor stage has begun]

[Stage Mission: Understanding the sect]

“You... That smelly, oversized, lizard bastard actually dared to trick me?!”

[I told you to be careful.]

Chapter 237

Tutorial 56th Floor (2)

I sighed while watching the people gathered beneath the tower give me their enthusiastic support. Unconsciously, I raised my hand to hide my face. If possible, I'd like to go back.

"You fucking lizard..." I muttered grimly. I told it about the situation I wanted to avoid, and yet, it chose the stage that had everything I didn't want. I was devastated but decided to focus on the stage rather than sulk. The only way to get out of this place was to clear the stage.

I checked my current situation. I was standing atop a high tower with crowds of people swarming the open fields beneath. People fascinatedly looked up at me as if they were watching a fireworks display.

Damn it.

"Apostle!"

It didn't seem necessary to answer their desperate shouts, so I decided to ignore their screams for a moment. Just by my presence, people seemed to be moved to tears. I decided to check my notification window rather than deal with the situation at hand.

[Stage Mission: Understanding the sect]

Description: There are five-story stone pagodas hosting more than 900 humans. Challenger should open a basic sect and raise its religious level. Stone pagodas are located in open plains, making them very vulnerable to attacks. Every night, monsters will attack, and over time, increasingly powerful assailants will come.

If you are a challenger who is not familiar with faith, buy a notation of faith from the store.

[Clear Condition]

1. Raising sects

1. Securing Faith: 500

The explanation window slightly differed from the usual. Typically, it wouldn't give any relevant information, but now, it was filled with essential details. As the notification advised, I went to the shop window and looked for notations of faith.

[Confidence notation]

Description: Measures and indicates the level of faith in your religion or sect.

It had a rather basic task, but the prize was beyond imagination. I estimated that with the same amount of money, I could buy a few bottles of Elixir.

[Life force notation]

Description: Measures and marks the buyer's current life force.

[Mana notation]

Description: Measures and marks the current mana of the buyer.

These were notations that functioned similarly to RPG game windows that showed stamina and mana. However, among the windows, the life force notation was generally considered useless. During combat, having a vital point usually resulted in instant death or damage equivalent to immediate death, so the life force notation wasn't able to accurately describe your sustainability. Still, several challengers felt reassured by being able to see their amount of health, so they still purchased the life notation.

On the other hand, the mana notation window was incredibly useful. When using skills, challengers always consumed a certain amount of mana. The presence of mana notation helped challengers preserve and allocate mana.

The Order of Vigilante recommended buying and using only the mana notification window, especially for challengers who frequently used mana. They were expensive but worth it.

When I was clearing the lower floors, I thought it would have been convenient to have such windows, but they were only available for purchase once the challenger entered the 30th floor. People typically bought it right as they hit the 30th floor, but by the time I'd realized such windows existed, I didn't have a purpose for them. I was familiar with my strength and mana without having to measure it, so I didn't bother to invest money in the windows.

However, whenever I look at the windows, I wondered what it would've been like if I'd joined the tutorial later; I would've started with a notation window or basic items from the top challengers. It would've been convenient if information about the Hell's Difficulty Stage was already known by the time I joined. Maybe, I wouldn't be in such risky situations as often. It's certainly dangerous to challenge Hell's difficulty without any information, but the rewards of the task were always proportional to the difficulty.

I went back to thinking about the religious portion of the task. Lately, my thoughts have become mixed. Perhaps it's because I've had too much spare time that I often recalled what happened in the past.

I rechecked the faith notation and bought it. Immediately, I opened a window to see my faith.

[Faith: 0]

It was empty. Perhaps the reason for the indictment of zero was because I hadn't started a sect. But first of all, how would you begin a cult?

[Warrior?] Ahbooboo called.

"Yeah?" I stopped thinking for a moment to look back at him. He pointed at the people under the tower by moving the handkerchief tied to his core. All the people were staring at me. For a moment, I was unresponsive and then got embarrassed. Was something wrong?

“Let’s go down for now.”

For now, we’d start with crowd control.

* * *

I’d spent a large portion of my time laughing with people, shaking hands, and hugging. Before I knew it, the sun was about to set, and the sky was a deep red. As soon as they saw the setting sun, people panicked and rushed into the tower.

As the stage description stated, monsters would appear at night. Fortunately, the tower had a narrow entrance and a long passageway, which served as a natural barrier to monsters. Above all, the main gate was broad and durable, so if supported well, it could prevent the monsters from entering.

The first floor of the tower exuded a shrine-like atmosphere. There were also spaces and other symbols that could be used to pray or perform ancestral rites. Some people took seats on the first floor, came down to rest, or began to guard the entrance. The guard post rotated amongst different individuals, and in case the gatekeepers were pushed back, others would also come to push against the door to stop the imposing monsters.

Until now, it seemed as though they’d been able to keep the monsters in check. But, the monsters were going to become more powerful by the day, and it would become harder for these people to stop the monsters alone.

I told everyone to go up to the second and third floors to rest or sleep while I’d protect the entrance. People were delighted by the news. Some wanted to stay on the first floor to aid me, but I refused their offers. I wanted to be alone for a moment.

[The first floor is nicely decorated. We can use this place as a new gathering spot. From now on, come down to the first floor in case of troubles.] Ahbooboo said.

“Okay.”

It was fortunate that I had Ahbooboo by my side since he was well-versed on religion. I asked Abu about the making of a sect, which was currently my biggest obstacle.

[How to create a sect?]

“En. They want us to open a sect. Do we have to catch some beasts and hold a memorial service?”

[Well, I’m not sure about that either. Don’t you know how to create it?]

“I don’t. It’s not like shouting, ‘Create a sect!’ will be able to get me anywhere.”

[Created a new sect.]

What the fuck? It worked?

[Measuring target entitlement requirements. The stage mission has met all conditions for creating a sect.]

[You can choose the religion that will be the focus of the sect.]

After reading the explanation, a list of selectable religions, some of which worshiped pre-vaccine deities, appeared. Before I chose one, I asked Ahbooboo for advice.

[If that’s the case, you’d better choose one that can bring about the established doctrines of other religions. It would be easier to expand a religion that already has a reputation.]

As Ahbooboo said, a popular religion would be easier to work with. If so, which religion should I choose?

[I recommend the God of the Sky.]

“God of the Sky?”

[Yes, I’m not saying this because I’m biased.]

Is that so?

[Really not!]

“Sure. Explain first.”

[First of all, the God of the Sky values relationships, so he’ll be thrilled to open a lower sect. This alone is a considerable advantage.]

That was true. Some gods didn’t care whether you made a lower sect or not, and some, such as the God of Adventure or the God of Light, didn’t even authorize one to establish an inferior sect.

[The God of Adventure is disappointed.] The God of Adventure expressed his disappointment.

The God of Chaos, the God of Death, the God of Sowing, and the other evil deities wouldn’t be good choices. But, that only left one god, the God of Hope, but I refused to choose him.

[In addition, the teaching of the God of the Sky is suitable for governance. Many countries on the continent, including the empire, believe in the God of Sky, and worship their lower sect.]

[Lastly, I know the doctrines of the Sky.]

“Okay. Let’s go with that one,” I said and chose the God of the Sky.

[Faith Window]

Species name: Unknown

The founder of the sect: Unknown

Sect symbol : –

Sectarian tendencies : –

Sect doctrine existence: –

Number of believers: 890

Headquarter Position: Unknown

Degree of faith: 3

Mainstream Religion: God of the Sky

Description: It is a newly established sect, and the indigenous people know little about it. The 890 believers are forced to follow the words of the sect's founder to live, but have no sincerity about the sect. Believers are very distrustful of the founder of the sect, who hasn't even disclosed his name yet. They're fearful that he will suddenly disappear, which will increase the danger of the night.

The religious faith of the sect is so weak that it is impossible to use divine orders. Due to the poor finances of the sect, they cannot provide any support to the believers. Only with a sect's outstanding strength can the founder be able to keep his promise to ensure the safety of his followers without difficulty.

As soon as the sect had been created, I read the long passage of text. There were still many shortcomings, but I liked that the details were explained in great detail. Looking at the status window, I thought I could clear the stage without difficulty if I fill in each of the deficiencies.

First, I decided to fill in what was marked as deficient at the top of the status window. The doctrines of the sect are something I can deal with right away.

“Ahbooboo, first of all, I think we need to write down some of the doctrines.”

[Yes. Can I write it on the poster over there?]

“Go ahead.” I took out a pen from my inventory and handed it over to Ahbooboo. Although he lacked limbs to hold it correctly, he could still use magic to write.

The next step was to find a symbol. I decided to put down Ahbooboo without much thought. He’s the Holy Sword; he’s colorful, magical, divine, and likes to be noticed. He would’ve been the perfect symbol if it wasn’t for the fact he was currently tied with a handkerchief and not a sword.

I looked at what I had, wondering if there was anything suitable.

“Call.”

“Kea-ek!”

“Yes. Nice to see you, frog.”

For now, we needed a god who would be the symbol of the sect. I didn’t know whether a frog would be able to fill the role, but why not?

Chapter 238

Tutorial 56th Floor (3)

[Faith Window]

Species name: Unknown

The founder of the sect: Unknown

Sect symbol : –

Sectarian tendencies : –

Sect doctrine existence:

Number of believers: 890

Headquarter Position: Unknown

Degree of faith: 3

Mainstream Religion: God of the Sky

The current degree of faith was 3. It was a huge relief to have it above 0. However, considering that I hugged, shook hands, and spoke comforting words to people all day long... I felt that it was a little low. Had I come off too pretentious?

First of all, I decided to fill in the shortcomings one by one. The first thing I chose was the symbol of the sect.

“I choose you.” Since I didn’t know how to get the system to recognize my choice, I just decided to imitate Pok*mon lines.

“Kea-ek!”

[The sect symbol has been added.]

[Faith Window]

Species Name: Unknown

The Founder of the Sect: Unknown

Sect Symbols- Gaguri [1]

Sectarian Tendencies : –

Sect Doctrine Existence:

Number of Believers: 890

Headquarter Position: Unknown

Degree of Faith: 3

Mainstream Religion: God of the Sky

(T/N: [1] half frog, half dog supposedly means Gaguri)

[A new item has been added to the sect’s symbol.]

The frog’s name was Gaguri? Since it had a dog’s body and a frog’s head, I supposed the name suited it quite well, albeit a little unoriginal.

Gaguri (1) –

Description: A newcomer to a sect whose name has not yet been determined. Believers have yet to recognize the presence of this deity. It has nothing to do with the God of the Sky or the origin of the sect. It has no divine power at all, and only possesses a small amount of mana. With its innate high vitality, it has no problem protecting its believers, although the lack of appeal may scare off young followers.

Believers may not feel awed because it lacks a mysterious aura. It's advised to grant new abilities and accessories to new members.

Luckily, a detailed explanation was also provided. I found it to be a possibility that the explanations were provided by the apostles of the God of the Sky. As far as I knew, detailed reports didn't typically appear in windows.

"Kea-ek!"

"Hold on." I held the frog and viewed it from various angles like a photographer.

What was lacking at the moment was the shortage of recognition from the frog's believers, connection with God, divine power, magic charm, and mystique. To summarize it all, the frog simply lacked in everything.

It would be useful to make it look a little cooler. How should I dress it up?

I quickly bought a pair of magic wings from the store window. The pair of angelic, white wings then automatically attached itself to the frog's body.

"Kea-ek!" Surprisingly enough, the wings had somehow fit on the frog's back.

"You look... quite mysterious."

It had the head of a frog, the body of a dog, and now, also had wings attached on its back. Tell me, where else could you find such a mysterious creature?

"Aren't I right??"

[How mysterious, it looks as if it escaped from a lab somewhere.]

What laboratory? You're too harsh on our poor frog! You're just jealous because he looks better than you.

"Kea-ek!"

Now, the other lacking details of our sect needed to be filled in. I suppose attractiveness and mystique could be solved with the frog, but how was I supposed to cover knowledge and magic? Above all, the required connection with God seemed impossible.

[Please make me a symbol too.]

"You're planning to use a flying handkerchief as a symbol?"

[Why not? You can make your handkerchief something more valuable.]

A handkerchief as a religious symbol?

[It's not just a handkerchief, it can fly, has magic, can talk, and it's cute!]

The last two stated were not advantages but disadvantages.

[C'mon. Do it for me.]

I considered the possibility of shoving Ahbooboo back in my inventory since he kept complaining. However, he could still be useful at this stage.

"Oh. I got an idea."

[What?]

I purchased a small, luxurious cloth from the shop window and untied the handkerchief from Abu's core bead. I then attached his bead to the newly bought fabric and knotted it around the frog's neck.

"Done."

[What's this?]

[Faith Window]

Species name: Unknown

The Founder of the Sect: Unknown

Sect Symbols: Gaguri(1), new (1) – Gaguri's Necklace of Aubutz

Sectarian Tendencies : –

Sect Doctrine Existence:

Number of Believers: 890

Headquarter Position: Unknown

Degree of Faith: 3

Mainstream Religion: Church of the Sky

Gaguri(1) –

Description: A newcomer to a sect whose name has not yet been determined. Believers have yet to recognize the presence of this deity. It holds the core of the Aubutz, the sacred sword of the God of the Sky. It also harbors powerful divine power and possesses a great deal of mana. Its combat power is so strong that it has no problems in defending its followers. Although its attractiveness is mediocre, it has a mysterious element, and young believers may find it funny.

The frog greatly satisfied the required conditions, it fulfilled the requirements to be a new member of the sect.

“Perfect.” Ah, what am I saying? I feel like a fool!

[Perfect]

“Seregia thinks it’s perfect too.”

Well, it turned out better than I thought. The wings fluttered behind the cute frog, and a colorful cloth hung on its neck like a muffler. Since the frog was unable to communicate with people, Ahbooboo would easily fill that role.

[If it looks this funny, it would become counterproductive instead.]

Ahbooboo’s words made sense. However, since the main sect symbol was a frog, then a dignified and oppressive frog deity would be more counterintuitive. This was the best I could do for now.

* * *

I called everyone back to the first floor and instructed them of the doctrines I’d set with Ahbooboo. The doctrines were a combination of doctrines from other lower sects. And surprisingly, the core belief of the religion was universal equality. The use of such principles in a feudal society such as the Empire seemed quite contradictory.

[It’s mixed with the doctrines of other lower sects. The empire interpreted it a little differently. Under the God of the Sky, there’s an emperor, the guardian, the first believer of the sect, and finally, the rest of the believers. Of course, the God of the Sky wasn’t very pleased with this interpretation.]

Ahbooboo’s explanation hinted that the God of the Sky disapproved of the emperor.

Next, we narrated the basic rules of the sect; there was nothing special about them. Most of the rules stated were pretty standard rules that would be normally followed by religious and good people.

Ahbooboo insisted on putting in some tricky, hard-to-follow rule, but I turned him down. I didn’t want to create a law that would force me to eat vegetables, pray until my muscles were aching all over, or walk on my hands.

Some sect-specific rules included the designation of the first floor of the pagoda as a cathedral, the second and third floors were designated as a shrine for believers, the fourth floor was the lodging for senior believers, and the fifth was for exclusive accommodation. The senior believers had yet to be selected, and Ahbooboo decided that they would pick some at a later time.

“Who is that frog, apostle?” a little boy asked with his hand raised up. The child, whose eyes fell on the comical figure, couldn’t hold his curiosity back.

“It’s our sect’s symbol.”

The children looked at the frog with sparkling eyes while the adults gave it a curious glance.

“Kea-ek!”

“It is my spokesman and our sect’s symbol. If you have any trouble in the future, tell the frog and ask for its advice. The frog will solve the problem.”

In other words, Ahbooboo would step forward and resolve the problem.

* * *

After leaving the frog and Ahbooboo on the first floor, I came up to the fifth floor. It was still an empty floor for now, so I took out a tent and some camping materials from my inventory again.

I quietly ate and laid down in my sleeping bag, lamenting. Ah... my faith wasn’t increasing at all. How annoying.

[Faith Window]

Species Name: Unknown

The Founder of the Sect: Lee Ho-jae

Sect Symbols: Gaguri(1), New (1) – Gaguri’s Necklace of Aubutz

Sectarian Tendencies: Faithfulness is unstable; has ups and downs.

Sect Doctrine Existence:

Number of Believers: 890

Headquarter Position: Ierai Planetary 3rd Fault Tower.

Degree of Faith: 17

Mainstream Religion: God of the Sky

Although the doctrines and symbols had been set, there were only 14 people, excluding Ahbooboo, the frog, and I, who had actually believed in the religion. It was hard to predict when the faith count would be able to reach 500. Maybe it was because we hadn't decided on a sect name yet? I already asked Ahbooboo to think about the sect name.

[The Faithfulness window has been updated.]

[Name of Sect: Aubutz]

I couldn't believe it. This guy... he actually named the sect Aubutz. Oh well, since I couldn't think of another name, I decided to leave it as it was.

I rechecked my faith.

[Faith]

[Degree of Faith: 19]

2... it only increased by 2.

Even if I assume that I can raise my faith by about 10 points every day, it'll still take about 50 days to clear this stage. And there was no guarantee that the faith would continue to rise like I predicted, so it may take even longer. Should I have to increase the number of believers? 900 is already quite a large number, however, when compared to other sects, it's still quite small.

Too bad you can't kidnap believers... It wasn't like I could wait for the believers to get married, have children, and then grow up to add to the believer count. That'd take too long.

I wished something significant would happen! As expected, the most effective solution was to use monsters to impress people.

The people on the lower floor of the tower are certainly well-composed. Despite having monster attacks every night, they would still dutifully drive them off. Now that I appeared to protect them, that problem has been solved. Maybe that's the only role the believers want me to play; to be just a guard, or a gatekeeper.

However, I can't run away from my responsibilities. If I do, faith will only fall. I could simply protect only the people I liked, and push others into danger, force people to believe me, and turn them into crazy fanatics. However, I didn't want to do that. It would simply be blackmail, it wouldn't be a religion anymore.

[God of Hope watches you.]

Yeah, my thoughts were right.

[Warrior, the messenger has jumped in.] Ahbooboo alerted me.

[Really? You saw it?]

[Yes, it looks like a tower was built on a hill a little bit away from here, a messenger was placed there.]

As expected, people could still thrive even without sects. Therefore, it was inevitable that their dependence on them would decrease.

[Monsters are flocking to the tower. It happens every evening. We just have to keep the door shut, what should we do?]

"I'm going down."

What do you mean “Just keep the door shut?”, this was my only opportunity to impress my believers and collect some faith! Of course I have to make good use of this opportunity.

Chapter 239

Tutorial 56th Floor (4)

[You know that you shouldn't use explosions here right?]

“Kea-ek!”

Before I knew it, Ahbooboo and the frog approached me to question my decision. Well, I didn't really mean to use an explosion here either.

[I know.]

Who do you think I am? I already knew that the enemy should be obliterated with no collateral damage to spectators.

Huge, scaled monsters rushed towards the tower, their drool splattering all over. From a distance, it looked like a fast-paced herd of moving cattle. Very fast-paced. I would be able to block the door, but I didn't have enough time to climb the tower and attack.

Thinking about how to get rid of them, I condensed a ball of mana over the head of the first monster.

Bang!

The monster roared as its body got flattened into a sheet. Hm, this was nice. Let's just use this method.

I condensed multiple balls of mana over the heads of monsters running toward the tower. The more monsters I flattened, the lower my mana got.

Bang! Bang! Bang! Bang!

Agonizing roars repeatedly rang out, until not one monster had been left unscathed. It was like having a glass of liquor, while effortlessly completing my part time work.

I finished my work and glanced down; not a single drop of blood had reached my clothes. The surrounding people looked bewildered and confused.

“What’s wrong with them?”

[I cast a blinding spell.]

“Why?”

Ahbooboo sighed.

[Why? I was trying to keep them from seeing you like this. Think about it. If they see you like this, they’ll think you’re a devil who crawled up from hell, not an apostle of a god.]

Is that so? I thought I handled the situation pretty well, though.

[As soon as you condensed mana on the monsters’ heads and crushed them, I immediately blinded them.]

Ugh, then they didn’t get to see any of my amazing power...

[It’s definitely helpful to show a strong and scary side, but too much will only backfire on you. Take it easy.]

After mercilessly killing so frequently, I’d grown accustomed to blood and corpses. Hence, I’d completely overlooked the fact that this scene might’ve been overly gruesome and abhorrent to other people. If Ahbooboo hadn’t quickly blinded them, then my reputation with my believers might have been damaged, even if the faith count didn’t decrease.

But now, my plan to show myself defeating monsters was foiled. I pointed this out to Ahbooboo.

[I don't care. They couldn't see it, but they can imagine it. The sound of monsters roaring and exploding is quite loud, you know? It doesn't take a genius to figure out what happened. It's far better than making them see blood everywhere and ruptured intestines]

Following up, Ahbooboo set fire to the field. Unlike an ordinary fire, it was a bright, blazing white fire. Strangely enough, I was unable to smell the nauseating, putrid odour of burning flesh...

[This flame is used for sacrifices. Normally, Gods hate these kinds of bodies, but I have no other option.]

Wow, how talented. I praised him for his hard work and looked back at the people again. They were rubbing their eyes, as the blinding magic slowly started losing its effect. They hadn't even been near the door when the monsters had attacked, and suddenly, they'd also gone blind. All they could hear were explosions and pained roars. Besides being unable to comprehend what just happened, they must've also felt anxious and scared.

"Ahbooboo."

[What am I supposed to say? In this case, it's better to be quiet than to say something witty. Please turn back to the field.]

I heeded his advice silently. As I stared at the burning corpses, the people began to start talking in hushed voices.

[Okay, that's enough. Now go up to the fifth floor without saying anything.]

"Right away?"

[Yes.]

"Without saying anything? But wouldn't it be a good idea to say something? 'Now you can rest assured, you can be safe, or you can take this opportunity to give me more faith.'"

[Belief is what you get when someone trusts you unconditionally.

Come on, move.]

For now, I heeded Ahbooboo's words and headed back to the steps of the towers. While climbing the stairs, I questioned Ahbooboo again about whether it was a good idea to leave the scene.

[Oh, it's fine. Warrior, do you remember the doctrine of our sect? It's universal equality. However, you're above the others as the founder and chief of the sect.]

Ahbooboo went on.

[You can afford to take your superiority for granted. You have similar features to humans, but you don't have to act like humans.]

After arriving on the fifth floor, I looked out the window. The people below looked flabbergasted.

If they'd seen me in combat, perhaps they would've looked at me with disgust rather than admiration.

[Degree of Faith: 47]

Luckily, the degree of faith soared. Before the monsters appeared, it was only 17 and I'd felt dumbfounded that all my hard work could only get me 17 followers.

[I'll be the one who comforts, motivates and inspires people, so you can stay on the fifth floor.]

"Okay." I agreed to Ahbooboo's plan. And that's how I got trapped on the fifth floor.

* * *

[Degree of Faith: 161]

I was bored to death. For the past few days, I'd been sitting idly on the fifth floor. Even though I played with magic, time still didn't pass any faster. I was beginning to lose my sanity.

Looking at the faith count, I lamented over the long road to 500 followers and the fact that I'd be stuck here for a few more days. If it weren't for monsters coming every evening, I would've been stuck in this room for the whole day.

Ahbooboo had requested that I show my face as little as possible, so, when I was dealing with monsters, I was forced to defeat them as fast as possible before getting sent back to the fifth floor.

It definitely isn't easy to imitate God. Come to think of it, what god would meet their own sect to socialize with them? With nothing to do all day, I'd imagine that the daily lives of gods were unimaginably dull.

Rolling around on the floor, I realized that I wasn't bored because I couldn't meet people often, but rather because I had nothing to do. I mean, it wasn't like that I wasn't used to being isolated from the rest of society; the waiting room did just that.

In order to maintain my reputation with the people, Ahbooboo asked me to reduce my presence as much as possible. Thanks to this, I was stuck in a situation where I couldn't make any noise or appear in front of people.

Naturally, I wasn't allowed to train either; this was the reason for my boredom. I hated having nothing to do.

While the other people were living happily, I was miserably stuck in the fifth floor like Rapunzel. The hours where I was allowed to leave my lonely tower were far and few.

An opportunity to go out came when the food in the tower gradually began to decrease. A new forest had spawned outside the tower, so I went in with Ahbooboo and the frog to get meat and fruit. As we moved ahead, I became increasingly immersed in the doctrines Ahbooboo recited.

[Warrior.] Ahbooboo called out.

“Yeah?”

[I heard it from passers-by on the way here. There are some other towers a little ways from here.]

“Other towers?”

[Yes, similar to a pagoda. There are seven towers in total. The other towers have approximately the same number of people as us. Above all, they have one common belief.]

“What belief?”

[That an apostle will come down and take care of them.]

Ah, the method to clear this stage suddenly became obvious.

“I think we should preach our sect’s doctrines to other towers.”

If we were lucky, the degree of faith that was obtainable from each other tower ranged from 200 to 300. In order to get 500 believers, I would have to gain faith from people at other towers. I wasn’t sure if this was the right way to approach things, but it seemed better than doing nothing all day.

Fuck, this was going to be difficult, and it made me annoyed. We’d have to grapple with other sects over believers in other towers. Although we looked like a real sect with the help of Ahbooboo, our opponents were still real apostles. I wished this could’ve been a stage where I only had to defeat seven other apostles in combat.

[Let’s focus on our tower for now.]

Perhaps I was wrong. It might be better to avoid the wrath of apostles.

[Why don’t you try getting more believers from somewhere else? If there are more people, there will naturally be more religious people.]

“No,” I answered. While Ahbooboo’s plan was enticing, it wouldn’t work.

[Why?]

“There’s no one else on this planet besides those who are inside these towers.”

The planet was strangely small. I was unsure if there were any reasons for this, or if there were only a limited number of people because it was a stage.

[You sound as if you’ve looked around the entire planet.]

“I haven’t, but I can feel it.”

[What?]

“I can feel it. There aren’t that many people.”

[Huh?]

“Nevermind. It’s nothing,” I said and ignored Ahbooboo’s onslaught of questions.

The feeling I was talking about was so faint that it was hard to be sure. Having been trapped in a narrow place for so long, I’d initially thought I had a problem with a sense, but now, I’m unsure. It was a strange mix of power and alertness.

As the degree of faith increased, the clearer this strange force felt. Did the rising religious faith of the sect affect me, the founder? Or was it because of the people’s faith in me that I gained this power to deal with monsters faster?

The force was a challenge to describe, and I wasn’t quite sure of how to use it. It made my chest feel stuffy and gave me the urge to go and hunt down a monster. I decided that I would catch a monster alive and try to use my power tomorrow. I thought it’d be a good idea to use sleeping pills to calm the monster.

[Degree of Faith: 340]

Fortunately, the degree of faith rose to 340. For now, it seemed like there wouldn't be any issue reaching 400.

“Grr...” a monster growled from the corner of the tower. Its mouth was muzzled with a rope preventing it from making too much sight.

I found it to be quite an amusing sight. Ah, was I possibly a sadist? I felt schadenfreude looking at the pitiful monster groaning in panic and struggling to escape.

I took a sleeping potion out of my inventory and poured it down the monster's throat. Well, I attempted to anyway. The monster put up quite the struggle and from the amount of potion that spilled onto the floor, I was unsure whether the sleeping potion would take effect.

Luckily, the monster's struggles gradually died down, and when it stopped moving, I picked it up and moved it to the center of the room.

I prayed that I would achieve significant results from my experiment. This divine power I felt was becoming clearer by the day. The more people looked up to me, the powerful it became. But, Ahbooboo and the frog didn't feel such power at all, even though they were also worshipped by the people. I didn't know if this was because I was the founder of the sect, and hence, gained strength, or for some other reason.

The greater this power gets, the more familiar it feels.

It's the power I felt at the last moment when I was fighting the apostles who had made replicas of me on the tournament stage.

I lifted the monster's arm.

<Infringement of control>

The power allowed me to manipulate other organism's bodies and power. Thanks to that power, I'd be able to win in combat against apostles, but I couldn't figure out much more about my ability. I didn't know what kind of power it was, and I didn't know how to use it. It was just something I happened to find in a moment of crisis.

I tore off the monster's arm. The strong force makes a huge rip, but the sleeping monster remained unresponsive.

Even after repeated practice attempts of trying to use my newly found power, I wasn't able to make much progress, and in the end, gave up.

I defined the force as a power that I wasn't able to fully understand or use yet, but I was determined that there'd be a day when I could fully control this power.

The monster's muscles were visible through the torn skin. My eyes shifted to the spot where blood was spurting out from. I lit a fire inside the arm, and the body was soon engulfed in flames. I focused, controlling the fire so as to not let it spread to the rest of the room.

This power, which was supposed to be a kind of divine force obtained through faith, had the ability to violate control.

Was this the supreme ability of the gods?

Chapter 240

Tutorial 56th Floor (5)

It was troublesome to put out the fire on the monster's body, so I roughly shoved it back in my inventory. I could smother out the flames at a later time.

I opened the window to let the smoke out of the room and leaned on the wall as I waited for the room to get ventilated.

The <Infringement of Control> is a force that I've previously used; however, I wasn't sure how to use it properly. At the very least, I seemed to know the origins of this power.

[Degree of Faith: 361]

The figure rose little by little every day, and as a result, my power became more powerful by the day. The power I'd felt when the degree of faith was 100, and when it was 200, were vastly different from each other. I felt that the higher the degree of faith was, the more comfortable I felt with handling the power.

It was the divine power of the gods. It was essential to take note of the fact that the essence of the divine power originated from the gods, and not in the wielder himself. Essentially, the wielder borrowed the god's strength.

In comparison to the divine power, the blinding magic Ahbooboo used the other day was considered primitive. The blinding magic worked by flashing a blinding light in someone's vision. Alternatively, you could also block light from entering their eyes. If the magic was further developed, it could begin to target the pupil. This would lead to blinding magic changing from area-type magic to target-designated magic.

However, the divine power was different. It directly tampered with an organism's nervous system, which made blinding extraordinarily easy. It wasn't as if the nervous system was being destroyed. That couldn't be further from the truth; the nervous system was only being manipulated. But what if you can influence something besides vision?

Take the medulla, for example, the brain's control center of a human's involuntary life-sustaining functions. Breathing, swallowing, and heart rate; they're all controlled by the medulla. If you could block neural signals from this portion of the brain, the target would be helpless.

Healing magic was a sub-magic of divine power. It functioned by treating wounds and diseases by interfering with other people's pain signaling and the immune system.

To summarize, the divine power was a dangerously powerful force. It was hard to believe that I could gain this power by increasing my degree of faith.

Suddenly, I thought of the power I had absorbed from a stone on the 35th floor. It had been given by the King Goblin. After advancing through the stages, I found that it was the same stone that came from the body of monsters. And unlike the stones I got from other stages, where I didn't feel any power, there was actually power in it, a power that I absorbed.

The Spirit King, who I met on the 40th floor, asked how the force absorbed from the stone was related to God, and whether I'd be willing to give it to him. From his attitude, I learned that this power was much more significant than I initially thought.

It wasn't just the Spirit King who was interested in the power, but the gods as well. I've heard that the primary reason why gods make tutorials and summon challengers is to select a new apostle and that the apostle's foremost duty was to collect the magic stones.

It was possible that the divine power and people's faith were proportional to one another. If so, it wasn't strange that I gained such power through a sect with a few believers.

Slowly, my thoughts began to unravel; however, I was still swamped with questions.

First of all, it was weird that I never encountered the link between faith and divine power. I recalled the time I had faced the apostles on the tournament stage. If I hadn't used this power, I might have died on the spot.

On the 35th floor, the power of the source was present, but there wasn't any faith. It's on this floor that I learned about and recognized the power of faith.

I had other questions, as well. Why had the power appeared at that time? Was it because I was experiencing a near-death crisis? I would have used the power a long time ago if I realized it had been there. And why hadn't I been able to use the power to its full extent just now?

Was it because the targets were different? Apostles and monsters differed in many ways, and the amount of power needed to defeat an apostle was much larger than the amount needed for a monster. Questions and hypotheticals came to mind, but I became frustrated at my inability to find a clear answer.

Normally, I'd ask Kirikiri, but this time it was different. Even she would not be able to answer such questions.

Above all, I was currently stuck with the dragon instead of Kirikiri until I cleared the 59th floor. I didn't think that the cheap lizard would do anything to ease my doubts.

[Warrior.] Ahbooboo called.

I was currently pretending to be a statue with the frog. When we weren't moving and communicating with people, we were attempting to be religious statues.

When I asked Ahbooboo why we had to do something so stupid, he'd said that it made people feel more secure. How? I'll never know. The only part of Ahbooboo's explanation I understood were his last words. "It's easier to pray in front of you if you just stay still."

"Yes?"

[An ornament in the center of the first floor shattered, and a mural appeared in its place. It seems to be showing a field outside of the tower.]

“Maybe a new area was unsealed.”

[Possibly, but it’s a bit scary to see it on the wall. Come down and see for yourself.]

Wordlessly, I migrated down to the first floor, where the situation seemed to be quite serious. People nervously stared at me, then back at the queer wall. Usually, when people saw me, they’d be instantly relieved. However, even after seeing me, the anxiety in their eyes did not vanish.

“Don’t do something carelessly,” Ahbooboo warned.

A massive mural of a field covered the wall. The field was many times larger than a soccer stadium, and in the center of it, was a single blooming bud; I recognized it immediately. The plant was far from normal. The leaves of the tightly wound bud were the flesh of a monster, and instead of swaying delicately in the wind, it rhythmically pulsed like a beating heart. Its intestines fluttered in the wind in a disgustingly bloody manner. The mural frightened everyone on the first floor.

The mural on the wall displayed a scene outside the tower. In essence, it was similar to a live broadcast on TV. Hence, in order to encounter the monster in the mural, one would have to leave the tower to go and look for it.

Where had I seen this monster before? Was it the 47th floor?

[Hey, that’s the thing that explodes, isn’t it?]

“Yes, I think that’s right. It was half-buried under the ground back then as well.”

Monsters came in all different shapes and sizes. In comparison to this flower, the other tiny, weak monsters didn’t deserve to be called monsters.

This flower right here was particularly unusual. It stored energy underground, and would eventually explode. The explosion would release tiny spores that would be propagated by the air. It was like a pimple that got popped and released pus.

On the 47th floor, the mission had been to direct people towards the dimension gate before the monster exploded. I didn't know what would happen if the monster exploded and spread its spores, but I assumed it was something terrible.

“What should I do?” I groaned

It was a monster that I had already encountered, but I was still clueless on how to attack it. The goal on the 47th floor was to guide people away from the monster, not confront it.

[Didn't you say you couldn't kill him?]

In addition, there was also the fact that once touched, the monster could explode. Before entering the 47th floor, Kirikiri had advised “You aren't going to pick a fight with the bomb. Instead of killing that monster, you have to lead people away from it.”

When I was on the 47th floor, I avoided the flowering monster in fear of an explosion. I'd thought about attacking it from a distance, but there was also the chance that the radius of the explosion could encompass the whole planet. Typically, it wouldn't be difficult to dismantle a bomb, but this bomb was one that couldn't be dismantled without accidentally detonating it.

“How much time did I have back then?”

[6 days, maybe.]

After the monster has enough stored energy, there would be approximately six days until it exploded. There was still time.

I had to gain faith even with this monster present. Other towers would be able to see the monster from afar, and it occurred to me that this may be a political arena. However, instead of politicians campaigning on TV, people would see seven apostles trying to defeat the monster in the field in order to gain faith. The apostle who achieves 500 believers wins.

I told Ahbooboo about my hypothesis.

[Will the apostles of other towers try to collect their faith competitively like you? Do they have the same target?] Ahbooboo questioned.

“Maybe.”

Unless absolutely necessary, I wouldn't try to compete with the other apostles over faith; it'd just be too much trouble.

[Well... I guess I'll have to think about something that would appeal to those who'll be watching.]

“No, thanks.”

[What?]

“Let's just kill that monster.”

[What if it explodes?]

I would just have to kill it in a fashion that didn't allow it to explode. Of course, there was still a high chance of it exploding, regardless of how I tried to kill it.

“Even if it explodes, wouldn't the people watching from here think that the monster died?”

I thought that would easily allow my degree of faith to reach 500.

Chapter 241

Tutorial 56th Floor (6)

[What if something goes wrong?]

Of course, attacking the monster didn't guarantee an increase in my degree of faith. The possibility that the monster would explode and people would get caught in the blast wasn't nonexistent. If that happened, I'd have to retry the stage.

If I couldn't obtain the necessary degree of faith, I'd automatically fail the stage and be moved to the waiting room to reattempt the stage; nothing was lost by attempting the stage again.

When I had first entered the stage, I'd inwardly cursed the dragon. However, thanks to the stage it had selected for me, I was able to learn more about the degree of faith and the divine power. If I was able to expand my knowledge of the relationship between the two, there would be nothing wrong in reattempting the stage. In fact, it might be beneficial to reattempt.

However, I was worried about if I failed this stage, that damned dragon wouldn't let me retry the stage. That cheap dragon would likely send me to a completely different stage.

"Whatever. Let's just go and fight this monster."

[Are you going to leave right away?]

"Yea, we're going to have to leave soon."

[Then please wait a little longer. Let me reassure these people. We need to maintain their faith in us.]

Ahbooboo called for the attention of the people who were distracted by the image of the monster displayed on the wall. Purposefully, he headed toward the opposite side of the wall, making people turn their back to the monster's unsettling image. He began his speech with a story that narrated the events of the last few days and affirmed the sect's doctrines and the greatness of the god.

In the later half of his speech, Ahbooboo detailed the existence of the monster. How dangerous and heinous that monster was. The information was nothing new to me, so I remained relatively unfazed, but there were people who kept looking back at the wall behind them with a concerned expression.

Ahbooboo heroically proclaimed, "As an apostle, he will destroy that monster!"

[Degree of Faith: 393]

[Degree of Faith: 395]

[Degree of Faith: 396]

Wow, I was impressed. Ahbooboo was surprisingly eloquent, and my degree of faith soared.

I motioned for Ahbooboo to finish up his speech. It would be better to leave sooner, so we could reach the monster as fast as we could.

"Frog, you'd better stay here," I whispered quietly so others wouldn't be distracted.

"Kea-ek."

The frog stubbornly refused to be left behind, and I knew it was no use trying to change its mind. If I left it behind, it would only sneak out to follow me.

"Haah fine. Let's go together."

Since the beginning, what the frog wanted from me had always been the same.

Let's go together.

I didn't want to refuse its request, but the task at hand was a dangerous one. Nevertheless, the frog stubbornly refused to be left behind. It would have been nice if the ring used from before could be used in a reverse manner.

When Ahbooboo finished his speech, we immediately set off to go looking for the monster. Before our departure, I warned people to not venture outside the tower and keep a close eye on the wall.

[Degree of Faith: 411]

Perhaps, because of my usual silence, people took my warnings seriously.

My degree of faith had risen by almost 10. It was a large increase, considering that, on the first day, I'd only gain 7 degrees even when I busted my ass with greetings.

* * *

Walking on the green plains was a euphoric experience. Of course, there was a devastating monster somewhere ahead, but it wasn't visible yet.

As the cool breeze caressed my face, and the sound of swaying grass hypnotized me, my mind relaxed.

Somehow, I was reminded of Kirikiri's field. The first time I had gone there, I felt my narrow perception of the world expand; it was as if I had become one with the world. As I walked through the peaceful plains, a similar sensation surfaced.

I frowned as the wind died down and the swaying grass came to a halt. I attempted to make the soft, sweet-smelling grass sway, and slowly called upon the power I had strengthened through accumulating faith. But, moving the grass manually through mana just wasn't as satisfactory as seeing it naturally sway in the wind.

The limits of this power were still unclear, but as I progressed through the tutorial, I was confident that I'd be able to sharpen my skills.

“Kea-ek!”

The frog croaked at Ahbooboo, who was trying to shove the handkerchief up the frog's nostrils. At this, Ahbooboo smiled mischievously and flew in circles around the frog. Annoyed, the frog shot out its tongue, trying to catch Ahbooboo, but all of its attempts were to no avail.

[Ha! It's still 500 years too soon for you to catch me! You son of a bitch!]

“Kea-ek!”

The two of them harassed each other just as little kids would. Their relationship hadn't been this playful back in the tower. It seemed that the two of them were also under some stress from constantly pretending to be stoic and emotionless. After all, he too, had been doing the same, until he left the tower.

* * *

Before I knew it, I had walked so far that I could see the monster vividly. Along with the horrendous visual came a noticeable stench leaking out from its body.

I warned the frog to stay put and silently watch from his position. The frog no longer put up any resistance, and proceeded to camouflage itself behind the long blades of grass.

[Degree of Faith: 463]

My degree of faith rose once more. Maybe the people could now see me, along with the monster, on the wall of the tower. It was likely that the other towers had a view of this monster on their walls as well.

Before approaching the monster, apostles from other towers came to greet me. Claiming that it was impossible to kill this monster, they proposed a coalition to find a way to achieve the 500 faith count together.

I refused. To me, it was a proposal that had little merit. I wanted to be seen heroically confronting the monster in order to gain faith, but it seemed that no other apostles were interested in doing so.

I turned around and saw the apostles in the distance, watching me from the wall. I stared back at them, unmoving. They definitely thought that I was plotting an elaborate scheme to raise my degree of faith. Well, they weren't wrong.

[I'm surprised. I thought you'd be fighting with them again.]

"Whenever I see an apostle, you think I'll fight them. Isn't that so, Ahbooboo?" I countered.

The apostles I'd met on this stage differed from the apostles I'd previously met. They differed in the sense that they weren't official apostles, chosen by god; they were only apostles in name. As of now, the title of 'Apostle' was given to me to carry out my duties, but there was a huge difference between me and the official apostles such as the Spirit King. I didn't want these little fakes to get involved in the fight.

[Yes, that's true.]

The closer I got to the monster, the worse the smell got, and as a result, my ears began to water as well. Perhaps the greatest danger of this monster was its repugnant appearance. It was shocking that I, who had seen more blood and corpses than anyone else, was saying so.

Its pulsating heart showed violet blood vessels on the outside, glowing dimly. Sebum and pus were formed in clusters, and dark, red, parasite-filled blood poured out of the organ in streams. Tiny human-shaped parasites were scattered around, chewing and swallowing everything in sight.

And... I'd better stop thinking about it. My stomach felt queasy. It's horrendous appearance was why I didn't touch it the last time we met.

[What if it really explodes?] Ahbooboo questioned worriedly.

“We’ll run away before the fire touches the body.”

I approached the monster, and formed a firearm out of a piece of armor in my hand. The armor was engulfed in flames and the surrounding air became distorted from the high heat.

I got rid of the firearm and casted magic. “Fireball.”

It was the most basic fire magic in my arsenal. In comparison to advanced fire magic techniques, it wasn’t nearly as hot.

But, it also had its advantages. The spell consumed very little mana, and it was something that was hard to mess up. In addition, the wielder’s physical condition and concentration did little to affect the quality of the spell. The purpose was to shoot a fireball, so the fire was maintained until it reached its designated location; after which, it got extinguished as the mana depleted.

[What are you doing?]

“Comparing.”

Some of the gods used divine power in the form of spells. Some priests who followed God did the same. So did Ahbooboo.

But I couldn’t use my divine power that way. It moved around and lit up a fire, instead of getting utilised in the form of spells.

It wasn’t long before I’d gotten dangerously close to the monster. I couldn’t afford to get any closer.

I halted, and spoke in a soft voice. “Fire.”

Once I uttered the word, everything around me was swept away in the fire. The fire impaired vision, so I found it hard to see.

As I focused more mana, the flames grew exponentially. It spread around me in a circle, with no specific sense of direction. The higher it rose, the farther it went.

The fire began to lick at the monster's body. Its skin sizzled, and the water inside its body instantly boiled and evaporated, leaving trails of steam. If left alone, the fire would probably kill the monster.

Suddenly, tentacles started protruding from all over its body. They glistened with unidentifiable bodily fluids and frantically slapped its own body, desperately trying to put out the flames.

But the monster's efforts were futile. The flame spread across the skin of the monster and burned at the flesh, pink muscles, and violet nerves. More blood started to boil and its organs began to swell.

The flames frantically sought out another portion of the monster it could burn. Before the monster could get a chance to explode, it had to be completely slayed. In order to do that, rather than destroyed everything in it, it was critical to burn major anatomical structures like the nerves, brain, and heart.

I was unsure when I would run out of mana or when the monster would explode, but I continued to focus on burning the monster.

I felt as though I was a surgeon desperately operating on a dying patient. Or an engineer who's defusing a time bomb. I didn't know when it would burst, but it made me more nervous, and my concentration increased.

I had been focused on killing the monster when a message suddenly appeared.

[Degree of Faith: 500]

[You have cleared the 56th floor of Hell's Difficulty level.]

[All anomalies and injuries have been recovered]

Alright. We had hit the goal. Now, we could rest easy and burn the monster.

[You'll be automatically moved to the waiting room.]

“What?”

* * *

I stared blankly at the waterfall gushing downwards. I was at the lake where I had met the dragon.

“Kea-ek!”

“Yes, I’m okay.”

I was relieved the frog was worried about me, but I was frustrated at the same time. There were so many things I had yet to accomplish in that stage. I wanted to explore my powers more, attack monsters, and measure the amount of divine power consumed by the Infringement of Control. Moreover, I wanted to research the possibility of using the power for other things besides burning.

I wanted to check the maximum level of faith that could be obtained from one person, what differences each person had, and whether there were any other conditions.

All those opportunities were gone. When the faith level reached 500 and the stage was cleared, all the faith instantly vanished.

[Don’t be too upset. Warrior, wouldn’t there another chance?]

Ahbooboo was right.

My lips parted, releasing a sigh. I slowly walked into the cave behind the waterfall.

The cave looked completely different from before. The stone walls had turned to smooth marble, and the rocky floor was covered with soft carpet. Colorful lights hung from the ceiling.

The bat feces and overgrown vines were nowhere to be found, and a subtle scent of perfume lingered in the air. The once damp, cool cave was now warm with a fire lit in the middle.

That fucking dragon bastard. It said this wasn't its house, yet look at how it remodeled the cave. How dare the dragon lie to him?

"It's irritating. Let's get rid of this by burning it up."

I cast a magic spell. "Fireball."

[Stop! No, you devil!] the dragon roared. But I ignored its cries.

Chapter 242

Tutorial 57th Floor (1)

[No!]

What did you mean ‘No’? I won’t stop.

I looked around, scanning the variety of furniture that had appeared in the previously empty cave. There were so many suitable things to burn that I didn’t know what to burn first.

“What should I burn first?”

[Let’s burn the picture on the wall first.] Ahbooboo sneered.

Impressive. He had a good eye for things like this.

“The painting on the wall should be the one that burns last. Before that comes burning the furniture used in our daily lives, such as tables and bedding.”

This dragon had hoarded quite a lot of luxurious things, ones that humans would usually have at their homes.

I didn’t get why it bought furniture for humans. Did dragons take the form of another species in their daily lives? If that was the case, the large size of the cave seemed excessive.

[What do you want!?] the dragon bawled. The crystal ball wriggled spastically, juggling the fireball from one round side to the other, just like a hot potato.

“Just let it go. Burning something makes me feel better; less stressed.”

[No! You crazy arsonist!]

What did this dragon mean by ‘No’ again?

[Why do you need to relieve your stress?]

Why? I didn’t know. Maybe it was because the dragon had killed the fun just as I was about to test the limits of the divine power.

It was more accurately phrased as ‘You can’t take anything from me’.

I explained to the dragon how I felt.

[I can’t help it. Unlike general stages where post-clearing behavior is also viewed as an evaluation factor, my designated stage is designed only for the challenger to reach the goal. It is normal to be moved here immediately after clearing.]

Then, you should have told me that in advance.

“You little bastard. I told you that I didn’t like leadership missions, and you picked the perfect stage for it, huh?” I growled.

[It’s my job to select a stage based on the shortcomings of the challenger!]

“Then, you could have told me in advance that you were sending me to such a stage.”

[You’d have hated it, nonetheless!]

That was true. I sighed helplessly.

I set the crystal ball down roughly on a clean table and flopped down on the bed. As soon as I hit the soft material, my body felt lethargic, and I lost all motivation and focus.

The last floor had been such a rare opportunity, and I felt dejected from missing it.

[Hmm. There’ll be another chance later, so don’t get too upset.] the dragon assured.

Yeah, well, there wasn't much I could do about it now. Instead, I asked questions that I had put off.

"What's this vote notification that's been up for a while?"

[Voting begins]

[For: 23, Against: 41]

[Voting begins]

[For: 24, Against: 11]

[Voting begins]

[For: 59, Against: 4]

This window had continued to pop ever since we entered the dragon's cave. It didn't seem like a bug, but then what else could it be?

[Oh, you can see it too? Never mind. It has nothing to do with you. None of your business.]

"What is it?"

[It's a vote for the God of Remorse.] the dragon said vaguely.

[Seeing you on this stage, some suggested taking disciplinary action against the God of Remorse in the vaccine war.]

The God of Remorse, huh? He was the god that designed the 35th stage; it was a memorable stage, one filled with remorse. The God of Remorse had kept a close eye on me in the time I had spent there. Perhaps it was because I suffered on the 35th floor stage that my feelings towards the God of Remorse hadn't been favourable.

However, the source from King Goblin had proved to be helpful when controlling divine power. Now that I knew the God of Remorse arranged for the source to be given to me, his favourability with me had become better.

The God of Remorse had supposedly put himself at a considerable disadvantage by giving me the power source without permission. I was curious as to why he showed such willingness to break the rules for me.

“Can you tell me about the God of Remorse?” I asked, sitting up on the bed with my legs folded.

If the dragon replaced Kirikiri, it should, at least, provide some information after clearing the stage. Then again, information about gods isn’t that easily obtained.

“Sure.”

We weren’t informed much about gods, and generally, people were more focused on solving problems rather than finding out more information about them.

[To define the God of Remorse, he could be called the god of walking backward.]

It was a sensible analogy.

[When you always look back at the past while walking forwards, you often fall and get lost. That’s when you feel regret, remorse filling within you. He, the God of Remorse, has always been looking behind him.]

It was essential to reflect on past mistakes. It could be a motivation for a better life, a warning not to repeat the same mistakes. But, a god who looks only at the past is unable to see the present and the future; he endlessly repeats the same mistakes. Listening to the description, the God of Remorse didn’t seem like a god one would want to associate with,

[The God of remorse had recently gained a unique position. As the whole area fell into confusion, more and more people asked him for advice.]

“Huh?”

This was an unexpected explanation. When I asked the dragon for a description, all I wanted was to know was the concept of the God of Remorse, not his status quo. I thought it would be good to know about the world I was unaware of, so I decided to listen quietly.

[Since the vaccine war began, many people have been confused. They sought out the foresight of gods with visionary powers, but even the visionary gods said it wasn't easy to predict what the future held.]

“.....”

[Those, who could not find an answer, went to the God of Remorse. One of the characteristics of remorse is familiarity with past battles. Isn't there a saying like 'He, who looks back, can't see the next moment that comes, but knows better than anyone else what the next moment will be'?]

“Never heard it before.”

[Really? I thought it was a pretty famous saying. To put it simply, we can predict the future through the past; history repeats itself.]

“So, what happened to the people who sought advice? Did they get any?” I questioned.

[I don't know. However, I don't think those who sought advice would have gotten any.] the dragon predicted.

“Why?”

The dragon snorted before answering, [If he had been able to provide useful advice to others, he would have gained prestige rather than remorse.]

It was an explanation that made me speechless. There really were many kinds of strange gods.

[It's true that the God of Remorse was getting a lot of attention. He usually spent his time idling looking at the past, but this time he, himself, came forward. Breaking the rules. Bearing disciplinary action. You're the reason why he did it.] the dragon accused.

"I'm responsible for this? What?"

Was it because the gods had taken pity on me?

[Don't overthink it. The gods were already paying attention to you before that. Although, many still don't know about you. It was only known that the God of Remorse had given an unknown challenger the power of origin without permission and was disciplined for it.]

With so much information to process, I became a little confused, even more so because it had been an unexpected turn of events.

"Yes. Thank you. But, are you allowed to tell me this?"

The amount of information I had obtained through other stages paled in comparison to the amount of information the dragon had just provided me.

[Hmm. It's fine.]

"Okay. I won't burn your house." After it did me such a favor, I couldn't vent my anger on its house without bearing a guilty conscience. I extinguished the fireball that had been floating above my palm.

[Is that so? You're pretty decent. Oh, and as I said before, this cave is not my home.]

* * *

"Kea-ek!" The frog was swimming in the lake under the waterfall.

I was curious as to whether it would act like a dog or a frog when it went into the water, so I watched it carefully.

“Kea-ek!”

Perhaps, because it had a dog’s body, it was dog paddling. After the meal, I continued to watch the frog swim and play, while the dragon talked to me.

[Let’s talk about the next stage. Is there a kind of stage you want to avoid?]

I believed I heard this question before.

“I’d like to avoid the stage where soul-type monsters usually appear.”

[Oh. Why is that?]

I explained to the dragon that the stages with soul-type monsters were mostly boring. The skill of soul exploitation, obtained from the sixth floor, was too deadly for spiritual enemies. I could use a soul sword and skills like soul-steal. Most of all, ghosts with terrible shapes and spirits that usually attacked the mind were not even impressive.

[Oh, is that so?]

You lizard! I had a bad feeling that I might just be sent to a stage full of soul-monsters this time.

[Is there any stage you want?]

The stage I wanted? It would be one where I could get to learn more magic. If not, then a place I could extract information from.

“I wish there was a stage where I could learn more about the source. Or the stage for what you call transformation.”

The dragon thought for a moment before saying, [Okay. Floor 57 and Floor 58 will have what you need. We’ll decide on the 59th floor later.]

Oh, was it a stage where I could learn about the source or transformation as I wished? I was so thankful that it was finally listening to me.

“It’s not a strange stage, is it?”

[No!]

I felt a little nervous at the dragon’s answer. Was there even a stage that wasn’t strange in Hell’s Difficulty? I was worried that there would be a really crazy stage.

[It’s not dangerous, and as you wish, it’s a stage where you can get a little more information about the source.] the dragon roared.

I still didn’t feel good about it. Pausing, I looked at the portal that had appeared on the floor.

But it’s not like I could quit now, and even if I could, I don’t think the dragon would let me off. I thought I might as well get it over with.

Returning the still swimming frog to the ring, I climbed into the portal.

“Move.”

As the portal spun, a wheezing sound came from the dragon’s crystal ball. I had heard Idy laugh like that once, and the uneasiness I felt only increased.

The place where I was transported to was in the middle of a busy street. There were a lot of people in the street, and the strange thing was that they were all looking up at the sky.

I followed their gaze; there was a black sphere floating in the sky.

[The 57th floor stage begins]

Chapter 243

Tutorial 57th Floor (2)

It resembled modern Earth in many ways. Sturdy buildings soared into the sky, lined up neatly. Roads and sidewalks paved the way to different places.

Except for some minor differences, the style of clothing was also similar to Earth's. I thought my armor would stand out, so I took a thick coat out of my inventory and put it on.

It was fortunate that the weather was a bit chilly. My coat was not much different from the coats these people wore, so I could wear it without standing out. Also, the armor was light and thin, so it was comfortable to wear a coat over it. The soul sword on my waist was mildly uncomfortable, but I decided to let it be.

I adjusted my clothes and looked around again. People were still looking at the black sphere that hovered in the sky. I had no idea what it was.

Occasionally, the sphere would squirm, and the people closely followed its movements. Like everyone else, I peered curiously at the black ball.

After convulsing for a long time, the black sphere finally flashed. It was only for an instant, but the people on the street who witnessed it held their hands together and prayed. I thought that they might be praying to a god in this world, but when I heard their prayers, I felt that it was not the case either.

I could make out a few words.

His sacrifice for us. Great. Peace. Heroic. End. Salvation.

It sounded more like nonsensical rambling and less like praise for God.

A god wouldn't sacrifice anything for humanity.

Then, a message popped up.

[The 57th floor begins]

Description: Two years ago, there was misfortune on the Arahabi planet, which was known for its unusually high frequency of superpowers, along with its high level of civilization. An asteroid and an alien species from outer space landed there, making the people face a death crisis.

Fortunately, a hero saved the planet. The superhuman sealed the entire asteroid along with their world in the sky, to prevent the alien species from causing more destruction. The seal has been intact for two years, but no one knows what's going on inside it.

We want to investigate what's going on inside the seal. The planet has officially rejected requests for vaccination, and we have sent you, a secret investigator, to the planet. There are new items in your inventory.

[Clear Condition]

– Death.

Hmm... What could I say? It was quite a silly stage mission. What did it want me to do? Waiting for me at the end of the lengthy description was the condition of death. What even was this?

Did it mean that once I died, I cleared the stage? It seemed unlikely. Maybe it was a stage where the second clear condition appeared only after your first death.

Oh, my. Now the system was telling me to die. First, I took out the newly received items from my inventory.

They were easy to find because they were all inside a bag that I hadn't seen before. An ID card. Clothing and combat uniform. A watch. One pill and an ornament that looked like a bracelet.

My ID card appeared to be forged. My face and my frequently used alias were on it. It seemed that I'd be addressed as Ho here.

Information about the combat clothes was displayed in the explanation window. They were the clothes worn by the superhumans of this planet during combat. I hastily put them back into my inventory and made a note to change into them later. Roughly, I fastened the watch to my wrist.

The pill was said to be able to forge superpowers. As soon as I saw that the retention time was more than two months, I swallowed the pill.

Finally, I looked at the bracelet.

[Fluid escape assist]

[Description: An aiding device that helps you abandon your body in an emergency and let your spirit escape in the form of fluid. The soul will remain intact for two hours, even if the body is entirely dead or destroyed.]

I'd been given all sorts of strange items.

"What do you think?" I asked Ahboo.

[Well...] Ahbooboo didn't give me a clear answer, but we continued to talk and hypothesize about this stage's mission.

"I don't know what it is that makes me say so, but I feel that there's a high risk of dying or getting hurt during the investigation. That's why I've been given these items. If I can, I'll abandon my body and continue the investigation for two hours."

[Yes, that sounds reasonable. If the mission states death, it would be better to collect as much information as possible before or after death than to keep preserving the body.]

Ahbooboo and I came to this conclusion, but I couldn't help but dislike it. I couldn't believe I was about to die. It was apparent what danger laid ahead from seeing the ominous message that seemed to foreshadow my death. If I were a normal creature, I wouldn't be able to survive. As of now, I decided that I'd try my best not to die.

[Don't worry too much. I'll resuscitate you in the meantime.]

Thank you, but there's no need. Ahbooboo, without a doubt, had the power to resuscitate me, but in the end, it was the God of Sky that bestowed Ahbooboo power. I didn't want to owe anything to a god. It was too risky.

The watch on my wrist suddenly began to ring. When I lifted my wrist, there was an exclamation mark in the middle instead of the time. Wondering what to do, I raised my right hand and touched the exclamation mark.

<There are 40 minutes left until the next event.>

The wristwatch had sent a holographic message. I looked closely at the holograms, amazed by the function that I saw for the first time. I thought it was a civilization similar to Earth, but it seemed to be a little more advanced than Earth.

<Please convene at the Superpowers Association's Office before the opening.

-The Way to Go>

I touched the holographic item, "The Way to Go", with my hand, and it showed me the way from where I was standing to the association's office.

It had navigation abilities.

[Wow. Let me make one of these.] Ahbooboo muttered in fascination. Ahbooboo would be able to create similar functions by magic and embed them into anyone. It was clear that navigation was a useful function, but Ahbooboo would already know the way, so it wasn't of much help to him.

If we were going to convene somewhere, why did the mission start in the middle of a street? Haah, so annoying. All we could see at the beginning was the level of civilization and the bypassers on the roads. The level of civilization, architecture, and the style of clothing could also be seen in the script office. Then, what the stage wanted to show me would probably be the bypassers in the streets.

Were they praying to the black sphere? That black sphere was said to be the seal, consisting of an entire asteroid and a superhuman. The sphere and people's prayers appeared to be related. What kind of hidden information about the faith was here?

"Hey, Ahbooboo, do you feel anything?" I asked Ahbooboo.

People seemed to be paying great attention to the sphere, so I asked him in my mind.

[Well, I don't feel any divine power.]

Right? Although the people were praying hard, it didn't give rise to any divine feeling. It was a strange thing.

It was even more so because I remembered gathering the faiths of just a few people on the 56th floor and wielding divine power. Did the power of the source have such a significant effect? So much so that one can exert high strength even with just a little bit of divine power?

There were still many unsolved questions. One by one, they were being resolved, but more issues appeared in place of them. I wondered if the day would come when I'd find out all the secrets. I scratched my head for a moment and deeply sighed.

"Let's go and do as I've been told for now."

What else could I even do? I had no choice but to go.

* * *

When I arrived at the office, people were gathered at the entrance. At first glance, every one of them seemed to have superpowers. Adorning the combat suit, I had previously received allowed me to blend in with them.

No matter how much I looked around, it felt as if I was wearing ordinary clothes, not combat clothes. I wondered if everyone would battle together.

There was a line in front of them. I, too, got swept up in the crowd and headed there. I didn't know why we were brought here, but I would gladly welcome it if it were for a militant or dangerous purpose.

It looked like they were checking our belongings, so I asked Seregia to excuse us and put the sword in the inventory. Then there was an ID test, and finally, an x-ray machine of sorts. Every time a person passed the device, the level and ability of that person as a superhuman would be examined.

Beep-

Name: Ho

Certification number: 21400

Grade: B (1400)

After passing the examiner, my name on the ID card was marked. If you can get a name and a designated number with this machine, why bother checking the ID? I was tempted to complain, but I suppressed the urge and went ahead.

I continued to follow the crowd and walked down a seemingly endless corridor. In the end, a large hall came into sight. It was a conference room, but its size made it look more like an indoor football field. The people coming into the conference room looked at the hologram of their watches and went to their seats, so I followed suit.

Seat number: B112

Fortunately, I was able to find my seat quickly, and I sat down and looked around.

Perhaps it was because this was a conference room that could accommodate more than 10,000 people, that an endless number of people had been entering for a long time. I felt like I'd have to wait a while for something to start.

A tall man was sitting next to me. He turned and asked, in an amicable manner. "1,400?"

I thought for a moment about his question. Recalling that the number 1400 was attached to mind, I answered, "Uh, yes. One thousand four hundred."

My reply was greeted with a big laugh. "Hey, there's another person besides me who didn't get an A grade because he's 100 points short."

He gave another hearty laugh. The ignorant-looking giant had a longer name than I thought, and I quickly gave up memorizing his name.

I asked how he knew I had 1,400 points.

"It looks like this is your first time in the conference room."

The giant pointed to the seat, saying that one's grade and score determined positions. Therefore, I could quickly know my score by sitting in the chair designated for grade B's.

The giant seemed to feel a sense of homogeneity since I, like himself, had an ambiguous score of 1400. He was probably excited to meet an unfortunate comrade who narrowly fell from grade A and ended up in grade B. From the seating arrangement and the giant's attitude, I could see that the rating meant a lot here.

"Well, even with the same grade, I would be much stronger." the giant muttered

I turned my head to frown at the giant. 'Much stronger'? That wasn't a phrase I could overlook.

“What?” I questioned.

When the giant made eye contact with me, he smiled and asked,
“What are you going to do?”

[Be gentle. You’re now assuming a fake identity.]

Chapter 244

Tutorial 57th Floor (3)

Ahbooboo's words made sense. To infiltrate and gather information, I had to act inconspicuous. It was better to finish quickly and concisely than to run around in circles.

“Oh, my gosh...”

When I poked his side with my elbow, he fell over with a groan. Because of his large size, I could easily hit his vital point. I was sitting right next to him, so it was even more convenient.

“Eck... Cough... Cough...”

[What's wrong with him?] Ahbooboo asked when he saw the giant doubling over and crouching in front of the seat.

[He's in shock. His internal organs are disordered because of that. I told you to be careful. What if he dies?]

He wouldn't die. If there was no internal bleeding, no bone or muscle damage, then why would he die? It would just hurt a little.

Occasionally, people glanced at the wheezing giant, but for the most part, they ignored him. I focused on sitting in my seat as nonchalantly as I could. No one stepped forward and took care of the giant, so it seemed that he was not only stupid but also unpopular. He was a fool, but he made me worried.

This idiot who had a muscle for a brain was bluffing.

[They say there are many people with supernatural powers here. I thought he might have been powerful since he's here.] Ahbooboo frowned.

If the giant had been practicing martial arts or learning magic, I could have figured out his strength without having to hit him. However, since he was a superhuman, I had no idea how to measure his ability.

Curiously, I asked Ahbooboo if he knew about superpowers.

[I don't know either. I only know the basic ideas.]

I asked Ahbooboo to elaborate on his knowledge.

[There aren't many benefits of superpower, and you just have to be lucky to be born with superpowers.]

"What else?" I probed.

[It's hard to tell if someone has superpowers or not, and the use of superpowers requires relatively little mana.]

From what Ahbooboo was saying, superpowers sounded perfect. When fighting against a superhuman, it'd be hard to determine what their abilities were.

[There are disadvantages, too. Superhumans have limited capabilities. Take a wizard, for example. If you're a wizard who can use firewall magic, then you'd be able to use fireball magic since the two types of magic are closely related. However, in the case of superpower, you can't use certain types of powers if you're incapable of it; their skill set is limited.]

Indeed, it was a considerable disadvantage. Superpowers were an innate ability, but a superhuman would never be able to improve on abilities that weren't superpowers.

[I've heard that they can improve their skills. It's just that they can't practice a new ability.]

This was interesting. In a way, many tutorial challengers were similar to superhumans. Some challengers used magic spells but didn't fully understand magic, which limited their improvement and development.

Superpowers were innate, so it wasn't surprising that there was an ID system based on your abilities. However, it created a classist system that categorized people based on how affluent they were with superpowers[1].

"Hey, 1400," I called out to the giant sprawled out on the floor. His coughing ended, and the pain should have already faded, but he continued to lay on the ground and stare at me. There was a stark difference between his current condition and the time he feigned strength.

"What?" responded the giant with tears clinging to his eyelashes. Had it hurt that much? I didn't hit him that hard, though.

I asked the pitiful giant what kind of superpower he had.

Then, the giant looked at me with a puzzled look. Why was he looking at me like that? I was just asking a simple question.

"It's body strengthening..."

* * *

Body strengthening was the ability to improve strength, agility, sense, and endurance significantly. I was shocked; I was able to beat up a person with such an ability.

"I had no idea."

[Warrior, a superhuman with body strengthening could hardly withstand your attack. Imagine what would have happened if he was an average person,] Ahbooboo scolded

"...I'll control my powers," I assured him.

Perhaps, because I kept looking at him with a look of disbelief, the giant pulled his ID card out and showed it to me as proof. On the back of his identification card, was written:

“What is that?” I asked, confused.

He quickly answered that the number indicated a measure of physical reinforcement. “If you’re a superhuman, you should know this.”

[Just pretend that you know, why are you asking such a question? You’ll seem suspicious.] Ahbooboo advised, but I didn’t want to do that. Wasn’t this stage meant for information collection?

I pulled out my ID card and checked the back. Just like the giant’s, there was a number code embedded.

<122>

The number was high. Was it a good thing?

[You’re not going to push that big guy and ask him what it means, are you?]

Um.

[If you don’t know what your ID says, you’ll stand out. It’ll become evident that it’s a fake ID or someone else’s ID.]

Ahbooboo was right. As I was thinking of the meaning of the number code 122, my eyes fell on something

“Work is a Beast Summoner.”

Oh, so I was a summoner. If I had to have a fake ID, I should have gotten a reinforcement power that would make it easier to disguise myself. Just why was I a summoner?

[Why don’t you comfort that giant? It’s embarrassing for him to be beaten by a summoner.]

Instead of saying anything, I simply activated the ring to summon the frog.

“Kea-ek!” As soon as the frog appeared, it complained about being summoned so late.

“Wait, what’s that?”

“Is that a frog? Or a dog?”

Chatter broke out in the crowd as a massive frog appeared in the conference room. Man, our frog’s presence was dope.

“It’s an invisible frog,” I explained to the giant, who had a dazed expression.

[That’s a very insincere explanation.]

* * *

Using the frog, I was able to convince the giant that I was not the one who hit him; it was the invisible frog. When the giant growled at me, the owner, asking why I didn’t stop it, I weakly said that the silent frog had attacked before I could notice anything.

Surprisingly, the giant seemed to believe this lie. I supposed it was better for his ego if he believed that I wasn’t the one who had beaten him.

“So it was the frog’s killer move,” he said. “It’s great that I endured it. It was excruciatingly painful.” After apologizing to each other, the tense atmosphere finally lightened.

“Thank you, 1400,” I said, accepting the snacks and drinks he had bought. In commemoration of his apology and our reconciliation, the giant bought food from the snack bar.

“Why don’t you stop calling me 1400?” 1400 grumbled.

I heard from the giant that the score of 1400 is the highest in grade B. If he had 100 more points, he would have received an A grade. With those extra 100 points, his life could have been different.

It made sense. At the meeting, those that were B-level or lower were strictly excluded and were no more than spectators. Most of the meetings were led by S-levels, while the A-levels sometimes contributed their views.

Me? I just watched the meeting while eating snacks. There was evident differential treatment by grade. I couldn't even share my opinion even though I was called to a meeting. If you were going to treat me like that, I would have rather not come.

"By the way, this is delicious," I complimented.

"Right?" The giant grinned. I felt he was a good guy. Or maybe just a pushover.

Be it me being a summoner, an unexpected accident, a quarrel he had started, bluffing because he didn't want to get beaten, people ignoring him, his buying food.

You could tell he was a pushover. Since it's a stage where we need to gather information, I decided to be kind to this pushover and extract information from him in a comfortable way. Fortunately, 1400 was very talkative.

He worked for the Defense Agency. In a significant accident or crime, they were dispatched to settle the situation and had to mediate disputes in case of conflicts. It was what police should do, but due to the limitations of non-superhumans, people with abilities such as 1,400 were often dispatched.

He was a good friend, and it was nice listening to his daily life. Suddenly, there was a big commotion in the conference room, and a bill was stuck on the front panel of the conference room.

<SSS-class Supercaptain Archiden Rescue and Extraterrestrial Asteroid Disappearance Operations>

"Are they really doing that?" 1,400 muttered, dumbfounded. Looking around, those with B-grade and A-grade abilities seemed visibly puzzled.

The agenda posted on the panel included the mobilization of all capable people above grade B. In other words, I was being forced to go regardless of my own wishes.

[How many of the people in the Supernatural People's Association are capable of ordering that?] I asked.

[Well, didn't you say this was a planet with many superpowers? Perhaps the king or emperor doesn't have power over superhuman affairs. A person with supernatural powers, not a king or an emperor, may be the head of state. Maybe one of them over there is the ruler.] Ahbooboo replied.

Our thoughts differed from each other, but we agreed that the power structure of this society favorably treated superhumans.

The meeting adjourned with that. The agenda was approved, but details of the operation seemed to have not been decided. It would take some time for details to be decided and the operation to be drawn up, according to 1400.

I followed the crowd out of the conference room and asked 1400, "Where are you going?"

"I'm going home. I need to go to work early tomorrow morning."

I was thinking of drinking or having a late-night snack with him, but I did need a place to rest.

"Then I'll come along with you."

"Huh?"

"I'm going to your house."

[1] : If you didn't know, classism is discrimination based on a perceived social class set by society. Feudalism is a type of classism.

Chapter 245

Tutorial 57th Floor (4)

“What are you doing?” I asked the tired-looking 1400, who was standing at the front door.

“Come in, treat it like it’s your own home,” I said casually.

“This- This is my home, though.”

It was quite a neat apartment. This world was similar to that of modern Earth, so the structure of the apartment seemed familiar.

By the way, he was pretty neat. I planned to clean up if the room was dirty, but that wasn’t necessary anymore.

“Sit here,” 1400 instructed.

I sat at the dining table, while he rummaged around in the kitchen cupboard and brought a plate filled with snacks and a bottle of liquor.

“Are you actually going to sleep here tonight?” 1400 questioned.

Seriously, how many times did I have to say it? I nodded in response.

“What about your home?”

“I don’t have one,” I said. No home.

1400 looked at me sympathetically and patted my shoulder.

“Work?” 1400 probed.

“I don’t work either.”

1400 sighed at my answer. “How can a B-grade man have no home or work? If you have the ability, you usually have a job and some money in your pocket. Ah, well, that’s true. Only if you have the ability.”

What did he say?

1400 quietly poured the sparkling wine into my glass. I took a look at the living room while sipping slowly, the smooth wine sliding down my throat.

All I could see were ordinary household objects. Among them, there was only one ambiguous object.

“What’s that?” I asked, pointing to the thing.

“Game console.”

I got curious about this ‘game console’. It looked like a public phone booth that could fit three to four people. Were you supposed to go in there?

“Do you want to try it?”

* * *

“It’s been four days already. One more round?” I asked.

“You’re crazy.”

Game consoles were like those standard FPS games in arcades. It just happened to be a little more advanced than that of Earth’s. There was only about half a generation’s difference. Perhaps if I stayed on Earth longer, Earth would’ve become more similar to this world. The only difference would be that they use various kinds of superpowers instead of guns, but in my opinion, that wasn’t very unique.

Anyway, the games were fun. I asked 1,400 for some basic rules and played a little bit in single mode.

After gaining some confidence, I suggested betting. “Wanna make a bet?”

1400 initially declined the bet; perhaps he was worried I would lose.

“Scared?” I taunted. 1400 immediately accepted the bet.

The bet was a good idea; I could stay at 1400’s house an extra day for every game that I won.

1400 said it was a ridiculous condition, but I was able to win four games and secure four days at his house.

[You’re really good at this. Anyone would think that you’re taking advantage of him.] Ahbooboo said.

Taking advantage? It wasn’t called taking advantage when the other party agreed to play along.

“Hey. Let’s play another round,” I said and restarted the game.

After playing for a few times, I got used to controls. Now, I think I could win even with a few disabilities.

“No, I refuse to play anymore!” 1400 yelled.

“Oh, ho. I got the kill. Is it already my fifth win?”

Miraculously, I secured a five-day stay. 1400 grumbled as he came out of the game booth, lying on the couch in the living room.

“How crazy. Is this really your first time?!”

Even though he complained, he didn’t revoke my five-day stay. Was he going to doubt me because I won the game? Apologies if your pride got hurt.

It was always better to play the game seriously. If you still want to be kind, you can repay the loser with some gratitude. If you become too meek, those who like taking advantage of pushovers will stick to you like a leech. Fortunately, 1400 was not that much of a pushover.

“You said you didn’t have a job earlier, right?” 1400 asked.

“Yes.”

“Then, would you like to work with me?” 1400 asked if I had any thoughts of working at his workplace. After all, staying at his home would require me to pay rent.

“Of course, I’ll pay accommodation fees.”

The condition for clearing the 57th-floor stage was death, which likely meant to collect as much information as possible before I die.

I thought of the black sphere, the hovering asteroid, the superhuman sealed inside, and the plan that was drawn up to rescue that superhuman. However, there was nothing I could do until the operation began.

“What are we supposed to do there?” I asked.

“It’s the same as what I told you about earlier. Come forward when people need help. Usually, we mediate conflicts between superpowers or stand guard at a crime scene. Sometimes, we guard or track criminals down. Oh, I don’t stakeout since it takes a long time.”

“Okay.”

There was no reason to be displeased with this work. The more the people who got involved, the easier it would be to get information about this place.

[I think it’s okay for me too.] Ahbooboo belatedly expressed his consent.

1400 left the house to make a quick run to the store. While drinking wine, I leaned back on the sofa, enjoying its slightly rough, yet comforting texture against my skin. At this sight, Ahbooboo said,

[You're walking around like it's your own house.]

"He said I could stay here. That makes it my home too."

[What kind of logic is that?] Ahbooboo questioned disdainfully.

* * *

"You didn't sleep?"

"I did. I just woke up, though."

When 1400 returned, I was playing a game in the living room. Although I felt comfortable, I couldn't fall asleep quickly. The feeling of unease I always had when on a stage refused to secede. The addictive game console didn't do much to help my insomnia, either.

After breakfast with 1400, I finished getting ready for work and dressed in a uniform that 1400 had lent to me. The outfit consisted of a large vest, but the front of the garment was rather hard. I wondered how long it would be able to withstand the brute force of supernatural powers.

When I asked 1400, he replied, "Of course, it can't bear the destructive force of superpowers. If someone grade C or higher decides to attack you, the vest isn't going to do anything. But it's better than walking around with nothing. It's light, too, so it shouldn't be too troublesome to carry around."

I muttered, "I see."

After I finished preparing, I lazed around on the sofa and asked 1400 if he wanted to play games, but he said he didn't play games during working hours. Oh, my God. He's so uptight even at his own home; he was tougher than I thought. In the end, I dazedly held a glass of water and sipped it occasionally.

An hour or two later, the device in 1400's pocket rang. Checking the device, he said, "We have a dispatch request. Let's go."

Finally! The moment I had been waiting for. 1400 said his job was to resolve disputes between superhumans, and I was looking forward to seeing what kind of superhumans would be fighting.

* * *

“You son of a b*tch!”

“F*ck you!”

I want to go home and play games was the first thought that came to my mind as soon as I saw the children shouting and swearing at each other.

The request had come from an ordinary school, so I had been very excited when I heard about this location.

What had happened at that school? Did a superhuman run away to a school with children and take hostages during a battle? Or was the battle area just near this school? Even though I entered the school with a pounding heart, I soon let out a sigh in disappointment.

Two young children were fighting against each other. One of them had a blue eye, and the first one's face seemed to have been punched. If each other's superpowers were used, they shouldn't be bruised, but have their heads blown off instead.

“Both are energy-related. I'm in trouble,” 1400, who was standing next to me, murmured.

I asked why he was in trouble. 1400 explained patiently. “When their powers collide with each other, it'll cause an explosion.”

“What's the extent of the explosion?”

“The upper floor, lower floor, and half of this floor will certainly be blown away.”

That was a wide range. In that case, the school would have to be shut down. There would be a hefty amount of reconstruction if the building were to blow up.

Nearby, teachers were quietly evacuating students, and it looked like they were trying not to provoke the two superhuman students who were fighting. Several teachers were clinging to them, trying to stop them somehow.

“Shut up before I blow you away, you bitch!” one of them growled in anger at a teacher.

He’s going a bit overboard with his language.

“Oh my,” I said monotonously. Young children cussing? What a shocker.

“There are only a few options. Wait until they’re exhausted. Or, if we’re lucky, they’ll make up by themselves.”

No matter how hard I looked, it didn’t seem like those rude children would make up, so I asked how to attack them.

“I take one, and you take one. Can you do it? I would have done it if it were just one person,” 1400 explained. “It’s dangerous to rush in hastily. Because I have no experience, I may fail to control my powers, and if I do, it will cause a massive accident.”

Oh, Lord. Two rude children were fighting, and it caused such a huge problem. This situation was a side effect in the world where superpowers were randomly given. Many young people had high power.

Most of us improved our abilities with gruesome effort, but some were naturally born with god-like powers. And such skills were considered priceless. Outside of this world, there had never been an instance where unqualified children were given abilities.

In many ways, this was a bizarre world.

While I was thinking, 1400 went to talk to them, and upon seeing 1400, the children stopped fighting. Was it because of the B-grade embedded in his uniform? I had a feeling that was the case.

The reason the children seemed to shrink away in front of 1400 was because he was both superhuman and a B-grade.

Both of them were intimidated. That alone made things much better, but even then, the situation did not settle down.

[This place is amusing.] Ahbooboo commented.

“Yea,” I agreed.

[I still think it’s a little unfair though.] He said quietly, talking about the way people got superpowers randomly. [That easy-to-get power in all of them feels a little strange.]

“You’re appalled by it, aren’t you?”

[Yes.] Ahbooboo and Seregia answered in unison. Seregia, who usually remained silent, answered the same.

The two were from the same world, a world full of criminals who transcended law enforcement using brute force. Civil wars were rampant among humans, and whenever there was a moment of peace, someone would manage to stir up trouble.

For Ahbooboo and Seregia, strength was precious, and it was only natural to pursue it through hours of training. I could understand because I knew their greed for power and their fierceness.

While I was talking to Ahbooboo and Seregia, things took a new turn.

“Do you know who my father is?!”

Ah, I had seen this a lot in Earth dramas. I no longer felt the need to listen to the children’s whining. I formed a transparent ball of energy behind the necks of the children and proceeded to hit them on the back of their necks with it.

The children fainted, and their superpowers naturally dispersed as they lost consciousness. I was prepared to dissipate their powers by force, but it was a waste of effort.

1400 looked at me in bewilderment. The teachers looked at me curiously as well.

I decided to answer their questions about what happened. “Invisible frog.”

I summoned the frog from the ring.

“Kea-ek!” As soon as the frog was summoned, it croaked cheerfully.

Chapter 246

Tutorial 57th Floor (5)

Once the fighting had halted, the parents of the children who had been fighting, arrived. Surprisingly, none of the parents were angry with me.

Instead, one of them quickly bent in gratitude to me and apologized. Both the kids were superhumans, but one of the parents was not. One child's father was a superhuman, but the other child's father was not.

Although the dispute ended, it didn't have a good ending. The father with superpowers treated the other one coldly. Rather than two equals, the pair looked more like the way a nobleman in the Joseon Dynasty treated slaves. Which father would want to bend to others in front of his son? It certainly wasn't a pleasant sight.

"Can't you do anything?" I asked 1400, unable to hold back.

"No," He answered bitterly, disappointment evident in his features. I thought all citizens had the privilege of universal equality, but it turns out this world was too classist for that.

"Then why do you keep watching?"

"You never know." There could be room for intervention. It was such a vain answer.

Fortunately, the father with superpowers never crossed the line. As soon as the situation was about to heat up, 1400 stealthily approached, and the father chose to close the case properly. He must have been satisfied with showing off his power. That gentleman seemed to think this was an extension of his child's quarrel.

When things were over, we went out of the school and visited a small restaurant. While ordering drinks and simple food, Chun said he should wait for the next dispatch request. Sadly, the meal wasn't very appealing after what had just happened.

"I've solved one thing, but will I get paid?"

"Yeah. This was originally a request from the police, but the police asked me to act as a mediator. You'll get paid depending on the number of fights you resolve."

I had a strong hunch that I wouldn't receive much. How much money would I earn for breaking up a fight between children?

One surprising thing was that the status of B-grade people was higher than I had thought. At first, I hadn't immediately noticed it.

I'd noticed the way the father looked at 1400. He probably thought something along the lines of "Why do people with B-grade superpowers get involved in this kind of thing?" His expression said it all.

Even while walking down the street, several people whispered to each other, saying, "He's a B-grade" and "I'm sure he'll make a lot of money out of this. Why did he have to come here?"

"Why are you doing this? Surely, you have better jobs to do," I asked 1400, purely out of curiosity.

Anyone who had a high enough status could make a lot of money regardless of their profession. Why did 1400 insist on doing work where he'd have to listen to such outrageous things from people?

"What's a better job?"

1400's words made me choke.

[Don't say anything more, Warrior.] Ahbooboo warned, his voice gloomy. He hated things like this.

I didn't bother to reply, and the atmosphere soon became awkward. Fortunately, 1400's device rang once more.

I was worried that we would have to go to a school again to stop another fight, but fortunately, it was a proper fight this time. Two superhumans were fighting in the middle of the street.

“Oh.”

“What happened? It looks pretty tense.”

One superhuman was blasting fire from his hand, and the other was creating an ice wall in the air; it was a showdown between ice and fire.

I wanted to see their fight, but 1400 didn't give me time to spectate the match. Instead, 1400 immediately rushed toward the man who was spewing out fire.

“Take care of the other one!” 1400 quickly jumped forward and shouted at me. He wanted me to stop the man using ice while he was overpowering the weaker one. It was easy to see why 1400 rushed to intercept this fight rather than waiting it out like he did at the school. This battle took place on the street, and bystanders would get injured as collateral during the clash. While the ice wall wouldn't harm the people around it, the flames fired at the ice wall would.

I could see the store owner trying to put out the fire that had spread to his store. The owner was powerless, but he still tried to put out the flames on the store building. Usually, the first thing to do would be to stop the man who was continually releasing flames, but such an option wasn't possible for the weaker store owner.

1400 attacked the flame-thrower. The flame-thrower reflexively belted out a flame towards 1400, but 1400 dodged it and sent his fist flying into the flame-thrower's face, who fainted and fell back in one blow. The fires flickered and began to die down.

I had to do my job, too. “Ahbooboo. Knock him out.”

[Yes, Warrior.]

Ahbooboo put the ice-wielder to sleep using magic, and he collapsed in a deep slumber almost immediately. 1400 didn't stop after knocking out the flame-thrower and continued to put out the flames that had spread to the streets.

"I need your help," I told Ahbooboo.

[Why are you making me do all these little things?] Ahbooboo grumbled but still listened to me, and water poured down on the flames.

As the water kept pouring down, 1400 looked around in surprise. Was he looking for a person with a water superpower? Then, his eyes fell on me. It wasn't just him, though. The eyes of multiple bystanders also shifted toward me.

I felt like something similar had taken place before. 1400's bewildered eyes seemed to be asking, "Did you do this, too?"

I quietly put my hands behind my back and took out the ring.

"Invisible frog."

"Kea-ek!"

"What nonsense..."

1400 muttered, showing a dumbfounded face. It looked like that excuse didn't work this time.

"Then is this frog saliva?" 1400 raised his arms that were wet with water.

How could a frog have so much saliva? This guy sure had strange thoughts.

"This frog can use magic too," I told 1400.

"Kea-ek!" Next to me, the frog croaked and answered no. It was fortunate that I was the only one who could understand that.

“Oh, what a frog. Wait, is it even a frog? It’s so furry.” 1400 raised his brows.

“It’s a frog,” I reassured him.

“Kea-ek!”

* * *

I solved five fights today. There had been cases where we prevented superhumans from clashing, and situations where we took care of the aftermath of a battle. We also pursued criminals who used superpowers. Ahbooboo did most of the work, but the frog took all the credit.

[This is so unfair! I want to get credit for my work!] exclaimed Ahbooboo.

The frog was lying in the living room, getting a massage by 1400. It was quietly waiting to see if the massage given 1400 felt pleasant. It was fortunate that the frog, who had been a little sulky due to the repeated summons and reverse summons, quickly became cheerful.

[What am I going to do with that big guy?] I asked Ahbooboo.

Today, I had learned a lot about this world. Superhumans were divided into authorized and unauthorized groups. Those who were authorized could use their abilities in public, and those who weren’t, couldn’t. It was a requirement for everyone grade-B or above to be certified. To become a certified public figure, a person below C-grade had to work in public office or wield an exceptional ability. A person with an unauthorized ability was no different from a person without powers.

Nevertheless, I saw that the gap between the two classes was clear. I talked to Ahbooboo about this.

[It’s stupid. It’s better to have universal equality, but they split everyone into classes and gave them differential treatment.]

“That’s discrimination,” I agreed.

In worlds like Ahbooboo and Seregia’s, where there were emergencies, it made sense why people with abilities would be given preferential treatment. But this place was similar to Earth and hadn’t been invaded by monsters yet. All in all, it was peaceful, and superpowers didn’t do any good.

[It’s so stupid. There are so many idiots who want to show off their power in this peaceful period. The only thing that makes them better than others is that they are born with superpowers. If they don’t have exceptional superpowers, they’re no different from ordinary people. Even if they have minuscule powers, they’ll still try to show them off.]

It certainly was stupid. Most superpowers wouldn’t be of much aid to the nation’s defense capabilities; they were just convenient for everyday life. It was pitiful that the two children from the school were the most powerful out of all the people I had seen today.

It was better to let them enjoy their superiority while shackling their ankles.

[What? Like a noble sacrifice?] Ahbooboo questioned.

A noble sacrifice? I was skeptical.

I was wondering about what Ahbooboo had said about a noble sacrifice when I remembered a similar saying from Ahbooboo’s world.

[The class system is likely used as encouragement for people to raise their position. It’s their way of forcing superhumans to save people.]

It’s a fresh idea except for one problem.

“Then what about the ordinary people? You have to think about them too.”

[What about them? Will they die because of this? An inferiority complex is an improvement and a desire to improve oneself by seeing better people. Without it, people become powerless.] Ahbooboo reasoned.

Ahbooboo was also a man who had started as an ordinary person and rose in God's eyes. He had achieved the result with his own efforts.

"The problem is that underlying sense of inferiority," I said. Supernatural powers were something that couldn't be gained by sheer effort.

[Oh, that's true.]

It wasn't even a sure if powers would be passed down to the next generation. What an interesting world.

I had a long conversation with Ahbooboo because I thought the situation here would be similar to that of the Earth in the future. Could challengers who had cleared the tutorial and returned to Earth without causing trouble? I didn't think so.

Since I went through a process called a tutorial, I was likely to be more powerful than superhumans. Challengers didn't need much discipline to be strong, and would have a different mindset after passing the tutorial.

[Yes, it's very likely.] Ahbooboo agreed. We continued to talk about this problem. It didn't seem like something we could solve right away, but it was not wise to ignore it either.

* * *

It wasn't until two weeks later that an official letter of reconsideration came from the Supernatural People's Association. For nearly 15 days, I stayed at 1400's house and helped him with his work. I had been through a lot of things and gotten used to this world. In addition to 1400, I came to know a lot of people, so many came to know of me.

Was that why it was so noisy? I listened to the crowd whispering around me while I was walking down the street to the conference hall.

“That’s the invisible frog, isn’t it?”

“That’s right. That’s the invisible frog.”

“Hey... but does it make sense? In this crowded street, an invisible frog as big as a house is hiding.”

“Someone said there are wings on the frog’s back.”

Before I knew it, my nickname had already become the ‘Invisible frog’.

Chapter 247

Tutorial 57th Floor (6)

“Show me the frog!”

“Frog! Frog!”

The tiny children grabbed onto my shirt and hung on. What on Earth had I done wrong?

“Why don’t you just show it to them?” 1400, who was standing a few steps away from me, asked with a huge smile on his face. The children screamed in approval, calling ‘frog’ again and again.

“No. The frog hates attention.” Actually, the frog liked it. Whenever someone took an interest in it, it would become elated. But if I summoned the frog, it would be a challenge to separate it from the children.

“Hey, how much time do we have before the meeting starts? Shall we go ahead and wait?” I asked.

“We still have a lot of time. The conference room wouldn’t even be open right now, so what do you plan to do?” Since a while ago, 1400 had sided with the children. The kids didn’t like him because he looked scary, but he seemed to love them. He was too kind.

I slipped my hand into my pocket and fiddled with the ring. Exasperatedly, I summoned the frog because I couldn’t tolerate the clingy children.

“Kea-ek!”

The children flocked around the frog, who appeared croaking as usual. It was only then that the children, who had been sticking to me, got off.

“Well, let’s postpone the mediating request to the evening.”

The main culprit of all this was the sincere 1400, who had to go to work in the morning. Even though the Superhumans’ Association summoned him, he dragged me out early in the morning, saying that it was just the right time to leave for lunch.

“I knew the meeting would last for hours,” 1400 said sheepishly.

“Kea-ek!”

I lifted a child onto my back and saw the frog croaking. It suited me better than I thought. Even the frog agreed.

Since it resembled Earth, I got used to living here in just 15 days. There were no bloody wars, but the lack of violence wasn’t dull. It was fun to see and learn about a world with new capabilities and abilities. If I stayed for a long time, maybe I would get bored.

I picked up the newspaper again.

< Invisible frog. Is it really a B-grade superpower? >

<The invisible frog of Ho, a B-grade summoner who has recently become the talk of the town, with too many powerful and diverse abilities. >

It was an analytical article at the corner of the newspaper. The report questioned the performance of the invisible frog and analyzed whether the frog was really all-powerful. Finally, the talk of the invisible frog ended with a guess that it might be the work of some background force.

[When the landslide happened, there had been too much dirt for an ordinary being to hold up. This article probably came about because of that suspicious incident.] Ahbooboo said.

It did seem so. I had confidently used my convenient excuse of summoning an invisible frog. I should've made it such that no one would have noticed.

[And when you used those wide-area heals in the arena? Some people said it wasn't just a wound-patcher, but a miracle healing effect that works for various diseases.] Ahbooboo pointed out.

I hadn't seen that kind of news.

[It was mentioned briefly on a health program last night. Warrior, if we get investigated, will we get caught for having a fake ID?]

"Well..."

First of all, there was no method to detect abilities that weren't superpowers in this world. The superpower numerical analyzer could be deceived with the pills from the vaccine wars. I was a little nervous as I had become famous with these newspaper articles.

[Wouldn't it be better to be quiet from now on?]

"I think it's too late."

I looked at the frog that was scampering around with the kids. The frog had become famous, too. I had displayed fluency in a variety of abilities, which was an anomaly in this world where people were usually limited to one or two skills. For people in this world, who were accustomed to superpowers, this was very shocking. The frog and I's image had improved dramatically since I was helping civilians with 1400.

The discord between the superhumans and the ordinary people was one of the big social problems here, and the frog that appeared in the midst of this seemed to be very impressive to the people. After a few incidents, citizens whom we met on the street often recognized me and talked to me.

On top of that, the frog was cute, so my popularity was going through the roof. Of course, some superhumans treated us harshly, and there were articles and news reports that attempted to slander us.

I didn't know how to deal with this. We had become more popular than expected, and I felt that it could be problematic.

This ominous feeling soon became a reality. Due to the nature of my work, I spent most of my time with ordinary people and didn't notice that the frog was making headlines.

* * *

"That's the invisible frog, isn't it?"

"That's right. That's the invisible frog."

"Hey... but does that make sense? In this crowded street, an invisible frog as big as a house is hiding."

"Someone says there are wings attached to the frog's back."

No. I never put wings on the frog for this stage. There was constant chattering about the frog. Somehow, I felt like I was being called a frog. Was it because they thought that the frog was a spirit that I summoned with superpowers?

People's eyes continued to follow me even after I sat in the conference room. There was also a rumor that I was a superhuman who the media purposely made famous. Some people approached me stealthily and tried to poke into what I was doing, and some openly expressed their displeasure.

"This is too much pressure," said 1400, who had to take a detour to reach the conference room.

"Why do I have to be the only one dealing with it?" I spoke in a brisk tone, but I could understand his feelings.

The guy didn't like superhumans much, especially the people who had a luxurious taste. And as soon as those high-grade superhumans entered the room, he got nervous. Besides, he didn't get along very well with other superhumans. His work and attitude toward them made it easy to see why.

1400 took out a transparent bag of sweet-smelling crumbly cookies.

“Are we just going to eat snacks and chat while they’re having a meeting over there again?” I asked, taking a bite out of a cookie, the chocolate chips melting in my mouth.

“Yes, there’s really no reason we were invited anyway.”

It was just as 1,400 said. Superhumans of Grade A and above led the meeting, and they were likely indifferent to our opinions.

The meeting topics included the rescue of the previously mentioned SSS-class superhuman and the destruction of the sealed asteroid. I looked at the meeting and talked with 1400 as if I were looking at a match. 1400 said that he felt the plan would not succeed. His opinion was that if the superhuman had the power to destroy the asteroid in the first place, he would not have tried to stop the asteroid alone, even at his own expense.

I tried to pry more into the superpowers of Grade S or higher. He admitted embarrassedly that he didn’t know much about them.

“Then what the hell do you know?” I grumbled.

“Do you know any better?” He argued back.

I kept my mouth shut at his rebuttal. Of course, I didn’t know. It had only been 15 days since I came to this stage.

When he saw me like that, he smiled and explained. The difference between A and S grades was more significant than the difference between B and A. Even if all S-grade superhumans gathered, there wouldn’t be more than 20.

1400 didn’t explain what S-grade superpower really was. In this world, S-grades were treated as aristocrats, who stood at the pinnacle, rather than a national resource. It was sporadic for them to come forward and do something. As a result, people did not know what kind of power S-grade superhumans had.

That explained what happened the day I arrived here. A black sphere had been floating in the sky. They were all looking up to an SSS-grade superhuman who sealed himself inside an asteroid; he was like a god. They prayed to it at a particular time every day. It was during this prayer time that I was summoned to this stage.

There must be a good reason for sending me on this stage at that point.

Otherwise, it would not be unusual if the stage started during the meeting or in front of the association building.

I was anxious. All I knew was that this stage was related to the black sphere. However, it was related to people's prayers. Before I came to this stage, I realized what kind of power people's faith could give me.

While I was organizing my thoughts and ideas, the meeting came to an end. There was no change in the rescue operation, and the date and entry list were made public.

I checked the list on the massive billboard in front of the conference room. There were a lot of unfamiliar names who were probably S-grade or A-grade people. There was only one name I knew. At the very end of the list:

...

– All Yours (A)

– Inamona (A)

– Ho (B)

– Zirzi Cantabria (B)

It was my name. My alias, to be exact. I was one of two B-grade superhumans who had been selected. My thoughts became muddled. It was questionable whether it would be appropriate to include me in that rescue operation in this stage. The reason I was on the list was probably because I had become too famous. If so, I would not have been included in the list. How would I find a way out?

On the contrary, the fake status may have a reason to include me on that list. Maybe it was meant for me to be up there.

“Eight A-grade officials, and rest all are S-grade and above. It’s simple. Grade S is the main power, and Grade A, the bonus.”

Next to me, 1400 mumbled while checking the list. “There are two B-grade superhumans... Wait a minute. Both our names are there, right?”

“Your name’s there too?” I asked.

“Yes, at the end.”

I rechecked the list when I was told that.

– Ho (B)

– Zirzi Cantabia (B)

“I don’t see 1400 written there.”

It was only after seeing 1400 look at me coldly that I remembered that 1400 was not his real name but his nickname.

Chapter 248

Tutorial 57th Floor (7)

The main point of the meeting was to declare that the confirmed list of superhumans would approach the sealed asteroid, examine the situation, and if possible, destroy the seal to deal with asteroids, alien species, and rescue the SSS-grade superhuman.

The date was determined too.

It would be carried out on a large helicopter-like aircraft, made to approach the asteroid in the air.

This survey method was very extreme.

Those who were mobilized for the survey were, of course, incapable of flying.

Their abilities were in the field of vision and detection. Due to the nature of their superpowers being limited to one ability, they had no way to fly in the sky and safely approach the asteroid.

I was thinking about using drones or offering a flight suit, but the decision made in the meeting went beyond my expectations.

It was said that people who could fly would carry the surveyors on their backs.

When this was decided, a heavy exclamation derived from the place where the A-grade and S-grade talents were gathered.

I was not sure if it were the flight-ability superhumans or the surveyors who let out sighs.

Probably both.

No matter how talented you were, you wouldn't have the leisure to mess up over there.

At this point, it was questionable why so many talented people pushed ahead with this plan.

I knew this plan could be a long-cherished task for the top superhuman.

However, if we looked at the opinions that many had during the meeting, they all knew that there was a wide gap between them.

And in my view, there seemed to be more people with negative ideas about the plan.

If they had the same right to speak and vote regardless of their ratings, the plan would have been shot down.

Just because the power was distributed in this manner, with top-notch superhumans pushing it, the plan was heading this way.

I pondered about that point.

“What’s weird about that? I’m sure they are confident about it.”

“Confident?”

“Uh, no matter how unknown the power of the SSS-grade superhuman is, the people over there probably know.”

I guessed so.

They were equally capable of S-grade or higher.

“So, we haven’t made it public, but aren’t you guessing the condition of that sealed asteroid?”

It was an optimistic hypothesis.

The risk related to the asteroid had been wiped out by those above S grade. I thought they were pushing ahead with the plan to make a declaration, to show good results, and to display their abilities to the world.

I wondered if it was really true since I had seen the activities of the association's executives and their tendencies, revealed through the media.

The problem was, if things really were to go so smoothly, I wouldn't be here.

There wouldn't be a point in having a stage mission if something troublesome won't pop up.

[What do you want to do?] Asked Ahbooboo.

This was the good thing about being with him.

He would always ask my opinion when I had to make a decision.

I had to listen to his questions so that I could be more confident in my judgments.

I checked a few things before answering Ahbooboo's question.

As the dragon had said, the final goal of this stage was to gather as much information as possible.

That too, before my death.

No, even for a certain period of time after my death.

Therefore, there will be an accident on this planet that would make it natural for me to die.

And that accident had a high probability of being associated with this asteroid plan.

Here, the first decision must be made.

Whether to approach the asteroid directly or to remain on the ground and watch it while the other superhumans approached the asteroid.

The inclusion of my name in the list of plans was the right way to approach the asteroid, considering it to be done by the system on purpose.

“Let’s go up.”

“Huh? What?”

When I said that casually, 1,400 questioned back in a confused tone from next to me, but I ignored him.

Whatever it was, I didn’t want to stay behind and watch things happen passively.

If possible, I would try to intervene.

[With them?]

[No.]

This time, I spoke to him in my mind so that 1,400 wouldn’t hear.

It didn’t seem necessary to make him join this plan.

I had gotten enough information about this place.

What history it had, how it developed, what disputes it went through.

I have seen what other problems I had now and felt them up close.

I got everything I could possibly get, so I didn’t have to waste any more time.

It seemed better for me to go to the asteroid alone than to follow their plan, which was uncertain.

[Are you going right now? Should I break the ceiling?]

...Why break the ceiling?

[We will leave through the door.]

I saw 1,400 munching on snacks.

Seeing him made me feel grateful for having taken care of me and apologetic for causing him inconvenience unintentionally.

[Let's leave tonight.]

I know I had to say goodbye before I left.

Yes, it's not practical and is meaningless.

But it was enough to spend half a day with him.

[Okay.]

[Warrior.] Seregia called me.

[Yes?]

[You can stay longer.]

I was silent for a moment.

I had a strange sense of deja vu.

I felt as if I had already heard these words before.

However, it seemed that the person who had said this was someone other than Seregia.

[Seregia.]

[Yes, Warrior.]

[You don't have to say anything if you don't want to.]

It was too easy to notice that she was lying.

[Okay. Then let's just leave right now.] Seregia said with a brief pause.

[No.]

[...]

Seregia's silence made me feel uncomfortable.

It was like a child sulking, one who had been given a toy and then snatched away.

Somehow, I felt pleased and giggled to myself.

1,400 sitting next to me gave me a strange look, but what could I do?

The first time I met her came to mind. On the 26th floor, when I had checked the Holy Sword and knew that I had nothing to gain from the palace, I went to the place where the devil was. I had left as soon as I had gotten all the information I needed.

I wouldn't have waited until today for the meeting.

On the first day, the superhumans' association had gathered information, and as soon as I roughly confirmed that the stage was related to the asteroid, I would have flown to the asteroid.

I could have cleared the stage on the second day and left.

The results would be the same, but the process had changed.

Even if we went the same way, we took time to learn how to go back a little.

Even if I had to waste my time meaninglessly.

* * *

That night, I said goodbye to 1,400 and left his house.

Before that, there were some cases in which the association had argued that they would test 1,400's power, but in the end, it was a small thing.

1,400 asked me a few questions before I left his house.

They were related to me.

He had watched me closer than anyone else, so he must have known in many ways that I'm strange.

I answered his questions sincerely, but I didn't know what conclusion 1,400 had come to.

Under the dark, endless sky, we flew up toward the asteroid.

The flamboyant-colored wings spread out, transparent, and barely visible.

I didn't think anyone could see it.

[Sad, huh?] ,asked Ahbooboo during the flight, [He was a good friend.]

He had been a good friend.

1,400 was a man who could be seen everywhere, but in fact, he was hard to find anywhere.

Seregia didn't mean it, but it was okay to stay longer.

I didn't bother to answer.

I didn't think Ahbooboo was asking for an answer either.

But his words drew the God of Sky's curiosity.

The other day, Ahbooboo and I had clearly set a line.

I wanted him to look at me from his point of view, and to not deceive or conceal it.

The God of the Sky seemed very impressed by this promise.

So, he used Ahbooboo's mouth from time to time and asked me questions.

Like now, [Don't you want to go back and see him again?]

It was the same question as Ahbooboo's, but since the God of Sky has asked, I had to answer it.

I shook my head.

This is what was good about facing a god.

In other words, I don't have to explain it for a long time.

I could convey my message to them just by reorganizing my thoughts and repeating myself.

I had gotten confirmation from Kirikiri.

All the characters and the world behind this tutorial had already died and been destroyed.

I had been speculating that for a long time but needed to get a lot of information to confirm it.

After I vowed to get rid of the tutorial itself, the most troubling thing in my mind was not the low success probability of my plan.

It was the idea that all the beings in the tutorial might be erased.

Some of them were memorable.

The people who cried and laughed would still clearly remember being together until now.

It was difficult for them, who had already fallen in the past and had faced repeated incidents, repeated deaths. I could not completely deny that they were living beings.

So, I set my goal straight.

A promise to get rid of the tutorial, and bring back Idy so she could exist as others did.

I wanted to give her, and the others all the things that existed in the tutorial, not a painful eternal life, but a normal one.

If I could meet her again, I wanted to meet her after achieving my purpose.

I wanted it to be a more meaningful meeting for both of us.

[Do you think they want it?] Asked the God of the sky.

Well, I didn't know.

Some might welcome me enthusiastically, some might resent me.

Some may wish for eternal life, while others may curse me for hearing the forbidden truth.

But my goal won't change.

It was not a goal for all of them in the first place.

[The 99 gods are watching you.]

Below the newly emerging message, the ninety-nine god's reactions were enlisted.

Different reactions popped up, increasing one after the other.

They were mainly positive responses.

I knew that the reason for the reaction was not because the gods agreed with my goal, but because they thought it would be impossible for me to achieve my goal.

Considering that fact, I tried to remember the reactions of the gods.

The reactions of the gods according to the situation would greatly help me to grasp their propensity.

There was no unusual response, to say the least.

To put it bluntly, the God of Death regarded my goal as very desirable and the God of Adventure loved it extremely.

Rather than being discouraged by the reaction, I was amused.

The God of Adventure was a god who would put another piece of luggage on a traveller when he saw him walking down the path of penance.

Without realizing it, I shook my head and flew toward the asteroid.

Chapter 249

Tutorial 57th Floor (8)

Multiple layers of barriers wrapped around the asteroid, creating an impenetrable shield.

“Didn’t you tell me that humans wouldn’t be able to touch this?”

[Well... yes, I did.] Ahbooboo answered hesitantly.

Previously, Ahbooboo had advised me that caution would be needed because the barrier didn’t allow human presence.

And if necessary, I would have to use either God’s divine power or an object containing divine power to defend myself.

[It’s created using superpowers.]

“With superpowers?”

[Yes? If invisible frogs can exist, why can’t we also make a barrier?]

True.

We decided to take a closer look at the barrier.

Talaria’s wings allowed us to float through the air without any unease.

But the strong wind, however, still made the ride slightly uncomfortable.

Inside the barrier lied a black asteroid.

I’d heard that an alien race thrived inside, but the rumors were difficult to confirm from just an outside glimpse.

And not to forget the superhuman in it.

The SSS-grade superhuman.

The asteroid and its contents were frozen, sealed by the superhuman alongside himself.

I'd wondered how such an act could be accomplished, but Ahbooboo wasn't so sure either.

I touched the hard surface of the asteroid with my hand.

I tried pushing it slightly, but it didn't move at all.

This hinted that physical destruction was impossible.

First, I asked Ahbooboobu if he could magically break the barrier.

Ahbooboo answered after using some magic against it.

[It's hard to do, and it'll take some time to figure out. It's my first time encountering such a thing, so I don't think I'll be able to do anything about it right now.]

Ahbooboo couldn't break it instantly.

But I couldn't afford to waste any more time.

I swung my fist at the barrier without mercy.

* * *

The noise emanating from my attack was deafening.

It'd probably awoken many people.

In my attempts to break down the barrier with physical force, a series of ear-piercing shrieks had rung out.

It should've been loud enough to have brought people out of their slumber.

There were people here who treated the sealed asteroid as if it were a god.

In fact, most normal people and a portion of the superhumans indulged in praying and worshipping the asteroid.

For them, the loud noise coming from the asteroid would be comparable to striking lightning bolts.

They'll start panicking and questioning if the aliens have returned, and get anxious about whether their previous dilemma will resurface or not.

I was really sorry about it.

But for me, it was inevitable, and hence, I approached the asteroid.

Fortunately, the asteroid still floated in the air.

Near the asteroid stood a man of short stature.

Sweating profusely and struggling, he was easy to notice. His face flushed bright red, tired from overexerting his superpowers using all his strength.

I couldn't sense any signs of people manifesting superpowers or the superpower itself, but after staying here for a few days, I'd noticed how the people already with superpowers used their abilities.

"Who are you?!" The man's eyes fell on me and he shouted loudly, his eyebrows furrowing.

Who I was?

That was a very difficult question to answer.

It wasn't because I didn't know who I was, but rather because I had an ambiguous identity.

Instead of replying, I remained silent.

This was an opportunity to watch the planet's best superhuman use his superpowers.

Maybe I could even gain something valuable from him.

But on the surface, he looked just like a constipated patient.

"God! I've been holding up this barrier for such a long time, yet you broke it!" He shouted.

He was definitely not a quick-witted man.

"Reply! Did you break it?!" He urged, furious.

Even if I had broken it, what could he do?

I wondered why he wanted an answer.

"Yes, I did break it."

"What the f*ck!"

Although I answered him simply, all he did was swear.

[Maybe it was because he couldn't repair the barrier. If a barrier loses its effect over time, it wouldn't be able to be reused even if it was re-energized, like how the ancient order of unity was reused by future generations.]

It made sense now.

Then had the man intended to seal both himself and the asteroid forever by invigorating it whenever the barrier broke?

Perhaps he felt that over time, a great superhuman would come to rescue him.

And indeed, the Superhumans' Association had planned to rescue him.

I listened carefully to his words and was able to decipher his cursing.

I'd initially thought that he was doing so because he was driven into an extreme situation, but now I could tell that he was referring to a particular person.

It was a name I'd heard recently.

The Vice Chairman of the Superhumans' Association.

Did he think that I was sent by the Vice Chairman?

I was curious about the inside story.

But not curious enough to dig into it.

"Hey!" The man shouted.

"What?"

"Help me!"

I thought about it for a moment.

I wasn't sure if I should help or not.

"I don't know what ability you have, but now that you've broken the barrier, don't you feel ashamed? Hurry up and help! If this asteroid falls, you, me and everyone under us will die!"

He sounded angry, but his words were filled with desperation.

Well, it's natural that he'd be distressed.

This stage's goal was ultimately linked to that man and the asteroid.

However, I'd been asked to gather as much information as possible. Even after I'd died, I was forced to take the form of another soul to continue gathering even more information.

In other words, a near-end catastrophe had been scheduled for this planet.

If I helped the superhuman or put an end to the planet's destruction, complications could arise.

I might fail.

In the end, I came to a conclusion, and ended up watching instead of helping.

After putting some thought into it, I looked back at the man.

His whole body shivered, the exhaustion on his face visible.

Unfortunately, I hadn't learned anything from watching the way he used his power.

"Hey! Help me!"

Instead of answering him, I opened my inventory and took out a bag of snacks I'd gotten from 1400.

[Wow... Talk about shameless...]

* * *

Before I knew it, I had eaten all the snacks, and just when I got bored watching the man shiver, I saw something unusual.

His head had turned as white as a sheet, the skin was wrinkled like an 80-year-old man, and even his body looked withered.

His mouth, which had been spouting endless curses, was shut.

The fluctuating forces around him also slowly began to fade.

He was finally about to die, but something abnormal was happening.

He was gathering more power.

The problem was that this power came out of me.

Since he was about to die, he was using his power recklessly.

“You are gonna be in trouble if you continue like this.”

I warned, but he didn’t hear me.

Was he in a state of delirium?

Was his ability one that could take others’ powers?

I asked Ahbooboo, but he couldn’t answer clearly.

Perhaps because it was rare for Ahbooboo to fail in answering due to his lack of knowledge about magic that he felt awkward.

In any case, this was a ridiculous ability.

He could take the power of others and use it for himself.

It was questionable whether it was possible to violate other people’s powers so much.

I tried not to lose it to him as much as I could.

I knew his desperation, but I didn’t have the slightest intention of giving up my powers.

Without my experience of the 56th floor, I probably would have been helplessly deprived of my power because of not knowing how to resist.

Then, all of a sudden, strong energies neared from below.

To be exact, from the people who were looking up at the asteroid.

I was anxious.

Most of the people down there were normal humans, and incapable of providing the power wielded by the superhumans.

I thought so, but reality was a bit different.

The force that was gathering towards him was actually enormous, similar to a huge tidal wave entirely focused on him.

I felt it since I was connected to him.

But in my case, I wasn't giving him any power.

His power grew stronger and stronger.

At the same time, my connection with him also become clearer.

I could feel what kind of situation he was in now.

How intensely focused and desperate he was.

I could also sense the people who were giving him strength.

The various emotions they felt were connected to their hero, I could feel their hope and motivation.

I was annoyed by this faint sense of déjà vu.

The only difference was that the receiver of the power was that man, and not me.

This was a one-sided link, and through this, people's powers were going into that man, who was at the other side of the link.

What was that?

Differing from the absorption.

[Why don't you fall back a little?]

[...Let's do that.]

I didn't feel the need to take risks and stay close to him.

He was akin to a bomb.

His body contained the strength of a great number of people.

But the human body was not so grand.

It was hard to think that a superhuman's body would be able to bear the brunt of this humongous power. The chances of an explosion were very high.

I stepped outside the barrier I had broken.

There was something strange about observing the power of the superhuman through this link.

The overall amount of power was so vast that I could not scan it immediately. Just the power flowing out from one person was a lot. Even a normal human was giving out a large amount of energy

If I really wanted to measure that amount of power, I'd have to use a planetary scale unit.

Before the overwhelming force could be handled by the superhuman, the asteroid was already half destroyed.

The alien species hiding in the asteroid also appeared to have been wiped out.

Nevertheless, the link between the people and the man didn't sever.

Seemingly in need of more strength, he continued to suck in people's powers even after the danger was gone.

Every second, things were changing.

The asteroid was now completely wiped out.

Only the fine dust on the ground proved it existed.

After the asteroid was destroyed, the people began to feel pain, not joy.

They were terrified of the fact that their power was still oozing out of them even though their goal had been achieved. They did not know how to break the link.

My mood was becoming worse.

Even my energy had begun to leak out little by little.

I was trying hard to stop it, but I started to see the powers slipping out of my control little by little.

Do I have to kill him?

Just as I was thinking that Ahbooboo spoke up.

[Maybe he's about to blow up.]

It was a valid point.

However, it could not be called an explosion this time.

Instead of blasting off, power gathered in his body and started to devour it at a rapid pace.

Now his body was no longer a vessel.

It had become a source of power itself.

It continued to multiply all over, just like a cell.

There was no humane part left.

His body, which turned so grotesque that it'd be hard to even assume that it was a human's body, was floating in the air, engulfing people's powers.

The fleshy and bloody mass gradually began to take a shape.

It didn't resemble a normal creature.

But it was quite similar to the shape of a bizarre monster that had already been seen several times.

It was the source.

Chapter 250

Tutorial 57th floor (9)

It had turned into something that was known as the source.

The people began to lose their consciousness.

While the people connected through the link became unconscious, their feelings and emotions passing into me also waned.

The source absorbed the power until the people lost consciousness, but stopped before killing him.

Some people seemed to have died, either because they were killed in an accident or due to their weak vitality.

Even though this was good, it was questionable whether the survivors would be able to maintain a normal life.

Only some would be able to roam around with a sane mind while they had memories of facing the fear and emptiness after their powers got engulfed.

It was soon clear why the source didn't take people's lives.

He probably didn't want to waste his strength in absorbing the energy left behind.

Interesting.

It had intelligence.

Despite being able to make decisions, it had little qualms about devouring people's lifeforce.

The source had now begun to concentrate what remained of its powers.

Its feelings rushed through the link I had with the entity.

It was rejoicing.

Celebrating the situation's turnaround like this.

For having grasped this opportunity.

Lastly, for having a very coveted prey in front of him.

The source turned towards me with obvious provocation, as if it was saying – It's your turn now, get ready to die.

Did it know that I could sense its feelings?

It was unlikely.

All the sources I had previously met were as dumb as birds yet clever in unexpected ways.

I couldn't judge hastily.

Now the only remaining intelligent beings on this planet were me and the source.

It was also uncertain whether that source could be called intelligent.

[You're not really intelligent either...]

Oh shut up.

Don't focus on trivial facts.

The source's link that was previously spread across the planet was now focused on one person.

The pressure on me had increased compared to before.

I dragged out the time by enduring it.

Through this link, we could sense emotions, judgments, and memories of the other party, and at the same time, we were aware that it was a two-way end.

As the link became stronger and thicker, my power was being absorbed faster, but at the same time, I could also gain an insight about the source.

Memories and facts began to escape from both of our consciousness, drifting through the link.

The memories I had when I was a normal human.

My understanding and the concept of dealing with the superpowers were invaluable information that could not be recklessly exchanged for anything.

In addition to that, the knowledge I had as a human being.

Knowledge of a world that was aware of the existence of the tutorial and vaccine.

It was highly likely that the source would come to know about that now.

Last but not least, the new facts that I learned from the source.

I had to find out what kind of future one could weave with the ability to absorb people's power similar to a source.

It was akin to fishing.

I tried hard not to lose my power, but occasionally gave it some.

I acted as though I was about to lose my will.

So that it would become more anxious and make a stronger connection with me for the sake of getting more information out of me.

I felt like a fish that had caught the fisherman.

At the same time, I had to hide my intentions deep in my consciousness so that the source wouldn't notice them.

Thanks to the gods who read my consciousness all the time, I was able to fool the source without any difficulty because I had become proficient.

After a long time of pushing forward and pulling back, I was able to look deeply into the consciousness of the source.

Memories of the origin of human days started pouring into my mind.

Such information was like a part of a novel, regarded only as text.

The source did not seem to regard itself as a human being.

Next, I could sense the emotions of the source.

There was no such thing as a stable future for it, even with this ability, all that existed in it was endless greed.

It had both high intelligence and human memories, but it showed behavior similar to the other sources because of its uncontrollable greed.

I could perceive its principles coinciding with all the other sources I had seen.

Satisfied with the constant stream of information, the source cut off the link at once.

I was confused, but soon I could see what had happened.

Just as I had gotten insight about the source, the source had grasped the thoughts that had been hidden deep in my consciousness in the midst of engulfing my power.

The source started to fly up quickly, screaming.

Was it planning to run away?

Interesting.

I thought, looking at the back of the escaping source.

Even after being eaten up by greed, there remained a minimal instinct in it for survival.

Was its life that important?

Its struggles seemed meaningless to me.

The source was running away at a rapid pace, but it was already too late.

If there was a tempting prey, that too, easily obtainable, any hunter smart enough would have doubted it.

And hunters who aren't alert were usually bitten to death by the prey.

“Ahbooboo.”

When I opened my palm and called Ahbooboo, he flew to my hand.

Usually, the sword was not much because of Ahbooboo's excessive performance, but it had become a useful weapon more than anything else especially when mana flow was irregular.

[God of Light is excited!]

[God of Light encourages everyone to watch together.]

The enthusiastic response of the God of Light was interesting.

Smiling at the response, I prepared myself.

I think the first time I used this art was on the 35th floor.

It hadn't been used a lot since then.

I usually preferred to use explosions.

I asked Ahbbooboo if he was ready.

After setting a right time, I used Light Sword: Pierce, at the source flying up there.

“Pierce through.”

A thin line of light stretched out with a roaring sound, tearing the atmosphere, and the force of its launch pushed the surrounding clouds far beyond the horizon.

The streams of light, brightening the cloudless night sky like day, were penetrating through the source.

From far away, its screams could be heard.

This art had the power to pierce anything, but this was the reason why it was not used often.

The limited range of attack had reduced the ability to kill.

So I had to use one more attack.

“Explosive. Zit Pop.”

The straight series of light began to vibrate.

The vibrations were strong, even for me.

I quickly drew mana and used my skills to prepare for impact.

Even the fist-sized Zit Pop had the power to turn the surrounding area into a mud slush.

The power of the Zit Pop, which used these long streaks of light across the sky as its main form, was hard to measure.

I was driving myself to the brink of death, but I was still excited by the power of the Zit Pop.

I prepared my defense with anticipation, and at the moment of getting struck by the impact of the Zit Pop, I was cheering in my heart.

[God of Light cheers]

The ray of light, which had been thin, expanded greatly to fill the sky.

It was as if a new sun had risen in the sky.

The pressure created by the explosion was immense.

That's when a huge tear appeared in the space.

It was torn apart and transcendent power came out of it.

It was an astounding sight.

[The planet has been vaccinated.]

[Tutorial: Hell Difficulty, you cleared the 57th-floor.]

[God of Light screams]

[Voting begins]

[For: 1 Against: 98]

[The proposal has been voted down.]

[The God of Light asks for a vote again.]

[The God of Sky refuses someone.]

[The God of Chaos mocks someone.]

[The God of Life is annoyed with someone.]

[The God of Light is upset.]

* * *

[It has been confirmed that a new source was created by the phenomenon that occurred on the planet Aharabi. As a researcher, you have succeeded in investigating the world and anomalies of the planet Aharabi, witnessing the creation of the source, and suppressing it.

[You've cleared the 57th floor of Hell's Difficulty Level.]

[All situational anomalies and injuries will be recovered.]

[Automatically moved to the waiting room.]

The next moment, I stood inside the dragon's cave, where I could hear the sound of the waterfall.

The neat interior in the cave made me feel worse.

This was my second time being in this newly-decorated cave.

The most important and exciting moment was when the stage got cleared.

It was only recently when I realized how good it was to be able to decide when to voluntarily leave the stage through the portals.

[God of Light agrees.]

The God of Light seems to have gotten carried away by several gods, but I don't know if it's okay.

I've heard that nothing is more useless than worrying about others, but I was still worried about a god.

It was such a stupid idea.

[You aren't dead?]

After a long time, the dragon's voice came out through the crystal ball.

"Yes. I'm still alive, you damn lizard."

It dares to ask such a question!

God damn it.

It's good that I'm still alive.

"You're the one who's supposed to pick the right stage, and you're sending me to a stage where death is the final condition? Huh? Do I look like a pushover to you? Aren't you being too gutsy?"

I vented my irritation on the dragon.

Damn it. Why was it hiding behind this crystal ball?

[Oh. Didn't you want to go to a stage where you could learn about the source? And even if you died once, you had a chance to become a soul, get resuscitated when you cleared the stage. Besides, you didn't even die.]

When the dragon put forward a reasonable fact, I had nothing to say.

[And I thought this stage would have been very helpful to you.]

“Well... yeah. I admit that’s true.”

I acknowledged the dragon and sat on a chair.

After releasing a deep sigh, I felt more tired.

[Why are you so down?]

What do you mean?

The stage ended in the middle of the explosion.

Explosions were not the only wonderful point.

The light that spread as the shock of the explosion went everywhere, the sound of the blast, and the... Anyway, the aftereffect was important.

[God of Light nods his head fervently.]

* * *

After feeling reenergized, I started talking with the dragon again.

The dragon was a little offended by what I had said before.

It was only after I took some time to cheer up the dragon that I could mention what I wanted to talk about.

Naturally, I wanted to ask the dragon about the source.

The source was similar to the divine power.

There was even a rumor that the source was a great help in gaining power, so all the more reason to delve into this matter.

While talking about this and that, I heard an amazing story from the dragon.

“Is there a god who has divine power along with their powers obtained by faith?”

[Yes.]

It was a shocking fact.

There was a god who had not just destroyed the source and absorbed the power but also gained his own power through faith.

I recollected the names of the gods I knew.

Who could that god possibly be?

There was a god who fit this category more than anyone else.

“God of adventure?”

Chapter 251

Tutorial 57th Floor (10)

[Why don't you take a break for now?]

"I can't do that."

The sooner I solved a question, the better. I knew that if I couldn't solve the mysteries that filled my mind, I wouldn't be able to rest properly, even if I wanted to.

[Species with short life spans are too reckless and short-tempered.] the dragon grumbled.

Was there a reason why it wanted to avoid answering questions?

Instead, the remark it made just now was unworthy of the dragon, who used to say, "We shouldn't treat individuals with preconceptions about their species." Amused, I asked Karin about racial preconceptions.

[But isn't it undeniable? We shouldn't be too obsessed with stereotypes and misjudge people, but it's easier to judge people based on their race. We don't need to stop having preconceptions completely. Doesn't that sound reasonable? You have a quick temper since you are less than 100 years old.] Karin's words made sense.

[That dragon is wrong. From what I see, you're eccentric beyond compare. Who in the world is as crazy as you? To compare you to a normal human being? Now that's racist!] Ahbooboo, who was still in my hands, said indignantly, shaking his core. The past few days, this guy had been talking about me unrestrainedly. In retaliation, I threw him into the inventory.

"I want answers to my questions right now."

The dragon answered me back in a weak, tired voice, [Do as you please.]

This was a bit unexpected. Did the dragon have something urgent to do right now? Otherwise, there seemed to be no other reason to delay answering me. I asked the question that I had planned to ask first.

The subject of the question was, of course, about the source. I was able to learn a lot from this stage. The Dragon had said, “I chose the stage you needed,” and it was indeed a stage where I was able to get the necessary information.

Among the new facts that I discovered, there were many that I had yet to grasp fully. I didn’t understand the superpowers that the 57th-floor superhumans used. I’d only witnessed the creation of a source for a limited time, and I needed more specific information. But what seemed more important was the connection between the original (origin) power and faith.

I knew that the two forces were coupled. The Spirit King had been very keen on the source’s power since it was a great help in building up divinity. But, it seems that the power of the source could work as poison as well. It was similar to how the power of the source devoured the SSS-grade superhuman.

What was truly amazing was that the source could be created by the power of ordinary people on a typical planet without any special requirements. In this respect, the power of the source was similar to faith. I wanted to know the difference between them, along with what they had in common.

[You’re starting with a tricky question.] the dragon whined. It grumbled a lot for a dragon.

[Let’s start with something easy, like what’s common in both of them.]

Actually, I wanted to hear the difference first, but Karin had already begun to explain. I listened to its explanation rather than arguing with it.

[The common point is that power arises from a large population. And it's usually a power focused on a single entity. You've already seen the source's power thanks to the God of Remorse, and having dealt with faith on the 56th floor. As you may know, the two powers are mostly the same. Some dismiss the source's power and faith as the same; most of the people who think so are those who have never witnessed these powers.]

In other words, there was a clear difference. It looked like it was hard to identify unless one had encountered it before.

[I doubt you'll understand everything I tell you about the differences between the source's power and faith. Even so, new information is continuously being discovered, so the information we know now could be false. I'll just tell you the basics as much as I can.]

Karin was also not fully informed of the source, either, which was unexpected.

Even though the world was going through a cataclysmic upheaval, it seemed somewhat strange that an omnipotent god couldn't fully comprehend a subject.

[Faith does nothing for the gods, but it could be emotionally or physically helpful to the believer. Of course, it may vary slightly depending on the type of faith, but that depends on the believers' interest since it needs to be convincing enough for believers to follow such faith. And there's also the fact that faith is produced continuously until the death of a believer.]

Listening to the dragon, I somehow felt like this was a business or trade talk and not a discussion about the faith of believers. Maybe it was because it had used 'produced' when speaking about believers.

[But the source is different because it consumes everything in a single moment. The power of the source can target intelligent bodies and extract their vitality.]

The power of the source and faith was similar to a lottery and a pension. One was periodic, while another was immediate.

The dragon listened to me and replied, [It's better to see it as a difference between management and exploitation than that.]

[The source is unique. The source's most prominent feature is that even if everyone doesn't have high trust or desire in the source's host, the recognition of its existence alone is enough to exploit them. Of course, most people usually have faith in it.]

Some people revered the 57th-floor superhuman, but not everyone did. Some of the people in the Superhumans Association had displayed feelings closer to jealousy rather than respect. And there must have been some famous people on the planet who were endlessly hostile. But even those people were deprived of their vitality by the source.

[Next, the source is limited to the planet's boundaries. The vitality of the people is not the only factor that influences the force. The level of society and history of the species also affect it. Perhaps that's why no source has emerged from species that migrated to other planets.]

It was influenced by history and society? Was it really meaningful to absorb people's vitality? I asked the dragon about it.

[No matter what humans do, they'll never achieve the same strength as the source. That's expected. Humans have nothing but useless blood, flesh, and a trace of mana. You don't think that there's an unknown force in a person's soul, right? There is no such thing.] The dragon said flatly.

Somehow, the dragon's description of humans made me feel strange.

[The source only goes for intelligent bodies that contribute to civilization, or for a planet where it can find many potential bodies. Typically, refugees or migrants cannot rebuild a civilization and don't advance, so the source doesn't favor them. Maybe the essence of the source's power comes from absorbing not their intelligence, but the planet they're building, the vitality of their world.]

* * *

I suggested the dragon rest for a while, and I needed time to organize

my thoughts.

“Kea-ek!”

I summoned the frog in the lake and laid on its back. Doing this made me feel like I was floating on a pool noodle in a wave pool. Actually, it felt better than that. The occasional low gurgles the frog made, calmed my mind and body.

When the gurgles stopped, I raised my hand and scratched the back of the frog’s neck. Pleasured, the frog croaked deeply. I could tell the frog was in an excellent mood, and I also felt at ease knowing that.

[Are you still thinking?] The dragon’s voice came from the crystal ball that was flying near me.

Not at all. I was just zoning out.

[If you are exhausted, take a day off and continue tomorrow.]

That didn’t seem necessary. The dragon’s narrated facts were more or less organized in my head.

The explanation of how gods and apostles treated the source puzzled me. Previously, I thought the source was a trophy of hunting. It was like killing a monster and saying, “I’m going to use it since it’ll be of great help.” But looking at it now, it wasn’t that much of a trophy.

The source was no better than poison. Of course, the tutorial was fostering apostles to kill the source and get its by-products, but it was strange that gods and apostles didn’t have any second thoughts about absorbing the power from the source.

[What’s strange about it? The gods also want the source. Power has no face or name. Of course, when a source is born, the affected world will suffer a near-destruction blow, but usually, it doesn’t happen.]

So, the gods typically didn’t interfere with the source, which was surprising given the stigma against them. I still had to get over the many stereotypes.

[Many beings are doing everything they can to create the source artificially. Some results of the experiments have been decent but not perfect. If you emotionally reject the source in the midst of this, you will fall behind.]

This was absurd, and so was the experiment to create the source. How many people had been sacrificed in the course of this experiment?

[Isn't there a tutorial stage with such a world as its background?]

“You mean the island of AoAeo?”

[AoAeo?]

“The 18th-floor stage.”

Even after clearing the 18th-floor, I didn't know why the island had faced such a catastrophe. I didn't even have time to find out why. But upon hearing that there was an experiment, the island of AoAeo came to mind. The dragon replied to me as if remembering what that stage had been.

[That's right. The 18th floor stage. I had never heard of the name of the island until now.]

It wasn't a memory I wanted to look back on. I was thinking about how to change the subject of the conversation when the dragon itself started to say something else.

[It happened in the presence of a god who has achieved both faith and the source's power.]

“At the same time?”

The dragon gave me more details. There was a god who had attained both the source's power and faith on his own. I pondered for a while, thinking back on the gods I knew. Among them, there was one god that caught my attention.

“God of Adventure?”

The dragon did not answer for a moment. The ideal hero that the God of Adventure wanted was very similar to the SSS-grade superhuman before he got turned into a source. If the superhuman hadn't been swallowed up by desire and had enough qualifications to become a deity, wasn't there a chance for it to acquire divinity? I'm sure the superhuman had been admired by many people, so gaining faith wouldn't be tough.

[That's something I can't afford to tell you.] The dragon answered late, but I had been able to infer the answer from its silence. Surely this dragon was easier to deal with than Kirikiri.

[The God of Adventure is disappointed.]

[Are you done with your questions? Then go in and take a rest and start asking tomorrow morning.] it said. It seemed impatient.

Was there something urgent? I noticed something strange in the dragon's words.

“Go in and rest? I'm going to put up a tent in front of the lake and sleep.”

The dragon jumped at my words.

[I've furnished the cave so well. What are you talking about? Why do you think I brought that little furniture?]

“I don't know... because your house used to be dirty and messy?”

[No! And how many times have I told you that this cave is not my home!] the dragon roared. This dragon was so obsessed with strange things.

“Alright, alright. You mean that cave isn't your house, but it's designed for me as a guest?”

[Yes, yes!] the dragon answered proudly. I thought it wanted me to admire something great in the cave. Then, I should go into the cave as it wished and see what fantastic thing was hidden.

[Look at what's on the left side of the bed you saw earlier. I'm sure it's something you've never seen before.]

"Let me ask you one more thing before that." I cut off the excited dragon's words.

[Huh?]

I couldn't miss the most critical question.

"What's happening on Earth?"

According to the explanation I heard today, the Earth had suitable conditions for a source to be born. It has a long history and a high level of civilization, but its territory had not yet expanded. At the same time, it didn't seem to have a deity to induce a sense of strength and will in the world.

However, the threat facing the Earth was not the birth of a source. Monsters believed to be the source were rushing through the gate at a rapid pace. However, this had nothing to do with the dragon's explanation that I had heard so far.

This time, I argued with the dragon, who hadn't answered immediately. I didn't mean to let this question pass.

"Answer the question. What's happening on Earth?"

Chapter 252

Tutorial 60th Floor (16)

“Are you really not going to go?”

“I’m not going!”

I ended up getting irritated. I’d asked one or two times, expecting a good answer, but hearing him whine about not wanting to go the entire day just made me even more annoyed.

Hochi’s lips formed a pout. That’s it. I had enough. He was not a kid.

“Why are you so anxious to go without me? Do you need a guardian, huh?”

Hochi frowned and asked as if my words had been offensive, “Why? Why aren’t you going?”

I explained this for the last time. Was he asking again because he forgot about it? Or was he just acting up?

“I need to protect the house.”

“There’s a barrier already.”

I guessed he was asking why my house was safe only when I was there. I should have explained it to him earlier.

“The house’s security will only stay intact if I’m here. The barrier will collapse if I don’t come back in three days. That’s why I have to stay here.”

It would have been okay for me to leave Hochi, who was my clone, alone in the tournament, but he was on the verge of crying and throwing a tantrum. In the end, I decided to send Hochi to the tournament and protect the house. I explained once more to Hochi, who kept interrupting me. Frankly, I wondered if he had heard even half of what I said, but Hochi seemed to be convinced that I had to stay on the 60th floor anyway.

“Yong-yong is running around excitedly. What’s wrong with you? Just go and have fun without me,” I sighed.

Yong-yong, who was younger than Hochi, prepared all day, excited about the fact that he was going out. It was clear that he was probably making a costume for the tournament. Perhaps because of the dragon’s character, Hochi still showed a dependent side, compared to Yong-yong, who was young but independent and had grasped the concept of privacy.

Hochi’s personality was totally out of line with my character, who was his base. Even if we considered his growth and character-building process, he was still far from developing the same mindset as me. Nevertheless, his over-dependence on me had raised questions. It was highly likely that it was a dependence that arose because of someone else. If it was not born from my character, then there were chances that it originated from the remnant nature of others.

I thought I’d try to find out, but soon I gave up. Hochi was no longer a subject of my experiments. It wasn’t good to think of studying him whenever I habitually questioned him.

To hide my thoughts, I turned to the newspaper on the table as if nothing had happened. Hochi seemed to be in a sour mood while I had been talking to him, but I ignored it.

There was a lot of interesting news in today’s paper. Recently, a man working for the government’s Ministry of Awakened came to the first floor. The Order of Vigilance immediately paid him for information and handed it over to the newspaper. Thanks to that, newspapers, which used to be full of rumours about levels, had become packed with full-fledged articles. There were even corrections made to previous reports.

Of course, the information provided by government personnel was unreliable, so this newspaper article was also entirely inaccurate. The Tutorial's newspaper company obtained information about the outside world and presented analyzing, opinionated papers rather than facts. Later, when conflicting information came in, there would be a correction article as if it were completely natural.

Nevertheless, newspapers had built up considerable credibility within the Tutorial, and challengers, who were always thirsty for outside information, read the paper carefully. I did so, too.

[Taking over another awakened group. Did doing so propel the Awakening Clan's Business even higher?]

Kim Min-hyuk, who is well-known as the former vice president of the Order of Vigilance, is making a drastic move.

Kim Min-hyuk gathered the awakened members of the Order of Vigilance to create the Awakening Clan.

Earlier this month, the clan acquired another awakened group, merging three of South Korea's top 10 conglomerates this year.

...

It was an interesting article. I had thought Kim Min-hyuk would enter politics. However, he used his personal connections to bring together awakened Korean people scattered around the world.

Naturally, while everyone was thinking of establishing a new Awakened Clan, they set up an investment company with the gathered awakened.

It was not surprising that Kim Min-hyuk's 'Clan' was devouring the business industry. Most of the awakened people working with Kim Min-hyuk had enough financial power to be called walking companies. They had broad connections and influence not only in domestic politics and business but also in oversea affairs.

Years had already passed since the Tutorial began, during which the awakened people began to use the money and influence they had earned to raise their social status. The Earth spoiled the awakened with favourable economic policies, valuable strategic resources, or power from state or private organizations.

If we ostracized or questioned the awakened, we would not be protected from the monsters that may appear at any time and place, nor would we have any way to fight with the awakened.

I wondered how Kim Min-hyuk would proceed with his plan. I was a bit anxious, but I was also looking forward to unexpected results. Well, Kim Min-hyuk would do well on his own. The next article caught my eye.

[Lee Joon Suk Awakened, Completely Abandoned G-Class Monster Fighting Operation?]

It was another interesting article. The Earth's G-class monsters had always been a specimen that interested me. Due to the different nature of each individual's source, I couldn't estimate just how powerful the G-class monsters on Earth were.

In the article, Lee Joon Suk had said in an interview, "It is not dangerous if all G-class monsters stay in their territories, so there is no need to risk it."

It was an interview that would make him seem like a coward if you overlooked the power Lee Joon Suk had. In my opinion, Lee Joon Suk was the best challenger the Tutorial had nurtured. If he declared that he would not be able to attack, there were two main possibilities.

The first possibility was of excessive collateral damage occurring in the process of killing G-class monsters. The losses from damaging Earth were too significant compared to the benefit of killing the monster. Lee Joon Suk's ability was also limited to wide-ranged destruction, so it was all the more so. This was why it was dangerous to specialize in range attacks. It's a constraint in a situation where there's a lot to protect.

The other possibility was, as Lee Joon Suk had said, a G-class monster was an opponent that wasn't always hostile. I planned to research this later.

When I put back the newspaper, I saw Hochi sitting with his arms folded and a sullen look on his face. He'd been like that for a while now.

"Hochi."

"What?" he snapped.

What a nasty tone. I still had a lot to teach him.

"By the way, do you want something from me?"

Hochi replied, "Of course I don't."

I knew he'd say that. He's such a stubborn child. I took out about fifty novels from my inventory that I'd prepared in advance.

"I spent the entire night writing these. Just for you." In reality, it had taken less than an hour to write these 50 books, but I lied and said that I stayed up all night anyway.

"With this, will you agree?" I asked, hoping he'd agree.

"I won't."

Damn it.

"Hey, don't you believe me? I stayed up the whole night, you know?"

"I don't believe you."

Damn it all. I never thought novels wouldn't work as a bribe.

“Why do you want me to be an apostle when you, yourself, are disconnected from the gods?” He asked, eyebrows furrowed.

I couldn’t refute that. I shouldn’t force others to do what I didn’t want to do.

“Then take this.” I took a small yellow ring out of the inventory and threw it to Hochi. Hochi, who I had thought would accept the flying ring, let the ring hit his body, and fall to the floor.

“What are you doing?” I questioned.

“What are you doing? What is this?”

Look at this child.

Eventually, with a deep sigh, I explained to Hochi. “That’s the only way you can talk to me, and then I can help you. Just take it.”

“Really?” Hochi picked up the ring that had fallen on the floor.

“But why did you make such an important thing to take this shape?”

“It should be as inconspicuous as possible.” Hochi’s face became sulky again when he heard my words.

“The ring will be proof that I’m with you. Take this if you don’t want to be an apostle. You and Yong-yong won’t be in danger in the tournament, but take it just in case.”

I didn’t tell Hochi, but there was a high chance that danger would approach them. The gods wanted to test Hochi and Yong-Yong’s abilities. If he met a challenger who was becoming an apostle in the tournament, he could get forced into a fight or offered a confusing proposal.

“But if there’s such a ring, can’t you give it to someone else? Then, you would have cleared the 61st floor a long time ago.”

“This ring is only meant for you.”

“Oh, really?”

Tutorial stages on each floor should be considered as different dimensions. And that ring couldn't make a link that traversed dimensions. It could only send out my strength and will. Hochi would be able to make such a link.

So I gave that ring to Hochi, and now he and Yong-yong both were ready to go to the tournament.

Hochi looked a little relieved that he could receive my help when he was in trouble.

“Hey, what about those books?”

“Take it,” I answered. They were books I wrote for Hochi anyway.

Hochi soon felt better and went back to his room with books in his arms.

* * *

“Yes. I'll do well!”

When I saw Yong-yong answering bravely, clenching my hand tightly, I felt more anxious. Not long ago, I teased Hochi about why he was so anxious, but when it was time to let them go, I became nervous as well. My anxiety persisted when I saw Yong-yong, who was determined to do everything well.

“Yong-yong, if there's anyone bothering your uncle-“

“I'll scold them!”

Well, this was quite tough. It wasn't Yong-yong or Hochi, but the person who picked a fight with them, who was the most dangerous.

However, it would be useless to scold such a person because it could be hazardous. As it was the first tournament to take place on a dimensional scale, it was not known what kind of people would emerge within the competition. I didn't want to make Yong-yong, who lacked experience, face a big risk while trying to control his strength, for no reason. It was a selfish thought, but it would be better for Yong-yong to get hurt by his opponents rather than face risks while controlling his strength.

"Yong-yong, will you listen to your uncle?" I questioned him.

"Yes, I'll listen!"

At least he was obedient.

I crouched down to Yong-yong's height. Why was my son so pretty? I was not saying this because he was my son, but Yong-yong was really good-looking.

"Yong-yong, if any strange uncle comes to you asking to be their secret friend--"

"I'll scold him!"

"Yes, scold him."

Hochi looked at Yong-Yong, who had been answering with his hands clasped, and murmured, "That would kill the poor uncle."

"He'd be better off dead." I gave a slight smile.

Chapter 253

Tournament Chapter (1)

“I can’t get in touch with Seok-Hyeon,” Hochi said.

“What?” I questioned.

“I said I can’t get in touch with Seok-Hyeon.”

“Who’s that?”

It was a name I had never heard of before. Hochi frowned and said to me, “You know, my friend Seok-Hyeon. We became close in the community.”

Ah. So Hochi was talking about the kid whom he got close to in the community. He couldn’t reach him?

“He could be dead,” I commented. Hochi angrily glared at me.

It was surprising to see him express his anger so openly because usually, even if he was upset, he would reply sarcastically.

“How could you say such a thing?”

Then what was I supposed to say? If you messaged someone in the Tutorial and they didn’t reply, there was a high probability of them being dead. Eight out of ten people were considered dead in such cases.

The mortality rate in the Tutorial had been steadily decreasing for several years, but it hadn’t reduced to zero. It went from the probability of getting into a car accident while driving a cheap motorcycle to one while driving a luxury car. In terms of death, it could be said that accidents occurred frequently.

“Hey, I can’t help it. No matter how low your difficulty level is in the Tutorial, if you get distracted, you’re just courting death. Especially on solo stages where you can’t get help from others. Low difficulty levels could be more dangerous on the party stage. There have been countless reports of party members killing each other or dying in an accident. “

Park Jung-ah and the Order of Vigilance tried to stop many from dying, but they could not entirely put a halt to murders or other crimes. Even the Order of Vigilance couldn’t impose strict rules and regulations.

“You...”

Oh no. I glanced at Hochi’s face, and it looked like he was about to explode. I soothed him before he started to sulk again or throw a tantrum.

“Go tell Park Jung-ah. The Order of Vigilance will find him on their own. If there was a wrongful accident, they’ll catch the assailants and lock them up.” I assured him that it’d be fine and that they could find him.

Park Jung-ah seemed to have gotten a little gentler, but she was still a tad too serious when it came to dealing with such things. I thought that if I felt this way even when I was not involved in the Order of Vigilance affairs at all, then the others would still be afraid of Park Jung-ah.

“If someone is stuck somewhere on a stage, it’s fine to send his information to the Order of Vigilance. It’d be better than us getting our heads wrapped up among ourselves.”

Hochi looked a little relieved at my words. He seemed to be very close to that friend of his called Seok-Cheon or something. I had assumed he was just a pen pal. Now, I’d have to find out what kind of friend he was.

I sent a message to Park Jung-ah, and we talked about the entry time and the unit we’d meet at.

“Is Yong-Yong still picking clothes? Let’s get him. We have to leave soon.”

We headed to Yong-yong’s room. My son had a somewhat feminine hobby. He would make his own clothes and spend time trying them on. He would also indulge in making small accessories and decorating his room.

This was different from what I had taught him, and he had probably inherited the trait from the dragon. Recently, I began to wonder if Hochi influenced Yong-Yong’s behaviour. After all, Hochi took care of Yong-Yong more than I did. And although Hochi wasn’t particularly feminine, he was more so in many ways compared to me. When I told Hochi this, he burst into laughter.

“You think you’re so different. You were the guy who got trapped on the sixth floor and knitted a scarf. You even gave it a name. What was it again? Hororong, if I remember right.”

Oh, I did. I had never woven mufflers before, but I found knitting very meditative, and at that time, I had seen some threads in the store, so it had been convenient.

Suddenly I thought of Hororong, and remembering its last appearance made me feel guilty. Hochi laughed and teased me when he saw me like that. Either way, I quietly paid a silent tribute for Hororong.

After chatting, we soon arrived in front of Yong-Yong’s room. For convenience, it was called a “room,” but in fact, it shouldn’t be called one.

I thought it would be too much to call an entire tower, Yong-Yong’s room. The top wasn’t even visible when I raised my head. Nevertheless, as the owner of this tower, Yong-Yong declared it as his room, so I had no choice but to follow his decision. From Yong-Yong’s point of view, my house was the entire 60th-floor residential area, and this colossal tower was his personal space.

I knocked on the door of the tower, and soon the door burst open. A cutely dressed Yong-Yong came to sight, giving a warm feeling.

He donned a fur hat, a colorful muffler wrapped around his neck, a thick jumper clinging to his body, and an almost bursting bag hanging to his side filled with god knows what. I was sure it was a bag with a built-in dimensional space, but even then, it was filled to the brim. Someone might've thought we were moving.

The warm clothes were a wise choice. It was said that the tournament location was quite cold, so it was right to wear warm clothes.

Of course, Yong-Yong wouldn't feel cold there, but he did dress up in order to match the dress code. Now, Yong-Yong was a bit taller than my waist, but he still looked small and young to me, perhaps because of his thick overcoat and a big bag.

With a bright smile, I hugged Yong-Yong, who rushed at me and said, "Now, let's go to the square. The portal has shown up."

I was unsettled by the fact that Hochi and Yong Yong would be sent out, even if it was just for a short period. Hochi, who had been anxious, calmed down, and it felt strange to be the only worried one.

"Should I come too?" I murmured, thinking about it.

Yong-Yong, who heard me, said yes because he didn't mind it, and Hochi asked if that would be fine. But it was already decided that I couldn't go. There was a clear reason for me to stay, and it wasn't something that I could change because of my mood. I was both sad and distressed, but it was time for Yong-Yong and Hochi to leave.

* * *

[Hochi]

Look at that restless piece of shit!

Ho-Jae, who had teased me before like a child, was visibly stressed when Yong-Yong and I went up to the portal. I bit back a smile at that sight. He was a respectable man but strange, so if you laughed recklessly, you might end up laughing for a very long time.

“Yong-Yong, say bye to your dad.”

At my words, Yong-Yong, who had been standing next to me and holding my hand tightly, bid farewell Ho-Jae.

“I’ll return soon, Dad. I’ll be sure to have a good time by myself.” I had to hold back my laughter once again at Yong-yong’s words.

Yong-yong’s farewell was no different than what Ho-Jae used to say to Yong-Yong, who kept clinging to him whenever he went to the 61st floor. He was having fun. Did Yong-Yong think that’s what one had to say whenever someone was leaving? It seemed necessary to correct this thought at another time.

We ran to the portal, ignoring Ho-Jae’s face, which had a concerned expression.

As our bodies floated, I could feel Yong-Yong and I get moved somewhere.

It was quite different from when we moved from the 60th floor to the 61st floor. Ho-Jae explained the difference between the two portals in theory, but I couldn’t understand what he meant. I knew quite a bit about magic, but not as much as Ho-Jae or Yong-Yong. At the very least, I knew this portal was unlike other ones.

We were not teleported to any crowded areas, and I thought that it was an excellent choice, since it prevented congestion. Anyone would have been embarrassed if they had suddenly fallen into a crowded square after entering the portal.

The place where Yong-Yong and I moved to was a quiet mountain road. The sign ahead showed which way to go. I tried to go the other way, but a transparent wall blocked the path. Having no other option, I followed the sign as indicated.

An excited Yong-Yong tried to break the transparent wall and go through it, saying that he wanted to chase a flying butterfly. Luckily, I somehow managed to stop him.

“Hello. My name is Baek Sung-Woong.”

“Oh, hello.”

We were able to reach a gathering of people after walking for a while. There were several mountain cabinets, and people were entering and leaving frequently. Some people continued to walk alone, but most had flocked into a group. From what I could make out, they were all members of the Order of Vigilance.

Just as Yong-Yong and I were wondering if we should join them, a tall, scary-looking man approached and greeted us. The sunlight reflected on his bald head.

“This way.”

The bald guy guided us as if it were natural. I assumed he was the guide in charge of us. He had said nothing but greetings, so I couldn't confirm whether I thought it was right. He was quite blunt.

“It's a human!”

Yong-Yong wasn't scared of the bald man, so he approached him and pointed at him. I hurriedly hugged Yong-Yong in surprise, to hold him back.

“I'm sorry!” I apologised to the bald man.

“No, it's fine. By the way, you haven't changed at all.”

“What?”

Did Ho-Jae know this bald guy? As far as I knew, I hadn't ever heard of this guy.

“I've seen you on TV before. It's an honor to be able to guide you.”

“Ah, yes.” I felt like I missed the time to say no to him being our guide.

“Cute!” Yong-Yong, who was in my arms, looked at the bald man and exclaimed.

“No. Don’t say anything, Yong-Yong. Excuse us.” I directed the last sentence at the bald head.

He wasn’t cute. Not at all.

“Cute, cute.”

Yong-Yong wasn’t listening to me. Usually, he was very obedient, but when he got hooked on something, he wouldn’t stop being stubborn, even if he was in a good mood. Yong-Yong stretched out his hands towards the bald man, attempting to touch his bald head.

“I’m so sorry. It’s his first time seeing someone like you,” I apologised.

“Is this the hatchling?”

“Yes, yes. I’m so sorry. He’s usually not this disobedient.”

“Oh, that’s all right. Children are like that. I used to have a kid this big on Earth. I don’t know how much he has grown now since it’s been two years.”

The bald man’s initially serene face turned sad. Wistfulness and sorrow were apparent as he thought about his own child. Even though he looked like a no-nonsense kind of man, he seemed to be softer than I thought. Seeing Yong-Yong seemed to ease his anxiety little by little. I thought we could get along easily over time.

“Ahaha. Cute.” Yong-Yong, who was seated on the bald head’s back, smacked his head.

Oh no, that little punk. He didn’t realize how dangerous it was to do that to a bald person.

The bald head seemed a little embarrassed and upset, and I didn’t know what to do. Come to think of it, it was my first time meeting people and holding a conversation with a bald guy.

“I’m terribly sorry, bald head.” Ah no, his name wasn’t bald head. His name was Baek Sung-Woong.

Perhaps I had been around Ho-Jae for too long, so I just blurted out whatever I had thought like he usually did.

The bald man raised his hand and said, “It’s fine.”

It was such a kind and gentle gesture that I couldn’t help but feel sheepish. I had missed the best time to correct my words.

Chapter 254

Tournament Chapter (2)

“Excuse us.”

“It’s alright.”

Bald Head, or Baek Sung-Woong, cut me off without even listening to my reason. He must have been upset. I gazed at Yong-Yong, who was watching a colourful bird flying between the dense trees, still sitting in my arms. He looked so happy that I didn’t have the heart to nag, so I decided to do it later.

Rather, how do I make Bald Head happy? Should I make a hair-growth serum for him? If I asked Ho-Jae for advice, he wouldn’t make Bald Head’s hair grow back, but he would make his baldness extend to other areas. However, I was not sure if it was right to approach the already sulky Bald Head and ask, “Do you want me to help you grow your hair?” Wouldn’t it hurt him more, thinking that I was teasing him?

[Just make a hair-growth serum and send it to Park Jung-ah. You were going to the Order of Vigilance anyways.] Ho-Jae’s voice rang in my head through the ring I had kept in my inner pocket, and I couldn’t help but be astonished.

Eh, we could talk comfortably with this ring’s help?

[Of course. That’s part of the reason why I asked you to take it.] Ho-Jae said in a deep voice.

How was this possible? Rather than being happy to be able to communicate with him so easily, surprise arose in my mind first. It had ignored all the barriers the gods had built over different dimensions, and even let us talk in real-time without proper coordinates.

If I asked Ho-Jae, he would explain it, but I didn't bother to ask him because he would probably nag me about it, asking why I hadn't studied about this before. Another reason was that I didn't want to take another theoretical class, which would simply be a headache.

[Yong-yong, get back on Bald Head's back. It was fun seeing you play with his Bald Head earlier.]

You crazy bastard. How could you find it interesting to see Yong-Yong slap the bald man on the back? I couldn't feel anything but embarrassment and regret at the sight.

[Wasn't it funny?] Ho-Jae's words made me think that I shouldn't let him around people if we ever got out of the Tutorial and made it back to Earth. It would be hard, but at least one leash was needed to restrain him. Now, I partially understood the mindset of the gods who locked him up on the 60th floor.

[Very mean words.]

Was that my fault? I was just being honest.

[I'll take care of you when you get back.] Ho-Jae warned, but I tried to stay calm.

Of course, that guy would never forget this and surely seek revenge one day, but I would not give in to him.

[Watch your words.]

What? I can't hear you from the 60th floor.

The good news about my provocation was that it made him cut the connection. I chuckled to myself at the small victory. Perhaps because of my sudden laughter, the bald man looked back at me.

"Oh, it's nothing."

"Sure," The Bald Head said huskily and turned around to walk again.

Did he think that I was laughing and making fun of him?

Well, Ho-Jae, Yong-Yong, and I had lived together for so long that I grew accustomed to being indifferent about the emotions of others. I should be more considerate of others around me, and I felt sorry for the bald man.

“Ahaha. Cute.”

I felt even worse for Bald Head when I heard Yong-Yong’s bright laughter.

* * *

I peered at the faint bonfire. The situation was somewhat atrocious. Now, even the initial fear I felt from Bald Head’s face was beginning. The current circumstance was all due to Yong-Yong, who was fast asleep in my arms. Yong-Yong had coiled up like a worm and sobbed in my arms, falling asleep in the process. As I caressed Yong-Yong’s back, I recalled what just happened.

The origin of the problem was the appearance of a massive bear residing on the hillside. I wasn’t astonished by the bear’s presence since I had heard from Ho-Jae that the road to the tournament would have obstacles. And most importantly, I had been aware of that big bear. But Bald Head wasn’t.

As soon as he noticed the bear, Bald Head changed his posture and bent his body, taking a fighting stance. It was an immediate response and happened only a few seconds before the bear charged, growling, so I wanted to give him a high score for his reaction speed. I wondered if this bald man could hunt a bear like that by himself. The problem was that he had overlooked Yong-Yong and the education that he had received from Ho-Jae. Yong-Yong stood on his hind legs and shouted loudly as soon as he saw the growling bear. “Cute!”

I wanted to ask what exactly he found cute, but Yong-Yong exerted his strength without waiting. In the next moment, Yong-Yong’s power pierced the bear, who got swept away in the dense trees and collided with the rocky terrain behind it. There hadn’t been any sound from Yong-Yong’s attack, but the attack caused the bear to release an earsplitting roar throughout the mountain. The air around vibrated and countless mountain rocks were destroyed. Of course, the bear died instantly, leaving nothing left except for its hind legs.

Because the bear had died in one blow, Yong-Yong began to cry in my arms. Bald Head felt an intense fear of Yong-Yong. Perhaps it was because of the word 'cute' he had uttered while mutilating the bear.

While we walked down the mountain path in silence, the bald man advised me to go camping, as the sun was setting. That was what we were doing right now—sitting quietly, with a warm bonfire between us.

I thought about how I could reassure the bald man a little bit. First, I thought about the reason why Bald Head would be anxious and afraid.

He was probably scared by what Yong-Yong said when he killed the bear. Before meeting the bear, Yong-Yong had looked at Bald Head and said he was cute. That would explain Bald Head's fear since Yong-Yong hadn't been gentle with the bear. The bear knew Ho-Jae had contacted us, so he did not hold back and attacked freely. Of course, it would have some impact.

But Yong-Yong didn't kill a bear because he thought it was cute. Yong-Yong clearly recognized the bear as an enemy and attacked immediately. However, Yong-Yong's perception of the enemy was a little strange.

For Yong-Yong, the enemy was like a game's villain. It was someone he had to defeat, and the battle against the enemy was almost like a game for Yong-Yong. Of course, it didn't mean that he treated the enemy lightly for fun.

Ho-Jae had taught him how to deal with enemies very well. A little too well. He showed him just how cruel and vicious one had to treat them, how to be thorough in attacking, and in what manner to fight. Yong-Yong actually treated the bear like that. All because Ho-Jae taught Yong-Yong like that.

What a madman.

Yong-Yong successfully controlled his strength while attacking the bear. If he couldn't do that, Ho-Jae wouldn't have thought of bringing him out in the first place.

Yong-Yong could fully control his power, but he was just excited about going out for the first time without Ho-Jae. And Ho-Jae had not taught Yong-Yong how to deal with a relatively weak enemy which was the problem.

Yong-Yong had never experienced such a weak enemy. His enemy was typically strong in any kind of attack, and in the end, he had to overcome them to be satisfied, so his attacks held a lot of power. He did so for a sure victory, even if the power felt from the bear was relatively weak.

Yong-Yong launched an attack that could never be stopped because that was the right thing to do. But when the bear died in vain, he was shocked. As a result, Yong-Yong burst into tears as any child would when an unexpected situation occurred.

After organizing my thoughts, I began to worry about Yong-Yong more than reassuring Bald Head. I called out to Ho-Jae in a hurry. I didn't know if he had really cut the link completely, or if I would be able to hear his answer.

[What?]

I explained to Ho-Jae, who had answered insensitively, about what had just happened and asked for his opinion.

“Hey, will Yong-Yong be okay? What if he does this to other people too?”

[He'll be fine.]

Yong-Yong didn't look fine. If anyone died in an accident, things could get really serious.

[It's not too bad.]

This lunatic's personality is really...

I couldn't figure out his thoughts.

[It's just that Yong-Yong got a little worked up, but he's not going to do that against people. I told him to use something else if possible.]

"Use what?"

[I've taught him to use techniques to deal with enemies without causing them a lot of damage.]

That meant killing them off in one blow. It was clear that Yong-Yong, who listened to Ho-Jae, would kill the person who angered him without any qualms. No, even if Ho-Jae didn't tell him to do so, it was unlikely that Yong-Yong would properly admonish and forgive his opponent if he were angry.

Perhaps I should not let Yong-Yong get angry at anyone at the tournament.

"Damn it. I can't do this alone."

[You brought this upon yourself.] Ho-Jae giggled.

* * *

Fortunately, Bald Head became quite close with Yong-Yong. He still seemed to be afraid, but as he spent more time with Yong-Yong, who was constantly hanging on to him, he became increasingly comfortable. During the three-day walk, Yong-Yong didn't use his strength carelessly, and without using it, he was just like a cute kid.

[Our Yong-Yong needs to continue being pretty. The bald man thinks of his child when he sees Yong-Yong, but our Yong-Yong is much cuter than his child.]

Though it was a rude remark, I agreed with Ho-Jae. It was obvious that anyone would agree if they saw Yong-Yong, who was struggling to make a flower crown, hanging on to the bald man's back.

On the third day of the tournament, we were able to reach the destination after a half-day walk. Numerous tall buildings caught my attention. Since the tournament was being held, it was easy to understand that the buildings were accommodations for people to stay. While walking along the mountainous path, we had passed countless numbers of people. Somehow, I felt dizzy. There were too many people.

Unlike me, Yong-Yong kept saying that the bald man was cute. He seemed to want to roam around, but the bald man secretly tightened his arm so that Yong-Yong wouldn't run away, which was a good idea. If Yong-Yong ran away, it would be hard to find him. Fortunately, Yong-Yong was so distracted that he did not intend to come down from the bald man's back.

The bald man walked faster than he had before. At the same time, Yong-Yong tried not to slip off his back with all the shaking. The bald man soon led us somewhere.

We entered a building and were soon able to reach a large room where several people were seated. It was like a conference room. There, I caught sight of a person who remained in my memory. It was Park Jung-ah.

Somehow, I was pleased. Even though a long time had passed, Park Jung-ah's appearance was exactly how I remembered it.

Park Jung-ah also raised her hand as she saw our group. I thought she was waving to us, but she wasn't. As soon as Park Jung-ah raised her hand, everyone who was talking in the room closed their mouths.

Somehow I felt overwhelmed in such a quiet conference room. It was impressive to me, who had lived with Yong-Yong and Ho-Jae, practically my entire life, to see so many people act in unison.

Park Jung-ah beckoned us to come closer. Then, she turned around, opened a door at the corner of the room, and went in.

Was she beckoning me to follow her?

I silently followed her into the room. I had things to say and things to ask. I looked back after entering the room. The bald man, who was carrying Yong-Yong, remained in the conference room. As soon as I was about to ask what they were doing, Park Jung-ah slammed the door shut.

What? What was going on?

I was about to ask Park Jung-ah when she opened her mouth first. "It's all right. I made sure that the room was soundproof."

Soundproof. Why soundproof the room?

Before I could express my doubts, Park Jung-ah strode toward me. Her strong approach made me walk back subconsciously. After taking a few steps, my back hit the wall, and Park Jung-ah, who had come closer to me, slammed her hand beside me on the wall and stood there.

At the sight of Park Jung-ah staring at me silently, I swallowed saliva collecting in my mouth. Trying to look as calm as possible, I opened my mouth.

Chapter 255

Tournament Chapter (3)

With her face so close, I felt scared to the point where I couldn't even think of anything else. Her icy but intense gaze made me believe that somehow, she was angry with me. I tried to avoid looking at her, but she was too close, so it wasn't easy.

I opened my mouth with the thought of getting out of this situation somehow. "Well, there's... You know..."

Although she had stopped talking, Park Jung-ah's presence was still overwhelming. Her eyes, quietly staring into mine, began to inch closer. Confused, I raised my hand to cover my mouth.

Park Jung-ah's soft lips touched the back of my hand, as I had swiftly blocked my lips. Her warm breath brushed over my skin, and she glared at me as if trying to convince me to remove my hand. The sight forced me to stay still, unable to breathe.

I wanted to run back, but unfortunately, a wall blocked my retreat. Attempting to push the wall, I leant back against it with all my strength, but the wall didn't budge. Shit, what the hell was this wall made of? Even if I tried to run away from the side, Park Jung-ah's hands were caging me. In the end, I couldn't run away and had to block her lips with my hands, and my eyes shut tight.

After an excruciatingly long moment, Park Jung-ah took her mouth off my hand and stepped back.

Hah. Finally. Perhaps due to the excessive tension and stress, my legs felt weak, and I collapsed, leaning against the wall.

Park Jung-ah murmured, standing a few steps away from me, "You aren't him."

“Yes.”

Obviously! Why did you rush to conclusions without listening to people?

I wanted to scream out about my injustice, but I couldn't. Park Jung-ah, who had stopped attacking me with her lips, began to express her anger, kicking and smashing all the things around her; the chairs, desks, vases, and the lights in this small room shattered.

A variety of objects broke as Park Jung-ah viciously kicked and knocked over furniture. It felt more frightening to see her silently and calmly kicking, rather than shouting and rioting wildly.

I'm scared.

[I'm scared, too.] Ho-jae replied in the same way as I did.

That f*cking asshole.

“Isn't this all your fault? Whatever it is, you did wrong, so isn't it normal for her to be angry?” I raged.

Ho-jae, who would usually answer, “Why is it my fault?”, was unexpectedly silent. Dude, this guy definitely had something to do with Park Jung-ah's tantrum.

“Hey, what I need to talk to you about is this ring. You said I'm the one who's a conduit, right?”

[Yes, I did.]

I listened to Ho-jae and organized my thoughts. His words meant that anyone could communicate with Ho-jae through this ring as long as I was nearby.

[Yes, so you can just give her the ring later.]

“No wonder you made this device into a ring. By the way, isn't this ring too monotonous to present to a woman?”

[It can change its exterior design a little bit.] Ho-jae explained.

“So it could do that, too. By the way, what did you do to make her so angry? I don’t recall much,” I questioned him.

[Well... well, there’s a lot of things.]

Judging from Ho-jae’s soft voice, it was unlikely that he would elaborate. I didn’t know any details, but it was clear that he had done something wrong. Firstly, I waited for Park Jung-ah to calm down.

Park Jung-ah, who had been angry for a long time, lethargically approached me and sat down.

“Is it true?” she said with a sigh.

“Yes, I’m his clone. Oh, but I’m not entirely the same as him. Different personalities, different thoughts. It’s better to call me his younger brother.” To start off, I introduced myself.

“I should apologize to you. I’m so sorry. I got a little excited,” Park Jung-ah said frankly. “I feel better after kicking something.”

“No, no. It’s okay. I don’t know what’s going on, but it’s his fault.”

“Yes, it is.” Park Jung-ah pushed the blame to Ho-jae, not specifying any more details. What the Hell did he do wrong?

We struck up a conversation about the bald man who had guided us since we entered the tournament, Baek Sung-woong, and the things that happened on the way. I heard the explanation of what would be done throughout the tournament. I was impressed by her kind and caring attitude that starkly contrasted the way she had just been beating up the surrounding objects. It felt like talking to a customer centre employee. Oh, of course, I had never met or spoken to a customer centre employee. It was just a feeling.

Upon hearing that she needed to take special care of Yong-yong and that my friend Seok-cheon could not be reached, Park Jung-ah replied that she would do everything possible to help me. In particular, I gave some examples of measures to use when taking care of Yong-yong, and asked again if it was okay to proceed in this way.

Park Jung-ah's explanation ended by saying, "If you have any other questions or needs, you can ask Baek Sung-woong." And she asked me to have a drink with her if I had time in the evening.

"Yong-yong and I don't drink."

"Because you're a minor?"

"N- No, that's not," I stammered.

Park Jung-ah said, "I don't plan on giving alcohol to Yong-yong, who looks like a young child, so I'll prepare a non-alcoholic drink for him."

Before leaving the room, I gave the ring to Park Jung-ah.

"Take this ring. You can talk to Ho-jae with this."

Park Jung-ah murmured as she fidgeted with the ring, a sullen look on her face, "We can have a conversation through messages..."

"You'll be able to hear his voice, unlike in a message," I explained.

Park Jung-ah nodded her head slowly. "Yes, I can hear your voice. I mean, how does this work? Can I just talk with the ring on? Oh, really?" She spoke aloud, touching the ring.

It seemed that Ho-jae was answering through the ring.

"Then I'll be going," I said to her.

I left Park Jung-ah, who was obsessed with the ring and slipped out of the room. Before I left the room, I saw Park Jung-ah bowing her head slightly. It seemed to me that there was a sense of regret and gratitude for me. She bid me farewell with a warm expression and closed the door.

“Hey, Lee Ho-jae.” Park Jung-ah spoke out, her voice cut off as the door closed.

Just before the door closed with a thud, I somehow felt that she was about to start swearing, but I ignored it.

“Uncle!”

As soon as I saw Yong-yong, who was on Baek Sung-woong’s back, I hugged him. I had wondered if he’d even come after me, but it was good that he didn’t. If Yong-yong had come in, it would have been a complicated situation.

“Uncle, who was that?” Yong-yong asked, pointing to the door.

I couldn’t tell if he asked because I was taken there or because of the conversation that had taken place there. If it were for Yong-yong, he would have heard the discussion even with the room’s soundproofing, which added to his question.

I felt embarrassed to answer Yong-yong’s question. At times like this, I would usually have to ask Ho-jae, but there was no way to because he was talking to Park Jung-ah.

“That’s- Well- I’ll tell you later.”

I was not yet ready to explain to Yong-yong about the complicated family history even more so because it was a story that I didn’t know well either.

* * *

[Lee Yeon-hee]

“It’s not worth it,” I said, looking at the four men standing on the narrow slope. To be honest, it was annoying.

“Ignore whatever the girl says, we just have to do our job,” one of them said.

“What do you want?”

Of course, it was apparent what this group’s goal was after they blocked the middle of the road to the tournament area and started a quarrel, but I asked them out of courtesy.

“Hell’s difficulty challenger, Lee Yeon-hee, the second in history to have information about the level of competence that the challenger on the 60th floor possesses. We want information on him.”

“Who exactly wants to know about him?” I wondered what kind of person would tempt fate to take a closer look at the power of a Hell’s difficulty challenger.

“I can’t tell you that. To be honest, you wouldn’t be able to memorize all the names even if I listed it for you.”

“There must be a lot of people interested in him,” I commented.

“Of course. It’s said that the 61st floor can only be cleared with two people. That means if both of you are on the 61st floor, you could clear it quickly.”

His words made me feel worse. The man was spouting random things.

“There are many people who support this, but there are also many who are anxious. And there are more who want to know what changes this will bring and how to cope with them,” he continued.

Somehow, his words made me feel sick with every passing minute. They weren’t strange, but they still felt so disgusting and insignificant.

“Is it worth your life?” I questioned.

At my words, the man covered his mouth and laughed, but this was not a laughing matter. What was he laughing for?

“I’m confident I’ll live somehow. These friends here have been promised enough rewards even if they die,” he replied, laughing.

“Really?”

“Right. Now, shall we get started?” The man asked cheerfully.

I decided to act.

“Kill.”

With my move, the spirits that had settled in the brains of the four men began to move. The spirits that had entered the enemies’ nose with fine dust accumulated in the brain, melted it, neutralized the enemy, and finished their work.

There was nothing strange about the four men falling down on the floor like puppets with broken strings. I tapped their bodies with my feet, making sure they were unconscious.

“Incinerate them so that no one knows what happened.”

Leaving behind the bodies of four men, which began to burn quietly, I continued to walk down the mountainous path.

* * *

The tournament was divided into sections for each dimension and server within the dimension.

The tournament itself was integrated at all levels, but it was quite a troublesome process to meet people on different levels.

The Korean server was connected to a global integration server, and other levels of integrated servers were linked to global integration servers.

Therefore, if you wanted to move to a different server, you would have to move from a Korean server to a globally integrated server, from that globally integrated server to a third-level integrated server, from that third-level integrated server to an individual server at another level.

A total of three server portals must be passed.

There were even individual restrictions and rules to pass through the portal. In some dimensions, rules were already established within the tournament, while some newer dimensions chose to follow the existing rules. The Earth's, especially our Korean server, was on that side.

That's why I had to enter the tournament's integrated zone with the permission of the Order of Vigilance, the organization that managed Korea's allocated zone. It was not too difficult, so far. If you had a criminal record within the Tutorial or were subjected to investigation, the Order of Vigilance gave you the right to enter the globally integrated area after a brief review.

Compared to the many gates to pass, the gates to Earth's integrated server were among the simplest unless you had a prickly relationship with the member of the Order of Vigilance in charge of the gate.

"This is the first time I've seen you," a voice called out, and I turned around.

I was annoyed to see Park Jung-ah standing in front of me, greeting me. "Hello."

It seemed to me that she was deliberately provoking me. As soon as I saw her, I saw that she had hidden her hands behind her back hurriedly. There was a ring on her finger that was clearly emanating Ho-jae's power.

"You want to move to an integrated server?"

"Yes," I answered shortly.

"May I ask why?"

Chapter 256

Tournament Chapter (4)

[Lee Yeon-hee]

Looking back, I think I hated that woman from the beginning. I just didn't like her face on the documentary programs of TV. Park Jung-ah was similar to a celebrity who became famous using nepotism, despite having no acting skills. It was despicable.

E/N: AS DEFINED BY MERRIAM-WEBSTER, nepotism is 'favoritism (as in appointment to a job) based on kinship'.

Of course, I've begun to hate her more since joining the Tutorial. The documentary's narrative was that the leader of the Order of Vigilance may be in a relationship with Ho-jae, but in reality, the woman only fought with him. There were no personal messages, but they had a good enough connection to confront each other openly in the community. Maybe it was a bit far-fetched to call it a confrontation. They were childishly hanging on to each other's words, fighting over them, and clinging to each other. It was tough for me to like it.

Having read all the articles in the community, I was well aware of what happened in the Tutorial's early days. It seemed to me that I was upset to see him talking down on me and fighting back on the subject that he had saved me.

Watching the couple date and eventually break up, then grow close again afterward, made me hate her even more.

And now that we've met face to face for the first time, I hated the woman more than ever. Look at that face. Oh, my God. Was that the face of a woman over thirty? The Tutorial was promoting a scam. Park Jung-ah would look like a high school student if she wore a school uniform.

But dressing in a professional suit made her look pretentious, putting too much effort into her looks.

“Will you tell me the reason?” she asked, eyes examining me.

“No.”

I wondered if the rumor that the Order of Vigilance was actually a group of whipped guys was true.

Note from Imagine: in case you don't know whipped means in love/infatuated. It's usually used for the latter

*(Adjective. whipped (comparative more whipped, superlative most whipped) (slang) Controlled by a spouse or significant other to an unreasonable degree.)

Maybe Park Jung-ah was tricking people with that face obliviously.

As soon as she saw me, she glanced down at the ring on her finger and pretended to hide it behind her back. No matter how much I thought about it, her supposedly subtle movement was a definite ‘f*ck you’ gesture. After being hit on the head by Park Jung-ah's behavior, my doubts kept piling up.

“I'm sorry, but I need a reason to move you to an integrated server, for the sake of procedures.”

“I have an appointment. I'm sorry, but I can't tell you anymore because it's too personal. And I don't have much time, so I can't follow all the procedures.”

I had a good excuse in store, but I didn't want to say it. Not to this woman, at least.

“Personal?” she frowned, murmuring the word. Somehow, I took pleasure in her dissatisfaction.

That woman couldn't force her rules on me. It wasn't because there was a problem with her rules, but I just didn't want to accept them.

With great power comes great responsibility. It was a famous saying, but it was complete bullshit. With great power comes respect.

The same went for the rules of the Order of Vigilance. I respected their plans, unquestioningly. But, the Order of Vigilance, who ruled the Tutorial with an iron fist, gave up its control to a strong woman whom the order could not control. The result was, of course, tragic.

In a way, it was good. Some things couldn't be recklessly cut or controlled. If you forced rules on the ordinary people, the rules and those who enforced them would be destroyed.

I was confident that the Order of Vigilance wouldn't stop me, and I was looking forward to forcing myself to the point where I'd have to stop myself. If so, I would be able to show without any regrets, the strength I had.

"I'll permit you. But if there's a problem with the integrated server, or if there's a violation of the rules, we can't help you," Park Jung-ah said.

You can't help me, anyway. Even if you could, I wouldn't need it.

"Rules aren't made for people to get punished for breaking them. It's the same as why you shouldn't commit a crime, not because you go to jail, but because it is inherently wrong. We'll tolerate you ignoring our rules, but we won't help you when you're in trouble," she continued,

How ironic. A woman who had committed more crimes than anyone else in the Tutorial was giving me this advice.

"Isn't it fair?"

"Yes, it's fair enough. Thank you."

I didn't have any complaints, nor did I need the help of these people anyway. However, I just didn't like her attitude of teaching, as usual.

[Park Jung-ah]

“Am I doing well?” I mumbled to myself.

The members talked in hushed voices in the passageway. The committee reacted very strongly to my statement regarding Lee Yeon-hee’s departure to an integrated server. The committee had planned to turn the integrated server zone into an empty area. They had wanted to leave it as empty as possible with exceptions made for public meetings and the like. Meanwhile, my announcement of Lee Yeon-hee’s departure must have sounded irresponsible to them, as I didn’t know her purpose. But all I could say to the committee was that we couldn’t help it.

[You’re doing enough.] Ho-jae’s voice flowed into my head through the ring.

“Ugh. I can’t even mutter this to myself.” I covered my face in embarrassment. A light laugh came from the ring.

[It’s just as you said. Rules cannot help you as one cannot be bound by discipline for too long. I thought it was obvious, too.]

What do you mean? I got up from my seat.

Entering the conference room, where the Order of Vigilance members had gathered, I could see several people moving in a row.

I asked one of the closest people, “What’s going on?”

“I got a report that a Ranker was making a fuss, that’s him.”

The man pointed to a ranker. I had never seen him before, but he was famous enough just by his looks. The man was now sleeping on the floor, reeking of liquor. There was an Order of Vigilance member who approached and talked to him.

“Mister, mister! Wake up!”

The drunk Ranker managed to open his eyes, but he couldn’t regain his senses.

“Mister, can’t you drink a bit less?”

“Oh, no,” the drunk Ranker answered. The Order of Vigilance member laughed at the sight.

“Who in the community would have known that such a reputable man could be so weak. Hahaha.”

“I never thought he’d be like this when he’s drunk.” Everyone started laughing loudly at what someone said. To be honest, I couldn’t comprehend why this was so funny.

“What about the victim?” I asked impatiently.

“No one was hurt, but he was so drunk that people around him reported feeling uneasy.”

It was dangerous. If that man had used his power on people while he was drunk, there could have been a massive accident. It occurred to me that I should have banned drinking in this tournament.

“Then we’ll go out again.”

“Yes. Have a good day.”

The field personnel of the Order of Vigilance left the conference room. I looked back on my memory, but I couldn’t remember where they had been stationed. Now everyone was doing their job well, even though I didn’t know everything.

I hesitated. The members were asking if this situation was funny or serious, and whether or not punishment should befall the man.

“Are you hurt?” I noticed an Order of Vigilance member with a towel on his face.

“Yes, I’ve got a slight cut,” the member replied.

No matter how drunk the Ranker was, injuring a person was going too far.

“This is...” I trailed off.

“It’s fine. When he wakes up, I’ll ask him for a meal as an apology.”

I couldn’t get used to this way of speaking. It wasn’t like this before.

“Don’t think about getting fed. Think about treatment. It’ll leave a scar,” I warned.

“Hey, it’s not like I can’t live with a scar. What’s wrong with getting a meal from a Ranker like him? He’s going to live like a king when he goes out on Earth.” The member shook his head.

I decided not to pressure him anymore when he said he was okay. I delivered some instructions and came out.

The Order of Vigilance’s atmosphere has changed a lot, and I was well aware of it.

Times had changed. People were clearing the Tutorial faster and going outside. The shorter the spent in the Tutorial, the smaller the problem.

The Earth was slowly stabilizing and awakened people gained wealth and honor. The higher the reward after the clearing, the more steadily the Tutorial’s challengers engaged in growth. The challengers, who used to resemble mercenaries and adventurers running for their lives, now looked like test-takers preparing for the exam.

The Order of Vigilance changed accordingly. The problems had diminished, and the atmosphere had softened. Rather than punishing people, it was full of things that helped them avoid any inconvenience or difficulty in clearing. Now that several generational shifts have taken place, the Order of Vigilance, which was in a position to control and govern the first Korean Tutorial servers, had turned into a supporter of the challengers.

That was what happened before. Initially, a fitting punishment for the drunk man should've been carried out. No matter how drunk he was, the penalty for attacking an Order of Vigilance member trying to guide him had to be made clear, and it was a proper incident to publicize it to the outside world. But now that the Order of Vigilance had changed, I couldn't make them move the way I wanted them to.

[What are you thinking?]

“The world is changing these days.”

The advent of the Tutorials and the emergence of monsters was like opening a new world. People who had fallen into the new world had created all sorts of problems and confusion. But it has been stagnant ever since. At least for me, it was. No matter how turbulent the outside world was, it had always been the same routine for me.

I watched for crimes, made sure that the Order of Vigilance didn't have any accidents, took care of the new arrivals, and sorted out the items and information they had gathered and distributed to the people. And I spent the rest of the time cheering for Lee Yeon-hee.

I remembered that Kim Min-hyuk cared a lot about his life in the Tutorial. He predicted that a lot of people would settle down in the Tutorial and that they'd create a lot of problems. In response, I told him that a decent society was needed for the settlers. But contrary to his expectations, the number of people left in the Tutorial was now minuscule. Naturally, since this problem had diminished, his arrangements had become meaningless. Now, I could see why he left.

Many things had changed, but I was still the same.

“Do you remember when the vice-captain went outside?” I asked.

[Remember what?] Ho-jae questioned.

“You told me that I should be the mother of the Order of Vigilance, but it turns out I was completely out of sync with them.”

[Sorry. That was a bit of a hassle. After Kim Min-hyuk left, it's apparent that it would be more trouble.]

“Nobody asked,” I snapped

Whoo, I had almost lost my temper again. I needed to calm down.

[But you’ve been doing great.]

“You can’t convince me.”

Everyone expected me to do everything well. I should take care of the internal affairs that Kim Min-hyuk was in charge of, beyond my public appearances, but I didn’t get the job done correctly. The remaining Order of Vigilance members led the change on their own, and I could only tolerate and watch it.

The Order of Vigilance had changed a lot from when Kim Min-hyuk and I took charge of each other’s roles. Just as there was no problem with the Order of Vigilance, even when Kim Min-hyuk was gone, it seemed that there would be no problem with the Order of Vigilance without me now. No, I think it would be better without me.

Somehow I lost my energy and sighed. I took a seat on the bench by the roadside. I used to suffer from the threat of assassination, and I couldn’t even come out alone like this during tournament days, but now, sitting here made me feel refreshed and empty at the same time. While sitting here on the streets, I somehow understood the feelings of those who became jobless overnight.

[Just relax and say what you want to say.]

Ho-jae whispered.

[Speak out about how you feel.]

Chapter 257

Tournament Chapter (5)

[Park Jung-ah]

“Can I be honest?”

[Sure.]

I didn't know what was wrong with me. Maybe I was too excited about receiving the ring. As if I were drunk, I began to talk about a topic that I usually wouldn't even think about.

“I know I don't deserve it. If I go to Earth right now, the families of those who died under my hands will hunt me down. I thought I was right, but now I'm aware that I wasn't.”

I wanted to say what I wanted briefly, but this was just the beginning of a long excuse that started to tumble out of my mouth. I couldn't help it because I had already been deprived of my honor.

“I used the excuse that what I did was for the people, so I decided to live the rest of my life for people with penitence.”

Kim Min-hyuk once told me something. Had he said it on the day of the agreement? He said I had two jobs. The first, to catch and kill criminals, and the second, to protect people.

Of course, the job that meant more to me was the latter, and the former was only used to support the latter. Kim Min-hyuk had asked me not to justify my actions by saying I was protecting people. Instead of deceiving yourself by using excuses, try to distinguish between the two jobs, and work sincerely. The meaning was sincere, the words I said were kind, but in the end, it only revealed my desire to kill the criminals.

I already knew my true nature, so I wasn't confident that I could live outside with my head raised.

I imitated Kim Min-hyuk's words and proclaimed that I would remain in the Tutorial for the rest of my life and take charge of the Order of Vigilance, claiming that I'd do the same as him. When Ho-jae was trapped on the 60th floor while I was close to finishing the floors, I felt sick. When Lee Yeon-hee appeared and began cruising toward the 60th floor, I cheered for her, but I was nervous.

When Kim Min-hyuk went outside, I felt something change. In the end, everything would change over time, and everyone remaining in the Tutorial would go out one by one, and I'd be left here all alone. It was unfortunate, but it was inevitable. I thought it was something I had to endure.

But time passed. When a man's cunning heart sprouts a new desire, perhaps by itself, it erases his past deeds. Ever since the buried passion had sprouted out in my heart, its presence had been increasing rapidly.

"Now, I want to go outside, too."

[You can still go out.] Ho-jae softly whispered as if it were natural. As if there were no problems with my wishes.

"I want to meet you."

I wanted to meet him, talk face to face, and walk around together. After a few short days, I wanted to feel relieved by his side. I wanted to have him by my side. If he wouldn't stay willingly, I was willing to chase him around.

[We'll be able to meet soon.]

* * *

[Hochi]

"You did a great job. Well done."

“No, I’ll come back tomorrow morning.”

I greeted Baek Sung-woong, who stood in front of the door. Today, Baek Sung-woong had a tough day. I could assure you that today would have been more difficult for Baek Sung-woong if Yong-yong hadn’t been there when the bear suddenly appeared out of nowhere.

After visiting their headquarters, we were guided to our accommodation. Yong-yong, who finished organizing his furniture and decorations in the quarters, insisted that the room was now cleaned up, so he wanted to go outside again. His demand was out of the blue for me, who was about to sleep, and for Baek Sung-woong, who was returning to his quarters.

I persuaded Yong-yong to rest today and play tomorrow, but it didn’t work. Eventually, me and Baek Sung-woong had to take Yong-yong around the streets. The streets were like a market. Countless people roamed, and some sold delicious snacks or items.

I had no choice but to look back, keeping an eye on Yong-yong. Yong-yong, who looked around excitedly, wanted to buy things. However, Yong-yong, who had no items for people to use or any currency distributed by the Order of Vigilance, could not buy anything. Sometimes I got some snacks that people gave me because Yong-yong was cute, but it wasn’t enough to fill Yong-yong’s desire.

Baek Sung-woong suggested asking the Order of Vigilance for some money, but I refused because I didn’t know how much Yong-yong would spend. All the items in the market wouldn’t be enough to satisfy Yong-yong’s greed. After all, the boy was a dragon.

I briefly explained business transactions before Yong-yong, who heard the discussion, proudly declared that he would buy the goods he wanted by himself.

His proclamation stunned me into silence. At this point, I didn’t think I’d be surprised if the sky suddenly collapsed upon us. Fortunately, Yong-yong’s bedtime allowed him to postpone the reckless challenge to tomorrow, but in the end, his business would begin tomorrow.

“Haah. Isn’t this too much.”

I wished I could talk to Ho-jae, but I couldn't get any advice after I gave the ring to Park Jung-ah. Like Yong-yong, the new items and experiences made me excited. Everything around us seemed to be full of ignorance and unfamiliarity. But, those experiences weren't just exciting, they were tiring.

Knock knock.

Someone knocked on the door. It was Park Jung-ah. I wondered the reason for her visit, but then I recalled her saying she would come over this evening. I stood up to open the door.

* * *

"Shall we go to another room and drink?" Park Jung-ah asked, looking at Yong-yong, who was dozing off on my lap. Then Yong-yong, who had his eyes closed, shook his head.

"Let's just drink it here," I said sheepishly.

As soon as I and Park Jung-ah sat face to face at the table, Yong-yong got out of bed and sat on my lap. He seemed to want to join. He was sleepy enough to doze off on my lap, but I guess he didn't want to sleep alone in bed.

"The child must have been very tired."

"Ah, yes."

Tired? Yong-yong doesn't sleep just because he's tired. Basically, the dragon species was a species that slept on its own. Therefore, they hibernate for months or years.

Previously, when Yong-yong entered his first sleep cycle, I and Ho-jae decided to come up with measures to deal with it. Every day without Yong-yong was so boring and depressing. Ho-jae took steps to help Yong-yong sleep little by little every day. Since then, Yong-yong has been forced to sleep for several hours a day.

"By the way, the interior is a bit girly. Was it supposed to be like this?” Park Jung-ah asked, looking around the room. I knew what she meant. The room was painted pink, and the furniture that decorated the interior was covered in lace. I let her know that it was Yong-yong’s handmade furniture and decorations.

“Oh, really? Well she’s a girl, so I guess she’d like it this way,” she murmured.

“What? Yong-yong is a boy.”

“What?” Park Jung-ah asked. “What are you talking about?”

“Yong-yong is a boy. Male. You know, XY Chromosome. Not a daughter, but a son.”

“What?” Park Jung-ah had serious doubts about Yong-yong’s gender, but I made it clear that the interior design was Yong-yong’s personal taste and that his gender should not even be involved.

The reaction was worse than I thought. Park Jung-ah seemed to be beyond embarrassed. From Ho-jae’s perspective, I knew Yong-yong’s taste was very feminine, but was that something to be so serious about? I didn’t know.

“What about Ho-jae? Did he say anything with the ring?”

“Yes, we were talking about it earlier, but he said he’d stop by the 61st floor in the evening. I haven’t heard from him since.”

The 61st floor? It was impossible. No matter how little my technical understanding is, I could see that Park Jung-ah’s words weren’t making sense. The 61st floor was already in Hojae’s domain. Whether he was on the 60th floor or the 61st floor, it would have nothing to do with communication.

Then why did he suddenly stop communicating? Did he really have something to do? Or did he not want to join the conversation between Park Jung-ah and me? First of all, I decided to move as I had wanted.

“Oh, and you can take it easy. Think of me as Ho-jae’s brother.”

In fact, it was better to speak informally and treat her comfortably. It was discomfoting to be given an honor that I didn't deserve, and to top it off, Park Jung-ah was much older than me in terms of age.

"Yes, I will."

I could see why this woman fitted well with a crazy guy like Ho-jae.

We drank together in a somewhat harmonious atmosphere.

Park Jung-ah confidently said, "This is the most powerful drink ever developed." No matter how good it was, I drank all I wanted, but I couldn't feel any intoxication. On the contrary, Park Jung-ah got drunk quickly.

Park Jung-ah tried to speed up the conversation before she was too drunk to hear my thoughts. What Park Jung-ah wanted to ask me was related to Ho-jae.

"How do you and Ho-Jae get along?"

"How do we get along?"

"Yes. I've been told through messages and the ring, but I still want to know more. How do you get along with him?"

Maybe this question caused Ho-jae to cut off communication. Maybe he was pretending that he couldn't listen to Park Jung-ah so that she can ask me this question comfortably.

"We're doing fine. We get along better than you think. We usually eat together, teach Yong-yong, and spend the rest of our time focusing on research. I was unstable and had a hard time, but I've gotten a lot better recently. It's better now."

Park Jung-ah listened carefully as if she was trying to memorize what I said. She also told me a little about what had happened in the past, and we shared some anecdotes that we liked.

When I heard as much as I wanted to hear, or when I was satisfied with Park Jung-ah's face, I asked her a question too. There was always a question I was curious about.

"But why did you two have a bad relationship?"

Ho-jae didn't explain well. When I was born, the two were already at odds. I had been confused by the inconsistent memories and the facts that remained in my head.

"There are several reasons. First of all, I turned down all the requests."

"Requests?"

Park Jung-ah said, "I'm sorry, but I can't talk about this."

The underlying tone in her words suggested that it'd be better to ask Ho-jae myself.

"That's why we got estranged the first time, and since then, I kept on instigating fights. I was angry and disappointed."

The requests seemed to be a big deal, and it occurred to me that even if I asked Ho-jae directly, I would probably not be able to hear the answer.

"Then I threw a stone."

"A stone?" I asked her out of the blue, but she ignored me and continued her drunk rambling.

"In the past, I overheard him talking in the second tournament. I didn't know who he was talking to. I thought he was talking to himself back then, but now that I think about it, it seems like he was having a conversation with the sword he had at the time. It was kind of weird to talk about that with a sword."

It was a scene in my memory. One day, Ho-jae once revealed his innermost feelings next to Park Jung-ah, who was asleep.

“I’ve always been anxious. I wonder if the existence of my feelings means little to him. Maybe our relationship doesn’t mean much to him, contrary to what I think.”

Before I could even recall my memory, Park Jung-ah continued her words. She was already mumbling to herself, not caring at all.

“So I threw it, thinking that the stone I threw could cause a stir in the lake. It was a stupid idea, but it worked. I was happy to see him get angry at me as well, instead of breaking our relationship, but on the other hand I was also upset.”

It was strange.

“It’s strange, isn’t it? It was then that I got even more furious and swore at him to stir a reaction. Maybe I thought a reaction would provide proof that he still cared about me.”

I had no idea what she was rambling about.

(Note from Imagine: Ho-Chi doesn’t get it because he supposedly should have all the memories of Ho-Jae and yet he doesn’t understand nor does he have any idea what shes talking about)

“Anyway, I apologize on behalf of Ho-jae. I don’t have all the details, but it’s probably Hojae’s fault anyway,” I reassured Park Jung-ah, and she burst into laughter upon hearing my words. “If there’s anything I can do for you, just let me know. I’ll help you with anything.”

“Really?” she asked.

“Of course.”

* * *

It was relaxing. I thought Park Jung-ah was drunk enough to forget everything. The problem was that Park Jung-ah still remembered my words and did not forget my promise.

[In 100 seconds, the duel will begin. Both participants are informed to get ready for the duel and please stand by.]

[Tournament – Duel Stage, Round 1 will begin shortly]

Chapter 258

Tournament Chapter (6)

[Hochi]

[In 100 seconds, the duel will begin. Both participants are asked to get ready for the duel, and please stand by.]

[Tournament – Duel Stage, Round 1 will begin shortly]

* * *

The duel stage consisted of very easy-to-understand rules. Before the start of the first round, the list of participants would be made public. All participants would choose their opponents from the list, and a duel would take place under a bilateral agreement. The winner would advance to the second round, where participants who advanced would pick each other, and the second round would begin with a deal.

It was impressive that they knew who the opponent was in advance and agreed to compete with each other following the pretence of a duel. If we wanted to distinguish our opponents, we had to be able to build a stable multiplier. Of course, it'd take more time to get into the higher rounds, and eventually, you'd have to go to the end and meet the strongest opponent. The duel was like a luck-based game, assuming that the participants were well acquainted. It wasn't difficult to avoid strong players and bad-tempered opponents if you had the right connections.

In that sense, I had to wait for a very long time.

[Waiting time: 4 hours 13 minutes]

The others participated in the first round, advanced to the second and third rounds, and I wasn't even starting the first round yet. The reason was, of course, easily understood.

[Challenger: Lee Ho-jae]

It was obvious why other challengers didn't ask me to duel. When the challenger's name was written as Lee Ho-jae, which crazy person would want to fight? They had enough sense not to fight with Lee Ho-jae. If they considered their life precious, it was best not to get entangled at all.

Damn it. Why wasn't my name listed instead?

I didn't have many regrets about being a clone. I couldn't blame Ho-jae for being born like that in the first place, and I was satisfied with my situation right now. However, I felt terrible about being treated like an entirely different person. The fact that the system judged me to be Lee Ho-jae made me upset.

Couldn't it tell the difference between us? If I wasn't him, why was it treating me the same as Ho-jae? Either way, it was unpleasant.

I felt uncomfortable, but I was more depressed because I was spending time in a daze. It was not like I was waiting for someone. What was going on? I hoped I didn't have to be alone until the end of the stage like this. That would make me look so funny. I'd be an unselected loner.

Suddenly, I wondered why Park Jung-ah put me on the stage. No matter how much I had been drinking, I had said that I'd do anything for Park Jung-ah and made a promise. The next day Park Jung-ah asked me to join the stage, so I accepted it. I had meant to do her a favour instead of apologizing for the inconvenience that Ho-jae had caused her.

But now, I wondered how my wasted time here would help her. What was Yong-yong doing?

Bald Su... shakes head Baek Sung-woong must be having a hard time. Yong-yong had vowed to make money in the market from today onwards, and I hoped that he wouldn't do anything ridiculous.

I thought about it for a long time when a message came to my mind with a loud noise.

[Mr. Mike Benderop has asked Lee Ho-jae to fight a duel. Will you accept it?]

“Yes,” I answered reflexively, relieved at the thought of finally getting out of this boredom, but on the other hand, I was anxious. The other side saw the name Lee Ho-jae and asked for a duel. It was evident that the opponent was a lunatic. I didn't know their strength, but it wasn't very relaxing to face a madman regardless of their power.

[In 100 seconds, the duel will begin. Both participants are asked to get ready for the duel, and please stand by.]

[Competition – Duel Stage, Round 1 will begin shortly]

After a while, my body teleported to the duel stage. There were a lot of people outside the massive stadium, which was the stage. Looking at the large crowd, it was a little understandable why Park Jung-ah asked me to participate. If so, many people were concentrating enthusiastically on the duel, and I could effectively imprint myself on them. The problem was that I didn't know how I should act.

[Suit yourself.] I heard Ho-jae's voice through the ring I had put inside

my pocket. While I was drinking with Park Jung-ah yesterday, the ring I had given her split in two. One was for her, and the other for me, but its performance remained the same. Of course, Park Jung-ah's was something I could only use if I were nearby.

However, there were many differences in design. Park Jung-ah's ring was a pretty ring with a diamond in it, while mine was just a plain yellow ring. It was a ring design that I hated the most. At my complaint, Ho-jae once again replied that this would be most familiar to me, which was a very unpleasant answer.

“So I can do whatever I want? You won't scold me later?”

[Yes.]

I tried to reach out a little to Ho-jae's insensitive voice, but he didn't seem to care about the rest.

“What if I cause some accidents here and there?”

[Just do whatever you want.]

Tch. I tried to intimidate him by saying I'd make trouble with his name, but I didn't think it worked.

I looked at the summoned opponent in the stadium. The opponent whom I thought was a genuine lunatic was an unexpectedly handsome man. Perhaps because I was with Baek Sung-woong all day yesterday, I had compared the two subconsciously. There was a big difference, of course, visually. Oh, of course, Baek Sung-woong was manly and good-looking, but his bald head deducted some points.

Baek Sung-woong said he shaved because he liked being neat, but I knew that he had started balding from the centre of his head. Of course, he tried to hide it, but it was evident to me.

Before the duel began, the opponent introduced himself and asked me to address him as Mike. In response, I also briefly introduced myself.

Mike was surprised that I was Lee Ho-jae's clone, and not him. He had an astonished look on his face.

“So, what’s your deal?” I asked, thinking that he likely wanted to strike a deal with me. Mike wasn’t as crazy as expected, and if he weren’t crazy, he wouldn’t be dueling with a challenger named Lee Ho-jae for fun unless there was anything he needed to talk about.

“We need information from the 31st to 34th floors.”

Oh, he was an American challenger. I was well aware that the American challengers were struggling with the demon stages, which started from the 31st to the 34th floor. The stages were also quite tricky. Ho-jae on the 61st floor was comparable to the American challengers on the 31st floor.

The most significant feature of the demon stages, which started from the 31st floor, involved party play, but the number of parties decreased as you went up the floor. And when facing the most powerful enemy on the 34th floor, the challenger must fight it off and win.

Come to think of it, the design was incredibly stupid, but the 31st floor was an easy stage. By avoiding strong demons and searching for easy demons and collecting vouchers, it was easy to clear off on your own and not with a party. However, on the 32nd floor, only strong demons appeared, so the level of difficulty rose exponentially. It was even more complicated than the 33rd floor. Nevertheless, the number of party players got reduced. In the end, you had to challenge the demon king by yourself.

The Tutorial up to the 30th floor encouraged party play as if to announce its usefulness. In a solo stage, one was usually focused on testing one’s navigation, survival, reasoning, and social abilities. Naturally, challengers become more accustomed to role-sharing battles that aligned with party members rather than single combat.

However, the Tutorial suddenly asked the challenger to fight alone. It was not hard to guess why American challengers had been struggling there for years.

Thinking of stages preceding the 60th floor, the Tutorial required one to break through everything and get through it by themselves. There was a stage that saved and protected many people, but only one challenger was the right fighter. He alone must carry out judgments and battles that control people's lives. However, the 61st-floor stage could not proceed without team members. The stages after the residential area always tried to force down the challenger in a similar manner.

"What should I do?"

[Do as you please.] Ho-jae answered nonchalantly and so, I did as he said.

I gave the American challenger the information I know, and Mike was very pleased with my information. Previously, Ho-jae's report was heard through the words of a challenger who graduated from the Korean server's Tutorial, so the Korean government added a Newbie level to the U.S. server. There were many errors and omissions. I gave him the information that I knew, and he asked questions like a child who was excited to get a toy. In some parts that I didn't know well, I asked Ho-jae.

"When you meet demons, do you lose your fighting power? What do you do if that happens? Did you lose yours too?" Mike asked.

"No. Try to remember. Did that ever happen? If you meet demons and your combat power decreases, you can stop them to some extent by being resistant to fear or to mental attacks. It's its most important not to be intimidated by the demon king, but most people aren't able to do that."

That was obvious. The demon king didn't get his title by doing nothing. Of course, as soon as one first saw doppelgangers of the top demon species, they wouldn't think of a monster that Ho-jae had caught and forced to write down information.

After I gave the information, Mike repeatedly thanked me with a look of gratitude on his face. I, somehow, stopped him from paying me back. It was too difficult for me to get satisfied with material compensation. Instead, I asked for a meal before the tournament ended. Mike said he had a famous chef in the U.S. server, and that he would visit the Korean server area with him.

Not long after I entered the tournament, I got to make another good friend. I was as satisfied with Mike.

The crowd wondered why Mike and I sat together on the duel stage and urged us by asking, “Why aren’t you fighting?”, but we ignored the buzz.

* * *

[Lee Yeon-hee]

“I can’t.” The man standing in front of me answered briefly. He was the only Asian-looking man in that group. Judging from the accent, I assumed he was Chinese.

“Why?”

“Your request was accepted, and the committee is reviewing it. Now that the review is unfinished, we cannot let you move on to another level.”

They wanted me to wait? The problem was how long it’d take to get approved. Even if I was sure the request would be accepted, I had no intention of wasting my time.

“Of course, the principles are important, but we still don’t have enough information about other dimensions. I can’t let you go alone now that we’ve just been in touch with them. If things go wrong, there may be new disputes, and in the worst case, there could be inter-dimensional conflicts.”

I stared at the Chinese man who kept rambling. Now, I could see how misleading Park Jung-ah’s response was. She was straightforward and explained the things I could do but didn’t say what I couldn’t. Oh, of course, it wasn’t like I liked her. But this old man was more irritating than she was.

The man talked with a stubborn look on his face, but his words made no difference to me. Instead of wasting time pointlessly, I decided it was better to strike them out. As soon as I finished my judgment, I launched an attack.

(Note from Imagine: If you don't remember Ho-Jae had met the demon king before the 34th floor in the floor where he met Ahbooboo and first used the Light Style Sword Technique to defeat a summoned demon king, hence why the word "doppelganger" was used)

Chapter 259

Tournament Chapter (7)

(Quick Correction for Chap 258 from Imagine: The Doppelganger they were talking about may have been the one from way back then, the floor where he's stuck in a tunnel with one of them being a doppelganger who took the place of another. Sorry for the misunderstanding with the last chapter guys.)

[Lee Yeon-hee]

The man died much faster than I thought he would. Candidates who entered the Tutorial and had all kinds of bizarre abilities were no different than normal humans. And I was not impressed by that fact.

“Stop it!” the Chinese man shouted, and the shield unfolded. Unfortunately for him, the shield shattered before my attack.

“Deploy.”

The seven thorns that floated around me flew in all directions. With a loud whizz, the thorns flew ahead at high speed. Some bypassed the shield, while others pierced through the body of the enemy. Everything in its route became destroyed; nothing was able to stop those incoming attacks.

People died; some screamed till their throats became hoarse, rolling on the floor with small bloody punctures dotting their body. Due to excessive bleeding and shock, some died slowly, suffering from intense pain or ruptured internal organs, and others died instantly, without even realizing it.

I couldn't feel any excitement at the scene. It was a scene that I had seen so many times that it even felt natural. The difference between what I had seen before and now was that the victims were different.

Who I killed before were members of the Tutorial, and those who died now were human beings on Earth.

It could be interpreted as a big difference. Killing beings in the Tutorial, who were destined to die, was different from killing the living. But perhaps because of the familiarity of killing, I could not feel any difference.

When I was young, my parents had always told me not to commit a crime. In modern society, committing murder was a big moral and legal issue, but in the Tournament stage of the Tutorial, all that morality and law became nonexistent.

Morality and law are built upon the belief of universal equality, and of course, those people and I were not of the same level.

“Ahhhhh...”

“Cough. Ke-ahek. Hek.” There were groans everywhere. Some survivors rolled on the floor. They vomited blood, and it seemed inevitable that they were going to die sooner or later.

“Retrieve.”

The seven thorns flying in the air came back into my hand, moving according to the user's will. One thorn was as long as a man's palm and as thin as his little finger, but it was enough to pierce a hole in the human body. The thorns were capable of flying around quickly, making a squeaky noise, and penetrating the enemy's weaknesses one by one. The enemies, distracted by the sound and the thorns' blurry images, would become incapacitated as an increasing amount of holes appeared on their bodies. It was a very efficient weapon to kill people.

Now, there was no one blocking my way. Oh, of course, many half-dead bodies were falling and dying, but no one would stop me. I was careful not to step on the corpses and the blood, weaving my way through them.

The portal shone brightly, but before I stepped into it, a man appeared on the brightly lit portal.

“It’s not too late,” the man said. It was a man whom I had met not long ago.

“Isad.”

“Yes. You... What was your name again? Well, it doesn’t matter. I’m here to pick you up.”

The reason he couldn’t remember my name was simple. It was because I had never told him. As he said, it didn’t matter.

Isad was a man whom I had met on the 56th floor. When the Dragon, who was replacing the manager, asked me what stage I wanted, I replied that I wanted the stage that Lee Ho-jae had cleared. Fortunately, the Dragon sent me to the same place.

In that stage, where the main goal was to establish a sect and gather people’s faith, it had several other Hell Difficulty’s Challengers besides me. I met Isad there.

“Who the hell are these scumbags?” Isad murmured, cursing out loud. With a snap of his fingers, the bodies on the floor began to disintegrate. In an instant, the skin and muscles turned into blood and even evaporated. When the iron scent of blood had disappeared, the bodies that had fallen around them left without a trace. There had still been some survivors, but Isad had wiped them all out cleanly.

“Now, you’re a little cleaner, tch.”

Before entering the Tutorial, Isad once boasted that he was already one of the strongest superhumans in his world. Perhaps because of that, he was not pleased with the people of ability who gained strength from the Tutorial. To be exact, he hated those who were incompetent before entering the Tutorial but gained strength by coming in here. Perhaps he didn’t like that they got to go into the Tutorial and quickly learn abilities, but on the contrary, I didn’t like it when he boasted without thinking. It was safe to say that I didn’t get along with him.

“Why did you have to come?”

Izad snorted rather than answering my words straightaway. Pointing to the portal, he said, "I've set the coordinates, so go quickly. I'm waiting."

"What about you?"

"I have something to do here."

(Note from Imagine: Damn Yeon-Hee is Unhinged Jesus)

* * *

[Hochi]

Since the first round, the number of challengers had soared. People who had been interested in me but hesitated because of Lee Ho-jae's name started to challenge me one by one. Of course, not many people duelled properly. More people wanted to talk to me than those who wanted to fight me.

I answered one question after another about the success or growth of the Tutorial, or questions to satisfy their curiosity. The audience, who didn't get to see any fights, listened to the conversations between the challengers and me as if it was interesting.

I had already met 15 challengers and was on the way to the 15th round. The more challengers I met, the more people challenged me over time. People not only wanted to ask questions, but some wanted to learn a lesson through a confrontation with me. I didn't like it, but I dealt with it to a certain level. Contrary to my initial concerns, I was able to deal with it efficiently, and through that, I was able to point out what the other party needed to improve in. Most of the challengers seemed satisfied.

"My brother said he wants to try, but I don't know if he can," said the 15th challenger, who finished his duel with me.

"Oh, tell your brother to finish the rounds quickly." It would be nice if I got to meet him too.

Even if we can't interact this time, if another tournament was held, we could meet in the future.

The challenger nodded. His brother was three years younger than him. He said that he was in the Tutorial and introduced his name.

"Tell him to level up quickly and fight me."

"Hahaha. I hope so, too, but it's easier said than done," said the challenger with a smile.

Well, I had already made it to the 15th round. To meet me, one must now advance to at least 16 rounds, and to do so, they must win against the previous fifteen challengers. Achieving 15 consecutive wins against the same Tutorial challengers wasn't easy.

[What do you mean? It's too easy.]

Let's ignore that bastard Ho-jae's opinion.

"Anyways, he'll be trying hard to catch up before the 20th round." The challenger remarked.

If he wanted to meet me, he had to do so before the 20th round.

The feature of this stage was that it would only run within the Earth's server until the 19th round, and after that, it could also mix with other planet's challengers. Unlike previous rounds held only in the Earth Zone, from the 20th round onwards, you would challengers that had advanced to the 20th round in another planet's duel stage.

It was interesting—a duel with another species. I heard that there were several challengers on Earth who participated in the duel stage to experience this.

I was looking forward to it, too. I was going to watch the duel between the earthlings and the alien challengers. I didn't particularly want to participate and fight. In the first place, I didn't like to fight anyone, nor did I want to face an alien challenger on a duel stage, who wouldn't even want to talk to me. I promised to participate in the duel stage until the 19th round. I also told Park Jung-ah that. Park Jung-ah said that was more than enough.

Before leaving, the 15th challenger said, “I hope we can have a chance to talk and not duel, next time,” adding, “See you later.” It was a warm remark.

Before coming to the Tournament, I was worried that I might get yelled at by the people, but fortunately, their reactions were generally favourable. I got told that I was unexpectedly pleasant.

“Hey, don’t you think people like me more than you?” I tried talking to Ho-jae.

[No.]

[What do you mean no? They like it because I’m much kinder than you. I thought the audience would be scared, but they said I was a better person than they had thought.]

[Yes, yes. People must be ecstatic to have met you.] Ho-jae said sarcastically.

Was he offended?

“Are you upset?”

[Shut up. Why would I be upset?] Ho-jae roared all of a sudden.

He was definitely mad.

“You’re mad,” I teased.

[No.]

“Aye. Is this that upsetting?”

[No.]

[Round 18 starts.]

[Isad has asked Lee Ho-jae to fight a duel.]

[Will you accept?]

“Yes.”

As soon as I finished the 17th round, I accepted the incoming duel request. It was already the 18th round, but the request came right away, so I wondered if more people had advanced farther than I thought.

[In 100 seconds, the duel will begin. Both participants are asked to get ready for the duel, and please stand by.]

[Tournament – Duel Stage, Round 18 will begin shortly]

As soon as I got a notification, two messages came from Park Jung-ah.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Be careful.]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Isad is a challenger who's not from Earth.]

I could already notice before Park Jung-ah told me. I could tell that the other party was not from the Earth just by looking. People from Earth couldn't possibly have silver skin. The audience also was calling him a challenger from another planet. I had heard that challengers from other worlds are usually only encountered after the 20th round, so I didn't expect to get one so soon.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Looks like he crossed into the Earth's server and took part.]

Park Jung-ah quickly solved my doubt and added another warning.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Stay safe. It's said that he killed all the challengers he met up to the 18th round.]

Park Jung-ah had said to be careful because he was a homicidal maniac, but it wasn't very helpful. That silver-skinned lunatic's face smiled as soon as he faced me. I knew I was inviting death.

"Hey, what do I do?"

[Take care of it.]

I asked Ho-jae, who was still sulking, but he only answered in a monotonous manner.

Chapter 260

Tournament Chapter (8)

[Lee Hochi]

A lot was happening right now. I couldn't believe that someone was picking a real fight with me. It was too sudden. There was no way I could have done anything to make him hold a grudge. Oh, he must have thought I was Ho-jae.

I was immediately convinced. No matter who it was, if you were famous, you were bound to bear hatred and grudges. Ho-jae's power was recognized among other planets as well. Perhaps that was why the silver-faced man looked like he was out for my blood.

[Don't overthink it and focus on how you'll deal with it.] Ho-jae's calm voice rang in my mind.

You want me to deal with him? And how exactly do I do that?

While I was thinking about this, my opponent, who had been silent all this time, opened his mouth.

"I never thought I'd get to meet the famous scammer."

What? What scammer?

[You know, you stole power from the gods back then, when you lied about being an apostle.]

Oh right. There was that.

I ran away from home before the 61st floor became Ho-jae's domain and became exposed to the gods' eyes for the first time. Naturally, countless gods' eyes fell on me, their interests peaked, and they gave suggestions

At that time, when I had a lot of worries about myself, some of those suggestions sounded very tempting. As I pondered over some of the proposals, there was a competition between the gods without my knowledge. The gods, who had repeatedly asked me to come under them, eventually offered power as a bait.

I came to my senses at that point. It occurred to me that if I followed anyone, I might walk the wrong path, so I decided to go back to the 60th floor after accepting the powers.

The gods had no idea what I was thinking. When one god presented me with power, the other gods offered more, and I returned to the 60th floor, grateful for the powers.

[It was a clever move.] Ho-jae murmured.

It was Ho-jae that benefited from those powers, not me. After all, I had never used them before, and above all, I wasn't interested. Ho-jae participated in the research of those powers, but that was all.

"I can't believe you stole so many powers and disappeared," the silver-faced opponent continued.

Excuse me? Stole? Who stole it? I just took what I was given.

"Did you know that there are only two chances for a single god to present power to a challenger? One chance is used up when they ask you to be an apostle."

Of course, I knew about it. Ho-jae had received similar offers countless times. He was a professional in that area.

"Do you know how many people didn't get a chance because of you?!" the opponent suddenly shouted, eyes blazing with anger.

[He doesn't seem to have the powers. Hey, ask him if he has any powers.] Ho-jae urged me.

“Do you have power?” I questioned, following Ho-jae’s advice.

The opponent did not answer immediately. From that, I could figure out the answer.

“Oh. So you’re powerless, too. Is that why you’re angry? Because you don’t have power? Do you feel it was my fault? Don’t you think it was because of your poor abilities? “

I had never been in a battle since I was born, but Ho-jae had taught me enough. If I met with an enemy, I was to weaken the enemy’s confidence if I had the chance. And I was confident that I could do this well, even if I didn’t know anything else.

“No matter how much power I’ve stolen, I didn’t accept the apostle proposal. Oh, have you been offered the position of an apostle yet?”

[Aye. No way.] Ho-jae chimed in.

“Hmm? Just by looking at you, I can tell that you’ve crossed 50 floors of Hell’s Difficulty, but you haven’t even gotten an offer? Oh, my God. That can’t be true. No way. Have you not been getting apostle offers from the sixth floor?”

“Shut up,” the silver-faced man growled.

“Huh? What?”

“Shut up!” my opponent shouted again.

“Huh? I couldn’t hear you. I can’t hear the weak cries of a powerless person.”

[After 30 seconds, the duel will begin.]

I had been teasing my opponent for a long time before a message appeared.

Damn it. Give me about 300 more seconds.

“I’ll kill you,” the pissed-off man mumbled to himself. Phew, what a crazy guy.

“Hey, what should I do?” I tried talking to Ho-jae again.

[What to do? Kill him.] A simple answer came back.

[The Earth’s challengers have just come up. You know, if you let him go, he’ll come at them instead. Just kill him. Wipe out the issue.]

While I was talking to Ho-jae, I heard the sound of paper tearing from the air, and Yong-yong’s head popped out.

“Uncle!”

“Yong-yong!” Our pretty Yongyong.

There had been so many layers of barriers, but he had ripped through them all.

“Would you like some help?”

“No. It’s alright.”

It seems that he had sensed my danger and broke through the barrier. I was very grateful for his concern, but I had no intention of asking Yong-yong to fight for me.

“Huh? Is that a Hatchling? What are you going to do by summoning a little Hatchling, who has not even lived for 100 years? You don’t even know how to wield the enormous power you have. You certainly don’t even deserve the power.”

“Yong Yong is not a baby!”

Yong-yong tried to display maturity by shouting, but it didn't work out very well.

"Yong-yong, go back to Baek Sung-woong," I said, stroking Yong-yong's head.

Yong-yong asked back with a worried face, "What about Uncle?"

"I'll join you soon."

Yong-yong thought for a moment and then disappeared, saying, "Okay."

I was glad to see him go.

[What's good about it? It would have been good to let Yong-yong experience it.]

"I don't want to let him."

Of course, I knew well that Yong-yong had little resistance to fighting and wouldn't hesitate to kill someone. Still, I hated it.

[Then how are you going to take care of that?] Ho-jae asked.

"Well..."

[What? You can deal with this quickly. Even if you don't kill him, you can still subdue him.]

"Still..."

It was hard to explain, but I didn't want to deal with him.

Ho-jae sighed and said, [Yes. Even a tiny dog will bark and run, but who'll deal with it sincerely? They'll either shoo it away or ignore it. No matter how much you fight, you will win anyway. You don't have to fight assholes if you have nothing to gain.]

Yeah. That was precisely how I felt right now.

[But it's not always possible to avoid fighting like this. Someday you'll end up fighting too. If I can't help you, then you might regret not having experienced combat in advance.]

I thought so too. I might regret it someday.

[Okay? Well, if I were there, I'd have to show my strength anyway. That way, those flies would be less annoying.] said Ho-jae.

The message appeared at the same time as the words.

[In 10 seconds, the duel will begin.]

Less than 10 seconds before the message appeared the space in front of me began to compress. Darkness flowed from the tear in space and soon engulfed my opponent and me.

"I'll kill you this time."

* * *

[Isad]

Looking at the oblivion in front of me, I thought about where this all had started. Was it when I was asked by the gods to test that power? Or when I was ordered to contact a challenger on the 57th floor? Maybe it was when I first received an invitation message from the Tutorial? I went back in time and slowly swam up in the river of my memories.

It was from that day when everything started. When the parasitic monster that the source vomited made our family a host. Since that day, I began to live with the idea of killing and destroying all the sources that exist in the world.

Although I was late, I chose Mado's path and succeeded, beginning to conquer the sources one by one. Before I knew it, my name was spread all over the continent, and I was labelled a hero. Nevertheless, there were countless sources left on the continent, and there was still a long way to deal with them all.

Then the Tutorial appeared. The people who were invited there came back strong. Gradually, they began to root out the source.

I was happy, but I felt deprived. That had been my job; my duty; my role. It was not for those who used to plough fields and feed cattle.

While I was thinking about it, I was invited to the Tutorial. I thought the gods had finally recognized me. Of course, I chose Hell's Difficulty. No matter how difficult it was, I didn't have any difficulties.

Basic magic alone could clear most of the stages. Of course, the level of difficulty had increased rapidly, but so far, there had been no stage that tested my limits.

Even now, when I reached the 60th floor, I felt impatient. I was not much different from how I had been before the Tutorial. The only thing that mattered here was whether or not the gods granted me power. But no god gave me any power.

I blamed them. The gods were unaware of my abilities, even though they were gods. It seemed as though all hope crumbled around me. I had given up. For some reason, I may never be able to grasp that power.

Meanwhile, the Dragon, whom I had met on the 56th floor, made a suggestion.

"If the gods don't care, why don't you work for the Tutorial?:

I readily accepted the authority that may be rewarded according to my performance.

According to the mission they gave me, I contacted a female challenger on the 57th floor and created a link with several challengers who were in a similar position. When I came in here, I was assigned to meet that wicked scammer on the duel stage and test his strength.

I was confident. Until I met that scammer, the duel opponents I encountered were all rubbish. Before entering the Tutorial, they had all been worse than the low-ranking mercenaries. It was disappointing.

When I faced the scammer, similar feelings of disappointment and disgust washed over me. He was the same as everyone else, no more disappointing than the rest of the population. The gods had granted him such enormous strength, but he didn't know how to deal with it. In all ways, he was useless. He didn't do anything.

I was furious that such tremendous power was gifted to such an incompetent b*stard. So when the message notified me that the duel was about to begin, I was delighted.

And then, darkness came.

The oblivion, which veiled my eyes, hid the scammer and gave off an ominous feeling. It reeked of danger. My self-confidence evaporated, and thoughts of survival were the only thing that filled my head.

But I couldn't. I couldn't escape or turn my eyes from it.

An outstretched hand, reached to me from inside the dark, made me tremble in horror. I became paralyzed in a moment of terror, unable to look away.

What I felt was beyond fear. It was despair clutching at every fibre of my being. What had I been thinking? From the beginning, I knew nothing.

The hands, wrapped in the dark currents, had several colourful bracelets, and as I watched, the bracelets vanished one by one. I was sure. This was my end.

“Die, wizard,” the oblivion spat.

* * *

[Lee Yeon-hee]

Blergh.

I grabbed the stand and bent down to hurl my stomach’s contents. Many people were throwing up like me or were utterly unconscious. Most of them were high-level challengers. The low-level challengers would not even be able to sense what had just happened.

It was only I in this arena who knew what was happening now. For most people, only two words that came out of the darkness would show that the other person’s body had disappeared. The problem was the way.

It was not that hard to kill a person with a word. You could chant a spell to burn them, freeze them to death, stab them to death, or push them to their end. But you couldn’t just kill them directly.

Converting death to life was not a surprising ability, albeit rare. The gods could heal, revive, and resuscitate.

However, the ability to convert life into death, and to force one to end, was an ability that one had never thought of or even imagined.

If the finger hadn’t been pointing directly at Isad after saying those two words, the power could have affected everyone. Could I have survived that power then? It was hard to tell.

“Are you still sure?”

Before I knew it, my hand holding the ring was full of sweat. It felt uncomfortable holding the ring.

No answer came from the ring.

“Answer me, are you still sure?”

I clenched the silent ring in frustration and slammed it on the floor. The despair that I had imagined in my head finally materialized before my eyes. It was horrifying to see Ho-jae’s ambiguous power surface, and I stepped out of the stage in a gloomy mood.

Chapter 261

Tournament Chapter (9)

[Park Jung-ah]

“Ah, I don’t know!”

I shouted as my eyes opened suddenly, fixing themselves on the ceiling. I had woken up with a start, sweat drenching my back. The members who were working beside me looked at me in surprise. I raised my hand, signalling that everything was fine, and laid back on my chair.

I had been suffering for days already. The Korean rankers to the district committee and foreign rankers were all asking what the hell had happened on the duel stage. But it wasn’t only them; I, too, couldn’t help but feel perplexed about how to explain the incident.

Some unheard-of alien broke into the Earth’s server and took part in the duel stage, advancing to the top round and putting all the challengers he met in trouble. His target was Hochi. When the foreigner met and confronted Hochi, the foreigner had been showing a confident attitude. That was until he disappeared.

That was the extent of the information we knew. Any more details were unknown, but people kept asking me for information. Every time I had to repeat the same thing like a parrot. “I don’t know.”

While wallowing in self-pity, I received several messages. Tired of answering back one by one, I decided to ignore it by pushing it roughly into the corner of my vision.

What should I do?

Figuring out the extent of Hochi’s powers was a more pressing issue than dealing with the dead. I hadn’t even thought of checking how much power he had in the first place. But other people thought I was aware, which wasn't the case. Now, I had to bear the consequences of that incident.

In need of advice, I left the conference room and went into another room. I softly asked, fidgeting with the ring, "What should I do?"

[I don't know.] Ho-Jae answered in a clear voice.

I questioned again, feeling refreshed. "Will you die?"

[Oh, why would I die? Do you maybe want to kill me?]

Of course, I couldn't kill him, but I had grown used to having such tit-for-tat conversations. We were over thirty now, yet we still talked like children.

[You know what, don't answer that. I can't bear to hear. I don't even want to know.]

"Tch."

[Hey, that doesn't mean you can click your tongue.]

Ho-jae was of no help. As always, it was up to me to deal with the accident. He didn't get involved, nor did he want to.

"Hmm, I wasn't expecting much from you anyway."

I was asking just in case.

"Oppa, how strong are you now?"

[What did you say?]

"How strong are you? Of course, it's hard for me to comprehend, but explain it to me."

[No, the way you just addressed me.]

“What? Oppa?”

[Yes.]

What was the big deal? What else was I supposed to call him? When we fought, I called him a b*tch, but I couldn't call him that now.

[I think this is the first time you've called me that]

That could be possible. However, the last time we met was ten years ago. How many times had I changed what I called Ho-jae? I thought back for a moment.

“No, I've said it before.”

[When? Ah. Well. I remember. I'm sure that's...]

He must have recollected it too, but he trailed off. It was a bit embarrassing to say when that incident had happened.

[Whatever, say it again. Again.]

“What? Oppa?”

[Yes.]

I don't know what was wrong with Ho-jae, acting like a child even though he's already grown older.

I felt embarrassed. Slightly breathless, I said what Ho-jae wanted me to. “...Oppa.”

[Again.]

“Oppa.” Without realizing it, I had lowered my head and mumbled it again. I was the only one in this room anyway.

[Again.]

“Ah, really?! Do you want to hear me call you Oppa that much?”

[No, it's just fun when you get shy.]

(Note from Imagine: I love these bits of Ho-Jae and Jung-Ah's Chemistry)

At that moment, I had the impulse to take off the ring and hurl it as far away as I could.

I should calm down.

[Hoo. Haah. Hoo. Haah. Take a deep breath and calm down.]

My anger, which was about to die down, resurfaced, but somehow I managed to regain my composure. It was a bad habit to get this angry. It would be a good idea to fix it.

As calmly as possible, I asked again what I had asked earlier. Fortunately, Ho-jae also answered thoughtfully, not teasing anymore.

[About my power?]

“Yes.”

[Well- well, how should I explain it so that you understand?]

“How about your level?”

[Oh, yeah. There's that level measure. It's easy to understand using that, even though it can't be called a standard method of measuring.]

Ho-jae had always insisted that their level had nothing to do with strength. However, all the other challengers used the level as a criterion for strength.

“So what's your level?”

I wanted to speed up this conversation because I was worried that Ho-jae's lengthy lecture on levels would start at any moment.

[500.]

"500?"

That was an unimaginably high number. Of course, it was a high value, but that was not the reason I was surprised.

"Not level 501?"

[Yes. 500.]

Back after I had heard about level from Ho-jae, I had noticed that his level always increased by 50 levels every time we met. He soon reached level 101, level 151, level 201, and so on. But 500?

[Max level.]

* * *

[Lee Hochi]

"Well, what am I supposed to say?"

"What?"

What should I say to Yong-yong, who was looking at me with sparkling eyes? I didn't know.

"Nothing. Well done."

Yong-yong said he would make his own money to buy what he wanted in the market. At that critical moment, I had to participate in the tournament and had gone away. I had been curious and anxious about how Yong-yong would make money, but he was doing better than I thought.

I thought Yong-yong would sell the things he made or make money with his magic skills. I was worried it could be dangerous for him, but Yong-yong was making money in a healthier way than I thought. He was looking at people's fortune.

Their business was going very well. It was a shop inside a small, cosy tent with just a wooden desk, but there was a long line outside the tent.

<The fortune-telling shop of Benedictus Lericia Piacan Laucones Naupolion Niss Tiamart Carsearin Balakas Shanso Gardandes Necesario III>

The name made it seem like a pharaoh, who had laid inside a pyramid for millennia, had reincarnated, and was dabbling in fortune-telling. It was a surprise that Yong-yong could remember that name because I completely forgot it in a few seconds.

"By the way, when did you learn fortune-telling?" As far as I remembered, Ho-jae had never taught me anything like that.

Did he teach him when I wasn't there?

"There was a store that did fortune-telling. I think Yong-yong got the idea from that store," Baek Sung-woong said.

Baek Sung-woong said Yong-yong had been very interested in the shop and asked the fortune teller how to do this and that. It was a business secret, but the owner gave his secret away to our cute Yong-yong. Yong-yong was doing business based on what he had learned at that time.

"Thank you. Where is that store? I should go and say hello."

"Ah... that store is gone," Baek Sung-woong said.

"What? Why?"

"Their original location was next to this tent."

When I heard what Baek Sung-woong said, I came out of the tent, and as he said, there was an empty shop next to the tent. I glanced at the people standing in a long line out of the tent again.

I see.

Yong-yong probably drew in all the customers from the neighbouring store.

Of course, Yong-yong must not have had any ill will; he was still too innocent after all. I felt sorry for the fortune-teller who had lost his business. Shop-owners at the tournament may not be very life-threatening, but the fortune-teller's feelings wouldn't be pleasant either. I should ask Park Jung-ah about his whereabouts later.

I went back into the tent. Inside the tent, Yong-yong sat on the floor with a small table in front of him. Behind Yong-yong was a thin sheet of cloth, and Baek Sung-woong's role was to make an adult figure behind the fabric.

Of course, there was a lot of stale air inside the tent, but this was also a part of Yong-yong's fortune-telling shop. No, this was also a part of Benedictus Lericia Piacan Laucones Naupolion Niss Tiamart Carsearin Balakas Shanso Gardandes Necesario III fortune-telling shop's charm.

There happened to be a couple who came to look at their fortunes. Yong-yong shook his arm in the air, looking at them, and threw the dice. The number that appeared on the dice was three.

"How's our compatibility?"

"It's the best," Yong-yong gave a thumbs up and said.

No, it was common sense that it was not the best result if you got a three instead of one or six. Also, shouldn't this couple at least look at the dice after Yong-tong threw it? And Yong-yong could have asked for their names or date of birth, but he just rolled the dice.

Questions arose in my head, but the couple liked it. Rather than rejoicing over the fact that their fortune was good, they looked at Yong-yong, who looked extra cute today.

Even if he stayed still, he was a cute dragon, but the way he seriously rolled the dice and stated the fortune doubled his cuteness. Also, people seemed to keep coming to see the cute hatchling, as he told good fortunes.

I was watching Yong-yong, who was always looking at people's fortunes when a message came from Park Jung-ah.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: I found your friend Lee Seok-hyeon. As expected, he couldn't get out of the stage. He's younger than I thought. Send him a message.]

I could finally get in touch with Seok-hyeon; one of the reasons why I had entered the tournament. I wondered what had happened that he couldn't reply. Happily, I sent him a message.

* * *

[Baek Sung-woong]

Much to my relief, the store was booming with business all day. I had been worried a lot.

Ever since I saw Yong-yong explode and kill a bear, I wondered if this cute kid might hurt people because he couldn't control his strength. I vowed to watch and take care of him more carefully, and fortunately, neither Yong-yong nor Lee Hochi hated me for interfering. Instead, I felt thankful to them, who had instead been grateful to me for taking good care of them.

It had only been a few days, but we went around together all day long, so we became very close. In the process, I learned more about them.

When Park Jung-ah told me I would be in charge of the two people, I felt annoyed, wondering why I had been forced to do this. But now I thought that I was lucky to have met them and get to know them.

I watched Yong-yong regularly presenting fortunes to the guests. In a way, he seemed to be role-playing as an adult and being cute at the same time, which reminded me of my child on Earth.

At that moment, a new guest came in. Unlike other guests, who came with their lovers or friends, he or she was alone. There were often such guests. Most of the customers wanted to see Yong-yong for fun, but some seriously asked about their fate. There were always groups who wanted to risk their lives on silly, hopeless whims and came to visit Yong-yong.

“Can I achieve my goal? Can I do well?” the guest asked.

It was a vague question, but the guest seemed to want to know the answer.

Yong-yong was still very young, but not a fool. He noticed that the guest didn't just want words of comfort and thought for a moment before answering. Yong-Yong asked the questioner what he was curious about first, rather than telling their fortune.

“Who do you want to kill?”

Chapter 262

Tournament Chapter (9)

[Baek Sung-woong]

“Who do you want to kill?” asked Yong-yong. It was as if he were asking what her name was before he read the fortune. The problem was the question’s content.

Who do you want to kill?

This was what Yong-yong had uttered. These words made me shudder. Yong-yong saying words like ‘kill’ felt unnatural.

The woman’s body reflexively stiffened up. She, who had asked if she could achieve her goal, stared hostilely at Yong-yong as soon as she heard Yong-yong’s question

I knew Yong-yong’s power and ability. Of course, I didn’t know everything, but I knew quite a lot compared to other challengers. I was confident. That’s why I knew I would be of little help to Yong-yong if anything happened. However, I couldn’t just watch them, doing nothing.

I had to do something. I tried to pull off the cloth that was blocking my way to stand in between Yong-yong and the woman.

My heart wanted to protect him. Shortly after the cloth was removed, I noticed that my body could not move. It was as if invisible shackles had latched me into place. Flinching was not even an option. My arm ached when I tried to shift it, and my lips throbbed when I forced them apart. It was as if my skin and muscles were tightly bound by an invisible force that pierced my body whenever I attempted to budge.

“No one,” the woman replied. She was staring intensely at Yong-yong, but from her attitude, it seemed likely that she would continue the conversation, rather than attack him.

Did she want me to stay out of their conversation? But that didn't mean I'd comply with her wishes. There was always something I could do, no matter how immobile my body was.

[Baek Sung-woong, 89th floor: Sir, this is an emergency.]

I requested rescue teams and combat teams of the Order of Vigilance to be dispatched.

It would be a weaker dispatch compared to last year, but it would be better than nothing. There was also a 90th-floor Hard Difficulty challenger, in the militant group, so I was sure it would be of some help.

First, after I did what I could, I focused again on the conversation between Yong-yong and the woman. I was the only witness to this conversation, and I needed to remember this.

"Then what do you want to kill?" Yong-yong asked again.

Is it possible that what she wants to kill is not a person?

"I don't want to kill anything. Why do you think I want to kill something?" asked the woman.

"Because Auntie wants to."

"I'm not your Auntie, you little brat."

Yong-yong didn't answer the woman's words, making her frown like she was offended by his silence. She continued, very firmly expressing her displeasure.

"Yes, I do want to kill something. I wish to kill this world."

Are you a crazy bitch?

In the past, there used to be a lot of psychopaths in the Tutorial. When people thought they didn't have a future, they went insane, swinging their weapons madly. I heard that the Order of Vigilance was troubled by daily accidents back then and that some of those psychopaths were punished.

I thought that this woman fell into that category of psychopaths. Although the fact that one could go out soon had significantly reduced mental illness in the Tutorial, there were still some actual psychopaths. There was nothing strange about anyone who had a mental illness here.

"I want to cut off the restraints that bind me to this world," said the woman. I could relate to that. It had been less than 30 seconds, but being tied up was a real pain.

"Sometimes, I feel like untying these restraints by just cutting off my wrists and ankles."

That's a little...

As expected, she was a madwoman.

"But that won't untie all the restraints. Yeah, I want to kill as you said. If I kill everyone who's tied me up, won't I be free even if I can't break the restraints? That's what I think."

The woman carried on with her stupid remarks. Yong-yong answered her question with no sign of disgust.

"Understood."

"You understand?" The woman's lips arched up in a smirk.

"How can a pretty little boy understand me?" she asked, mockery evident in her tone. She looked terrifying.

"That's what everybody says," she accused.

"Everyone says this?"

Unlike the woman, who seemed to be upset by something, Yong-yong remained calm.

“Because they’re all the same.” Rather than get enraged at Yong-yong’s words, the woman accepted it.

“They’re all the same. Yeah, you’re right. After all, I’m only thinking about myself and forcing others to accept. They’re all the same, indeed.”

The woman’s hands slammed the tabletop suddenly, creating a loud boom that reverberated in the tent. Her force would have made a hole in an iron plate, but much to my surprise, the table stayed intact. Neither Yong-yong nor the woman seemed interested in this fact.

“I was forced by a man into this sh*t. He urged me to move on. If he hadn’t, I would have become suicidal instead of forcing myself to survive on plain water and jerky. What else could I do? I had to move forward to survive. But since then, I haven’t been holding out well. I was forced to cheat, hurt, and kill. I couldn’t have survived if I didn’t do so. And now, here I am,” the woman spoke solemnly.

Each word of hers carried in a different tone.

“I’m grateful to Mister. He gave me the will to live and never forced me to do anything.”

Mister? Who was she talking about?

“But in the end, there was something he wanted from me. He didn’t care about me. After all, they’re all the same. I’m tired of everything now. I want to throw it all away,” the woman murmured. “The problem is, I can’t get over it. I can’t break these restraints with my strength.”

“So?” Yong-yong questioned.

“I need more trump cards.”

Yong-yong raised his hand and said, pointing to himself, “And that’s me.”

“Yes.”

“I’m sorry, but I don’t want to be one,” Yong-yong replied, as if he were in a restaurant, commenting that he didn’t want to eat some side dishes.

The woman smiled at the remark, making me feel a sudden urge of déjà vu. Her gruesome smile was eerily familiar, reminding me of when I interviewed new employees in the district. Yeah, that was the smile I saw there then. Of course, the smiles of the people left in my memory didn’t seem so eerie, but they had a similar expression.

“You don’t have to be sorry. I’ll take you even if you don’t want to.”

As the woman expressed her intention to kidnap, I shouted inwardly.

When’s the goddamn team coming?

This place was less than three minutes away from what the Order of Vigilance was using as headquarters.

The woman raised her hand, and a red dot appeared on it as if someone were pointing at it with a laser pointer. The space between her and Yong-yong fluctuated before anyone could identify the power. Someone had shown up, dividing the space between them.

* * *

[Lee Hochi]

The place Park Jung-ah told me to go was a lounge next to the Order of Vigilance’s conference room. I assumed that Park Jung-ah was talking to Seo-hyeon. I was relieved that he was safe.

When I asked Ho-jae why I couldn’t reach Seok-hyeon, Ho-jae said Seok-hyeon must have died in an accident. And that it was normal. It was a cold-hearted response.

But apparently, his response was valid, and when I asked Park Jung-ah to find out where Seok-hyeon was, somehow, her attitude seemed no different from Ho-jae's, which made me more anxious.

“Oh. You're here?” asked Park Jung-ah.

It was as if a man lying inside a bathhouse was asking a friend who came late. Oh, of course, I had never been to a bathhouse, but that's what it felt like. Park Jung-ah was getting more comfortable with me. I didn't think we were that close yet, so I was still a bit awkward. Was it because of the difference in our age? Beside Park Jung-ah sat Seok-hyeon.

“Hi,” a boy awkwardly greeted me.

I had heard it many times, but this was my first time seeing it. He was very young. Seok-hyeon's appearance was slightly unusual as the Tutorial did not summon young people under a certain age.

“Yes. Hi.”

I also said hello to Seok-hyeon. I was acting weird, too. We had talked a lot through messages, but seeing his face in person like this made me feel embarrassed.

Park Jung-ah left the room with a smile on her face. It only occurred to me later that her mischievous smile seemed to make fun of me.

* * *

Fortunately, I was able to get close to Seok-hyeon quickly. No, it was safe to say that we were close, so we got into sync.

Seok-hyeon was stuck on a stage as expected. Among the stages of Easy difficulty, there was said to be a stage that was quite unusual.

“So the stage goal was to escort the prince and the princess till they get married, and remove all sources of danger. The danger is spread all over, and it's a bit risky.”

That sounded easy. You had to wait for the danger to come, and if you solved it, it would be fine, right?

“I’ve challenged the stage many times.”

“You’ve tried it many times?”

“Yes.”

Seok-hyeon said he had already challenged the 72nd floor more than ten times. I couldn’t help but ask why.

“Why?”

“Because it’s fun.”

Unlike other stages, the 72nd floor of Easy Difficulty had a luxurious lifestyle. Of course, there was a mission, but it was easy to clear. So Seok-hyeon explained that he was challenging it several times to recreate the feelings he had experienced there, almost like role-play.

“It’s fun. No matter what I do, the people don’t remember it the next time. Once I had a big fight with a man, but next time, he was friendly. Oh, there, I’m a wanderer who has gone into hiding. Also, everyone wants to be close to me because I’m so strong.”

The stage’s characteristics that no one knew anything about was enough to awaken a child’s curiosity. Seok-hyeon had tested everything he could do there.

The princess and prince’s marriage came to an end due to Seok-hyeon’s mischief, and he was unable to get out of the stage because of this complicated situation. Fortunately, with the help of the Order of Vigilance, he was able to return to the waiting room after failing.

Seok-hyeon, who had explained this to me, looked happy. I had seen something similar in the community before. Stages with pretty characters couldn’t be challenged repeatedly, so challengers memorized lines or the mission’s sequence. They also shared the location, the way to visit, how they spoke, the way they liked each other, and gifts. They spoke as if they were really enjoying the game, failing, and then meeting up the floor's characters again while retrying the stage.

It was a disgusting thought. Ho-jae once thought the same. But then he looked at people on the floor who were repeating these incidents forever when the challengers met them again after failing to clear the stage. That was when Ho-jae could only feel sorry for them. Ho-jae had admitted that their deaths and lives were worthless and had no qualms about cutting them down, but they were not toys.

I saw that Seok-hyeon was still excited. This child was not particularly evil. But the attitude of others towards him was strange. Was that how people normally behaved? Or was I just different?

Chapter 263

Tournament Chapter (10)

[Lee Hochi]

When something big suddenly occurs, you may not be able to deal with it because you're in a hurry. However, it can be dealt with immediately if you had somehow foreseen that it would take place.

This time, the latter happened. I didn't know if it was because I always had Yong-yong's safety in mind, or because of Ho-jae's essence left behind in me, but I immediately opened a portal as soon as I felt a powerful force near Yong-yong. Seok-hyeon, who had been talking for a long time, gave me a surprised look, but now was not the time to explain the situation to him.

The power that appeared out of nowhere seemed extremely dangerous, but on the other hand, it felt familiar. It was the same as the power released by a technique Ho-jae had often used. I knew that Ho-jae wasn't here, and even if he did use it here, his attack wouldn't stop on this scale. And if it wasn't Ho-jae, there was only one person who could use that technique in this tournament.

As a result, I was able to see who was pulling Yong Yong-yong even before I crossed the portal. Upon teleporting into Yong-yong's fortune-telling tent, I called out her name, "Lee Yeon-hee."

"Mister?"

* * *

"Put it down."

"No."

Lee Yeon-hee's short answer made my heartbeat erratic. In terms of conversation, this was no different than reprimanding a child who was playing with a knife, but if anyone knew what was on Lee Yeon-hee's hand, they would have no choice but to be nervous.

"You know, it'll explode if I die. It will explode if I lose control, get offended, lose focus, or if my mana cycle gets disrupted."

Damn it. Why did you have to teach her that technique?

I had no choice but to blame Ho-jae. No matter what, he shouldn't have taught such dangerous techniques.

That technique, which had a funny name, Zit Pop, was a technique that Ho-jae had often used when he was clearing Hell difficulty floors. On a stage of Hell's Difficulty, the power had once exploded, and it was clear that if it blew up here, the Korean challengers would be eradicated.

There may be many features of Zit Pop, but the most terrible fact about it was that once it took the form of a sphere, the user couldn't make any changes. It was all about controlling the sphere so that it wouldn't burst and explode when they wanted it to. In other words, as long as that small sphere existed on Lee Yeon-hee's hand, regardless of whether she fainted or got killed, that sphere would explode.

To the naked eye, it appeared to be only a tiny red light, with a bit of heat emitted. In my judgement, the sphere was similar in level to the ones Ho-jae used in the past.

"I added some effects to my taste. It'll be great if it explodes."

*You crazy b*tch.*

Why are all the Hell's Difficulty challengers half-insane?

"If it explodes, you won't be safe either!"

"Well, I'm confident that I'll survive." Lee Yeon-hee commented slyly, lips spreading to form a smile.

*What kind of sh*is this?*

“Hey, is she telling the truth?” I asked Ho-jae.

[I think so.]

Ho-jae seemed to think that she could survive. Somehow, his voice sounded strange, as if he were talking with something in his mouth.

“Hey, what are you eating right now?”

[Popcorn.]

*You crazy b*stard.*

I couldn't help but curse.

I was going to ask for help, but I didn't think that a person leisurely eating popcorn would be willing to offer any.

Yong-yong stared at Lee Yeon-hee sullenly, while Baek Sung-woong hung in the air, his body convulsing once in a while, magical restraints restricting his movement. The funny thing was that both Lee Yeon-hee's restraints and Yong-yong's restraints encircled him. Yong-yong's magic seemed to be a means to protect Baek Sung-woong. My level of magic was lower than that of Yong-yong, so it was hard to tell.

“This is amazing. You look different,” Lee Yeon-hee muttered, eyes scanning my body.

“When I saw you on TV, you looked like a thin man. On the 17th floor, you looked like a crazy dog. Right now, you look very gentle.”

“I'm different from Ho-jae.”

Lee Yeon-hee had a look on her face as if she couldn't quite understand, but soon she had a knowing look on her face. She questioned, “Are you his clone?”

That's right. Damn it.

I was upset by her comment. If I wanted to attack Lee Yeon-hee, now would be a good time, since she would have lost concentration due to our conversation.

“Man, can I stop her?” I asked Ho-jae for insurance before I acted.

[Of course.]

Alright, let's do it.

Now that the situation had come to this, I regretted having to use my power on a person I met recently. This meeting was my first real fight, but what could I do?

I made a firm commitment in my mind and used my power.

[Time lapse]

[Indomitable force]

[Mana suppression]

[Sensitive Seal]

[External Power Block]

With more than a thousand powers, I had a hard time handling them all. In addition, there were so many techniques that I didn't even know the effects of, so I used the ones I was most familiar with.

[Battleground]

It was a technique I had learned from Ho-jae, and not from the gods of the temple. It was more like I was taught, rather than him teaching me. This technology, which was ambiguous enough to be called Ho-jae's original technique as well as a copy of other methods, directly involved the principle of space. Usually, Ho-jae folded up space and used it as a way to cross over at once.

But if I applied this to the space I was currently standing on, I would increase the distance between this tent and outside.

After confirming that the space was strangely distorted, I came up with some techniques in my head. Then, Lee Yeon-hee's voice rang in my head.

[You're wasting too much time. I guess it's not a bad idea to kill them all halfway.]

Lee Yeon-hee's body began to warm all of a sudden. When the hidden energy was revealed, we could all see what she meant. Lee Yeon-hee didn't just create one Zit Pop. There were at least dozens of Zit Pop inside her body. No, you could even say it was her body.

Rather than the fact that she had been completely hiding her power, I was astonished at her idea of making the Zit Pop as her own body.

Even in the time-lapse, where the time had almost stopped, the Zit Pop's explosion did not seem to slow down at all. In an instant, Lee Yeon-hee's body disappeared without any trace, and only a blazing, intense light, along with scorching heat, was left on the spot. It was as if a star had exploded.

I hurriedly used my power to protect Yong-yong from it. The shield made by all kinds of gods and the massive ball of energy created by Lee Yeon-hee collided.

At that moment, Yong-yong knocked sharply on the wooden table.

Knock, knock.

A clear tap sounded in the tent.

In the blink of an eye, I stepped out from a portal again. Lee Yeon-hee turned back, my unexpected entry startling her.

I opened my mouth with a hard look on my face. "Lee Yeon-hee."

"Mister?" Lee Yeon-hee looked at me with a slightly surprised look and called out.

Baek Sung-woong was still confined in the air, while Yong-yong sat at the table with a sullen look on his face. There was silence in the tent. There was no deafening explosion, light, or immense heat that should have shaken the world.

Before even questioning the strange phenomenon, Lee Yeon-hee lost consciousness and collapsed like a puppet with broken strings.

* * *

I took Baek Sung-woong back to his quarters. I could have stayed in the tent, but when I thought of the guests coming in after seeing the sign of a fortune-telling shop, I thought it was better to move to a quiet place. I laid Baek Sung-woong, who had fainted, on his bed, and pulled up a pink blanket to cover him well. He had not gotten knocked out by the shock but was put to sleep by Yong-yong's magic.

Lee Yeon-hee, on the other hand, did not seem to be asleep. No one would sleep with their eyes wide open, and both arms and legs bent. I had been trying to move her body roughly with my powers. In the process, Lee Yeon-hee did not wake up and try to rebel. With a few bans in place, her body would never move again.

"She was a clone." Yong-yong murmured.

"Yes."

Had she been trying to blow herself up? It seemed like she had tried to make another attempt to kidnap Yong-yong, even after she looked half-dead. She shouldn't have intended to take non-challengers as hostages in the first place.

Next to Baek Sung-woong's bed, I sat on the floor. Yong-yong sat on my lap and buried his face in my shoulder. I held Yong-yong tightly and patted him on the back. Yong-yong had no experience of being exposed to other people's malice.

And in the meantime, I cursed Ho-jae, who was just watching from the sidelines. Despite what had happened, he just remained silent and watched us.

What a rotten fellow.

As I held Yong-yong tightly, his heartbeat gradually stabilized. I didn't know who was comforting who. After calming down to some extent, I asked, "Yong-yong, did you turn back time?"

As far as I knew, it was not easy to turn back time. I was sure it's obvious, but even the gods, who were considered almighty, were in a realm where time could not be touched. The gods associated with time, such as the gods of slowness and repentance, were not considered unique for no reason.

Sometimes, Lee Ho-jae would say that time was a law of the universe that proved existence just by its flow, and that the reversal of time was a grandiose trick that was bound to be meaningless. Even Ho-jae, who said so, could not reverse the time. If he could, he wouldn't have been locked up on the 60th floor.

Unfortunately, I couldn't find out what Yong-yong had done. There was a level difference between Yong-yong and me. It was a difference that could not even be measured, so I asked honestly.

"No, I did nothing."

"You did nothing?"

"Yes, nothing ever happened."

What do you mean? I don't understand.

"If you ask the bald man, he'll tell you that he doesn't remember as soon as he wakes up."

As far as I knew, Baek Sung-woong was conscious until just before Lee Yeon-hee blew himself up. I didn't care about it after that.

"Didn't he lose consciousness after the explosion?"

"Yes. But for him, the explosion didn't happen."

"...But I still remember it."

"She fell because she saw something. The only thing that unfolded before her was the possibility of a future that didn't exist. The auntie of the past had to face a memory from a future that didn't exist, and she couldn't bear seeing such a future."

Yong-yong, I still don't understand.

I had no idea what he was saying.

"Yong-yong, but I remember it, and I didn't even faint?"

"Uncle is fine. Uncle hasn't faced such a problem, and you won't remember in the future."

"...Why?"

I didn't even understand what I had heard so far, but I still asked. When Yong-yong heard me, he said in a quiet voice, as always. "Because Uncle is not bound by Cause."

Chapter 264

Tournament Chapter (11)

[Lee Hochi]

Although something terrible had happened in the evening, Yong-yong fell asleep peacefully at bedtime, although I forgot to sing a lullaby to him. As I stared at Yong-yong, his sleeping figure began to remind me of an angel.

[Our Yong-yong is far better than an angel. Have you ever seen an angel?] Ho-jae commented.

No, it's just a feeling, and I was using that feeling as a reference. What are you talking about?

I got up from the bed and walked to the window. Sitting in a small chair in front of the window, I could see people on the street. Even though it was late at night, people still roamed around, and the city was bustling with life. The number of people remaining in the Tutorial had reduced. I thought that this tournament was a massive comfort festival for people.

Attacking a stage with a small number of people made you feel like you were getting closer to the outside world. I could sense the feeling of leaving home for the first time and facing the world. There were many good things, but there were also bad ones. In that sense, today had been a very mentally exhausting day.

“So, what the hell is Cause?”

[Yong-yong explained it to you earlier.]

But I hadn't understood Yong-yong had gently explained Cause and Effect. Even though I couldn't understand the concept at all, I didn't mention it to Yong-yong, who had taught it for a long time. I just pretended I understood everything and moved on.

[That's what I keep telling you to study.] Ho-jae had been nagging me for the whole day. [My explanation is not that different anyway. Who did Yong-yong learn from in the first place?]

"Sure... but explain it to me in an easier way. Does it make sense that I don't know much about myself? I should know better."

Ho-jae laughed at my words and said, [What do you know? How many people in the world know about themselves? You don't need to think much. I know you don't care much about Cause and Effect. If you did, you would have studied that earlier. You care because everyone has it, but in reality, you're not the only one who isn't bound by Cause and Effect.]

What a rotten fellow. He just spat out whatever he wanted in a roundabout manner.

"Yes, but why am I the only one who isn't affected by Cause and Effect? I asked because I was curious about that!"

I was angry. Yong-yong might hear it and wake up, so I quieted my voice. The understanding of Cause and Effect was an essential problem to me, so Ho-jae's nonchalant attitude infuriated me.

[Hold on, it's not great that everyone else has it. It's great that you aren't bound by it. And to be exact, it's not that you're completely excluded.]

"Is that a good thing, then?"

[Of course, some gods would go crazy if they knew. Do you think that the gods invested their power into you for nothing?]

I was glad that it wasn't bad. However, the desire to know more about Cause and Effect remained unchanged.

"Please explain it in detail."

[Easy enough for you to understand?]

“Yes.”

[If you need to solve a problem, it's necessary to look at its Cause and Effect. It would be easier to look at the result of the Cause. Let me elaborate; for example,] Ho-jae began to explain. [Your friend Seok-hyeon. The result, which was you meeting him today, required you both to have a conversation and get closer, which in other words could be considered a cause.]

That's right.

[Of course, this fundamental Cause applies to you. If it didn't apply, you wouldn't be able to be on the same level as the others in the first place. The important thing is that Cause exists as a law.]

“A law?”

[Yes. The Cause is one of the laws of the universe, like time. Time cannot be rewound in 100 seconds or 100 million seconds. In the same way, the Cause and Effect applied in that way to Yong-yong's magic...]

“I don't understand.”

Ho-jae told me to shut up. After a while, he growled out, [You'll be forced to study when you return. Anyway, I'll give you another example of this. People usually don't exist in two spaces at the same time. Likewise, a person cannot walk outside the house while washing dishes inside the house at the same time. Because they only have one body.]

No, it was possible to do that like Lee Yeon-hee, who had come to the tent this evening. It was possible if she had divided herself and made a clone, and rumour had it that Lee Yeon-hee's body had already gone beyond the Earth's zone to an alien server. Earlier, Park Jung-ah that Lee Yeon-hee left her clone here before moving on.

[I'm explaining it with a simple example that makes it easier for you to understand. Don't think any further. And Lee Yeon-hee's clone is no different than her taking a clump of her hair and sending it elsewhere. Ultimately, there's only one existence.]

As Ho-jae spoke, I decided to keep my mouth shut.

[A man's consciousness cannot exist in both the future and the past. Consciousness can't exist at two different times at the same time. The basic premise of this problem is Cause. It tells why the awareness of one from the future and the past must be different.]

Hearing what Ho-jae said, I was silent for a moment. I needed time to check if what I understood was right.

When the number of people on the street decreased one by one, and the bustling street became quiet, I finally concluded: if ten years ago, when Seok-hyeon had not yet entered the Tutorial, and he had been a little baby, could he and I meet? That was impossible. Not only was I not born then, but I also had no connection with Seok-hyun.

If I went back in time now, it was possible to find Seok-hyeon and get to know his past version. That would create a Cause.

But I could not meet Seok-hyeon from 10 years ago when I had never met him, gotten close to him, or even been born yet. It was just, of course, impossible. But was I not saying the same? I asked Ho-jae.

[You can't make the impossible possible by creating a Cause and Effect when you were not even born. Well, maybe you could if you were above my level, but I doubt it. It's just that when Cause and Effect are tampered with, you are unaffected.]

Now I thought about space, not time. Earlier, Ho-jae said that people could not exist in two places at the same time.

Lee Yeon-hee broke this law by cloning herself. Ho-jae had said it was no different from pulling out a lock of her hair and sending it elsewhere. If you added flesh, and ability to a lock of hair, you could make a clone. As a result, Lee Yeon-hee did not exist in two places as two beings. Instead, she had divided herself and occupied two areas at the same time.

That didn't seem to break the law. It was challenging to organize my thoughts because of the variable magic. It was rather a hindrance to grasp the concept at my level because it was a type of magic meant to defy the law in the first place.

Let's think of space differently.

If there were Heaven and Hell, man would not exist in two places at the same time. Whether divided by magic or not, his existence would be only one, and it would be sent to only one place.

There was one more place besides Heaven and Hell. When Ho-jae was on the 61st floor, Ho-jae had to exist at the same time in two places. His consciousness in one place would not be the same as the other.

"You're there, but you are also here."

[Huh?]

"If your body is my body, and you and I are the same, then this shouldn't be possible."

It might have sounded somewhat out of the blue, but instead of asking what it meant, Ho-jae remained silent. The silence made me feel worse.

"In the end, the Cause needed to meet Seok-hyeon was something added on its own when I was made."

I lowered the curtain on the window, which only reflected the empty streets, and went to bed.

[Uh- well. That-]

"Too noisy, I'm going to bed."

Ho-jae apologized profusely, but I covered myself in a blanket and pretended to be asleep, but sleep didn't come to me. I resented the fact that Ho-jae knew I was not sleeping and was listening to his apology. It was the worst day ever.

Today, I decided not to go out and instead, rested at the dorm. Yong-yong went out a few times. After lunch, when I was eating the apple Baek Sung-woong had peeled for me, Park Jung-ah came to the room.

“A face-to-face talk?” Park Jung-ah nodded.

Everyone had been busy and distracted for the past few days. If I remembered right, Park Jung-ah had been hiding somewhere in the corner and spending time alone, but others must have been busy.

“I’ve been playing around in the market. I had been blocking the requests for a long time, but now I’ve got so many requests, I’m a little burdened.”

It seemed that she hadn’t gone to the market today. Who wanted to meet me? I asked Park Jung-ah about that.

“There’s a lot of people. The national government, a corporation, a guild, a mercenary group, religious people, and more. Not only from Korea but from all over the world. Funnily enough, Korea has the least number of requests.”

Perhaps the reason why Koreans had the least requests was because of Ho-jae. Koreans would have heard more stories about Ho-jae than people from other countries.

“Well, what should I do?” I asked.

“Do as you please. I don’t care.”

“I’ll come with you then.”

I wondered what kind of story the Order of Vigilance would tell and what kind of proposal they would come up with. Of course, Ho-jae wouldn’t mind what they suggested, but I was different. It was like a chance to get a glimpse of Earth’s situation, so I was interested.

“Uh... will you?”

“Yes. Yong-yong, will you play with Baek Sung-woong?”

“No, I want to go too!”

I didn’t think it was something to be so happy about. Somehow I felt like only middle-aged office workers would come to meet me there—no offence to Baek Sung-woong.

“Then we’ll help you with the interview or something. There are quite a few things to help out with,” Park Jung-ah said.

“Yes, please.”

Park Jeong-ah briefly asked for understanding and sent a message to the Order of Vigilance. I kind of felt that she was excited.

“So you’re not thinking of going over to another server?” Park Jung-ah asked with sparkling eyes.

I think she liked the fact that she had work to do. Somehow, I couldn’t match the memory of her complaining to Ho-jae about not helping her with work every time.

“Other zones?”

“Yes. We are in the Earth zone. There are conferences on a global scale, and people come from alien servers.”

“I want to go!” Before I could answer, Yong-yong raised his hand and shouted.

Chapter 265

Tournament Chapter (12)

[Park Jung-ah]

“I want to go!” Yong-yong raised his hand and shouted.

As soon as I explained about the Earth zone, Yong-yong showed a keen interest.

There wouldn't be any problem for Yong-yong to go to the Earth zone. After all, large-scale conferences took place there, and people from different planets would wander, but in the end, they were a minority. The Earth zone's public area was half-empty, and the number of participants attending the conference or otherworldly visitors did not amount to many.

Instead, the Earth zone was probably safer than the Korean. There were only a few groups of people in the Earth zone, so in case of an accident, the damage would be minimal.

Hochi tried to control an excited Yong-yong, who was bouncing with his hands up.

“Yong-yong, there'll be people from different places there, it may be dangerous,” Hochi persuaded.

“I'm gonna catch Auntie!”

I couldn't help but flinch. While looking around as if nothing was wrong, I met Baek Sung-woong's eyes, who avoided my gaze.

I tried to mask my embarrassment and asked Yong-yong what he meant. Fortunately, the 'Auntie' Yong-yong mentioned was Lee Yeon-hee, who came to the tent yesterday, and not me. I didn't know if that was a good thing or a bad thing.

The age gap between Lee Yeon-hee and me is... Let's not think about it.

I was a little sad because I thought I might look like an old lady to Yong-yong.

“What do you mean, Yong-yong? I can’t believe you’re going to catch Lee Yeon-hee!” Hochi asked Yong-yong in awe.

Yong-yong explained his thoughts to me, saying he would catch Lee Yeon-hee himself since she would not have recovered from the blow she had suffered yesterday. Yong-yong somehow looked proud. Maybe he thought it was a good plan.

Hochi was, of course, astonished, and so was I.

Yong-yong’s decision was grounded on two reasons. The first was the speculation that Lee Yeon-hee may not have recovered yet. The second was that it would be done on the way to other servers.

Of course, his points made sense, but I was surprised that such a young child had decided to catch his opponent as soon as the conditions were established.

Is there a problem with that child’s emotional capacity? I knew it was none of my business, but I was still worried.

Hochi struggled to withhold Yong-yong, who was eager to catch Lee Yeon-hee. I was bringing out snacks, toys, surprise gifts, and all sorts of conciliatory items from the market, but they didn’t seem to subdue Yong-yong.

“Dad will hate it. He might scold you,” Hochi said.

“Huh? No. Dad’s going to like it.”

“Oh- Will he?”

It was self-evident who the two of them were talking about. If Yong-yong had problems with education, it was clear who the culprit was.

“Then, Uncle hates it! I refuse to let you go!”

Seeing Hochi’s desperate efforts, I thought I should help him.

“Yong-yong, even if you go to the Earth Zone, you won’t find Lee Yeon-hee. You don’t know what server Lee Yeon-hee went to.”

We didn’t even know precisely how many other planets participated in the Tournament. It was questionable how Lee Yeon-hee entered the different server’s zone without permission. The inter-dimensional portal was closed, and without the consent from both sides, the portal was not operational. Lee Yeon-hee may not have known people from other servers, but we couldn’t figure out where she went since the portal closed shortly after her departure.

“I can figure that out,” Yong-yong pointed at himself and said. He had a proud look on his face again.

Before I questioned Yong-yong about his ability, I glanced at Hochi, who nodded quietly.

It’s true?

“But, you wouldn’t be able to go if you can’t open a portal on that planet?”

“I can open that too,” Yong-yong announced again with a smug look.

I looked at Hochi, and he nodded this time as well.

“Then shall we go catch her together?”

* * *

[Lee Hochi]

I didn't know Park Jung-ah would betray me here.

When Park Jung-ah found out that Yong-yong could visit Lee Yeon-hee, she immediately changed her stance. It was decided that some Order of Vigilance members would follow Yong-yong and clean up any mess he made. That option was comparatively better than Yong-yong falling into another planet and causing an accident by himself, but it still was not the right decision. The right choice was not to send Yong-yong at all.

Fortunately, just as I thought it would be hard to stop Yong-yong from being stubborn, Ho-jae intervened, making it clear to Yong-yong not to visit Lee Yeon-hee. Yong-yong was confused by Ho-jae's words. Yong-yong had been taught that if he had an enemy, he should end them neatly, and if the enemy did not recover from his first attack, he should not miss the opportunity to strike again.

Ho-jae explained that Lee Yeon-hee was the enemy who would revisit him. I couldn't understand Ho-jae's logic, but Yong-yong accepted it.

I decided to put off going to the Earth Zone for next time, and first meet people who wanted to meet me. The first person I met was probably a government official in the South Korean government.

"Hello?"

The official who came to the room was quite different than I expected. First of all, he was much younger than I thought he would be. I had imagined a bald man with a small potbelly and thin hair would arrive. Why aren't there people like that from the National Assembly on TV? Of course, I had never seen a TV or National Assembly, but I was expecting someone like that to come.

However, the man who came was youthful and handsome and seemed to be a little picky at a relatively young age. It brought me back to real life with a sharp kick.

"The Korean government will use every possible means to sign a contract that will benefit you. Of course, on the premise that you clear the Tutorial."

“Oh, yes...”

Despite his fresh appearance, the government official drawled on and on about dull topics. I didn't expect the interview to be spectacular, but this guy's words were horrendously slow.

He first spoke of the contract and laid out a roundabout critique of the Awakened fighting with the Korean Government. Next, he bragged about himself.

Really. I was not kidding, the man bragged about himself in front of me.

He talked about how successful he was, his job in the civil service community, and the treatment he had outside of the Tutorial. When he explained the contract, I was annoyed by his blatant way of showing off, but I didn't know it would end up like this.

Listening to constant boasts that I didn't care about was more annoying than I thought it'd be. I was glad that I left Yong-yong with Baek Sung-woong. We had to send him back on the pretext of tiredness, with a promise to continue our conversation by drinking together next time. I was mentally tired.

“He was a strange man.”

Park Jung-ah nodded at my words.

“I don't think he's capable enough to be there.”

Park Jung-ah nodded again. “He's not capable. Rather, he is incompetent and bothers the people around him. But.”

“But?”

“This is how it has been in the Tutorial. He's a civil servant, and he delivered the right message to the Order of Vigilance. He's the bridge between the Tutorial and the outside government, that's how much weight he's got.”

Park Jung-ah added, “There has always been a person like that before.” She also said, “Maybe a separate line of government officials came into the tutorial from outside.”

It was a surprise to me, but at the same time, I was wholeheartedly disinterested in the topic.

Park Jung-ah, who seemed to sense my boredom, asked if she should continue the conference tomorrow. I thought for a moment and replied that I would like to go on. Of course, it wasn’t a pleasant interview, but I tried to delude myself into thinking that this was also a person-to-person experience.

Park Jung-ah decided to head back. Afterward, I decided to talk to Ho-jae.

[What?]

“What do you think of him?”

[Why are you picking at people? Huh?]

What do you mean picking at people?

However, it was also not right to actively refute his question.

The government official, who deluded himself into thinking he was superior, evoked a sense of discomfort within me. On top of his unpleasant attitude, his own ability achieved none of what he boasted about. I didn’t think it was right to brag about himself.

It may not be something I cared about because it was his opinion, but I felt it’s not a good idea to reveal it openly. It was not that it was wrong, it was just a little unpleasant even to the eyes of a total stranger.

[Yes, it is.]

“Is that so?”

[He does it because it's easier than winning everything with his own ability. He'll do whatever it takes to increase his status and honor. Even good luck could become his ability.]

Was that so? I didn't really feel it. Of course, the memories I had may be biased.

Ho-jae used to be a professional gamer who lived on his own. After entering the Tutorial, he got what he wanted through sheer effort and by taking advantage of any opportunity he got. The memories I had conditioned me to think that things could only be achieved through effort.

[The more effortless and meaningless the victory is, the more ruthless society tends to be towards the victor. That's the difference between inside and outside the Tutorial. If it's a society where it's hard to reverse their status with ability, it's better if one starts with a rank set from the beginning.]

"Isn't Korea a capitalist country?"

[Yeah, because there's a hierarchy. When the hierarchy crumbles and the cycle disappears, there'll be nothing different. Oh, it might already have changed a bit these days. There will be the Awakened too. It'll become more of a mess.]

I thought for a moment. I organized my thoughts several times, but it was a fact that neither touched nor interested me. It sounded irrelevant to me.

I could see that I was living in a different world from people that was not just separated by spacial difference. We were different, socially and emotionally. So I questioned, "What do you want to do when you go outside?"

I wondered how Ho-jae looked at others and their society. I had a mountain load of things I wanted to do when I go outside. I wanted to see exciting books, movies, and dramas in real life, visit a theater or an amusement park. Whether it be a pleasant or unpleasant experience, I still wanted to meet many people.

But did Ho-jae think the same?

[Well...]

“What do you mean by ‘well’? Don’t you have something you want to do, something you want to see? You must have a wish.”

[No, I don’t have any.]

“Not even one?”

Ho-jae answered in a slightly shaky voice, [Uhh... I don’t really want to do anything even if I go back to Earth.]

Chapter 266

Tutorial 59th floor (1)

[Lee Ho Jae]

“Nothing.”

[Not even one? No family or lover?] asked the dragon.

Why was she prying into people’s private lives?

“None.”

Before entering the Tutorial, I didn’t meet with anyone. It had been years since I started living without my family, and the people I knew became decreased one by one after retirement. Of course, it was my fault that my relationship with them became estranged, but I didn’t bother to revisit them.

[Then what the hell were you doing before you came in here? Don’t humans have their roles in society?]

“I was a jobless man, that’s why!” I growled.

I had no close friends or a job. Why do you assume I’d have a role in society?

It was right to ask first how it had been initially.

[Oh, no... Sorry.] Ahbooboo, who had been listening to me and the dragon’s conversation quietly, murmured. Anger surged in my mind.

[Well... sorry. I shouldn’t have asked.] The dragon apologized to me, voice tinged with regret. I’d like to throw away Ahbooboo’s core and the dragon’s crystal ball somewhere.

I ignored the annoying duo and approached the frog, who was half-drenched in a pool of water near the valley. I climbed onto the frog, who was struggling. As I stretched out and lay down, I felt more comfortable than expected. It was strangely pleasant to feel the frog vibrate every time it croaked. The sensation was similar to a cat purring when it's happy.

"Frog, you're the only good one."

"Keeeeeek!"

Why does it cry when it is in a good mood? I wondered how the vocal cords were constructed.

[But the more diverse the wish, the better.]

"...Huh? Are you still talking about that?"

The dragon had been asking me what I wanted to do when I cleared the Tutorial. Naturally, I didn't have anything, in particular, I wanted to do. At one time, I didn't want to go out of the Tutorial and kept thinking about living here. There was no way I would want to go out on Earth and do anything. Of course, with strength, I could help people and get delicious food, but I didn't count that as a wish.

[Then wouldn't life feel so meaningless? Isn't there anything to do back home?]

"There's work to be done."

I had a goal. When I cleared the Tutorial and reach Earth, I had a vague goal to accomplish, but I didn't even know what to do for it. I'd have to work somehow to achieve that goal.

[Oh, my. Is the goal is to take lives?]

"Maybe the goal is to support a life that was falling apart." Lying on the frog's back, I continued. It was a bittersweet remark, but it was true.

[But think more about it. Keep thinking. Your life will be much longer than you think.]

“I got it. I got it. It’s alright. I will.”

I had been carrying on the conversation insincerely, but the dragon hadn’t stopped giving advice. This dragon had a tenacious side.

[All goals are bound to succeed or fail one day, and even the strongest wills become dull over time. If none of your wishes remain then, life will be hard to continue positively.]

Was this advice from a dragon who lived alone for a long time as a senior in his life? I thought this was funny.

“Yes, I see. Thanks for the nice talk. Not right now, but maybe after a long time, I’ll find a goal. I sure hope so.”

[I wish you find new hope.]

* * *

[Ready to go?]

“Yeah.”

Now that I had enough rest, it was natural to move on to the next stage. There was no merit in staying here any longer. When I mentioned this, the dragon seemed very upset.

[Sad.]

What a shame. A scaredy-cat dragon that doesn’t show its nose and just talked over the crystal ball.

[Then we’ll have to pick the next stage. Oh no.]

“What?”

[Your next stage has been set. God... the gods want this stage.]

Did the gods get involved in the stage selection? It wasn't surprising because if the dragon had the authority to choose the stage, so would the gods. But contrary to my idea, the dragon was quite displeased.

[What an act of overpowering authority. I can't wait to see how the gods will repay this debt to me.]

Instead of the words of anticipation, what I heard was an annoyed tone. That little dragon had a complaint with the gods, so I wondered how it would be resolved. Of course, I didn't want to pry into it.

"So, what's the designated stage?"

[It won't be much different from the previous stages.] the dragon replied. The 56th, 57th, and 58th stages were all stages associated with divinity or source.

"This has the source again?"

[No. It's related to the source, but the subject won't be that.]

"Then?"

[Go in and judge.]

'Go in and judge.'

Are you not going to give me even the slightest amount of information?

If it were Kirikiri, I would try to draw more information out with a cake, but the dragon never went back on its word and didn't give me any advice about the stage.

Was it that bad that the gods were involved in the stage selection? As it was a dragon, it may have a high level of pride in its work. Maybe it was more offended because it couldn't complain to the gods since it was working for them. Whatever it was, it didn't matter to me. As a result, I had to get into the stage without any detailed information.

Damn it.

[Goodbye, I hope to see you again someday.]

When I got on the portal, the dragon bid me goodbye, and I felt the same way. The next time we met, I wanted to meet face to face, not through a crystal ball.

* * *

[The 59th floor stage begins.]

What was this? The place where I was summoned was inside of a high spire of what appeared to be a military fortress. Outside the spire window, a panoramic view of the fort was seen, and beside the fortress was a rugged rocky mountain. Just by looking at it, you could tell that this was a stage where we had to defend against an attack.

The theme of this stage was quite easy to understand, so I could see why the dragon didn't add a detailed explanation.

“Hey, isn't this the source?”

[That's the source.]

In the room at the top of the spire, there was a strange creature: a monster reminiscent of primates, such as monkeys or orangutans, which had no hair on its body. Of course, it wasn't even wearing clothes, so its gross pink skin stood out.

“It doesn't look appealing,” Ahbooboo agreed with me.

The monster did not have senses such as eyes, nose, and ears. There was only an unusual gudgeon on the mouth and forehead. Somehow, I felt disgusted by its bizarre appearance.

[The 59th floor stage begins.]

[A short time ago, a source was born on a continent on an unknown planet. Its birth process is unknown, but it is assumed that the great sorcerer who had set out to fight against the ancient demons, having been buried beneath the planet's soil, had turned into a source. Before the power of the source spread throughout the planet, the indigenous gods of the planet succeeded in suppressing the source. The problem was, right after that, the source disappeared. The two native gods, who were powerfully influential, are eager to find and monopolize each other's source first. Their followers, hunters, sorcerers are crazy about research. There are people in this world who want to see the source.]

[Clear Goal]

– Protect the source for as long as possible.

It was also a relatively simple stage to understand. Recently, I had to use my head a lot, since we had been passing through complicated and demanding stages, so I was glad to have a stage which I could complete using sheer force. It was just a stage where we had to hold out for a long time while protecting the source of this spire. Given that they didn't specify the time, but gave a clue that it would take a long time, there seemed to be a time limit when the stage gets forced to end, like on the 57th floor.

The source had been creeping up on me for a while. It was like seeing a monkey approaching cautiously. Actually, it was a lot more disgusting than that. First of all, I let it come close. The source, which was near my nose, hesitated for a moment and then opened its mouth.

[Giaraaak!]

(T/N: Sound of a laugh supposedly.)

“You son of a b*tch.”

It bared its teeth, making me slap the back of the head of the source who suddenly tried to bite my arm. The source fell on the floor with a roar.

“You’re such a naughty one. Don’t latch your teeth to someone more powerful than you.”

[Aigoo, Warrior. You shouldn’t have treated it so harshly. It passed out. What if it died like this?]

“You can heal it.”

[You’re so shameless... What if it died instantly and you didn’t clear the stage? I think it’s a dead monster already.]

Ahbooboo flew around the source, making sure there were no problems. It occurred to me that he was exceptionally active.

[After this stage, we’ll go to the 60th floor, right?]

“Yes, we will.”

[If I go there, I’ll be able to repair myself, right?]

“...Maybe”

I couldn’t give him a definite answer. Kirikiri had already confirmed that there may be a way to repair the Sword in the store window after the 60th floor. But, it had been a vague remark. Perhaps there were other conditions for Ahbooboo’s repair, given his state. I just wanted the requirement to be simple.

“By the way, I don’t think there’ll be an intruder coming in right away.”

[Yes, I think it's a relaxing stage. What to do?] Ahbooboo asked me.

“Shouldn't you start experimenting?”

[Yeah?]

I had met many sources, so I was tired of it. It was too much after I had caught a lot of them.

Among them, there were many small human-sized sources. Such small sources usually had very feeble powers. To put it bluntly, it had the power of a vicious monster beast. But this one was different.

No matter how weak they all looked, the power felt in their body had never been more than that of a beast's, unlike this source. Above all, even the native gods here, in addition to countless people, coveted this source. When would we ever get such a big fish again?

“Let's test it before the intruders come.”

Chapter 267

Tutorial 59th floor (2)

“Kkeureuk,” the monster croaked.

“Just a little more. Don’t you think this part is less resistant to burns?”
I noted.

[That’s because it’s a hot-spot, where it’s groin would be located.]
Ahbooboo said.

“It doesn’t have an organ there now. It’s just a stump.”

Ahbooboo groaned at my words.

Why was he complaining about it? He was just burning a monster.

[I heard this monster was originally a human being. Then, wouldn’t it be natural for that part to hurt?]

“That’s interesting. It’s surprising that it didn’t suffer exceptionally, even though it lost an important organ.”

[Why is that interesting?]

“First of all, I need to find out whether it’s actually feeling genuine pain or phantom pain.”

Instead of setting fire to the source, Ahbooboo kept asking me questions.

[Why do you have to know that?]

“When we actually hit that area, if it feels more pain, we can continue to use the place as a weakness. Of course I'd want to research more. If it's pain is caused by phantom pains, the monster is aware of his body structure when he was a human being. Even if it's unconscious. I'll find out. I don't know if other monsters are like this monster, but this is the only subject we're given right now, so I can't help it."

I kindly explained the purpose of the experiment to Ahbooboo, but he didn't seem to think the experiment was necessary...

[Warrior, I beg you, can we stop torturing this creature with its groin?]

"Kkeereuk," the monster croaked.

[Look. That monster's voice, which used to sound grotesque before, now sounds pitiful!]

"Okay. Let's test it out just a little more."

[You said the same thing an hour ago.]

I was in the middle of a series of experiments with Ahbooboo when the door of the room opened. A man walked in and exclaimed, "Oh, my God, this is crazy. What am I looking at?"

"Oh, the search for the source has started."

The man who came in through the door was a giant warrior, over two meters tall and muscular. He seemed like the typical warrior in a game. That man had come into the spire less than ten minutes ago. I stopped my experiments and waited, but I guessed he wouldn't leave so easily.

The man had strode in with quite a pompous attitude. "Hey, you crazy m*therf*cker, what if you die? It's popular among bounty hunters, but do you know how much the monster is worth?"

He thought I was a bounty hunter?

"If you leave the monster behind now, I will spare your life." The man waved his hand, acting as if he were being kind to me.

This was interesting. It took so long for a man to come up to the room that I thought someone with a cautious personality would arrive. But now that I saw him, it doesn't seem to be a personality problem, it just took him a long time to climb the stairs of the tall spire.

“Are you a bounty hunter, too?”

The man nodded at my question. It appeared that the first of countless people to search for their source was this bounty hunter. I couldn't believe he came to this monster faster than the native gods. Maybe it was because bounty hunters were professionals who usually worked in the front line of this field, so the man had the ability. I was sure that he had the skills, and he knew a lot of information.

[Whew, tsk tsk.]

* * *

“Yes. The ancient demon was known to have been sealed by the founder of the kingdom, but in fact, the founder of the kingdom built a new kingdom with the help of the demon. The royal family had kept and maintained ancient demons deep underground for generations.”

“Why didn't he kill the demon before?” I questioned.

To answer my question, the man speculated, “It's rumored that the demon and the kingdom's founder signed a contract. But I think the royal family was hoping that one day it would use the power of the demon again. Back then, the kingdom lost the war and its influence was greatly diminished.”

“Maybe so.”

The man was a better storyteller than I thought. He was kneeling next to the monster, talking to me without any interruptions.

“Then what?”

“Because of the incident I mentioned earlier, the ancient demon was released from the seal, and the royal family and the knights were exterminated. At that time, there was a famous sorcerer in the capital of the kingdom. Maybe that monster is him.”

The sorcerer was a kind of wizard who accepted the spirituality of God and spread his teachings to the world. Although he was similar to priests who used sacred spells, there was a noticeable difference. The native gods here had many of the characteristics of primitive religions, unlike those seen on other stages. The sorcerer took advantage of the power of God present in nature, but it was hard to say that he was a believer who supported the gods directly.

Anyway, such a sorcerer stopped the demon. His reputation in the capital city skyrocketed, so he must have drawn people’s attention.

“Yes. All the people in the capital looked up to him. It is said that there was a bond between the people and the sorcerer. An observer who was at the capital said that everyone in the capital cheered for the sorcerer. And...”

It was a story I knew better than this guy, who must have been overwhelmed by the people’s power. Unlike the 57th floor, where work was carried out on a planetary scale due to the well-developed technology, it was limited to the capital of the kingdom, but that alone contained too much power. The sorcerer eventually became a monster, not a hero, and the native gods that appeared belatedly made the surroundings a mess while fighting for the power of the monster’s source. In the mess, the monster disappeared somewhere and must have found its way all the way over here.

The source was certainly an unusual power: a kind of power that could only be found in cartoons. The power that might remind you of Dragon Ball Z, the famous anime.

Holy power was given rise through religion. On the other hand, the source was made unexpectedly by people under unknown circumstances. Rather than divine entities, the power was passed on to their representatives and heroes. Finally, it was influenced by the people’s level of civilization and history.

Recently, I learned a lot of information that I hadn’t known through the stages. Every time I cleared the stage, the Dragon gave me a lot of information, but there were still about two things I wasn't sure about.

Many of the sources that appeared on the 40th floor were relatively small and weak. After killing them, a piece of rock called root debris could be found, but I didn't know how they were created. At first, I thought there would be a parent source for such monsters, but the only source I faced were the ones who had lost their minds. It was unlikely that they would be able to reproduce strategically to increase their numbers.

The second was about me. How was I capable of using the source? Of course there was the power of the source from the God of Remorse, but I was not aware how I had used it back then, and the Dragon had refused to answer. This was the question I had to ask as soon as I met with Kirikiri.

"May I go now?" the bounty hunter begged.

"No."

Tears welled up in the man's eyes at my answer, making me feel bad for making a tall man sit on his knees, his head facing my chest. Why was this man so afraid of me? I didn't even hit him. I just suppressed him with mana and told him to talk.

[You're not really asking because you don't know, are you, Warrior?]

"I'll do anything. Please don't kill me..."

I turned my head away from the man who was begging in a desperate voice and looked into the monster that was spread out on the test bed.

After checking its muscle condition, vascular structure, and location of the internal organs, I found that it had a weird flow pattern of mana. I also found out that the position of the source's power was consistent with the place where I kept mine, and took note of what order it flowed in.

What do we do now? I had been experimenting for so long that my neck felt stiff.

Before reaching the 13th floor, I had routinely dissected enemies. Upon entering the 13th floor, I began to feel skeptical and refrained from dissection. From then on, people who could talk, and not monsters, came out as enemies. Since the human body structure was well known, I didn't have to bother to dissect it. After that, I stopped experimenting. But whenever necessary, I would capture enemies alive and conduct experiments. After all, anatomical knowledge greatly helped in combat.

Either way, the number of times had decreased significantly, and now it felt awkward to dissect and experiment with the enemy. I didn't know what to do with such a great experimental subject in front of me.

I needed insight.

"I need more insight on the monster. Is there any way to further study it?"

"What?" The man didn't understand what I was saying and showed a confused expression, so I promised I'd let him live if he came up with a useful idea.

"Well... uhh, sorcery maybe? There are some who have mastered sorcery just for torture purposes. That monster used to be a great sorcerer, so maybe this'll help."

The man's idea was excellent, and I replied in a pleased voice, "Very good. It's a great idea. Maybe we should invite a sorcerer."

"Oh, how?" he asked in an uneasy voice, sweat dripping off his face. I didn't think he was going to get me a sorcerer.

I raised my hand to the window instead of answering. From the window, I could see the fireballs flying towards the spire. Dozens of fireballs crashed into the wall of the mana I had made, and dissipated.

"Magic? Ah, no, gunfire boosted by magic," I noticed

Outside the spire, shouting was heard, followed by a second roar. I murmured as I looked at the shells that were fired, "That unit will include a sorcerer, right?”

[Warrior’s theory sounds very probable.]

* * *

There was no sorcerer, and unfortunately, I only captured a commander of a useless unit.

“Damn it. How can there be no sorcerer?” I groaned.

“Eh... well, there was no sorcerer in the original unit,” the commander replied.

Wasn’t there supposed to be a sorcerer? What the heck? I had no choice but to inquire more from the commander.

The commander introduced himself as an officer of a country, in pursuit of the source, but I forgot the name of the country as soon as I heard it. In addition, he was commanding the vanguard of the great army, which was still running hard here.

“What kind of vanguard shoots a cannon?”

On hearing my words, the commander showed their equipment, which was smaller than I thought and looked more like a mortar than a cannon. It seemed quite useful to me, too, but this must be a military secret, and yet, they were willingly sharing with me.

“What’s the total number of troops?”

“A little over forty thousand.”

Forty? I thought I heard wrong. After all, why would you send 40,000 people to catch a powerless monster? Even if the monster regained its strength, it was wise to deal with it with a small number of elite soldiers rather than sending a great army. The average soldier was just a scarecrow in front of a certain level of strength.

“It was an inevitable mobilization since the armies of other countries are also looking for the source.”

“Well... you did say you were aiming for a number of countries. Commander, how many soldiers are running this way now? Irrespective of their nationality.”

“Eh... I think it'll be two hundred thousand if I round it off. Not only soldiers, but also hunters, adventurers, mercenaries, wanderers, and traders.”

Two hundred thousand if rounded off? According to the explanation of the stage, the native gods would soon also begin to seek their source. If the gods began to quarrel over monsters, this area would naturally be destroyed like the capital of a kingdom that had already been blown to bits.

How many of the 200,000 people would survive? I could bet that most of them wouldn't.

What should I do?

Chapter 268

Tutorial 59th floor (3)

It was so noisy outside. Looking from out the small window, I could see that the uproar had yet to simmer down.

Just like the bounty hunter, countless people had come to visit the spire in search of the source. The first ones to arrive were hunters and mercenaries, but they didn't matter much. It was enough to scold and send them back.

The military unit that came after that was the problem. Following the team, the troop numbers reached 100,000 units. Instead of meaninglessly beating them to death or burning them, I chose to kidnap only the commanders.

The kidnapping was not difficult. We could just go and capture them. It was effective, and I could get information from the kidnapped commanders.

Of course, the soldiers who occasionally opened fire or tried to get their commanders back were very annoying, but it was still tolerable though. In addition, we were able to extract information from them.

If you looked inside the room, your eyes would fall on the sorcerers kneeling before the source. It was a sight that truly comforted me.

It looked as though they were taking a test on the past of the Joseon Dynasty, as they were scribbling furiously on paper.

[Everyone's writing hard.]

Of course.

The commander, who had been captured for the first time, said that there was no such thing as a sorcerer in the unit, but it was not true. When the number of troops gathered near the spire exceeded 200,000, we were able to find a good army sorcerer. In addition, I gathered hunters, mercenaries, and sorcerers who were wandering around for investigation, and was able to acquire as many as a hundred sorcerers.

After catching a hundred or so sorcerers one by one, I had a simple request: to write down all they knew about sorcery on paper.

[But if it's like this, there won't really be any important sorcery facts.]

I didn't know how to answer that. If I knew a little bit about sorcery, I could just ask for some information, but I didn't know anything about sorcery, and it was in vain to ask for only important information. I didn't have the ability to tell the difference between what was important and what was not important.

I peered over the shoulders of some sorcerers to see what they were writing. I felt as if I were an investigator at a test site. As I was walking slowly, making sure they were writing well, a sorcerer made me halt.

"You're really going to send me back when I fill up this paper, right?" The shivering sorcerer who was filling up his paper asked me.

He was the only young sorcerer among the other elderly-looking sorcerers.

"Of course I will. You've finished writing already. Isn't that right?"

I asked back in a soft voice, but the sorcerer first shook his head like an Aspen tree, then proceeded to nod his head up and down. Initially, he spoke to me with courage, but when I was talking about the paper, he seemed to be scared. I glanced at the piece of paper that the scared little sorcerer was writing down. It seemed flawless, but a closer look showed that there was a font size difference between the letters on the top and the ones on the bottom.

"But if you make the font size like this... Did you really think I wouldn't notice?"

“I’ll reduce it! I’ll reduce it!”

“Yes. The letters should be as small as possible. Least amount of spacing. Make the lines shorter. Don’t repeat the same things in all thirty-five pages. Okay?”

The little sorcerer started to fill up the paper again, hastily replying, “Yes, yes!”

I shook my head and kept walking. Something was a little strange. I thought that they were too afraid of me.

Of course, I made some threats, arrested them, and punished them for resisting, but even considering that these sorcerers were a bit too afraid of me.

[Is that a joke? You’ve done all sorts of things and you don’t know why they’re scared.] Ahbooboo reprimanded.

No, listen. It was not my first time threatening someone.

[Very proud, aren’t you?]

Anyway, I’m an artist, if not a specialist of intimidation. With this view of mine, these sorcerers were overly afraid of me. It was to such an extent that I didn’t think there was any need to threaten them.

[Maybe it’s because of that.]

‘That’ referred to the source that was nailed to the wall of the spare room. Surely the condition of the source was quite appalling. Its upper body was cut open and its insides were visible. Blood was pouring out from the small cuts and incisions made, and a pool of blood was collecting under its feet. Looking at it, I felt a little sick. It sometimes let out weak groans, as if it was still alive.

Ahbooboo’s opinion was plausible. As an experimental subject, it had been a major sorcerer who was capable and famous enough to be a source. For people, it may have been a monster that blew up a country’s capital, but it might feel different from other sorcerers.

[No... I think they were just scared to see something horrible in front of them.]

Is that so? Well, maybe.

I glanced at the sorcerers and kept walking forward. A hundred or so sorcerers were kneeling in front of the wall at which the source was hung. Beyond that, the commanders of each unit were kneeling in a cramped area.

Because they were neatly kidnapped without any resistance, there were no signs of injuries. Nevertheless, fear was evident on their faces. The commanders, who whispered among themselves, closed their mouths as if nothing had happened, as soon as I came near. It was obvious what they were talking about.

They were secretly talking about who I was, and how to escape. Or maybe they were looking for a chance to fight back. I was wondering what to do with them, when one of them asked me in a slightly trembling voice, "What do you want from us?"

"What do I want?"

The primary reason for capturing them was to gather sorcerers. I wanted to get some information before this stage got over. It would be better if I could hear about this world.

Come to think of it, that was all I wanted. I had captured commanders who led 200,000 soldiers under them, but I didn't care much about them. They were all ordinary human beings, even if they were soldiers. Whether the number was 100,000 or a million had little to do with me. No matter how many they were in number, they were neither helpful nor dangerous to me.

"It's not like you've kidnapped all the commanders of the armed forces of each country for nothing at all. Say it. I'm in the army, but I'm also a member of the royal family," the commander said.

"The royal family? So you're a prince?"

"I am. For ransom, I can give as much as you want, even more than that. Be it gold or something else.”

Something else? Not gold? I wondered what he was thinking of giving.

“You seem to have no affiliation. I can provide you with a title, territory, wealth and honour, a whole new status. I can give you anything. As long as you free us,” the prince explained frantically, thinking I was interested in his words, but it wasn’t a tempting offer for me. Not at all. Not taking notice of whether I was pleased or not, the prince continued quickly.

“Of course if you want something else, I can give it to you. Come to think of it, I know so little about you. This is the only way to make a proper proposal. Can’t you tell me what you are and what you want? So that I can make a better offer.”

It was interesting. The prince was obviously afraid, but in the midst of that, he still held a bit of hope and composure. I wondered what this weird rationale was.

Was it confidence? Confidence in his noble status and power, that made him assume that I won’t hurt him rashly.

Or was it optimism? He may not be able to judge a crisis because he had never really been in such a f*cked up situation in his life, so he was negotiating with the idea that it would work out somehow.

“Well, mind telling me what you know about me?” I asked him.

“Yes. What I know about you is that you’ve got your hands on that monster that blew up the capital of the Kingdom of Rossina. And a very, very powerful sorcerer, warrior, and an assassin.”

Well... you might think so.

I had only kidnapped commanders and sorcerers without fighting.

I was wondering what to say to the prince when I heard a loud laugh from behind me. It was a mocking laugh, that sounded half maniacal.

“Strong sorcerer? Do you want me to tell you who he is? Hahahaha!”

The man who spoke was one of the commanders who had been quietly bound. The prince, who was talking to me, looked back at the third party with an unpleasant look and asked, “Can you tell me what’s so funny? Lord Jengent?”

The commander, who was giggling like a madman, seemed to be called Jengent. Jengent once again laughed at the prince and suddenly said, “Who’s he? You want me to tell you who he is? You’re going to give him a title? You idiot! Can’t you recognize the ancient demon right before you!”

The ancient demon. What an absurd misunderstanding.

“Can’t you see the terrible sight of the archmage hanging over there on the wall!? Look at those surgical instruments and grotesque experimental tools that we’ve never seen before. He wants to gain knowledge of sorcery, and in less than a day, he kidnapped us all. He was surrounded by 200,000 soldiers, but he talked peacefully without any sign of panic. No tension, no fear, no sense of accomplishment. As natural as ever. I feel like my nose will go crooked from fear any moment now. Do you think humans can do that? That man is the ancient evil demon that had been sealed under the royal castle!”

[You’re absolutely right, I can’t argue with you.]

I told the teasing Ahbooboo to shut up. Unconsciously, I made eye contact with the prince, who backed away with a frightened face upon seeing my gaze. There seemed to be nothing more to talk with the prince. I turned my head to Jengent, who was still screaming.

“Well, let’s just say I am.”

I didn’t think he’d believe it if I said that I wasn’t the devil. It didn’t really matter to me even if he believed me or not.

The commanders were momentarily tense, stiffening their faces as I seemed to accept that I was the demon. There was also a weak roar coming from the source behind me.

“If I were the demon, what would you do?” I questioned.

What are you going to do, get excited and talk about it?

It was easy to see from the way that the Jengent was talking about it. Still, I asked in a half curious, half bored manner. “What are you going to do? Announce that I’m the devil?”

I slowly approached him and asked, making him shift backwards nervously. Jengent, though distressed by my question, slowly gave his answer. “I have come... I’ve come to see you.”

“You came to see me?”

“Yes... I came here to find you, ancient demon.”

What came out of Jengent’s mouth was a totally unexpected answer. So he thought I was an ancient demon? He came to me even though he knew that?

“I want to make a deal. In exchange for my soul.”

What a nut job.

[He really has an eye for people. Oh, wait no, he has a keen eye for demons.] Ahbooboo snickered.

Chapter 269

Tutorial 59th floor (4)

“I offer my soul!”

I don’t need it. I almost said my thoughts aloud without thinking. Why would you dedicate your soul to me in the first place?

Ordinary human souls were not very useful, even if you collected billions of them. They could be considered a toy at best. If you had the power to handle souls, human souls would make an efficient fuel. I, for one, was able to do and use the power of the soul and the soul sword, but using souls did not have much effect and was not that efficient.

The only useful power involving souls that the god of death gave me was the exploitation of the soul. The rest only granted me with a title, and their utility value was low. Compared to the power given by other gods, it was seriously useless.

[The God of Death is perplexed.]

[The God of Adventure is in high spirits.]

The number of souls that were sealed in the soul sword right now... Wait, hold on.

[What’s wrong with you?] Ahbooboo asked when I stopped thinking. There was one thing that I had missed: I had never extracted a soul from a living human.

[Do you really want to be a demon? Why don't you go ahead and sign a contract?]

A contract? That doesn't sound too bad. If a contract was established, I could sacrifice something in order to harvest souls.

The Demon King, who I met on the 25th and 34th floor, had been summoned beyond the dimension due to the personal appeal of the people. He was brought by offering something to the God of Sowing.

If somehow I could make a contract with a soul like a demon, this could be a new direction of development.

[Whew...]

Of course, I didn't know how to. I was oblivious of how to make a contract with a soul, or what to sacrifice in the contract.

I should ask Kirikiri about this later. Was there any way I could get that kind of power?

“Oh, demon,” Jengent called me with a slightly uneasy look. During the conversation, I had dazed off, leaving him perplexed.

I put on a serious face and said, “Oh, yeah. Contract. You're betting your soul on it? Can you guarantee that?”

Jengent looked stiff, but nodded his head. His determination was great. He looked so satisfied, that the corners of his lips were tugging up in a smile. If I had some time before the end of this stage, it wouldn't be a bad idea to take him back to experiment with soul-related powers.

[Sir, please don't act like a real devil. I'm the Holy Sword...]

And? So what if you're a Holy Sword? Don't sell drugs in the name of holiness. [1]

[...]

“I know very well that you have the courage to stake your soul. Then it’s time to hear what you want.”

Whatever Jengent wanted, I had the ability to achieve it. Of course there was a stage limitation, so I wouldn’t be able to listen to it all. I could only assure him that his wish would be fulfilled.

I made my voice low, so that I seemed a little bit more evil. Increasing the pressure on him, I slowly let out a bit of my power. For Jengent, this wouldn’t just be felt as pressure of mana, but as a supernatural element.

“Jengent. Say what you want in return for your soul.”

Upon hearing my words, Jengent gulped down his saliva and said in a determined voice, “What I want is destruction of the gods that have destroyed the kingdom of Rossina. I would like to take revenge on the cruel gods who have pushed their worshippers and thrown them away as if they were just weeds in the fields. I want their annihilation!”

What Jengent asked me for was neither wealth, honor or strength. He wanted the fall of these native gods. Luckily for him, we shared the same wish.

Hence, I shouted with joy, “The contract has been made. Your wishes will come true!”

* * *

The goal of the 59th floor stage was to protect the source from the numerous people who coveted the power of the source. If this was all, the stage was too easy. In this case, it wouldn’t have been called the 59th floor for nothing, and could have very well been a stage that might appear on the 9th floor.

But the stage had a level of difficulty that matched the 59th floor because of the existence of two native gods that would appear at the end.

The two gods were clearly aiming for the power of the source, and they were at odds with each other. If one got in the way of this event, they'd sweep everything away with force.

The challenger must protect the source from the two native gods from the gods who, if necessary, would not hesitate to exercise their powers and could even step on their own believers without any second thoughts.

In this way, I thought the difficulty level was set too high. All the gods that had appeared on the Tutorial stage had rewarded me after the stage was over. But this time the gods were directly related to the stage, and I had to collide head-on with them.

Perhaps I could utilize the time before the gods came to persuade the people who sought the source out faster than the gods. I could find a way to hide from them or persuade them. Anyway, most of the people who were gathered here were followers of native gods, but I didn't try to find that way even though I thought so.

This was an opportunity. A chance to kill a god at least once.

[What kind of chance is this?] Ahbooboo grumbled.

It was a great chance. The presence of native gods, who were on bad terms compared to the gods from the temple, was definitely a message that suggested a clash with the gods, a delightful opportunity.

[There was no message anywhere telling you to kill the gods, Warrior. It's really dangerous. You could die here, really.]

I won't die.

Even in the midst of my talking to Ahbooboo, Jengent was talking about himself. He didn't even notice that I wasn't listening to him, and seemed to be absorbed in narrating the story.

"That's when the gods appeared. We all cheered. The archmage, who was confronting the demon, was in a strange state, and I thought the gods had finally come forward. I thought it was to bless the struggle of the archmage. But the two gods collided over the capital, and in the aftermath, the capital was literally swept away."

Jengent continued his story. He said he was in the capital of the Rosina Kingdom when it had been ruined.

“I realized the situation was strange and tried to evacuate people somehow. But evacuating the crowded people of the capital without any preparation... I still remember the scene clearly whenever I close my eyes. People trampled each other and ran like crazy cows. The fireballs that fell on their heads... And those who prayed to the gods who were killing them... And-”

Jengent paused for a moment, and his voice choked for an obvious reason.

If you were a god that cared about your believers, you wouldn't fight over people's capital. No matter how hard you prayed in the mess, the gods wouldn't care. The people of the capital city continued to die, and the misery would only become more and more horrendous.

It was a tragic accident, but it was also betrayal: betrayal to a man who believed in God. God had no interest in him, and the man couldn't curse out at God because God could always cut the man's head off. You could say that gods didn't really love their believers, and they just wanted power from faith. That was the reality.

“The doctrines were all lies. Everything I had believed in had been a deception. The gods didn't care for their believers at all.”

I felt that this commander, Jengent, was originally a very faithful man. When he was disappointed by the gods, he wasn't just devastated. The thought of revenge burned in him. It was unusual. Seeing God as the object of revenge was as reckless as wielding a sword to stop a typhoon. In fact, Jengent may not have wanted to tear the gods to death, but instead, only wanted to tear down his past.

“I cannot tolerate or forgive the gods. I want revenge, demon. I'll achieve it even if I have to burn my soul.”

Yeah, yeah. I'd heard that before. Now that I listened to him, it was my turn to speak.

“How?”

“Yes?” Jengent made a dumb face at my question. He wasn’t that smart. Haah. And I even thought of signing a contract with him.

“How did you intend to kill gods? Your plan wasn’t to only ask the demon, was it?”

“The soldiers under my command.”

Soldiers? He didn’t mean to order soldiers to attack the gods, did he?

“They’re all ordinary human beings.”

“There’s about 40,000 of them. And some of them were with me from the capital. Most importantly, we have a large fleet of artillery.”

Guns? You’re going to fire cannon at the gods?

“The shooting itself doesn’t mean anything, but we’ve already cast a spell on the shells. There will be damage. Definitely,” Jengent said with an earnest look.

“Can magic do harm to the gods?” I asked Jengent.

He replied that he was confident, which was ridiculous. As far as I knew, the sorcery of this world came from the power of the native gods, but he was saying that the native gods would be harmed? That was another thing to study later.

[What are you going to do now?] asked Ahbooboo.

Somehow, I couldn’t let this idiot run against the gods. It was meaningless. He had to be told to give up.

“Looking at you reminds me of a man I met a long time ago,” I said.

“Do you mean the founding king?”

“Well, do you call the man the king of the place where I was sealed?”

The hunter whom I met on the first day had told me the behind story of the kingdom. In fact, the kingdom was founded by the power of the ancient demon, and the royal family has sealed it for generations. I didn't know if it was true, but the mere fact that such a theory was circulating was enough. Actually, Jengent was an idiot to believe I was an ancient demon.

"Don't you want to be like him? Don't you want to be a new king?"

"But revenge on the gods..."

"Oh, of course that'll be there too. I'll take care of the revenge, so you don't have to worry. It's a story for the future."

"Then..."

It was not like he was not greedy. He was quite an interesting human being.

"There's something you have to do."

"What's the matter?" asked Jengent, tensely.

I said, looking at his face that seemed worried, "Collect faith."

* * *

I led Jengent back to the spire room where the commanders were still whispering, and the sorcerers were still busy writing. First I put the commanders together.

"Is there still any lingering fear from that monster?" I asked, pointing to the source hanging from the wall.

There was no answer.

"I have one suggestion for you." When I said that, hope shone on the faces of the commanders, who were previously terrified. Would they bargain for a ransom?

“Run away.”

“Save me!”

A commander suddenly knelt down and shouted in a desperate voice. That was the prince I had talked to.

“Save me!” After the prince, all the other commanders knelt down and shouted to me. It was absurd. I was going to let them run away, but they wanted me to save them.

“No. Run by yourself.”

“I know no matter how many times I run away, I will never get away from you. Please, please. Just my life. Or the soldiers...”

What are you talking about?

“Hey, I’ll let you go. Run away,” I said.

“Please, please.”

[Warrior, the demon tells his most hated enemy to run away. After he says so, he will soon follow and kill them in the most terrible way, so they’re scared.]

Note from Imagine:

[1]: The reason Hojae stated that is because usually if a normal person were to use ahbooboo he eventually corrupts your mind with his power to the point you become his doll.

Chapter 270

Tutorial 59th floor (5)

“Save me!”

“Please. Please, spare me...”

“Demon, I have already filled in 35 sheets of paper and am writing two more. Please...”

Everyone who was told to run began to beg for their lives. From the other side came all the sorcerers who were waving their filled papers and begging for my mercy.

No, I was just telling you to run away.

[It sounded like you were going to hunt them down.] Ahbooboo gave his opinion.

I just said it normally, though. Ahbooboo, if I could explain in detail that this place was dangerous and to run away, these people would be scared, right?

[Yes, they’ll think you let them run away only to chase them down.]

Damn it.

These people were really scared of the demon. The archmage who fought against the demon was considered great. To them, I was a monster.

[Well, I’m afraid of the demon too, but maybe I’m just more afraid of the Warrior in front of me.]

Tch. Anyway, if I wanted to keep them away from the spire, I couldn’t just say run away. I was called evil, so I should talk like a devil.

“If your life is so precious to you, I will spare you. But only if you pay enough for it.”

“I’ll give everything to save them.”

“If you let me live, I’ll do anything.”

“I’ll gladly give you anything.”

“Then give your soul.”

* * *

Those who were told to offer their souls quickly shut their mouths. I informed the frozen people that if they didn’t want to dedicate their soul, then they’d have to obey my command. Some of them were unusual lunatics who offered their souls, but most vowed allegiance. Of course, it was an unbinding and untrustworthy loyalty, but that was enough. I just wanted to send them away.

The kidnapped commanders returned to the troops stationed near the spire and began to retreat one after another. Outside the window, the air was filled with dust caused by the 200,000 soldiers preparing to withdraw.

“That’s the spell that protects you from the cold?”

“Yes, that’s right.”

Unlike the commanders who were preparing to withdraw, the sorcerers clung to me and were practicing sorcery. Now that I had a written down version of all the theories, I’d been experimenting by applying the spells one by one to my body. If there was anything useful, it may also help in the fight against the native gods. I was told that sorcery could damage gods after all.

“Next is a magic trick that makes your body fluffy.”

Why do I feel weird?

“That’s strange,” I remarked.

“What do you mean?”

“Why do I have a spell that makes me feel trapped. No, it feels like a spell with tracking.”

I was a total stranger to sorcery, but I knew quite a bit of magic. Ahbooboo always said that I was like a primitive man that carried a stone ax in regards to magic, but in fact, it was enough to say that I was a wizard even on a magical stage. That was why I felt that the spell I just put on my body was used for tracking purposes.

“Well, I don’t think it is.”

“Strike your head,” I commanded.

“Yes.”

The sorcerer, who was tricking me, hit his head and fell over, and the sorcerer standing behind him came forward.

“Let’s start. If you play tricks like the one before you, you’ll die.”

“Yes.”

The sorcerer took out the strange props before me, and began to chant out spells. As I was looking at the figure before me calmly, the air suddenly became heavy.

“Stop.”

“What? I still haven’t done anything.”

It wasn’t because of the sorcerer. The atmosphere was strange.

“You should go down now and join the army.”

It was time to send off the sorcerers.

“What are you doing? Get out quickly.”

Hearing me, the sorcerer began to creep back, as if he was wary of me. As soon as they left the room, they ran down the stairs of the spire like mad, and the room at the top of the spire became quiet again.

[Kkeureuk.] A cry from the source was heard, perhaps because of the sudden silence.

Ignoring it, I turned back to the window. The outside could not be seen properly because of the dust, but I closed my eyes and expanded my sensing range.

Beyond the spire, even beyond the vicinity of the army. The sensing power, which had continued to expand, stopped at some point as if it had been blocked by a wall. And the walls were slowly approaching the spire. As the walls approached, my sensing power was quickly pushed out.

I was certain the gods were coming.

[Are you really going to do it?]

“Of course.”

I needed experience. The experience of killing a god. No matter how much I fell off compared to the gods of the Temple, even if it was just a boss on the stage, I needed the experience.

I went closer to the source lying on the wall. The source shook his head with an open mouth as I approached.

What was it saying? I thought it was saying ‘Don’t come near’. Did its consciousness come back? It was interesting. Could torture restore the mind of a source that had been previously lost? It was a pity that there was no more time to experiment.

I put my hand into the open chest of the source. After a moment of rummaging around, I was able to find the core of the source: a nucleus that was a little larger than a pebble. I pulled it out.

When the core was pulled out, the source shook and died without making a sound, but the stage didn't end there. The source that needed to be protected was not the horrible-looking monster, but the core in my hand. If the core was taken away, and not protected, the stage would never end.

[May the deceased rest in peace. Please don't face a demon like Warrior in your next life.]

Ignoring what Ahbooboo next to me said, I threw the core into my mouth and gulped it down. It was a little too big to pass through my throat, but it didn't get caught on the way.

[Why would you eat it like that? If you're hungry, go eat, Warrior.]

Who's hungry?

I couldn't fight with the core, so I had to put it in my stomach. Come to think of it, it was kind of weird. My way of thinking had become like Piccolo. [1]

No power was absorbed from the core of the source, since the source was just an imitation of the stage. It was a Tutorial stage where everything seemed real, but it didn't have any power. The only explanation was that the core of this source was a fake.

Of course, the two native gods anxiously seeking the core of this source were not even aware of that. In that sense, the core of the source in my stomach would also serve to protect me because it would be hard to attack me with the idea that the core might break.

Now the gods were close enough to be seen in my sight. I was sure the sorcerers downstairs noticed. In a little while, even ordinary soldiers would be able to see the existence of the gods.

The gods, who were approaching the spire, suddenly stopped. With the spire in the center, the two native gods, who stopped, began to throw their attacks on each other. That was how the fight between the gods began.

* * *

Bang!

Like flowers in the sky, a huge block of ice that was floating, blew up. The world was covered with pitch-black darkness, followed by a blinding light. Every second, every minute, all kinds of disasters that a man could imagine would appear and disappear, repeatedly. Water spurted out of the ground and dived into the sky, and the moisture evaporated in a moment. The evaporated water froze in the air, and the air exploded, giving rise to flames.

The power of gravity was also strange. Some soldiers were crushed to death by the strong pressure, and some slowly rose into the air from zero gravity, then fell again to their death. It was difficult to take even one step ahead. Some soldiers moved more than a hundred meters in a single step, but even then, they fell to the floor and died because of their own speed. As the space split, all sorts of bizarre things rushed out, and a soldier turned into a strange monster. There was a soldier for whom, the time got too slow, hence his heart stopped beating. There was another whose time had become too fast to recognize anything in the world.

The fight between the gods could not simply be defined as who attacked and who defended. It was collapsing the world.

The soldiers begged the gods for mercy while fleeing desperately, but the gods didn't even care about them. In a way, that power wielded by the gods came from those soldiers. The power of the gods was from the faith of the people. People were being massacred by such power, and it wasn't a good sight to see.

"This is pretty bad too, compared to something," I said.

[Something?]

"Neither of the two native gods are interested in me."

I felt like a trophy on the podium. The trophy that the winner would finally get.

“I feel bad. Very bad.”

I shook my hand in the air, and the ceiling of the spire and the wall of the room burst with a bang. I could finally see the whole scene outside.

All the laws of the world were distorted and half the things were destroyed, but they didn't affect me. The gods were not considerate of me.

It was the power of the gods that could apply the power of twisting the laws of the world, without any interference. I called this power 'control'. The power to make a person's brain melt, and could freeze the heart. I could handle that power, too.

It was only a tiny fraction of what the gods were wielding. This power acted as an interference when used by others, but when used by me, it served as a defense against interference. As long as I had control, the gods could not interfere with me directly and physically.

It may be because of that. I couldn't believe the gods' fight was causing so much damage. They couldn't blow each other up. Instead, they were causing an explosion and delivering the shock indirectly. They were unable to interfere with each other.

That was the divine power. To interfere directly with others, and to prevent themselves, the gods, from interfering. This was why there was a huge gap between a person who had power and a person who did not. I was no match for them in the first place. We were playing a completely different game.

However, there was a way to exercise one's power without achieving prestige, and that was the source. I could see why the Gods of the Temple clinged to the source. The source would not only raise the level of the gods, but also to make it possible for the unclassified to kill them.

[Hahaha!]

About four meters long, something big flew towards the spire: a charred-black body and bat wings. It was a recognizable appearance. It was the ancient demon who competed with the archmage, who had been sealed before.

[Hahaha! Give it to me, human! Give up that power! Only if there is any left.]

Finally.

I snapped my fingers lightly, and a blazing blue flame sparked in the devil's head. The devil was tormented by the bluish flame that burned his eyes, nose and mouth. He soon lost his breath.

This was all I had. The degree to which a small spark is generated inside a person's body. On the 57th floor, there was a bigger amount of power, but that was because on the 57th floor I was able to gather faith with a larger base. My power was still limited. Compared to the two native gods who were overturning the world and releasing all kinds of powers, it was no different from shining lanterns in front of the sun.

Help was needed to counter the two native gods. It was not my cup of tea to take others' help, but it was worth it this time.

[The God of Slowness watches over you.]

[God of Adventure gets up in excitement.]

[God of Fight...]

[Ninety-nine gods of the Temple are watching you.]

The gods of the vaccine war began to watch me, but it didn't bother me much. It wasn't a day or two. Instead of wasting time worrying about it, I decided to go ahead with the plan I had prepared.

“Ahbooboo.”

“Yes.”

Ahbooboo’s core, the blue bead, fluttered in the air. The clouds, which were floating and producing bizarre colors, shifted and bright lights shone through, falling on Ahbooboo and me

[Voting begins]

[Yes: 96 No: 3]

The voting session was held. I was sure it was a vote to sanction Ahbooboo. If not that, then it was the God of the Sky. Of course, measures had to be taken.

[God of the Sky designates his new object, Aubutz, as an apostle.]

[The result of the vote will be nullified as the god of the sky had appointed Aubutz as an apostle.]

[Thank you for the meal.]

Note from Imagine:

[1]: The reason Hojae states he’s starting to think like Piccolo is because during Dragon Ball (Not Z) when Piccolo defeated Kami in the world tournament he sealed Kami in a bottle and swallowed him.

Chapter 271

Tutorial 59th floor (6)

At the time of the last Tournament, I had learned that Ahbooboo was directly linked to the God of the Sky. Furthermore, the God of the Sky and Ahbooboo could communicate with each other. It turned out that the God of the Sky tried to find out about me through Ahbooboo. After I found out about it, he spoke to me himself.

It wasn't very pleasant for me or Ahbooboo, whose friendship had been exploited to collect information on me. The God of the Sky acknowledged it, and promised to pay a good price. He was a deity that spoke quite well.

[God of the Sky designates his new object, Aubutz, as an apostle.]

[The result of the vote will be nullified as the God of the Sky has appointed Aubutz as an apostle.]

In the Tutorial, the apostles covered a very large base. There may be many reasons why this was the case, but I think the primary reason was that apostles were somewhat free from restrictions.

Even the gods of the Temple couldn't do what they wanted unless they voted. The only exception would be the level of events within one's new area, as the God of Hope did.

But the apostles who had made a contract with a God were relatively free to move. It was revealed several times through stages. When the gods had to intervene, the challenger was always acting as an apostle, or an actual apostle was summoned.

Perhaps the restrictions were not applied to the gods in their own domain, or to their own believers and their direct subordinates. From a god's point of view, the apostles were not constrained, and at the same time a lot of power could be deployed anywhere. It was what the gods wanted. They wished for the apostles to intervene in what happened outside their sphere of influence: to eradicate the monster of source, and to collect its core.

So, one of the goals of the Tutorial was to foster the apostles. I'd been looking at the challengers the gods may be using as apostles for a long time.

[Oh, my God! I'll now be called Apostle Aubutz of the Sky!] Ahbooboo screamed with excitement.

He must be in a good mood. Well, he didn't seem sincere, but he had positive views on the God of the Sky, the Order, and was quite proud of himself. Even though his appointment as an apostle was a reluctant promotion.

"You know it's all thanks to me, right?"

[Of course, of course. Do you want me to act cute? Hmm?]

I almost swore out loud, but somehow put up with it. Now that he had just become an apostle, even the God of the Sky was staring at him. It was a bit of a shame to call him a bad name and give a slap on his face.

"Then let's go on to the next job."

At this moment, 200,000 humans were being trampled to death like ants, and half of them were already dead.

The battle between the two native gods, who couldn't be seen properly, was fierce. I was worried that the world would really collapse. Half of the humans still survived because the gods had no interest in them. If they decided to deal neatly with the humans and keep fighting, it would take less than a minute for all the remaining humans to be wiped out.

[By the way, are you really going to do that? It's okay to keep it this way. I can assist you.]

How could that be called an aid? If I just jumped into the battle with the gods, it was obvious I could only aid Ahbooboo and not the other way around. Could the terms be changed?

[But it's still a waste. Again, this is a deal. Your arm won't recover no matter how many times you use elixirs.]

"It's alright."

[Still...]

"It's alright." I said it was alright repeatedly, but Ahbooboo was hesitant. I was thinking about how to persuade him, when Seregia, who had been silent, stepped up.

[Quick. I don't want to wait any longer.]

[But Lady Seregia, this is Warrior's arm. His arm is important...]

[It's not my arm, it doesn't matter.] Seregia was indifferent, which was a bit disappointing. [And as Warrior said, it's worth losing an arm.]

That's right.

Clearly, Seregia had a similar way of thinking with me. The cost of consumption was high, but the result was more than enough.

Pain? I didn't care about pain. Inconvenience? It would be withstandable.

[Yes. Well then.] Ahbooboo hardened his mind, and murmured the spell and paid attention to his words. I didn't understand yet, but that was the order of the spell. It was a spell I could learn someday.

[Thank you for the meal, then.]

I was worried about myself, but I didn't think much. At the end of Ahbooboo's words, red solid lines like cobwebs spread on my left arm. My arms quickly turned red, followed by the ever-tightening red lines. A force that seemed to consume the flesh inside, followed by hellish pain gradually consumed my arm, which quickly vanished into thin air. My left arm had been sacrificed in a short time that one would take to get a glass of water.

[Thank you for the meal!!!]

You're very excited.

My arm had been cut to the part adjacent to the shoulder. Blood oozed from the cross section, but thanks to the resilience accumulated so far, the bleeding stopped and the flesh healed quickly. My arm did not regenerate, but the wound did not cause further damage.

I once thought that if I grew up like this, I would become a troll. When I was targeting the first and second floors, I kept thinking of rolling and breaking every time. But before I knew it, I had become a monster that was hard to compare with a troll. It was an interesting appreciation.

Ahbooboo's core, which used to be blue, was now red. In addition to being appointed an apostle, his power had grown beyond comparison, perhaps because of consuming my arm. More importantly, Ahbooboo, I, and the God of the Sky were connected.

A huge shout from the native gods came from afar. I had not seen the native gods before. The aftermath of the power they wielded was the only thing I saw, but now, they were showing themselves.

The images of the two gods were reminiscent of the dragon of the East and the dragon of the West, just with less power and half their size. Now, I could clearly see them fighting.

The native gods were not even interested in me. To them, I was the same as all the other humans that were quickly dying off. Even if I exploded a Zit Pop or turned this area into a sea of fire, there would be no harm to them.

There was that big of a difference between having prestige and being below it. If someone shot me now, I'd be able to stop the bullet without much damage. However, the consumption value was not a complete zero. It was a very small number, about 0.001, if you had to quantify it, but it was safe to round it off to zero.

But those gods could make the blow completely zero. They could interfere with bullets and twist the law. Therefore, in order to attack a divine being, it was necessary to achieve the same level first.

[Challenger, the contract has been made.] the God of the Sky told me through Ahbooboo. Now, I was just waiting for the mana.

Through Ahbooboo, the divine power flowed into my body and I felt overwhelming, unimaginable pleasure. Power that came from outside; not mine. This had raised my standard to the next level.

At the moment when I felt the power that had flowed in, I forgot what I had to do. Now, I could understand why the sources lost themselves and became monsters as soon as they got their power. This was what real power was. One could put away all the missions, anguish, joy, and sorrow they had before. The curtain of power above one's head was so beautiful that it made them abandon their previous lives without hesitation.

No matter what, the past was useless.

As such, the past was meant to be abandoned and get eroded into the present. That's how they were eaten away in the present. They gave up the past and abandoned themselves, and hence, they gave themselves up to power. Strength was always priority. Power, not one's own strength, becomes one's self. The sources were monsters that were consumed by such power.

[Don't confuse purpose and your means.]

[You shouldn't be swayed by a weapon if you don't want to become one.]

It was the advice of the two gods that I had heard under completely different circumstances. Somehow, however, it sounded like advice considering this situation. The two sentences kept ringing in my head, with the sound of a loud bell ringing in the distance, over and over again.

You must not be tempted by this temptation, you must wake up. This... Did I leave a message in my head in case this happened?

I laughed. I shouldn't worry about it.

[Warrior?]

“Yeah?”

[You weren't answering. Are you alright?]

“Of course.” I didn't mean to be eaten up by power, and it was not a matter of mental strength. I would consume and throw it away if necessary, no matter how precious, powerful and great the power may be. I was prepared for that. Power was my weapon, and not the opposite. My goal was too precious to be eaten by power.

[Funny, funny! As you said, you will never be eaten by power. You've already been eaten up by your goal!] exclaimed the God of the Sky.

Either way, I turned my attention back to the native gods.

The two gods were still fighting each other, but now they acknowledged me because of the sudden emergence of power. I was sure they'd find it embarrassing, but instead of paying attention to me, the two gods were continuing to fight, and I didn't like it.

[Go, Contractor. The power of the sky is with you.]

With my right arm, I grabbed the soul sword and swung it sideways. My power spread out along the length of the sword, and it glowed, making a sphere to protect humans from the fighting. The fireballs and ice falling from the sky were blocked. The distortion of space and time that occurred also disappeared.

This time, using a light sword, I threw the sword at the sky. A thin, but extremely hot fire penetrated the sky, landing precisely between the two native gods. The gods finally stopped fighting because of the luminous pillar that stood between them, and glanced at me.

Yeah, that's right.

This was not a time for them to fight with each other. I made this opportunity for myself at the expense of my arm. The two gods had to come at me with full strength.

[Human?]

[Is it a human?]

[Sounds like one.]

The two gods spoke in bewildered voices. There was a huge echo, but there was neither dignity nor pressure in their voice.

[Demon, do not use up power unnecessarily. If you hand it over to me, I will give you everything on this continent.]

[Human, don't listen to him. He will surely kill you as soon as he gains strength. I'm not the one who can't be trusted.]

The native gods began to say something. Somehow, I felt like a lady who was being courted desperately by two people. They treated me as a trophy. Of course, the courtship of the two gods did not bother me at all.

"Sure. Zit Pop." Instead of answering them, I used the technique. Huge light columns pierced the sky, and made everything explode, lighting up the world.

Chapter 272

Tutorial 59th floor (7)

I was out of my mind. The air that had been excessively hot with the heat caused by the Zit Pop already cooled down and the ever-changing weather change caused dizzying gusts of wind.

[Warrior! I have to come forward now.]

“Shut up! No!” I cried out to Ahbooboo, who said he wanted to aid me. Ahbooboo’s words in themselves told me how difficult the situation was.

[You’re going to die!]

I ignored Ahbooboo’s words, even though it was true that things were not going well. It was a battle between the native gods, who had been around for hundreds of thousands of years, and me. Of course, I was at a disadvantage.

The sphere of energy that had appeared in the air continued to move forward. To win this fight, I had to decrease the distance between the gods and me, since there was no chance of winning a long-distance battle.

And as soon as those damn indigenous gods knew that I was a threat, they held hands and attacked together. The two of them had been at each other’s throats just moments before, and now they were in perfect harmony.

Suddenly, the air before me distorted, and a mysterious force grasped my body. I tried to wriggle out using force, but the arm-like power wrapped around me didn’t budge. My left shoulder, which no longer had an arm, felt like it was burning.

The invisible force was unrecognizable to me. Although I risked tearing Talaria's wings, I attempted to fly with them, but the binding didn't unravel. It seemed that it was not physical force, but some kind of barrier.

[Yes! It's a barrier!]

A barrier was most definitely something out of my reach. I always wanted to learn more about barriers, but I had been told that it would not be enough. However, thanks to such an inquiring attitude, there was a straightforward rule that I knew about barriers: the overlapping of multiple barriers created a barrier that functioned in various directions.

Currently, there was only one recently formed barrier holding my body right now. Before the barriers overlapped, it had to be destroyed. The concept of a barrier was probably to restrict my movements with my arm as a medium.

As soon as I finished thinking, I gathered my strength, and a red sphere was placed on my right fist and shoulders.

Damn, I had never used this technique with my shoulders. In this case, I hadn't ever practiced.

“Zit Pop!”

An explosion broke out on both sides. Initially, light and heat should have been generated to cover the whole area, but the surrounding area was just as affected since the explosion was trapped in a space.

Of course, my right arm and my left shoulder burst. If I had formed a Zit Pop on my fingertips and exploded it, I could have minimized or not suffered any damage. However, in the case of my right hand and shoulder, I had formed a Zit Pop on the flesh. It was impossible for there to be no damage.

[Time suspended]

When I was about to break down and finally get out of it, a new difficulty appeared. The space where the barrier had been was strangely disturbed, and a powerful force emerged. I didn't know what the hell it was, nor did I dare even to think to look directly into the space. I could sense a little hole in the air that sucked everything in.

What is that?

The force pulling me from both sides made me feel like my body was in the midst of being torn apart.

How many seconds can I hold out? No, it probably won't be in seconds.

Suddenly, I felt a layer of power over my body. I assumed it was Ahbooboo's, but it ended up being the God of the Sky's power. Thanks to this, I relaxed in a situation where I was about to be torn to death.

[Contractor, we must get out of this quickly.]

[Twist the space!]

[Not possible. That degree of intervention-]

[No. Not that one. The space on my side. Don't twist both sides, just one! To reverse the rotation of the two areas!]

There was no certainty, and we didn't even know what the mysterious power was. I rambled, but the God of the Sky managed to understand what I wanted.

The next moment, my body shot forward at a speed that was hard for even me to comprehend. Although I was using a time-reducing technique, I broke through the air currents and thought that I might be flying into space. Fortunately, the speed dropped sharply. Without any impact, my body came to a complete standstill, floating in the air. It was the power of the God of the Sky. This time, I couldn't help but say thank you.

[No need! But I'll take your greetings!]

What are you saying?

[Warrior, I did that...]

I could vaguely hear Ahbooboo's voice from a distance.

[It's my power anyway!]

The voice of the God of the Sky was heard, too, and he seemed to be more shameless than I thought.

[Come down slowly. The distorted space has been sealed, but it takes some time to disappear completely. You'd better not come down here until then.] he spoke.

I decided to take a breather for a while, as advised by the God of the Sky. That was a perilous experience. I felt like I came back after shaking hands with the Grim Reaper, and not my great-grandfather, who had passed away over the river of life and death.

[Warrior, if I help a bit, the odds will go up a little.]

No, it's better not to.

I sacrificed one arm for this opportunity, so I had to learn and go through more.

Then two native gods began to rise towards where I was, and I was sure they were thinking of ending me and establishing a bond.

[Warrior...]

I needed more time, and although I was adjusting quickly, if I got a little more used to it, I'd be able to find out more.

[Jengent]

The sky was burning.

Hail as big as rocks poured down and melted in the air, and water flooded in.

The battle between the gods and the ancient demon was phenomenal. While I was watching, I wondered if what I was seeing was all just an illusion. The original plan to attack those gods with cannon fire seemed ridiculous. When he heard my plan, the demon had made a preposterous face because he knew how ridiculous it was. It was evident that my soldiers and I were of no use in the upcoming battle against the gods.

A sense of shame overwhelmed me. When the capital fell, I was stationed in the neighborhood. When I first received a request for assistance about a disturbance in the capital, I was worried about the people. Recently, many had been using explosives to deal a blow to the city capital and the royal palace. Naturally, I predicted such a disturbance. It was all the more so because the radio was soon cut off.

The enemy must have attacked the communication tower first, so I was glad I got the message before that. Thinking so, I led an army to the capital.

When I arrived at the capital, the first thing I saw was the dark sky filled with black smoke. The capital city spewed black smoke like a chimney, and the sky's original color was masked.

People ran out through the gates, pushing each other in order to get home. The sight of tens of thousands of people running out was devastating. Every time ten people escaped out of the gate, a hundred people were crushed to death elsewhere. I didn't even think of getting a unit through the gate and just tried to calm the troops down somehow and reduce casualties.

But soon, I could understand people's feelings, too. Why they were so terrified, and why they had utterly lost their reason. All sorts of things were falling over our heads: flames, ice chunks, liquids that melted flesh, monsters we'd never seen before, and fragments of sharp metal.

People were all scrambling forward so as not to die.

Only then did I realize that it was not just a scream that came out of people's mouths. It was an appeal. They prayed to God as they died. They prayed for mercy and forgiveness.

Some parents gave up escaping and prayed for the safety of their little children. There was a sorcerer who cried, "What in the world is their sin?" Not a moment later, a rock fell over his head, smashing him to pieces.

The popular belief was that all this a heavenly punishment given by the gods was because the people were not faithful enough.

There were many kinds of clans, and the gods were fair to all of them. Fairly indifferent, that is.

It was easy to see that the gods were not punishing people. They were quarreling with each other. Their bodies could not even be seen with the naked eye, but I could sense it. The powers they wielded were directed at each other in the sky. What fell over the capital was nothing but a remnant of their forces.

That was how people died. I couldn't reach where the gods were fighting over the capital, and I couldn't get inside the gate. In that situation, I had no choice but to do my best to rescue people.

I saved people like crazy. I was running around, yelling at soldiers, gathering people, and clearing up the collapsed walls' rubble. Perhaps because I was so stressed, my memories after that were all mixed up.

When I came to my senses, I was in a city many miles away from the capital with less than 2,000 survivors, and more than half the soldiers dead.

Too many people had died. None of the clans in the capital city had survived, and no royalty or noble, who was close to the capital, could escape. The capital, which was the start of the kingdom, was ruined.

Just like that, the kingdom collapsed. Territories along the border had been taken over by other countries. It was clear that the other lands would soon be claimed, too.

As general commander of the Capital Defense Force, I became a sort of centerpiece. The people who were in a weak position gathered around me. All the royal troops assembled except for the soldiers stationed on the border. The royal family outside the capital stepped up further as they supported me, and the neutral territories came in one by one.

I became increasingly busy, and my sadness and longing faded away. Instead, anger grew in its place.

Many days had passed as I continued to scream at documents and people's faces when a particular piece of news came in. There was a report about the confrontation between the archmage and the demon. The winner of the match, the archmage, was seen turning into a monster. The observing sorcerer said that the reason the gods devastated the capital might have been to take over the monster-turned sorcerer.

I immediately led the whole army that night to the place where the monster had been seen, with all available troops and cannons. People stopped me, saying that instead of searching and capturing monsters, I should gun them down.

I thought the gods might chase the monster.

As we advanced with great force, we also sent a large number of troops from other countries. The competition got fierce, but I thought it wasn't bad. The more troops gathered, the better. I didn't know if I could be done without them.

And then I met an ancient demon. I recognized it at a glance. That was the ancient demon I had only ever heard of.

The devil only kidnapped commanders and sorcerers from each country without any difficulty. Looking at him, I thought he might help me fight against the gods. If I could get the help of the demon, I would offer my soul to him.

That was what had happened, but the gods appeared, and my thoughts changed again. No human could directly face the power of the gods without being torn down. No matter how powerful the cannons were, no matter how many soldiers there were, they were helpless before the power of the gods.

It was obvious. I had led the soldiers here and killed them by my baseless judgement. I didn't even think of bringing back the number of injured people and just wanted to kill the gods.

Then, an unknown power covered the area. A large sphere blocked all kinds of disasters falling from the sky, and an explosion ripped through the space. The explosion did little to us, perhaps because of the protective sphere.

Only after the dust and light cleared a bit did I notice that a man was flying in the sky. It was him—the ancient demon.

I could see the demon was protecting the people and fighting the gods.

His glimmering wings and attacks against the gods seemed too holy for him to be a demon. Instead, he looked like a hero from all angles much like the Founding King, who, when a great flood covered the continent, destroyed the great monster that caused the flood and established the kingdom.

The demon was just like the king, whose mythical achievements make me believe that he was not human.

“If you don't need my soul, what do you want from me?” Back in the spire, I had asked the demon, but his answer was somewhat unexpected.

“Collect faith,” he said.

“Faith?”

“Uhh... Let people cheer me on.”

Cheer? You want me to cheer for the demon? I couldn't understand.

“It’s better to get people’s support, isn’t it?” was all the demon had said. If he was the demon, could he do that? He protected the people and rushed towards the gods to protect us, but all he wanted in return was the people’s support.

There was a commotion around with the surviving soldiers were shouting at the sky, and some kneeling and praying. I stretched out my neck and grabbed a soldier by his collar unknowingly.

“Do you want to pray to God in this situation? You moron!” I screamed at him.

The soldier looked at me with teary, bloodshot eyes and shouted, “I’m praying for that hero!”

For whom?

“All I can do is pray for him!”

I let go of the soldier’s collar with a muddled mind. The soldier immediately knelt again, closed his eyes, and began to pray.

I picked up the radio with my trembling hands. A message was delivered to all the commanders under my command.

“Cheer and pray for that hero. He is the Founding King, the founder of our kingdom! The Founding King has returned to stop gods who are fascinated with madness and attack humans!”

As the soldier said, the only thing we could do was pray for that demon.

* * *

“It’s the best.” I had no choice but to murmur when I saw the gods approaching me.

The core of the sorcerer’s source was in my stomach, along with the core of the source given by the God of Remorse asleep in my mana circuit.

Massive forces were gathering into these two cores. “This is indeed the power of the source.”

Chapter 273

Tutorial 59th floor (8)

“This is the source.”

[Yes.] The God of the Sky answered my murmur.

The power of the archmage’s core and the God of Remorse’s core converged to form an overwhelming power.

I was flooded with more power than my previous self. It was as if a new force had covered me once again. It was a sensation similar to when I had first accepted the power of the God of the Sky.

The intense pleasure made me dazed, my mind filled with a mixture of gratification, superiority over the past, and enthusiasm created by excitement.

[Warrior!] exclaimed Ahbooboo.

I didn’t answer.

I could feel the desperation through connection with those who were sharing their power. In the whirlwind of emotions, my consciousness was almost swept away. I was able to hold onto myself in the midst of this mess, still feeling as though I were in a washing machine. This was the third experience following the 18th and 57th-floor stages, so I had some experience knowing how to protect myself.

The problem was not the people’s feelings, but mine. I couldn’t control my own feelings.

[Warrior! Can you hear my voice?] Ahbooboo’s voice rang in my head, but I couldn’t answer him. I couldn’t afford to.

[Warrior!]

The man with supernatural powers from the 57th floor came to mind, and I could understand his feelings. With this much power, anyone could have succumbed to greed.

I, who held Ahbooboo in my hand, was swayed by his mighty power. I became arrogant and aggressive. It was the same when I got my powers. The same was true even now when the source was obtained. The problem was that, in the case of the source, power would go beyond the control of its master, and take away their sanity.

When I thought about it, my heart ached, and it suddenly got hot. I could feel something breaking through my bones and ripping through my muscles and flesh. When I looked down, a thin blade pierced my chest, but someone hadn't stabbed me from behind. This blade erupted through my chest from within my body. The power that flowed into my body turned into a blade.

The supernatural being from back then came to mind. My whole body had been covered with tentacles. I was not a tentacle but a blade. I thought it was far better compared to the tentacles.

The next moment, dozens of blades rose, covering my arms, legs, and torso. My veins, as well as tendons, broke open, and blood flowed like a waterfall. But even at this moment, I felt more excited than afraid or anxious about the blade that was piercing through my body.

Even in the process of literally becoming a sword and not being a human, I could feel that I was becoming more powerful and complete.

The blades, sticking out like hedgehogs, began to expand. Blades rose over one another, again and again, making a pattern of sorts. In that instant, the blades were not like a hedgehog's back, but a bird's nest or a fence of barbed wire.

I was unable to move because of pain caused by nerve and muscle damage caused by the blades.

[...!]

I could hear Ahbooboo's voice in the distance. Now I couldn't understand what he was saying. Before, I couldn't comprehend since it felt as if he were shouting from afar. Maybe my connection with Ahbooboo had weakened, or my consciousness had just faded.

What Ahbooboo was saying could be predicted. He was trying to stop this for me, who was being eaten by the source. He'd tell me to either disconnect from the source or force the stage to be cleared somehow.

He shouldn't say so.

[If that's what you want.] said the God of the Sky, and Ahbooboo's presence disappeared. My connection with him had disappeared entirely.

"God of the Sky."

[What's wrong?]

Ahbooboo disappeared. The source was tearing my body to shreds and trying to run towards the world, but I couldn't care more about it. Before that, I had to question the God of the Sky about Ahbooboo.

"What happened to Ahbooboo?"

[Why do you ask that? It looks like you're about to be eaten, so focus on that.]

"Explain."

[He's my apostle. It's none of your business what I do to him.] was what the God of the Sky said.

And I couldn't agree with that.

Ahbooboo was my property. He was my sword and my power. Ahbooboo's disappearance meant that my strength had been lost.

[Aubutz is still by your side. I just held him back for a while.]

It was a relief. I was worried that the God of the Sky might have sent Ahbooboo back to where he was.

[By the way, you're extraordinarily rude. You're like the man who would say that 'Your daughter is mine from now on' in front of your father-in-law.]

Ahbooboo was not my lover, but my sword and he belonged to me. Moreover, a woman like Ahbooboo would be a no-go.

The God of the Sky smiled slowly and said, [You're even playing games with me, so I guess you're rational. I thought so, but honestly, I'm a little surprised.

[Shouldn't we focus on controlling power now? Your power is trying to free itself from your body.]

That was a reasonable remark. I had no intention of letting the power of the source deviate from me. Of course, I didn't mean to let it eat my body and my mind.

* * *

The strength of the source was similar to that of the gods in connecting with people. My sanity and reason were in danger of being eaten by that overwhelming power.

There was also a difference. The source was not the kind of power that twisted the law to create miracles and exercise it on others. Instead, it literally ate and destroyed a being. It was that kind of power.

"Move."

The blade shook, and I felt it. It was just a dull move, but I felt it. It was amazing. I could feel the blade just like any other part of my body. I could even sense the fluctuating feelings of the blade.

[More power is needed.]

[You have to eat more.]

[You must protect me from my enemies.]

[All enemies must be killed and destroyed.]

[I am imperfect.]

[I need more to be complete.]

*Shut up, you little b*tch.*

I agreed that higher power was needed, but it could not beat the native gods with the form of a huge wire fence. So, be under my control quietly.

Sometimes you want to do the opposite of what your mind says. I wanted to take a run outside, but I had to sit at my desk for hours to study. I wanted to fall asleep, but I had to practice an extra hour for tomorrow. I wanted to faint right away, but it was time to endure the pain and continue the battle.

This was a similar situation. The desire for expansion of power rises, but I only had to control it well to defeat the enemy. The blade, the source, was only part of my power.

The blades stretched all over the place were gathered together. The blade soon clumped together to form a huge mass that made a giant blade.

I shot off at one of the native gods who was watching me stupidly. The gods had watched me quietly, and since their purpose was the core of the source in the first place, the birth of a new source was something to be pleased with.

And I didn't want to leave such a gap alone. I'd do a little more flexing of strength, a bit of practice after getting used to it, but I'd definitely not miss a surprise attack.

*Go to hell, you pathetic b*stards!*

The native god, who was my target, hastily formed a shield over his body to try to defend himself. However, due to the lack of preparation at all, the defense was too weak.

The sound of a huge glass breaking was heard as I broke through the shield, and the blade pierced through the shield and into the body of that god.

“Argh!” A native god, reminiscent of an Asian dragon, howled. It was a chilling scream, but I felt good hearing it.

Finally, I had dealt damage to the native god. It was a bit of a cowardly attack, but it meant a lot to have caused damage. If the damage was accumulated like this, he could be killed.

As soon as I judged so, I moved without delay. I wondered if I could use the Zit Pop technique in a situation where I became a huge blade, and not a human body, but I tried it once.

Bam! Bam!

Quaaaaang!

Contrary to my concerns, it exploded so smoothly. Rather, the explosion was faster and smoother than it was before. If I knew this would happen, I would have made the explosion stronger.

The native god screamed loudly. Since the deeply embedded blade had suddenly exploded, no matter what god he was, the damage was bound to be great.

[Time suspended]

I stopped attacking for a moment. There was something to think about.

The blade that became my body was intact with the fire of Zit Pop. It was obvious that the blade wouldn't melt. Not because the melting point of the blade was high, but the power of the blade and the fire were essentially the same. Both were made up of the power of the source, and at the same time, they were my power.

I had to loosen my body, and make the metal take the same shape as my body.

Soon, I could form a metal body that looked exactly the same as my previous body. There was no need to fine-tune the joints, blood vessels, mana circuit or organs. I could perfectly shape my body just by thinking.

I raised my hand. My face was reflected on the metal palm. This was definitely a silver surface...

Then the other native god's attack flew in. Instead of retorting all kinds of attacks one by one, I just flew again toward the native god, who was struck by a Zit Pop and was unable to come to his senses. The native god didn't even think of stopping me.

I held down the body of the other native god. Instead of attacking, I stopped his movements. If this was the case, he wouldn't be able to attack.

Blood spewed out continuously, and the native god shook himself, making it difficult to keep his body down. I managed to hold on to something. I didn't know what it was exactly, but I had probably grabbed one of the ribs of the native god and hung on.

I had sorted out what I was thinking. Obviously, I was poor at controlling the source. But more than anything, if it was something I could get used to, I knew I could do it. The question that remained was whether it was possible to get used to this.

[Of course, it's possible. It's another matter whether you can do it or not.] replied the God of the Sky.

Since he had guaranteed, now it had to be tried.

A metal hand came forward, with a flame hovering above it. This hand was not a human body's. It was unlike the human body, which was made of blood and flesh, and an average temperature of 36.5 degrees. But it couldn't be termed metal either. It was an entity made from the source's power.

The source could be in the form of metal. If it could take the form of metal, wouldn't it be possible for it to take the form of fire? As soon as I thought so, my hands, which were in the form of cold metal, started burning. To be exact, it became a burning flame itself. Soon, not just my hands, but also my entire body got covered with fire.

I recited quietly, feeling a sense of accomplishment. "Burn."

My body was set on fire, and the brilliant flames held on to every part of my body.

Chapter 274

Tutorial 59th floor (9)

[The God of Light is excited!]

[The God of Light is excited!]

[The God of Light cheers!]

[The God of Light is on someone's head...]

[Voting begins]

[Yes: 61 votes No: 1 vote]

“It’s the best.” As I said a little while ago, I mumbled once more because this was really the best.

The explanation of the Spirit King, who mentioned that the source could raise the level, was on spot. It really was.

From below, a dull thud resounded. It was the sound of the native god falling down. No matter what kind of god he was, he wouldn’t be able to handle the explosion within his body. The native god fell without even screaming.

Now, there was only one native god left, who seemed to have lost his fighting spirit. The battle did not seem to carry on. Meanwhile, I thought it was good that he didn’t run away.

[I can't run away. I might lose something more precious than my life.]

“What do you mean by that?”

[There's a lot of people watching from down there. If I show defeat, their respect for me as a god will plunge. The supply of faith will get blocked, and as a result, we may lose our dignity.]

You had no qualms about slaughtering tens of thousands of believers, but you can't run away in front of them? All for reputation?

It didn't make sense.

[That's how it works. Even if there was a massacre, in a hundred years or so, it will be glorified and recorded for the victor. No, maybe even in just ten years.]

I didn't know that. But, I didn't really care. I cared more about my condition than whatever that might happen to the native god.

My body had become a burning flame itself. I raised my hand and looked at the slowly swaying flame. It turned into a blade, and then a flame. On the 57th floor, the source had tentacles as opposed to a blade.

Then, of course, other forms other than fire would be possible. I felt like I shouldn't do anything right now.

[Because you're not familiar with it.]

For example, if you wanted to use other attributes, you needed more skill. It was more comfortable to understand it through the example of a game.

The next thing that bothered me was my left arm, which was attached to my body when it was on fire.

[I'll let you know about that. There won't be anyone to tell you.]

Originally I was going to ask Kirikiri, but I kept my mouth shut. I wanted answers, after all.

[This is because the spirit body, when apart from the body, is in that form.]

Spirit body?

[It's a container for the soul. Since you have shed away the shell of your body, getting control of the spirit body would be the next step.]

Spirit body... Should I instinctively think of this form as my body and my own consciousness? I didn't know yet.

It was reasonable to say that I had taken off my human shell. I had turned into a fire and no longer had a human body.

[For a human being, it wouldn't have been easy. In your case, there was no trigger, but I think you were ready to throw it away. Amazing, amazing. This is new.] the God of the Sky muttered.

What are you talking about?

Hell difficulty was a level where you can't proceed if you're attached to your body in the first place. It was beneficial in many ways to think of it as a properly stocked consumable product.

Come to think of it, that native god was still in shape.

He had a monster-like appearance similar to that of the Eastern Dragon in its ferocious evolution. He remained in the same form when he fired at me with numerous powers and when he was hit back by me. Obviously it was a huge, powerful, and dignified form, but that form was their frame and limit.

That was what I'd been thinking about when I felt the remaining native god moving again. It seemed to me that he had enough defenses, and now he was looking for a means to attack me again.

Was it a barrier? It was similar to the power I had experienced earlier.

I'd been thinking for a while, so I was sure I had plenty of time to prepare.

I decided to put aside my worries for the moment and subdue the god first. What would it be like if I let my guard down and let him turn the tables on me?

I walked slowly toward the native god. With every step, the fire spread around with a roar.

As I approached him, I gradually picked up speed, from walking to running. When I was close enough, I jumped, moving my body forward at the same time. Then, I leaned down slightly and curled myself into a ball, and with all my might, I flung myself towards him. My body, which flew like a bullet, broke through the numerous defenses set up by the native god and even penetrated his body.

Quaaaaaang!

I penetrated his body and stopped. Looking back, fragments of the shield, flesh, and blood of that god were spread out where I was. It was as if a firecracker of blood and flesh had burst before my eyes. It wasn't a very good sight.

The body of the native god had a huge hole in it, and it wasn't just a bullet hole. I wondered if he would die like that. Fortunately, he didn't.

As expected, he was strong enough, but this was the best when I was still testing things out. A simple headbutt had done this. It was tantamount to suicide for normal people, but if they had the perfect combo, they would not lose anytime, anywhere. Just like how I used to use Talaria's wings and Blink combo all the time.

The native god began to shiver like the other god who had fallen to the fire earlier. I laughed to myself at the sight.

[Are you having fun? Unexpectedly, I thought you'd be sad that you stopped your fight too soon.] said the God of the Sky.

Come to think of it, the gods thought my biggest feature was struggling, which was not really the case.

“There are two subjects that are not actually dead, so I’m not disappointed.”

There was nothing fixed. Just checking each and every thing that popped into my head would give me enough results.

Damn, I’m so happy.

[I’m very sorry about this.]

“What?” When I asked back, a strange thing happened to the world. The empty air above cracked, and someone walked out: a divine figure.

[The Tutorial intervenes]

It had also happened on the 57th floor. The gods dispatched a divine figure and the stage was terminated.

I had defeated the native gods just some moments before, yet it was a colorless victory. My power shrank. The divine figure, who walked through the crack, exuded an incomparable presence compared to the two native gods.

But the problem was not that. With the entry of a new character, the stage would end.

[You’ve cleared floor 59th of the Tutorial’s Hell Difficulty.]

[The 98 gods of the Temple are watching over you.]

[God of Light pouts his lips.]

*No, you wicked b*stards. You're gonna end it here? Are you out of your mind?*

I didn't even want much. I admitted that I was greedy, and wanted a week's time. If not, then one day. No, even half a day.

A portal appeared under my feet and began to emit white light. *What bullsh*t! Just another hour. Hey, just one hour!!*

There were native gods over there, and humans were connected to me. I wanted to see the archbishop again and test my powers more.

I'd never know whether my desperation was heard or not as the portal began to spin slowly.

*Wow, isn't this too much? You son of a b*tch!*

I can't go! No, I'm not going! I managed to hold out so as to not be teleported, somehow using my powers. The portal can fail if the user operates the mana. No matter what god it was, it should be enough for me to hold on with the power of the God the Sky and the source.

* * *

I couldn't stand it. Damn it.

The place where I was teleported to was full of darkness. It was a strange place.

It was a place where there was not even a handful of light. Nothing was visible, and most probably, nothing was there. It was similar to the temple of the God of Slowness, full of emptiness, but there was something else. A part of the darkness was moving. Darkness, which at first glance seemed like a speck, was trying to penetrate my body. It was trying to draw my powers.

[Give up.]

[Give up!]

*Don't f*ck with me. I won't give up anything! This is my power! You can't take this away from me!*

“It's my power!” I urged.

I couldn't figure out the situation, but I understood well that someone was trying to take away my power.

I held on desperately. But soon, I felt something rip off.

“God of the Sky! Help! Help!”

[Sorry, Contractor, I can't help you, or my power would be crushed.]

I heard the words of the God of the Sky and felt something slipping out of my body. The next moment, I was moved from a dark space to a bright place.

A cool breeze blew in the sunny weather. There were small hills and half-hidden in the grass, and rabbit ears were seen poking out.

It was Kirikiri's field.

“Long!”

“...Long?”

“Long time no see!” Kirikiri welcomed me with a naive smile.

Certainly, it'd been a long time.

“...yes.”

“Hehe.” Kirikiri was laughing cheerfully, hopping around, but I was too distracted by my mixed feelings.

The fact that I was upset by the opportunity I had missed to experiment wasn’t the main problem. Rather, I felt a sense of exhaustion due to the power of the God of the Sky and the power of the source. And the inconvenience of having my left arm missing from my recovered body. It wasn’t just my left arm though.

Every little movement and each breath was uncomfortable.

“C’mon!”

Even so, the power of the source from the 59th floor was clearly my strength. Damn it. A fit of anger overtook me. In a rage, I kicked the dirt floor. A hollow hole appeared where I had kicked it.

Kirikiri approached with a surprised look. Then she grumbled and began to fill out the hole with her hands. I felt sorry for no reason and squatted down with Kirikiri.

* * *

“Have you calmed down now?”

“A little.”

Lying on the floor and looking at the sky, I seemed to have calmed down a little. I thought I’d be calmer if Kirikiri hadn’t been sitting on my stomach with her legs crossed.

“You said there was a difference between the gods.”

“Yes, I did.”

I could feel it this time. The two native gods on the 59th floor really felt like gods to me. However, I realized that they were much weaker than the God of the Sky or the divine being that had appeared at the last minute.

“It may all look the same to people, but the gods have their own complicated relationships. There are lower gods, upper gods, mixed hostilities and friendships. There are times when the hierarchy is too much.”

It was over a wall that looked the same to all from the bottom, but it wasn't the same. There was a long way to go. I liked that.

“Heh.”

Well, I was still growing. I wouldn't stop, and my hardships would continue, but I was confident that I could somehow endure and move on.

“About the gods.” Kirikiri was talking to me. It was unusual for Kirikiri to start talking about information first. Even more so, since it was expensive information about the gods.

“There's a lot of information left. Anyway, getting help directly from the gods isn't very good in the long run.”

I suppose so.

This time, I went a little too far because I thought I would have a chance to fight against the native gods.

Enough to bear with the loss of giving my left arm to Ahbooboo.

“Especially the God of the Sky.” Kirikiri poked at the sky god. “He's a god who looks down at everything.”

[God of the Sky expresses discontent.]

“I know.”

Chapter 275

Tutorial 60th Floor (0-1)

“I know.” I knew the reason why the God of the Sky was doing me a favor. I couldn’t get a favor without knowing it. I came into contact with him after I fully knew about him.

“Don’t get too close to the God of the Sky. He is a god who looks down on everything. On the contrary, everyone has to look up to him,” Kirikiri explained, ignoring my words. “If he likes you, you...”

“I have to look up at him.”

Kirikiri nodded at my words. “It may be taken for granted to look up to God, but it is not. Some need to be aware of it.”

In a way, it was natural. How many believers had never doubted the existence of God? If there was anyone who had never doubted a single thing in his life, that person would be even more strange.

“And the God of the Sky knows that you’re aware of the meaning of struggle, overthrow, and challenge. I know that and I like you.”

[The God of the Sky expresses his discontent.]

“I know you do. After all, you’re telling me not to trust the God of the Sky because he’s insane,” I said.

You can tell he’s crazy just by looking at the new Ahbooboo. In fact, how many of the gods were sane? They were all idiots.

The sane ones included the God of Devotion, the God of Devotion, and the God of Devotion. Damn, there's only the God of devotion.

Kirikiri pouted out her mouth. "Heng. No, that's not true."

"What do you mean no? Have some cake." I bought a cake from the store window.

"Yes, I'll eat!"

It'd been a long time, so I left the Kirikiri with the cake, seeing her unusually fierce behavior. I had a lot of thoughts to clear up. Perhaps the first thing to sort out was the information about the source.

The core of the source, obtained from the archmage, that appeared in the stage was not just an imitation. The beings in the stage felt that the fake core was full of source power, but I couldn't feel any power, so I thought the core was a fake made for stage use. But while fighting with the native gods, the power of the source that had gathered in the core, which showed that it was not.

The core of the archmage was thought to be just an empty vessel, not an imitation. Indeed, when the forces of sources gathered together, the core of the archmage faithfully served the role of the vessel, and the beings on the stage just didn't know that the core was empty. It was an interesting fact.

On the 57th floor, a monster of the source had emerged from the stage where superhumans appeared. I had seen it with my own eyes: the process of the superhuman becoming the source. It occurred to me that perhaps there was a real core inside the monster which was full of source power. If so, it was understandable that as soon as I got rid of the monster, the stage ended in a hurry. It may not be the case, but it was a topic to think about.

Something had taken away the core after I cleared the 59th-floor stage. If it was a significant power outside the stage, then the Tutorial could in fact be a fishing farm of sources. In this case, a new point was added to the design purpose of the Tutorial, the training of apostles and the eradication of monsters.

“There are many purposes. There are hundreds of gods, so there are a hundreds of purposes,” said Kirikiri while digging into the cake.

A hundred purposes. That was something I had been thinking about before. Perhaps the 100th-floor stage of the Tutorial was designed by all the gods.

Each stage had very different themes, and its goals had changed little by little. Above all, certain gods showed great interest in only one stage, and little interest in others.

“Yes. That’s right.”

If all the gods had designed the 100th-floor Tutorial stage, as Kirikiri said, they had multiple purposes. The gods, who were interested in the training of apostles, designed a stage that would help them. The god who liked the Tutorial would design a stage such that the challenger would get as much from the Tutorial as possible. On the contrary, a cruel god may design a stage as difficult as possible for a challenger to clear. The gods who weren’t very interested would have taken charge of the residential area, and the gods who weren’t even interested in that would give guidance to the Dragon. They’d divide based on source-collecting and handling the normal stages.

“Is what I thought right?”

“Uh-huh. Except we have to match the theme and the difficulty.”

If the difficulty level was not high enough, it seemed that it could be adjusted according to the theme to a certain extent.

“If I had known this in advance, it would have been very helpful.”

Just knowing which god had designed the stage would help me predict some of their goals and orientations.

“Heng, I can’t tell you that,” said Kirikiri, raising her finger. She wanted to look stern, but she didn’t look like that at all because of the whipped cream she had all over her fingers and face.

It was new information, but it wouldn't help right now. Whether the source I collected from the 59th floor was significant outside the stage or not was what I wanted to know. I didn't ask if making the source was possible only through the tutorial stages. She wouldn't be able to answer me anyway. It was a matter for me to think about alone.

"Please answer me"

The nucleus of the archmage was gone, but the nucleus that the God of Remorse had given remained. Of course, all the power gained from the 59th floor was gone.

I'd been trying to deal with this power for a long time. My lack of ability had not prevented me from dealing with this nuclear power. The core given by the God of Remorse had only a tiny amount of power. It had only a small amount of power to be swayed by, so I couldn't use it. Of course, I was able to easily adapt to the source on the 59th floor thanks to that, but I didn't know if it was worth the punishment of the God of Remorse himself.

Next, the existence that took away my source.

"I can't tell you about that either."

I guessed so. Thanks to that, I had added yet another goal to accomplish. I didn't know who or what it was, but I'd be looking forward to meeting it later.

"How innocent and reckless."

It was not a very reckless plan compared to the original plan. It was such a reckless plan to free the world of the Tutorial stages.

"Oh, so you do know."

Of course I knew. I set a goal while thinking about the possibility of success and the risks. I knew how tough my goal was.

"Ahem, ahem," Kirikiri coughed. When I came out of my thoughts, Kirikiri had already eaten up the whole cake, and was standing up from her seat.

“Do you have something to say?”

“Yes,” Kirikiri spoke with a serious face.

Whenever Kirikiri, who was always smiling, looked serious, I always got nervous about what was going on.

“It’s about the next stage.”

Next stage? The 60th floor was just a residential area, right?

* * *

Oh, come to think of it, the store window would be updated on the 60th floor. I once asked if there were any items that could restore Ahbooboo. Kirikiri only answered that it was possible, but she didn’t tell me exactly what was needed.

“No, no. That’s not it.”

“What do you want to say then?”

Was there anything new to celebrate going up to the 60th floor? Like a new system window? I’d like to have liked a personal skill window. There was a stat window that didn’t help, but the skills on the bottom were so long that it was uncomfortable to read.

“Uh... it does change. First of all, after the 60th floor, the level of difficulty will increase significantly.”

That was good news. Very good news.

“There’s going to be a stage with 50 people and not just 10 people.”

That wouldn’t be a party stage, but a raid stage. A raid boss worthy of fifty men’s strength. I was already excited.

“The stage concept will change a lot too.”

“How?”

Kirikiri scratched her chin. “The 40th floor had a lot of stages about the role of apostles, and the 50th floor was about apostles, gods, and sources, right?”

“Yeah,” I confirmed.

“So, the combat difficulty wouldn’t have been so high. From the 60th floor, the concept changes back to what it used to be.”

What it used to be?

“Any kind of information you needed to get through the stage, will be gone. You’ll have to struggle to survive the moment you enter the stage. Instead of having to just follow the story of the stage, the difficulty of attack and survival will be greatly increased.”

It sounded great. I wanted to get more information, and there were still a lot of new things that I could get with the information. However, I had a greater desire to be stronger.

“The problem is... the 61st floor after that comes after the 60th floor.”

“The 61st floor is a different sort of stage.”

Honestly, I was confident. Confident that I could clear the 61st floor. It wasn’t that Kirikiri had never been anxious. Every time I had a hard time, I did not fail to clear the stage.

“Heng...” Kirikiri wriggled her fingers.

What kind of stage was that? My curiosity and enthusiasm surged.

“That’s... a stage that needs more than two challengers...”

“Two-Party Stage?”

“No. It’s a stage for 50 people, but we need at least two people to proceed.”

My body suddenly got cold. It was as if someone poured cold water on me.

“How can I clear it alone?”

“Not possible. The progress itself is blocked.”

Ah, God damn it. I couldn’t help but swear.

“What makes you think that?”

“As I’ve told you before, we didn’t know a human being would come all this way alone. And when someone reaches a floor, naturally more latecomers follow. Usually, the 30th and 60th floors are the same residential areas where those latecomers pile up... So...”

Are you talking about stagnant challengers? Certainly, there was such a section for Normal difficulty and Hard difficulty. In a residential area, or just before a particularly difficult stage, a section of challengers huddled together.

In Hell difficulty level, the 60th floor was like that. In the second half of the 50th floor, the Dragon designated the right stage for each, so the attack itself wasn’t difficult. From the 61st floor, the level of difficulty was rapidly rising. Of course, it was expected for stagnant challengers to gather on the 60th floor, and for the 61st floor to have a theme.

“That’s how it is.”

Only me and Hyung-jin were seriously targeting the stage in Hell Difficulty, but the difference in our stage levels was huge. I knew the Hell difficulty wasn’t designed to be expected for humans to clear it even more so just one human alone, but this was too much.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Hyung-jin, what floor are you on?]

[Lee Hyung-jin, 13th floor: 13th floor, Hyung.]

Why was he still on the 13th floor? Damn it.

[Lee Hyung-jin, 13th floor: As you said, the 13th floor is good, so I challenged it many times. I can get to know the monks quickly. They like to teach and study together, so I'm learning hard.]

Hyung-jin was growing steadily. He was steady but very slow, so it was hard to complain. I was the one who told him to practice because the 13th floor would be a great help for growth.

Anyway, if what Kirikiri said is true, Hyung-jin was actually needed to clear the 61st floor. Damn it, the more I thought about it, the angrier I grew. It may take a few more years for Hyung-jin to come up to the 60th floor. A year? It was obvious that two years would be enough. I could just train myself to death for the rest of the time.

I let out a deep sigh. I should sort it out right now. Going up to the 60th floor, settling down in the residential area, and training will be my only daily routine. In my spare time, I should focus on Hyung-jin's growth. I should not only give advice from time to time but also raise Hyung-jin. I needed to make sure he could get to the 60th floor safely as soon as possible.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Hyung-jin, are you free now? I have to talk to you...]

I tried to send a message to Hyung-jin, but Kirikiri grabbed me by the arm.

"I'm not done yet. Don't send that message."

Once again, I felt my heart pounding. It was very rare for Kirikiri to go beyond advising and restrain my actions.

"...What is it? What else is there?"

"First of all, I'll explain more about the 61st floor."

“Does that explanation have to be heard before sending a message?”

“Yes,” Kirikiri answered firmly. “You need to know about the 61st floor before you send the message.”

“Tell me.”

“The theme on the 61st floor is sacrifice.”

Chapter 276

Tutorial 60th Floor (0-2)

Sacrifice

I had only heard one thing, yet I could clearly feel the difficulty of the 61st floor stage. The concept of sacrifice where two or more people must challenge the stage. Are you out of your mind, god who designed the 61st floor?

At this point, rather than panicking, I was calm. It was just a crisis that needed to be overcome. It couldn't be compared to facing an enemy with a huge power gap. It was even more so because there was no room for a detour.

Depending on how powerful the enemy is, we could gain the upper hand in many ways: surprise, conciliatory, escape, ambush, etc. However, stages with a sacrifice concept for a two-man attack had no way of doing anything. It's hard to find a person at the same level, and even if he does reach that level, he must be sacrificed.

“For now, tell me more about the stage.”

Kirikiri nodded. Come to think of it, Kirikiri also needed to rob the information this time. I didn't ask, but she told them about gods and sources. She must have been confident that I would not be able to clear the 61st floor soon.

“Yes... Let me explain the stage first.”

I silently agreed. Let's hear it first. There might be some leads.

“The 61st-floor stage is divided into two sections. Each section can be chosen from its starting point.”

“And two or more challengers have to target both sections, right? I can’t help the other side.”

“Yes.”

So far, it was understandable. Dungeons that were split into two often appeared in games.

“The problem is the difficulty level of the 61st-floor stage.”

“Difficulty level?”

“Yes. It’s very, very difficult.”

What was with that adjective?

There were so many stages that Kirikiri said were so difficult, but only the 6th and 35th floors came to mind.

“In fact, the 61st-floor challenger can’t clear it usually.”

“That’s pretty rough.”

“On the 26th floor alone, it is necessary to defeat the Demon King without anyone’s help, except for the Holy sword.”

That had been crazy. The 26th floor, I remembered, was a fairly large party stage. On top of that, it was a stage where soldiers, knights, and wizards of the Imperial Army carried swords. The soldiers stationed at the front line fortress serve as a deterrent to the demons until they reach the Demon King

“Are we dealing with a big party of more than 50 people?”

“No, this is just measuring the level of difficulty considering 50 people. Instead, we can weaken the enemy at the expense of the challengers.”

It was going well and suddenly it became too much. Sacrificing to weaken the enemy? Is this Yu-Gi-Oh?

“It’s not dangerous even if they’re offered as a sacrifice. It’s just that the victim challenger gets moved from the stage to the 60th-floor residential area.”

Mmm. If it was just a problem with this difficulty, I think I could manage it with my ability. Of course, if I were to attack both sections without a sacrificial sheep, I wouldn’t be able to do it by myself. If I raised Hyung-jin well...

“And once you get rid of the bosses in each section, a new place opens, where the challengers from both sides gather again...”

I had to fight him. Damn it.

“What about the rules?”

“Clear or surrender.”

It was fortunate that the surrender was an option.

“Why did you put this stage in? Sacrifice is no joke. It’s not a mafia game. Throwing away your colleagues one by one... So what are we supposed to do?”

Was it a stage where they wanted to break the trust between human beings?

It could be called excellent if it was intended to instill distrust and ill feelings toward each other. But what about the Hell Difficulty Challenger, who might be considered an apostle candidate?

“Heng. Not really.”

“Then?”

“The number of Hell difficulty challengers are low. The challengers have no choice but to go with as little loss as possible. In the end, one team has to give up.”

As little loss as possible. The main forces gather on one side, and the rest should be filled with those who were ready to sacrifice from the beginning.

“But if one side is too weak, the stage itself will fail. We need someone to sacrifice while another approaches the end.”

It was a ridiculous game, and political elements were also enforced.

“There aren’t as many forced situations as I thought. If you’re a 60th floor Hell level challenger, you’re all in a hurry. Even if the majority of the group clears out, then the rest get ready for the next challenge.”

There could be many situations. We could choose a rider and complete it peacefully in turn, if there were more than a hundred people in Hell difficulty. But if there was a shortage of numbers, there’d be a real bloodthirsty competition and political strife.

“We conciliate each other, form groups and factions, confront each other, and intervene again. It’s a stage where you have to come up with some sort of agreement after arguing.”

What a tricky stage. At this rate, a new society will be formed between the 60th and 61st floors. Some will be sitting on the 60th floor while you’re relaxing in your area.

The case was different from the 30th floor of Normal, where Kim Min-hyuk was located. There were people who didn’t want to risk their lives because it’s a good place to live and could maintain a decent life even if they didn’t have to go outside. But in this case, it would become a society created by the concept of the 61st-floor stage.

“The 61st floor, in fact, is well-received... Heng. Sorry.”

As I stared, Kirikiri quickly apologized. I couldn’t believe that the rating was good. Maybe because there were only crazy gods, the evaluation criteria were very crazy.

“Tch. This is a disaster.”

At this rate, helping Lee Hyung-jin grow was not enough. Lee Hyung-jin would definitely not come up in fear of dying if I told him the details.

First of all, there was a risk that two people had to solve a 50-person stage. Besides, there was a suspicion that the sacrifice could actually die.

Even if Kirikiri kept that part to herself, Lee Hyung-jin won't come up because of the last criteria. There were only two results that Lee Hyung-jin would face in that section.

Being left behind on the 60th floor or dying to me. Either way, it was like death. If you were as timid as Lee Hyung-jin, you might be consumed with fear that I might neatly kill you and leave.

Perhaps, as soon as Lee Hyung-jin gets the information about the 61st floor, he would seat himself on the right stage. If he had enough ability, there were some stages that were better to stay at, than the residential area. There were already other challengers who spent their time challenging the stage, which was easy to attack, enjoyable, easy to live on, and more. Lee Hyung-jin would take that path, too, instead of coming up to the 61st floor and taking risks.

The conclusion was that Lee Hyung-jin should not know the information on the 61st floor. No matter how much I lied, Lee Hyung-jin would be curious about the information on the 61st floor that I cannot clear.

I'll ask Kirikiri separately.

Naturally I looked at Kirikiri. Kirikiri crossed her fingers over her lips.

It seemed like a gesture of not telling, but it wasn't. When asked, Kirikiri said that there was a price.

“Privacy.”

“Heng.”

The information value for the 61st-floor stage should be raised so that Kirikiri could not answer Lee Hyung-jin. One of the few elements with abnormally high prices was privacy. Just like how information about the gods was scarce, information related to privacy was difficult to find. Many just made up their own tales.

“I’m the only challenger here to reach the 61st floor of Hell’s difficulty level. The 61st-floor stage where I’m blocked can be a clue to infer my ability. I’d like to designate information about the 61st-floor stage as private to protect my power from others. Is it possible?”

“It’s possible if you pay.”

“The price?”

There was a price for privacy settings?

“Certain amount of information.”

There was plenty of information. It was Kirikiri who’d been giving me any information, but she’d often blocked my questions, saying I had to save money on information. Thanks to this, the amount I had, had been overflowing by now. I didn’t know the exact figures.

“You said before that if you got enough information, you could give me privacy, right?”

“I did.”

It was a long time ago. The first time I met Kirikiri, the second time, or the third time. I didn’t even remember.

“The value of information required to know privacy is proportional to the value of information paid when designated as private.”

“Okay. Then I’ll pay for all the information I have for privacy designation.”

Kirikiri nodded. I wondered if Kirikiri had been managing my information in a frugal manner. Come to think of it, the price of information was not expressed in figures. The only way I could tell was for Kirikiri to tell me the price of the information was just around the corner. If she had collected my information price steadily starting a long time ago.

The dragon, whom I met as a manager, did not say anything about my information. It told me there was no problem with the source, the gods, or any story. If my thoughts were true, the price of the information I had could be much higher than I guessed.

“That part is my privacy. Heng.”

“Whew.”

I decided to put an end to this idea. I didn’t have to worry about what I couldn’t figure out.

“Did you set up my privacy?”

“No, not yet.”

“Not yet?”

“Yes. Not yet,” Kirikiri said again. There was another requirement I didn’t know of.

“Please let me know if there is another way to control information.”

Kirikiri told me not to forget that information costs were being spent on telling me that, but I still asked.

“Unlike privacy that applies to everyone, there is a way to control information about a single person, a specific person.”

“How can I do that?”

“It’s only applicable if the target person says the given keyword himself.”

Who’s the target person? The one who’s in charge of information control?

“Yes.”

Should we let Hyung-jin tell Kirikiri the keyword himself? It was tricky. Why do you have this kind of function? I should only tell Kim Min-hyuk later. There may be people who are already using it.

“None,” answered Kirikiri. As I stared at her, she made an X on her mouth again. It was a little different from before. Oh, she also needs the price of information to tell me this.

“Okay, let’s move on. What’s the keyword? No, I guess I should decide it myself.”

Kirikiri nodded. Of course. Not all keywords were set in one word.

What should be the keyword? I thought about it. Nothing really came to mind. I looked around, and I couldn’t think of anything. All that was here was a blue field, a gentle breeze, and a trembling pair of rabbit ears.

“Terrapin.”

(T/N: It’s a soft-shelled turtle, originally written as Ja-ra or Ja-la, can also mean sleep.)

“What do you mean? Did you mean sleep?” Kirikiri asked back. I guessed she didn’t understand my thoughts because it was so spontaneous.

“No, it’s a reptile. Terrapin.”

“Ew. I hate reptiles,” Kirikiri mumbled. Her face crumpled up as if it were gross. She must really hate it. “Why a reptile?”

“There’s an old story that’s been passed down in our country.

Byeoljubujeon.”

(T/N: Byeoljubujeon literally translates to The Rabbit Exhibition, but I’m using the original term, for originality’s sake ^^)

(Note from Imagine: The former TLs used “turtle” as the keyword but for accuracy sake we are changing it to “terrapin”)

Chapter 277

Tutorial 60th Floor (0-3)

Kirikiri was enchanted by the story Byeoljubujeon. When a Terrapin, ordered by the Dragon King, tricked the rabbit into taking him to the Dragon Palace, she listened with her ears stiff. When the rabbit used his wits to trick the Dragon King and the turtle into escaping to the land, she became so excited. She was more amused than I had expected. Maybe it was because it was a story about a rabbit.

“Then, the keyword is Terrapin?” After enjoying hearing about Byeoljubujeon, Kirikiri asked.

I nodded.

When Kirikiri saw me nodding, she held out her hand to me. Why did she put forward that palm for?

“Now that you’ve decided on a keyword, you’ve got to pay.”

“Information price?”

Kirikiri shook her head to my question.

“No. That’s the price for privacy. This is another thing.”

In the meantime, I had to do business.

I asked again, “What’s the price?”

“Power.”

Kirikiri’s answer was unexpected.

Power. There was no way that she could buy anything by consuming the power of a challenger. This was a Tutorial to foster challengers. Why did I need to pay power?

“Source?”

“Yes.”

The power that had I drew through the contract with the God of the Sky disappeared upon clearing the stage. The power of the source collected from the 59th floor, likewise, was taken away after clearing. There was only one left: the core of the source given by the god of remorse.

I looked up at Kirikiri again. She was still smiling with her palm out.

Let's think about it. It didn't matter exactly why Kirikiri wanted the source. The Spirit King had coveted the core of the source, and he felt that it would greatly help in ascending. What I needed to think about was whether Kirikiri's proposal was reasonable.

Was it a reasonable price to give someone the core of the source in return for constraining information? I had to think about this part.

First of all, I had to consider the danger involved. Although privacy was expensive and cost me many points, it could be recognized anyway. Kirikiri had said privacy was expensive, but it could be found out.

Of course, not many people would try to find out about the 61st-floor stage or my privacy. No one would have that much information. If there had to be someone, it would be the latecomer, Hyung-jin. He was the one who should not get to know. The risks were high.

Next was the proposal itself. It was absurd that the price was the source. This power couldn't be possessed by a Tutorial challenger in the first place. If I alone had not received a gift from the God of Remorse, I would not have got it either.

This was not a system for challengers. They were targeting challengers, but their main clients were gods or at least apostles. Was this the way to properly coax a challenger who had been nominated as an apostle candidate?

Moreover, Kirikiri was not even trying to explain this information constraint. She repeated only her words and gestures to save information.

“We need a price for privacy settings.”

But until then, information about the gods and their origins had been well explained. There were two possibilities. Was she avoiding answering under the pretext of saving information price? Information beyond the gods or the source was costly.

“What do you want to do?” Kirikiri asked, but I didn’t answer immediately. A little more thought was needed.

“When the trigger* gets activated, I’ll explain to the target* that the 61st floor is a stage where cooperation is needed. It’s a fact. I’m not going to lie, but I can cheat indirectly. The target won’t know that the 61st-floor stage concept is based on sacrifice.”

1* Keyword

2* refers to another Hell Difficulty challenger

Of course, you’ll be able to cheat. Kirikiri was the only informant of the Hell Difficulty challenger. Even if she didn’t lie, it was possible to deceive someone.

Now there was only one thing left to think about. It was about the possibility that information constraints had been applied to myself. Was there any lie in what I had said to Kirikiri so far? Had I ever activated a trigger? Was there a god who could fool me even after paying for the source or my power?

* * *

Kirikiri transferred the power of the source I extracted from my body into a pretty crystal bead. She rolled around with it, a happy expression on her face, eyes gleaming, and I watched her quietly.

About a dozen minutes later, the excited Kirikiri came back to me. There were bits of grass and dirt everywhere on her body. Kirikiri didn't even think to shake it off and just laughed.

"I'm dying of trouble here, is it that funny?"

"Sorry. Heng." She didn't look sorry at all.

"Have you thought about it?"

I nodded. I looked back on the conversation from the first time I met Kirikiri, but there was no doubt that Kirikiri had deceived me.

The reason was simple. I didn't hear much except for the information on the stage and advice for growth. My goal was formed separately from Kirikiri, and regarding that goal, Kirikiri never interfered, though she had expressed her opinion.

I gave a lot of information about the gods, but it was also meaningless. Even though I gave her knowledge, I judged the gods only as I perceived them. In addition, Kirikiri had never praised most gods. The only thing she ever tried to wrap up nicely was the God of Adventure.

It didn't seem like anything was at stake right now. I could think about it later, but it wasn't something to hang on to right now.

Kirikiri smiled back. I should think about Hyung-jin rather than her.

For now, let's just say that I was going to stop attacking for a while and rest on the 60th floor. I said I'd help Hyung-jin in my spare time. So, even though I helped him in the previous stages, later, I needed his help on the 61st floor. I think it would be better to talk to him. If I asked him to run straight to the 61st floor, he might feel burdened. After thinking about it, I sent a message to Hyung-jin right away.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Hyung-jin.]

“Are you going?”

“That’s right,” I answered Kirikiri’s question.

“You can stay a little longer,” Kirikiri said, pouting, with her cheeks puffed up.

This was enough. I think I’d have to wait a long time on the 60th floor anyway. No matter how intense the training was, I’d have plenty of time to spare.

“Ah, Kirikiri.”

“Yes?”

“You said it was normally impossible to clear it alone, right?”

Kirikiri nodded. That meant there was an abnormal way.

“It can be done with a vote, right?”

Vote of the gods.

The God of Adventure had forced me to move from the fourth floor. Whenever I got too close to the source, the gods had forcibly cleared the stage. On the 61st floor, the gods would be able to do the same.

“Yes, but they won’t.”

I guessed so. Most of the gods in the temple wanted me to be an apostle, but I had no intention of becoming one.

“On this stage, there are gods who think that you will face limitations and bend.”

For the gods, it was not a significant loss to keep me on the 61st floor for years because the concept of time was different for them.

Someday when I was anxious for the gods’ help, I think it’d be great if you could step up and convince them.

“I think it’s possible.”

What possibility was there? The possibility of me becoming an apostle of the gods and escaping from the stage through a vote?

“Would you like to make a bet?”

“Yes, I will!” Kirikiri liked to bet. I usually lose.

“Then, let’s bet that I’ll clear it normally.”

Kirikiri nodded. She didn’t even ask what my wish was.

“I’ll bet you can’t clear it normally. Buy me a cake if I win!”

Cake? She’d get that even if we hadn’t made a bet. I smiled and climbed onto the portal.

“See you next time! You must buy me a cake!” Kirikiri hopped and waved.

The usual greeting to buy her a cake sounded different from usual. It seemed like a cheer to clear and come out. Answering that I knew, I got moved to the 60th floor.

* * *

[Welcome to the 60th-floor residential area.]

I remember stopping by the 30th-floor residential area, so I wasn’t stunned. The 60th-floor residential area was a scene similar to the one seen in the second Tournament. A road lined with suitable buildings, neatly arranged, and there was a reasonably spacious square in the middle. At first glance, it seemed like an excellent European neighborhood to live in. It was a pity that I was the only one here.

I clicked my tongue in annoyance. This quiet space annoyed my nerves. I felt a chilling and sharp pressure, like being drenched in cold water when you're incredibly sleepy. I didn't know how long it would take to be completely free from this pain. Should I become a god?

Wouldn't I feel lonely if I become a god? It was a good question. After arriving on the 60th floor, I felt more suffocated than before. I didn't know if I could get through it. But it was not about reaching the final goal; it was about the process of reaching there.

Again, I clicked my tongue and opened the inventory. Seregia, Ahbooboo, and the frog were summoned.

[I'm the Dragon Warrior!] As soon as Ahbooboo got out of the inventory, he shouted.

[Warrior, hurry up and get those... Huh?]

Perhaps Ahbooboo did not recognize what time it was currently, after being stopped by the God of the Sky.

[Warrior, 59th floor?]

"I cleared it."

[Oing?]

Ignoring Ahbooboo, who made a strange noise, I saw the frog. The frog, of course, croaked and greeted.

"Keeeeeek!"

"Yes. Sorry, it's been a while. I didn't get a chance to get you out in the last stage."

"Keeeeeek!"

“Okay. I’ll leave you like this for a while.” After talking with the frog, I turned to Seregia. Naturally, she said nothing.

I told them that they had to stay here for a while. The frog liked it, and Ahbooboo was calm. Seregia, who had been quiet, seemed to be shocked.

[So I’m unemployed from today?] she asked.

“I won’t be able to clear the 61st floor, but I’ll be able to challenge it. I don’t think you’re unemployed.”

[Let’s get going, then.]

It was difficult right now. The information from the 59th floor should be sorted out. Most of all, it would take quite a while to sort out the magic theories from the sorcerer.

[I thought you said you’d have a lot of time left anyway. Let’s do that later. Let’s go.]

I had a lot of time left, so I went to the 61st floor later and cleaned up first. Seregia wanted to do the opposite. Since it was necessary to proceed directly with the 61st floor, Seregia decided to do as she wanted.

[Entering the 61st-floor stage.]

[Participating Challengers (1/50)]

– Lee Ho Jae

[The 61st-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: Challenger who wants to take a short break and start a journey, here are two roads. One is a trail, where you have to walk on a burning desert, and the other is to climb a mountain with snow-storms. Both roads are full of dangerous enemies and difficult challenges. Conquer both paths, and reunite with your colleagues at the end.

– Clear condition.

1. Conquering the first course of asceticism.

2. Conquering the Second Passage.

3. ?

Chapter 278

Tutorial 60th Floor (0-4)

[The 61st-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: Challenger who wants to take a short break and start a journey, here are two roads. One is a trail, where you have to walk through a burning desert, and the other is to climb a mountain filled with snow-storms. Both roads are full of dangerous enemies and difficult challenges. Conquer both paths, and reunite with your colleagues at the end.

– Clear condition.

1. Conquer the first ascetic path.
2. Conquer the second ascetic path.
3. ?

Two portals appeared with the message. They were emblazoned with the patterns of fire and ice, respectively. Splitting 50 people into two halves and conquering both of the paths beyond the portals would be how this 61st-floor stage was conducted.

And finally, they would meet again. The 61st floor would only be cleared when one side is wiped out. If the explanation Kirikiri gave was correct, perhaps it would be so.

[Which way do you want to go?]

“Left.” I chose the portal with the pattern of fire. I was more used to fire than ice. Before going to the entrance, I called the frog.

“Keeaaaaaeeek!”

“I’m sorry, but I’ll have to put you back in. There must be a lot of temperature changes over there.”

“Keeaaaaaeeek!” The frog was sad, but he didn’t object to my words either. Temperature changes were fatal to amphibians.

Of course, the frog only had an amphibian as its head and body of a dog, but anyway. I put the frog back and stepped on the portal. After a while, I stood in an open space, not in an enclosed space.

“I’m glad I called the frog back.”

[Right.]

The place where I was teleported to was in the middle of a raging desert. I thought it was better to recall the frog because of humidity problems rather than temperature problems.

[You have chosen the first ascetic path.]

Explanation: The challenger who has chosen the first route, your journey will be rough. During the day, you will have to walk in the blazing desert, and at night you will have to sleep, hiding from the harsh winds. At the end of the journey, you must defeat one of the two rulers who rule this planet, the volcano ruler. There is a way to make the journey to the ruler of the volcano easier. You can weaken the volcano ruler by dedicating a companion to another ruler of the planet, the ruler of the Snow Mountain. The more the sacrifices, the weaker the ruler of the volcano becomes. As the ruler weakens, the number of his combat forces and powers decreases. Finally, the climate of the Great Volcano is adjusted.

-Clear condition of the first ascetic path.

1. Pass through the Desert.
2. Climb the summit of the Great Volcano.
3. Defeat the Ruler of the Great Volcano.

All I had to do was cross the desert, go to the volcano, and kill the volcano ruler. It was a simple stage. There was a suggestion in between, about offering a colleague, but it wasn't a choice I could make.

"Okay. Let's go for now."

You can never clear it alone, Kirikiri had said. Even if they had a 50-member team, it would be difficult to proceed without the thought of sacrifice. That's how I organized my thoughts and began to walk forward. I liked the feeling of stepping on the fine sand in the desert. I also liked the dry climate without moisture, but a sandstorm ruined everything. My shoes and clothing filled with sand, some stuck to my face, making me displeased.

"Shhh!"

I hadn't said that. When I looked around, I saw a lizard staring at me. Standing on its hind legs, it was as tall as my knee. That was not a good attitude to hunt for food. It had already shown its position. Maybe that lizard was going to hunt me down. Instead, it was as if I had invaded that lizard's territory. I think the lizard was threatening me by making sounds. There's no need to kill an innocent lizard, so I just tried to pass it by. Until the lizard spewed out a fire.

"Cooch!"

The lizard threw the fireball in my direction. The sound was funny, but the power was not a joke. Even in the middle of the hot desert, I could feel the heat of the flame. It was amazing.

"Is it the sub-species of a dragon?"

[Of course not. That's just a lizard.] Ahbooboo answered shortly.

When the lizard saw that I had escaped the fireball, it licked its mouth, a visible sign it was preparing to spew yet another fireball. Before that, I approached the lizard and grabbed it by the tail. The lizard started struggling. Its short legs could not touch my hand that held it by its tail, but it still fought with all its might. I had no choice but to end up flinging away the lizard that was cutting off its tail. As soon as the lizard, with its tail cut off, fell to the ground, it rushed towards me.

I snapped my fingers. A fire broke out inside the lizard. The lizard's insides burned horribly, and it died.

"Damn it. Too much blood."

The tail of the lizard was still wildly flapping, sprinkling blood all around. There was a lot of blood on my clothes, too.

[What's wrong with blood?]

Well, that's true. I felt uncomfortable because it was not the blood of an enemy, but of an insignificant beast. My curiosity hadn't been solved at all.

I asked Ahbooboo, "Have you ever heard of a lizard spouting fire in a crisis?"

[Of course not.]

Was it really a dragon's subspecies? Maybe it was a Hatchling. The ruler of the volcano I was looking for was actually a dragon, but could it be that I had already killed a dragon cub? Something like that was plausible.

[Never. That's just a lizard.]

"But it spat out a flame by its mouth."

[I guess it's a unique lizard. Anyway, it's not a dragon. How can a lizard that doesn't have even a handful of mana be a dragon cub?]

It was an unusual lizard, huh. Maybe, fire-breathing was a local trait here. Volcanoes in the desert and even fire-breathing lizards. All the themes in the region seemed to be set to fire and heat. Now for the second question, I violated the control of the lizard and set it on fire. How did I do that? Come to think of it, the first time I used <Infringement of Control> was when I didn't know much about my abilities. I just happened to use it.

At that time, I thought that the power to exercise control over others came from the core of the source given by the God of Remorse. But now that I'd been dealing with both gods and the source, I knew it wasn't. So, it didn't make sense that I had started a fire in a lizard's body with the power of the source. Most importantly, I didn't have any source right now.

[Are there not people who have faith in you?]

“Huh?”

[Like people from your hometown or the people you met last time. Don't the other challengers of the Earth or from the Tutorial have faith in you?]

That was a valid point, but it didn't seem so. My image among the challengers was no less than a vague fear. Even Kim Min-hyuk's work was fading the image. I didn't see that as religious. The same was true of the Earth. I didn't know what the people outside thought of me challenging the Hell Difficulty level. I doubted that they had faith in me.

[How about Warrior?] Seregia, who had been quiet, asked.

“Huh? What do I think?”

[No.]

I thought she was asking me what I thought about this problem.

[Warrior believes in himself.]

“Uh, yeah. That’s right.”

[Crazily, maniacally.]

“...”

[Close to crazy. Warrior has the belief that he can do it. It’s not a bad thing. But when you can’t do something, instead of feeling sorry or disappointed, Warrior seems to deny the possibility of failing.]

There’s no way that I can’t make it because I have to. Perhaps such an obsession that goes beyond faith, which I send to myself, had become faith. That was what Seregia meant. She had tried to convey the meaning of words too directly. It was not bad, but sometimes it hurt my heart.

[Sorry.] She didn’t sound sorry at all.

I asked Ahbooboo, “What do you think?”

He was silent for a moment, then replied, [That’s something I can’t tell you.]

He was under a constraint. I didn’t know if it was a systemic constraint or a divine constraint. This increased the credibility of Seregia’s hypothesis. This was quite an important matter. If Seregia was right, then I could self-produce power without anyone else.

“Well, let’s find out slowly.”

If I looked back on the memories of my first experiment with <Infringement of Control> and observed the changes that emerge through training, I would soon know. After thinking about it, I decided to start again.

I spread Talaria’s wings and flew up. I didn’t want to walk because of the annoying sandstorm. As I flew up into the sky, the wind seemed a little less sandy. When my body was covered by mana, the sand that clung to the body was significantly reduced. There was also one more good thing. A desert city was seen from the top.

After such a long flight, I should arrive in front of the city soon. I landed nearby and walked to the city's main gate. As I was strolling, the city faded from my sight. Soon the city disappeared without a trace, and only the boundless sands remained in front of me.

“...Was that a mirage?”

[Huh... I guess so.]

* * *

“It's not a mirage. Definitely not.”

At first, I didn't realise, but after seeing the city disappear nearly ten times, it slowly began to hit me. As far as I knew, a mirage was a phenomenon in which light bends to move through warmer and less dense air.

This was a phenomenon in which the city showed up at a different location every time.

The problem was, I didn't see it wrong. I had approached the place with the thought that there was a city in the place, not just through sight. Nevertheless, as soon as I approached, the city had disappeared. I had to hold back my boiling anger at this, which seemed as if someone were making fun of me.

“This is not a mirage. Someone's playing a prank on me.”

[Oh, my God, looks like Warrior has gotten agitated again.]

Chapter 279

Tutorial 60th Floor (0-5)

“I’ll make sure to find out and kill whoever’s behind this multiple times.” I gritted my teeth.

As the number of mirages increased, the anger steadily increased. I had already encountered more than 20 illusions. At this point, I wanted to meet the person behind this more than the city.

No enemy popped out after hearing my murmuring.

Instead, Ahbooboo talked to me. [Warrior, is it because of the wings?]

Because of the wings.

[Isn’t it supposed to be a walking place?]

Was it considered too easy to fly to the city? Well, I didn’t think so. The Tutorial was not constrained in that way. Even if that were the case, Kirikiri would have given me such information before entering the stage.

No, maybe she couldn’t have told me this time. I had spent all I had left on privacy settings.

I stopped flying and descended to the ground. When I closed Talaria’s wings, it was already early evening. It had been quite a while since I’d flown for this long.

I shook off the sand that stuck to my body. I had tried to stop by using mana, but I couldn’t completely block the sand throughout the flight. Sand fell from my clothes like rainwater from an umbrella.

“So, you mean we should walk instead of flying?”

That's a possibility.

There was no other way, so I decided to try what Ahbooboo said. Slowly, I walked on the sand again. I could have run, but I didn't want to.

There was no particular reason I didn't want to, but I figured we'd have plenty of time ahead. I didn't want to rush through. I didn't have to be impatient or judge the time efficiency.

"No, it's not even that."

[Huh?]

When I muttered to myself, Ahbooboo questioned me. I wanted to go slowly. There was only a limited amount of work, but there was too much time left. If I didn't slack off, soon everything would be cleared, and time would be left. I hated that.

I hated that a lot, and I was scared. Honestly, it would be sweeter to throw me into a hell-like situation and ask me to get out of it. Or I'd rather, you ask me to beat an enemy when I couldn't stand up. I would do my best to find a way to attack the enemy with a trick. I'd act dangerously. I was better off on that side.

When I finished all my work, training was all I could think of. If I had more time left than the pre-decided time, I couldn't bear to do something monotonous for long. I won't be able to stand it.

It was scary. That was why I was taking a walk rather than running in a desert.

I wasn't an average human, wielding the power of gods. It was natural that my class was elevated, and now, it was hard to think of myself as an ordinary human being. Nevertheless, my fears were too childish and straightforward. I was afraid of being bored and lonely.

There was nothing different from when back then. I thought of myself as an independent person. I preferred to play a game where I won alone rather than playing a game where I had to collaborate with others. It was comfortable and efficient to stand alone.

But to do so, I always needed someone to play against. I needed someone to play games with me, and then, the other person will lose to me again. I couldn't bear complete independence, contrary to what I had thought.

[The God of the Sky watches over you.]

What about the God of the Sky who looked at everything from above? There should be no one around or above him. No friends, colleagues, teachers, advisors, brothers, or parents.

Oh, is this rude? I'm sorry.

But some people looked down on the God of the Sky. Some people considered themselves to be superior. It could be regarded as a terrible self-righteousness to have no one around you and no one above you. On the contrary, it also indicated dependence on people under the God of the Sky.

That may be why, as Ahbooboo once said, the Church of the Sky was more secular than other churches, and the welfare and benefits of believers were well established.

I needed someone too. To win, I needed someone beside me. I desperately needed that. On the Tutorial stage, I remembered the faces of countless enemies I had killed. There were many times when I killed without much emotion, but there were times that pissed me off. There were a lot of enemies and dead-ends that drove me into crisis. All those enemies were precious to me.

As I walked, the burning sun had set before me. The air was beginning to cool down. I was going to make a fireball for a light source, but that idea came to a halt. It was an amazing starry night.

I thought this was a luxury. The night sky that I looked up at, from the middle of the endless waves of sand over the horizon, was stunning. The twinkling stars were extremely visible and felt very close. I thought they would fall right away. When you get overwhelmed by the natural scenery, you lose a little bit of your self-esteem that was covering you up tightly.

I tried to sweep back the hair strands fluttering before me with my left hand, but I halted my actions. There was no left hand. With a sigh, I arranged my hair with my right hand.

The disappearance of my left arm itself was not that uncomfortable. Not that my left arm was useless. Usually, I wouldn't care about the loss at all, but when I needed my left hand, the sense of melancholic loss came.

"I don't even know if I can reach my goal."

[Huh?]

If the goal was too easy, I was afraid that there would be a lot of time left. So I set a goal that was farthest away, and I liked it. The problem is, it was a bit too far away. I didn't worry about achieving my goal too quickly and disappearing, but it seemed vague because I wasn't near it.

"Can't we wait? Until Hyung-jin comes up to the 60th floor."

[Of course. You talked to him already. He can come up. It's just that it would take some time.]

It'd been like this since the first day. As if the things I'd been working on had been ruined. It was no different from pagodas built with sand. No matter how high the pagoda was, everything collapsed when the ground shook.

Can I wait for Hyung-jin to come without losing sight of my goal? I was anxious.

[There's no way you'd get bored in two days. You can take a good rest for a few days. It's not that you can't stand a short time, but that you're worried and anxious about the time ahead.]

Ahbooboo was right. I was worried and anxious in advance. Would I be able to endure those long hours?

[It's okay. I, Lady Seregia, and the frog are here. When the four of us hang out, it's easy to spend two years together.]

Ahbooboo kept comforting me. I thanked him frankly.

“Yes, thank you.”

[God of Adventure smiles at you]

[God of Slowness smiles at you]

Yeah, I'll try to hold on like Ahbooboo said. If I hold out, even if it were a pain, this wait would be over.

[God of Adventure smiles more at you]

[God of Slowness looks at someone pitifully.]

* * *

As Ahbooboo said, adding a day or two wouldn't bring me down. It has already been five days since I entered the 61st floor. For five days, I found a panoramic view of over forty cities and confirmed that it was all a mirage.

“It'll be real this time.”

[Yes... it could be.]

“If it’s not real, I’ll kill it.”

[What? The mirage?]

Whatever. I’ll blow this whole desert away and find the city.

It’d already been five days. I was flying, walking, and kept repeating both of these. I checked through Ahbooboo several times because I thought I was trapped in some kind of magic spell. Yet, we found no sign of magic.

“But I think it’s real this time.”

Really. Even though we were close to the city, it had not disappeared. It would not disappear when we’re just around the entrance of the city. It shouldn’t. If it does, then I’ll blow it all up.

“Hi!” A little boy’s face popped out of the city walls. With a smile on his face, the child greeted us.

“Hi!”

“This is not a mirage.”

[I don’t think so either.]

“Hi!”

I answered the little kid who had been saying hello for a while. “Yes, hello.”

The child who had greeted me came down from the wall and opened the city’s gates, leading us to a village inside. No security guard was doing any background checks or asking about the purpose of the visit. There was just a little kid opening the door at random.

The little boy led me to his own house soon. I was wondering if it was okay, but for now, I just followed. At the child's house, there was an old man who looked surprised to see us visiting suddenly, but he soon prepared water and food.

"Did you really cross the desert?" asked the old man, who appeared to be the child's grandfather.

I said, "Yes."

The old man explained the desert with a puzzled look on his face and talked about common sense, which was slightly different from what I expected.

"This is not a mirage, but a milestone?"

The old man nodded in agreement. The village was actually a milestone to tell us that we were on the right path. As a result, we did not get lost walking in the desert.

"You didn't know about that, and yet, you managed to find it," the old man remarked and told me to wash up and rest. Of course, it wasn't for free. I pulled some valuable items out of the inventory.

The old man's room was small, with only one small bed. As I laid on the bed, it creaked loudly, but I could still lie down.

[It's a city, thank God.]

Yeah, having a city on the stage was a significant advantage. In the meantime, we could build a religious sect to collect faith, like on the 56th floor.

With challenging the 61st-floor stage, the city's existence had allowed us to experiment with many things. It would make it easier to attack the 61st floor with faith, but we would also be able to study and train more. I could say it was a blessing disguised in misfortune.

It was like divine power. Come to think of it, I believe Kirikiri said that above a certain level, there was no difference between Faith and Source.

[God of the Sky is baffled.]

Oh, the God of the Sky agreed, it seems.

If the divine power violated others' dominance, the source was the power to break one's own frame forcefully. When the frame broke, and the boundaries disappeared, if you don't get yourself together, you'd get eaten by the source. If you held onto your mind and overcame it, you'd be able to break the source's frame. The God of the Sky had said that there would be no difference between the divine power and the source, and as it dealt with the source, it could interfere with the control of others. On the contrary, you could apply divine power to yourself. In a way, it was natural.

But it was hard to use a power that was perceived as one's own to break their own frames. The source was needed to break the frame. That was why stagnant apostles needed a source to get closer to the gods.

[What do you think?]

"If I succeed in gathering my power and treating it like a source, I think I could recover my severed arm."

If successful, not only will I be able to regain my missing left arm, but I also will learn a lot about my power.

I'd have a lot of time to wait and a lot of work to do. The first thing I decided to do was to restore my arm through divine power.

"Then shall we start with the sect?"

Ahbooboo was actively in favor of my plan, while Seregia was silent. When creating and operating a sect, Seregia seemed bored because she had little to do.

“Keeaaaaaek!” The summoned frog croaked loudly. He seemed to like the role of mascot for the sect he had played before.

“Then let’s make a plan first.”

The four of us, except for the quiet Seregia, put our heads together to discuss the establishment of the sect.

PdF by: traitor/SEN

GANDARA 퓨전 판타지 장편소설

튜토리얼이 너무어렵다

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 10 -

-AUTHOR-
Gandara

[Centinni | Nocturne Translations]

Chapter 280

Tournament Chapter (13)

[Lee Yeon-hee]

“Tell Kirikiri to send my regards to Terrapin.”

Would the situation have changed if I had not followed that remark? I didn't know.

The God of Nature, who I met after clearing the 40th-floor stage, talked about information control against Tutorial challengers and hinted that I was already entangled in a similar situation. Information control through privacy settings and keywords.

I asked Kirikiri to tell me the truth, but she just laughed, as usual. We were eating cake together, chatting, and carefreely spending time with each other. She always comforted me and smiled prettily without a positive or negative attitude.

The answer was clear. I'd rather Kirikiri be honest, but Kirikiri never told the truth or lied, as she had always done.

It was easy to see that the keyword of information control was “Terrapin.” I was keeping all the chat messages and letters I had with him. Among the records, it wasn't hard to find one word that had a sense of incompatibility. Furthermore, at that time, I asked what a Terrapin was. Kirikiri didn't answer, and I had dismissed it at that time since I thought it was a nickname or a slang that only Kirikiri and he knew. The feeling I felt at the time was jealousy.

I had envied the link between the two. I wanted to get in between them.

I was about to challenge the sixth floor when Mister made me say keywords. The sixth floor was one of the toughest stages. It was also a stage that I'd been stuck at for months. Every day the skull soldiers had been cut off by a rusty knife, and a bowl of blood had been thrown out by a mana explosion. Whenever a contracted spirit got extinguished, I fainted from the pain akin to my hair being pulled out. I also had to cut out my leg flesh to find a new spirit and try contract magic using it as a medium.

In those days, all I could see was my blood, flesh, and decaying skeletons. The only things that sounded in my ears were my screams. The stench of blood and rotten flesh had permanently found its home beneath my nose. The constant pain made me suffer from phantom pain, even when I was in the waiting room.

Thanks to his help, there was no severe death crisis. Those were the impoverished days when I thought it would be better to die.

When I couldn't even meet Kirikiri until I cleared the stage, I exchanged letters with Mister. It was the only source of joy. I wanted to quit right away, but I gained strength by reading the letter and went on without collapsing.

But he... At that time, I thought of using the letter to deceive him and use it as a private seat on the 61st floor.

"...Are you listening?"

When I first came in, he consoled me, showing pity, but he was undoubtedly pleased. It was not because a colleague and a savior had come in...

"Hey. Are you listening?"

"I'm listening," I answered the one who was talking in front of me. In recent years, people often drowned in their thoughts. I did that while talking to others. It seemed much more apparent now because after becoming adjusted to being the lone challenger in the early Hell Floors, talking to someone itself was awkward.

"Anyway, I've never seen a case as dirty as you."

I narrated a story, and it was another lame story. The man who has been talking to me for a while was a challenger of Hell's Difficulty in the other dimension of the Tutorial. We met through the main body of the temple.

"How can there be only two survivors? Can they even get to the 60th floor? That's somehow amazing."

He was a man of ability, of use to me. But he indulged in useless talks.

"Can it not be avoided?"

No. The gods wanted to check the situation on the 60th floor somehow. That was the deal in the first place. They'd direct me to the 60th floor at all costs.

"Do you have the confidence to clear?"

It was a question I'd already asked several times, but I had no choice but to ask again. It was because I wasn't confident.

"Of course. You're nervous because you don't know what an apostle means being. An apostle means that there is a god with you. Why don't you be an apostle? You said you had a lot of proposals."

There were many proposals, but I didn't accept any apostle position. Above all, even if I were an apostle, I wasn't sure I could beat him. The gods would despise it if I said this. When I finished, I had to leave at least one hole to survive.

That's what he always taught. Everything was a matter of probability. Always predict the odds carefully and become immersed in it.

To me, who was deliberately slowing down the attack, he had said he could get out of the 60th floor by himself. I didn't think that was a lie. If he disappeared, the chances of me leaving the Tutorial on my own were gone. Rather than being left behind forever, I had no choice but to bet on a slim chance of victory.

One question is, why was he waiting for me without leaving the 60th floor? Of course, I told him to wait, but that was not the reason for his stop.

It could be a lie. Being able to get out of the Tutorial alone may be just a lie to get me up there quickly. Then his chances of winning on the 61st floor would be higher. But the problem was that it was not a lie.

“The feeling of a god’s power in my body is really... I can’t explain this if you’ve never experienced it. It really completes me.”

Ignoring the man who talked endlessly about things I didn’t care about, I stood up from my seat. I came back to the room I was using as my accommodation.

It was quiet again. There were times when I wanted to get out of this silence somehow. When I met people and faced a noisy crowd, I thought it was more comfortable.

It was a shame. I was upset and disappointed, and a singular thought kept haunting me.

If I hadn’t said the keyword, if Kirikiri hadn’t fooled me, if I had gotten the information on the 61st floor in time, we might not have been like this. Even so, I would still have felt betrayed. Still, I would have been able to get angry and resolve this disappointment. Even if our relationship went sour, we could have found a way together. Our link may not have been cut off so completely.

I knew it was a lingering attachment. Even if I did, my sacrifice on the 61st floor might not have changed. Still, I kept thinking that way.

If I did something else, could there have been any other ending? A slightly better ending.

-Beep...

Suddenly a beeping sound rang in my ears. Someone had triggered the alarm again.

First of all, I built a barrier around the room to not let anyone in.

Having finished several layers of defense, I focused my mind again.

The alarm went off when someone approached one of my clones. I moved to one of the clones that had set off the alarm.

The place where I opened my eyes was in front of the portal of a public server. There was a giant woman about four meters tall, in front of the portal. It was a familiar face. She was one of the challengers of Hell's Difficulty, at my present level. She was also an apostle of a god.

"Where are you going?"

"To your server. Didn't you say you were from Earth?" the woman answered me, unsurprised.

Why?

"Why on the Earth server?"

The woman replied with a troubled face. "Information gathering purposes."

"I remember I gave you all the information."

"Well, yes. There's something else I need to find out. There are some proposals over there."

What was that stupid woman saying so calmly? I was sure I'd banned contact.

"Tie her up."

The spirit of containment had become visible. It was in the form of a tight chain, binding the woman's body. Rather than struggling to get out of it, the woman just looked dumbfounded.

"What are you doing?"

She couldn't get out of it. It had been a long-improved means to subdue Ho-jae. Now it had become an entity that could not even be called a spirit.

“Do you know what you're doing now? You're oppressing a God's apostle.”

“I know.”

I had already prepared for this occasion. It was not a plan to prevent the actions of the gods. It was more of an act to escape the eyes of the gods. It was an act that would disappear at once if a god wielded his power, but unfortunately, a god could not intervene immediately.

A god could project his power on the apostle without any price, but a procedure was necessary. I was not sure exactly what the procedure was, but it took about 30 seconds to a minute.

30 seconds. It was enough time to kill someone. I took the bow out of the inventory and prepared the black arrows.

“You- You crazy bitch! Do you know what you're doing?!”

Of course, I knew. I was trying to kill the apostles. Of course, it would prevent them from going to Earth's servers to demonstrate power properly. But I couldn't just miss the chance to kill the apostles.

I aimed at the woman's heart. An attack was set up.

“Argh! Untie it now! You crazy b*tch, you can't even thank someone for helping you. How dare you act like this! God will have you...!”

The black arrow pierced the heart of the apostle. She seemed to have tried to defend herself amid a clamor, but the black arrow nullified all her attempts. Black marks spread rapidly around the woman's body, the black arrow at the centre. Because she was wearing long clothes, I had to check it out by looking at her face. The black mark soon reached the woman's forehead.

“...Save, save...”

“Devour.”

With that command, the black arrow began to devour the woman's body. The woman's body became stained with black marks and quickly sucked into the black arrow. In less than ten seconds, the place where the woman had been only had a Spirit of Containment and the Black Arrow.

It was too simple. The Black Arrow was retrieved, and the Spirit of Containment returned to the usual mode. There was a little time left. I could feel the power of a god. The plan that I had made was shattered.

[The God of Fame is angry.]

[Voting begins]

[Yes: 386 No: 6422]

That was it. They decided not to intervene in the apostle's death.

[The God of Dawn is angry with you.]

[The God of Darkness harbors bad feelings towards you.]

[The God of Darkness glares at you.]

[The God of Darkness...]

Ignoring the message, I changed to non-visual mode. I let the portal continue its work and transfer me to a different place.

It was a small, quiet room again. That was why I didn't accept the apostle position. At least within this Tutorial, the apostles cannot guarantee victory.

I didn't want to think about it.

I squatted down on the side of a small room. I felt uneasy again. Time quickly passed by and I'd soon reach the 60th floor.

It was scary. When I met Mister, I only hoped that I would be calm without showing any emotions.

* * *

[Lee Hochi]

I was playing a card game with Yong-yong, when I got called out. I had a guest who came to see me, but I remembered meeting all the guests. In response, I said that I would no longer meet other guests.

However, Park Jung-ah went to the Order of Vigilance headquarters for some reason. Yong-yong left with Baek Sung-woong. I'd met many guests, but there had been few pleasant meetings. And I strongly felt that this meeting would be the same.

"It's a private meeting?"

"Yes, it is," replied the man of short stature. He was a man from whom politeness seemed to permeate from head to toe. Although he was only a little taller than Yong-yong, I could feel that he was a mature person.

"For what reason has the apostle..."

"For the retrieval of power."

The time had finally come. Damn it. What should I do? Should I run away with Yong-yong?

[Don't make a fuss and just listen to me.]

How could I not make a fuss? I never thought the apostle would come in person to take back the power I stole.

“Well, I... I didn't steal it. I didn't do anything. The gods gave it to me. I just came back home because I felt burdened. Yes, I never thought about stealing from the beginning...”

I was just babbling and making excuses. The accusation of stealing was a huge blow to me. Lies were added to theft, and my conscience began to ache even more.

“No, it's not you.”

“...Eh?”

The exceptionally short man spoke in a calm voice. “I want to retrieve the power that the god of duel presented to challenger Lee Ho-jae.”

[Tell him to stop bullsh*tting and get out of there.] Lee Ho-jae spat out a curse at once. Of course, I didn't repeat his words.

“As the power was duly supposed to be handled by Lee Ho-jae, taking away a portion of your god-given powers will be an adequate replacement to pay the debt.”

[Huh...]

Chapter 281

Tutorial 60th Floor (17)

[Hey, why don't you take a shift?] I talked to Hochi, but received no answer. I held Yong-yong, who kept turning around. It had already been three days since Hochi and Yong-yong returned from the tournament.

After Hochi returned from the tournament, he spent more time alone. I heard from Park Jung-ah that she was doing well and without any problems, but Hochi seemed to have something serious. But he didn't look very upset or depressed; he just seemed a little confused.

Maybe I should think of it as just adolescence. Considering Hochi's age, it was possible. It'd been the first time he'd gone out into another world and encountered people. I was sure he'd think about many things.

Yong-yong had slept for three days as soon as he returned. He seemed to have slept very little throughout the tournament because he was too excited. So he, who usually slept for a certain amount of time every day, went to sleep for a long time as soon as he returned home, not waking up.

The problem was that he was not sleeping in his bed but in my arms, not even in a human form, but in a hatchling form.

This was slightly uncomfortable. It was not a matter of weight, but it was quite difficult to hold his short legs and flapping wings and hug them in a comfortable position. I agreed to Yong-yong's request to sleep with me. If I knew he'd sleep for days like this, I should've just told him to sleep in a bed.

I was sitting in front of the desk with Yong-yong lying on my lap. I patted Yong-yong's head with one hand while the other hand was over a book.

Well, it was not a big book. It was just my diary. It'd been quite a while since I started writing this. I began when the creation of a sect on the 41st floor led to the urge to write a religious journal.

The first chapter contained only brief details: the name and orientation of the newly established sect, means used to tempt the people, and the number of believers who changed day by day and their natures. It was merely a diary for record purposes. I turned over a page.

[41st round]

-In two sessions, I succeeded in collecting a little faith through the sect. If I had known the desert people had such a closed disposition, I could have succeeded a little faster. I didn't notice any kindness in dealing with outsiders.

-These people had indigenous religions. Can't even call it a religion. The rulers of the Great Volcano and Stormy Snow Mountain were treated like gods. This is why the sect's growth is slow.

-I recovered my left arm quickly. It wasn't as difficult as I thought.

-After the desert, we arrived at the oasis. There was a portal in the oasis, and I could reach the Great Volcano through the portal.

-There were many enemies on the Great Volcano. Since the fire did not damage them, it was an opportunity to utilize my physical strength in various ways.

-I got the boss mob. The answer was to gather my power to restore my left arm. It would have been hard to deal with without the power.

-The boss mob seemed to know something about the stage. It was taken aback that I could face it alone. It may be fun to simply challenge it alone.

-I'm back on the 60th floor. My left arm disappeared again.

That was the end of the 41st record. I was deeply hurt at that time. When I returned to the empty 60th floor, I wondered how many times I would have to repeat this. After hundreds of repeated clears, I wasn't sure if I could do it. Fortunately, I was still alive.

[42nd round]

-Seregia insisted we go straight to Snow Mountain, but I decided to stay on the 60th floor a few days.

-When I returned to the 60th floor, I lost all my powers from the 61st floor; however, a little bit of the power I had from before remained the same. The power restored my left arm.

-I've been using this new power, organizing my knowledge of sorcery, the 55th floor Mado knowledge that Ahbooboo had remembered as well as Contract magic. I had a mountain of homework that I had put off to study when I had time later.

After this, there was talk of research and studying for a long time. Ahbooboo played a huge role. As an apostle of the God of the Sky, there were no restrictions on sharing the information he knew. Because he had signed a contract with me, I could easily receive his knowledge.

Let's read ahead a little.

[44th round]

-The ruler of the Great Volcano remembered me.

-They called me the first challenger. This was definitely different from other stages.

-We got quite close. After returning from killing him, I talked about him for a long time with Ahbooboo. I wish I could go back to Kirikiri and ask her about this stage in detail.

Later, I decided to send a request to the Order of Vigilance.

[48th round]

-Hyung-jin died.

Only one line was written in the 48th entry. It was a real mess back then. Lee Hyung-jin died on the 17th floor.

I still don't know how he died. Obviously, I prepared him enough to clear the 17th floor.

But just 15 minutes after he entered the 17th floor, one number decreased from the Hell difficulty's list. It meant Lee Hyung-jin's death. I didn't know if Lee Hyung-jin let his guard down, or if his arrival on the 17th floor had more danger than I thought. Lee Yeon-hee was able to enter the 17th floor with overwhelming power. Then again, I did almost die on the 17th floor. [1]

Anyway, I was half-crazy back then, smashing the residential area. Perhaps that was the first time I had destroyed a residential area.

[49th round]

-We need another challenger. Some of the remaining people on the first floor are useless. Even if they changed, it might take a few more years to reach the 60th floor. It was necessary to replace them.

-Successful cloning of Ahbooboo. The main point was that he was an item with an error. Although unstable and soon to be destroyed, there was still a possibility of the item working.

-Time-slowness skill is very helpful. Slowing down time has no real advantage, but it allows you to maintain high concentration during that time. As it has become difficult to focus on one thing in recent years, the time-slowness skill has been maintained.

[52nd round]

-I put my memories in a replica of Ahbooboo's.

-I don't know how to make this a person.

[56th round]

-Frog got hurt.

-According to the Voluntary Agency Network of Korea, it had a short life span.

-I tried giving it Elixir and more cures, but the frog's health hasn't improved.

[57th round]

-The clone is complete. It was more of an alter ego than a clone.

-It's not perfect yet. I can't use it recklessly for experiments. We must make sure it doesn't break somehow.

-There's a problem. The clone looks like the chimera I saw on the 20th floor.

[58th round]

-The God of the Sky took Ahbooboo.

Damn it. For protection? This is some high level bullsh*ttery. I still have a lot of magic knowledge left to learn from him. It was something that I had put off later because I could learn anytime. I'll keep a record somewhere.

-The God of the Sky will one day pay this price.

[60th round]

-I wondered why time was passing so slowly. The time-slowness skill was still being maintained. I didn't know how much time had passed.

- The duration of time slowing had increased almost indefinitely. Due to the nature of time-slowness, which raised concentration to the limit, it was difficult to notice the flow of time and escape it voluntarily.

[61st round]

-The clone has been completed. But it was just a creature that had my memory. There was no sense in it. It looked more like a mannequin than a person. Training was needed.

-If it had intelligence, it would have burned itself to death and made me take a different route.

Thinking about this time, I still felt sorry for Hochi. I had already apologized many times, but I would continue to apologize for what happened then.

[64th round]

-I attacked one side and sent Seregia to the other side.

Since Seregia had grown stronger steadily, it wouldn't be dangerous for her.

-The attack on the 61st floor failed. We failed to enter the last room through the portal.

The 64th round was a memorable episode. I had swept away the residential area. I stayed in the tent for a while, thanks to the clean sweep.

[66th round]

-I was losing my confidence. As Seregia said, maybe the faith that I gave myself was draining away. If I'm losing faith, then I'm losing faith in myself. It was true.

[67th round]

-I insisted that the Korean government withdraw its ban on Hell Difficulty. It was seriously discussed through the Order of Vigilance, but was thwarted by Park Jung-ah's opposition.

-I looked for a way to move another difficulty's challenger to Hell difficulty. Park Jung-ah's opposition led to the cancellation.

-I had a big argument with Park Jung-ah.

- I regret talking to Park Jung-ah and Kim Min-hyuk about the 61st floor.

Since then, the records had been cut off for some time. At that time, I didn't record anything.

[70th round]

-I could feel my mind getting more and more exhausted, perhaps because I've been doing nothing.

I felt more like a research machine than a human being. If Park Jung-ah hadn't been continuously talking to me through messages, I'd probably have forgotten that I'm a human being.

-To be "alive" wasn't just a matter of my heart beating but a matter of interactions as well. I'm headed for the 61st floor. I'll stay there for a while.

-I signed a contract with the ruler of the Great Volcano. I decided to get support from him in return for achieving my goals.

But honestly, I don't know what he'll do. Even the ruler of the Great Volcano won't be able to guarantee that I can achieve my goals. We both just bought one low probability lottery ticket.

[71st round]

-When I got into the 61st floor, I got a power boost. It was a power coming from the ruler of the Great Volcano. No matter how many times he was killed, whether the rounds were repeated, whether I had finished my attack and returned, or whether I had died, the power was not reset.

-What can I do with this power?

[76th round]

-With the help of the two rulers, I succeeded in connecting the 60th and 61st floors. Now I can also get my power from the 60th floor.

[78th round]

-I don't know what more I can do. I was already close to a god. I'd achieved all the growth I could think of. There was nothing more to try.

[79th round]

- The use of time-slowness has been eliminated.

-I spent my time blankly. Time went by in seconds. Due to the slow-flowing time, I suspected several times that time-slowness had been applied without my knowledge.

[81st round]

-Newbie in Hell's Difficulty. I hope this challenger survives.

The 81st round was the time of Lee Yeon-hee's entry. I was happy that a useful challenger came in, but I didn't know if she could really come this far. I had watched the challengers who had failed before her for too long.

I thanked Lee Yeon-hee. Every time she climbed up a floor, one by one, I had hope. Thanks to that hope, I was able to get up again after sitting helplessly. Every time an attempt to get out of the 61st floor went in vain, I confirmed that she was coming up and helped her immediately prepare for the next stage.

And on the other hand, I felt sorry for her.

[Lee Yeon-hee, 59th floor: Mister. I'm coming up now.]

[153rd round, Day 1. 8:20]

At last, Lee Yeon-hee had reached the 60th floor.

Chapter 282

Tutorial 60th Floor (18)

[Yong-yong woke up.] Hochi said.

Yong-yong didn't have to wake up yet. I wanted to let him sleep a little more.

I just told him I knew. It was inevitable that Hochi disapproved of Lee Yeon-hee. It happened in the Tournament. In fact, even before that, Hochi didn't want to meet her. If possible, he just wanted to leave her alone.

"Seregia."

"Yes, Warrior." Seregia, who had been in human form, replied. Somehow she looked awkward.

"Let's go. You don't have to watch the barrier anymore."

"Am I going to be unemployed again?"

Unfortunately, yes. It was time for Seregia's role to be handed over to others.

"You've done a great job."

Seregia just nodded her head, without uttering a word of humility. I took her to the front of the portal on the 60th floor.

The portal swirled before me. And indeed, a long-awaited person showed up on the portal.

"It's been a long time, Mister." She had put on a nonchalant attitude. I felt that it was a pretense, but this was enough.

I replied with a shrug. “We just met for the first time.”

“I’ve met you several times.”

It was a vague remark. Did she really mean that she’d met me several times? She’d met Hochi not long ago. I would have her know that Hochi was completely different from me. When teaching her about clones, I’d omitted quite a lot. It was because I taught as much as I needed.

“I asked you to wait six months. I came here just six months ago.”

“Yes. I wish you could have come later.”

I was afraid I’d escape as promised before. Lee Yeon-hee shook her head when she heard me.

“I hope so. There are people who want to push me in somehow. I feel like an endoscope. You know, the colon endoscope?” she said with a grin...

“Let’s go. I’ll show you around. Oh, this is Seregia. She appears on the 26th floor; have you met her?”

* * *

Lee Yeon-hee had little interest in Seregia. Instead, she carefully examined the entire 60th floor.

“This is a lot different from what I knew. I heard the original 60th-floor residence isn’t like this.”

“I’ve fixed it many times since I stayed here.”

It was because the reconstruction was inevitable. Lee Yeon-hee scrutinized the surroundings.

It was not because she was curious about the 60th floor. It was to satisfy the curiosity of the countless eyes on her.

I was shocked to see Lee Yeon-hee crossing the portal. I knew she'd come with the eyes of the gods. Honestly, I didn't know there would be so many.

What the hell? How many are there? In front of Lee Yeon-hee's eyes, there were still many messages showing the reactions of the gods.

"Hi~"

The windows of the two-story building opened and Yong-yong greeted us. Oh, my pretty son.

"You met last time, this is Yong-yong."

"...Yeah."

Next to Yong-yong, who was waving his hand, was Hochi with a sullen face. Lee Yeon-hee hesitated, not responding to the greeting.

"Say hello."

Lee Yeon-hee waved to Yong-yong in an awkward and uncomfortable manner. Somehow, the action was ridiculous.

"That's my room. Remember the location."

Without answering, Lee Yeon-hee turned her head slightly to the side. I didn't bother to talk to her anymore.

Seregia joined Hochi and Yong Yong Yong. I guided Lee Yeon-hee to the accommodation that I had prepared.

"I'm leaving right away tomorrow, so I'll just have to stay here for today."

I had talked with Lee Yeon-hee in advance about this part. We'd take a day off and leave the next day.

"Are you feeling well?"

“...Yeah?” Lee Yeon-hee’s reaction had been slow. Of course, the eyes of the gods may be the biggest reason, but I wondered if it was something else.

“I heard Yong-yong had some trouble with your clone. There’s some aftermath left, right?”

“...Yes, I sent a clone because it was dangerous. I didn’t expect it to cause a lot of damage.”

I was sure the damage was huge. Although I had taught him, Yong-yong’s growth was really no joke. Sometimes, I was surprised as well. I was wondering if this was really a Hatchling who was born a few years ago.

“It seemed stronger than the Dragon.”

“Of course. Oh, come to think of it, you’ve met the dragon.”

Lee Yeon-hee said yes. I tried to keep the conversation going. It was necessary to warm up the atmosphere. It was not good for her to be so nervous and alert.

I brought up the memory of the dragon I had met in the second half of the 50th floor which I had almost forgotten. I started with a story and naturally talked about what happened on the stage.

Soon I and Lee Yeon-hee were both absorbed in the story. It wasn’t difficult. People with a common factor can easily hold a conversation.

To Lee Yeon-hee, I was the only person on Earth who could share and sympathize with her. I could at least bring out the story of someone who was isolated and always needed sympathy and comfort. No matter how weak someone was in communication, this was pretty easy.

“The 17th floor was dangerous, but it wasn’t really that hard. Difficulties and risks come separately.”

That was true. The stages that were dangerous for me were easier to her than I thought.

“The sixth floor was the worst.”

I had no choice but to sympathize with that remark. A long time ago, it was also a topic that came up when Lee Hyung-jin and John Overton of the United States spoke. What was Hell difficulty's worst stage? We all picked the sixth floor.

In a narrow dark cave, you had to beat up an endless stream of skeletons which stank terribly. There was only a tightly closed door in the back, and one failed as soon as it opened.

It was a stage where you desperately had to wait for reinforcements. The support team came so late that it becomes a stage where you have to solve everything by yourself.

A stage where you first feel the absence of others. It was not a loneliness that comes from lack of communication, but a more painful stage because of the sense of isolation. The feeling that no one in the world can help, remained throughout. It seemed like it was good to be independent, autonomous, and active, to do everything without anyone's help.

But in fact it was never a positive thing. Everyone needed to interact with others. And the sixth floor of Hell Difficulty told the challenger that such exchanges were completely cut off. I didn't know about other planet's challengers, but at least the Earth's Tutorial did.

“I think the hardest time was when I was locked up on the sixth floor for months. How was it then?”

What do you mean? It was too much. I went half crazy.

“My mental-immunity skills were growing. It's a shame that I could only progress little by little.”

If it had been slower, I would have gone completely insane. Just like on here, the 60th floor...

"But I was a little better than you."

"Really?"

"I had the fun of exchanging letters with you every day. Do you remember the letters back then?"

Uhm. Of course, I remembered.

[Man, you don't remember at all. Do you?]

You're right about that. Damn it. I should've talked about another floor, not the sixth floor.

[It seems like your conscience is hurting you too.]

Be quiet. I answered Hochi roughly. What should I say? Lee Yeon-hee continued to speak, as I was trying to find a suitable topic.

"I'm grateful to you. I've come all the way here alive thanks to you. Without you, I would have died. Maybe I couldn't even have gotten out of the first floor."

I'd appreciate it if you said so. My conscience still seemed to hurt.

"I blame you for deceiving me. But I don't regret listening to you. I mean it."

* * *

"I don't like this," Hochi grumbled. He'd been like this for a while. I was all confused. "I hate being like this. I really don't like it, but I'm sorry."

"Yes, yes. It's entirely my fault," Yong-yong, who was listening quietly next to him, shouted.

"No! It's not Dad's fault!"

Actually, it was my fault. Damn it. But that'd been my limit at that time. What could I do now that I was lacking?

“Daddy’s not the one who did wrong...”

I patted Yong-yong’s head. Yong-yong was right. I was not the one who caused this problem.

I didn’t make the 61st floor and the Tutorial nor did I make the rules. I was not the one who brought Lee Yeon-hee here either. Lee Yeon-hee and I were just pushed into this dog-sh*t-like environment. There was only a difference in how they acted and how they prepared for it.

But when it comes to the relationship between Lee Yeon-hee and me, the world was wrong, and the gods were wrong. I couldn’t help but conclude that it wasn’t my fault. Justifying it didn’t help at all.

“Why?”

Before answering Yong-yong again, I thought about how to explain it. It was too important a story to tell as it came to mind.

“Because my deeds are precious to me, and my faults and my sins are precious as well. Even if it is a problem caused by another, it is not good to pass on the faults and the sins that I have committed to another person.”

I wonder if I explained well. Seeing Yong-yong’s puzzled expression, I didn’t think I did.

Fortunately, there was someone else who understood me: Hochi.

[Good. With that in mind, apologize to me again after a long time.]

[Yes. I’m sorry.]

[Wow. You don’t look sorry at all.] Hochi giggled as he said so. That’s how I got forgiven by Hochi, and we got along like a family.

[Oh, no! I haven't forgiven you yet. You're gonna have to apologize until I'm old and dead.]

I didn't even know when he'd get old and die. It was more questionable as to whether he'd die.

While talking to Hochi, Yong-yong seemed to have finished thinking.

Yong-yong looked at me again and asked, "Then who really did the wrong thing? No one's punishing anyone for causing trouble."

Ah, Yong-yong. That's not it.

"I meant that you take care of your own fault and not cover up other people's faults."

"Then who really did wrong? What about those who made the first problem?"

"Of course, they'll have to pay for their own mistakes."

Yong-yong still looked like something was unclear to him.

He thought for a while and said again, "The wrong people won't be punished by themselves."

Indeed. I thought so, too. Now, even if they, the gods, thought they did too much to the Tutorial challengers, what were the chances of them saying, "Let's reflect and pay the price" from now on? If that was the case, they wouldn't even make the Tutorial like this in the first place.

"Someone will have to punish them."

"Who?" Yong-yong asked with his eyes wide open. And through Lee Yeon-hee, I told the gods who'd be listening to our conversation.

"I will."

[Entering the 61st floor stage.]

After a day's rest, I headed to the 61st floor's stage. Lee Yeon-hee seemed to have given up everything. She was faithfully carrying out her role as the pitiful heroine about to be sacrificed. However, it was easy to see that Lee Yeon-hee had no intention of being victimized. She had come fully prepared.

[Participants (2243/50)]

Chapter 283

Tutorial 61st Floor (4)

[Participants (2243/50)]

“The surprises keep coming. I didn’t know there would be so many,” Hochi said, scratching his head. There appeared to be something dubious about it.

“It’s none of my business, but isn’t bringing this many too obvious?”

“They must have hidden it in their own way.”

“Hidden? It’s all seen in the numbers.”

Actually, only I could see the number of people in this position. Of course, Lee Yeon-hee could check the number of viewers, but she wouldn’t be able to see it. Maybe.

It’d only look like this:

[Participants (2/50)]

Just as Lee Yeon-hee had been fully prepared, I’d prepared myself for it.

“Are you sure?”

[The 61st-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: Challenger who wants to take a short break and start a journey, here are two roads. One is a trail where you have to walk on a burning desert, and the other is to climb a mountain with snow-storms...

Of course, I was sure. I was using this now.

All the messages that appeared on the 60th and 61st floors were written as I wish, not by the system. I only marked the number of people who would have been seen in Lee Yeon-hee's eyes as two. Lee Yeon-hee probably thought I hadn't caught on yet.

“You can't do this anymore.”

“What's so hard about putting a message in front of people?”

The bigger problem was blocking the messages from the system. Of course, that was a problem I solved a long time ago.

“Come on, let's go if you're done worrying.”

* * *

On the 61st floor, which was divided into two paths, Lee Yeon-hee decided to proceed by flying in the direction of the volcano. The reason why she chose the direction was simple; It was because Yong-yong liked snow.

“Every time, we met at this ice palace. It would have been nice to meet in my hall at least once.”

The ruler of the Volcano and the ruler of the Great Mountain, beings I met for the first time after a long time, were full of grumbles. Grumbling was childish for an existence that had the title of a giant king residing in lava.

“Of course, my palace is way better than that hot lava hall.”

The ruler of the Great Mountain was no different from the old lady beside him, who kept complaining.

The 61st-floor bosses were unlike the dominant rulers of the volcano and snow mountain. It was fun to watch them bawling, but I wanted to check something else.

“What about the residents?”

“We evacuated them all, just in case they get caught up in your arrangement.”

What? Are you talking about Lee Yeon-hee? I hope they didn’t call people this way every time.

“Are you really going out now? Strangely enough, it doesn’t seem weird to me anymore. It just feels like we’re spending time together as usual,” the old lady said gently.

After Yong-yong grew up a bit, he often came here for picnics. Whenever that happened, we would get together, converse, and play.

“It’s about time that we go out. I can’t help it even if I’m sad.”

“What a shame!” the old man screamed.

“The volcano and the shrine were my pride! Now it’s just a fake tie, binding us here for eternity. But when I leave and the restraints break away, I’ll be free from the illusory volcanoes and halls. What a shame!” the old man shouted loudly as if it weren’t right.

It was a random remark, but I could understand. It was always the same.

“What about you?”

I turned my head towards Hochi. In fact, Hochi was the one who felt the most regretful. For him, who was born here and wasn't unhappy with it, it would not be very comfortable to go out into the outside world. He may just think of it as a change of residence.

“It's alright. I actually thought about letting you go and staying here since that was the purpose of my birth in the first place.”

But Hochi eventually chose to go out together. He pointed his chin at Yong-yong, who was making a snowman alone in a corner.

“My whole family is going out, so what'd I do here alone? We'll go together.”

Thank you for saying that. I thanked Hochi in my mind and looked at the old lady.

“What about you, Grandma? How do you feel about going out?”

“How do I feel? I won't die by your hands anymore. I haven't said much, but frankly, it's been too painful. Every time.”

Hochi, whose gaze had been warm a moment ago, instantly turned cold, as if he were looking at trash. I apologized to the old lady, having no other excuse.

She smiled widely and said, “I'll have to thank you before I tell you how I feel. I signed a contract to help you, but I didn't really believe it would be possible to get out of here because it was so hard. Yet, you didn't give up. I remember how pained you had been for the past few years. Nevertheless, thank you again for not giving up and keeping your promise.”

Next to him, the old man said, “Thank you.”

I smiled awkwardly.

Then, the portal in front of the palace's throne radiated light. It was a portal to move to the last part of the 61st floor.

The fact that the portal opened meant only one fact. Lee Yeon-hee had cleared the entire hall of the volcano.

It was finally time to get out of the 61st floor.

* * *

[Lee Yeon-hee]

It was strange. As far as I knew, the 61st-floor stage was not like this.

The endless stretches of burning sand and continuous mirages were just like the information I had heard before. But nothing else had shown up.

All kinds of monsters that used fire should have appeared in this desert. The residents of the city lived in the desert, and a few warriors were supposed to the volcano.

But there was no one. It was as if the entire 61st-floor stage was empty.

“It’s not supposed to be this kind of stage.”

[Of course not. Be careful. Something’s wrong,] one of the assistants whispered. He was a challenger who had already cleared the 61st floor in his own planet’s Tutorial.

I was anxious. I felt like an invisible blade was pointed at my neck. And step by step, the blade was getting closer. I was walking on my own towards the edge of the blade, towards the cliff.

If I turned around and went back to the residence area, I’d still be dead.

The gods were not merciful. Not because they treated the challengers carelessly but because they were simply bound by constraints and couldn't move. And within this realm where constraints do not bind them, they acted without any second thoughts. They didn't value human life.

Kirikiri had warned me. The power of a god who doesn't protect himself was a blade without a handle.

You could stab someone with that blade, but you'd bleed more. I accepted the gods' offer even after hearing it because that was the only way I could survive.

I didn't hesitate to seize the only chance given to me, no matter what the risks were. That was what I had learned from Mister.

As I was walking forward, the tense situation made me feel as if I were playing Russian roulette. Really, I felt like I was approaching death.

How long had I been walking like this? I faced the wall of the hall, which seemed to be far away. There was no ruler of the volcano, unlike the system's declaration that we can't guarantee victory even if 50 challengers from the 61st-floor fight unless we weaken the ruler through sacrifice. Only an empty jade seat was there.

[First ascetic path. You've reached the end of the burning volcano.]

Explanation: You stand here, after countless sacrifices. Sacrifice is valuable because it tramples on all the precious things, including the lives of the victims, their future possibilities, their past stories, their bond with you, and sets your guilt right at the very top.

Now there's only one last hurdle left in front of you. Prove that you are the victor in a duel carried out to test your will.

[Clear conditions will be changed]

[Clear Condition]

– Conquering the first ascetic path.

– Conquering the second ascetic path.

– Win.

The conditions were easy to understand. But that last condition, that one line asking for victory, changed a lot. I stared at the message window for a moment, then entered the portal.

The place I got transported to by the portal was a huge stadium. It would hold a duel between those who cleared the first ascetic path and the second ascetic path.

[Welcome to the Battleground of Victims.]

Forced or not, the true meaning of sacrifice does not change. Now, you have to prove your worth.

The second journey. There are your colleagues who may have been hurt on the icy snowy road. Maybe they'll admit defeat for you. Maybe they'll try to win over you. But what's more important is your choice. Defeat and anger them. Make them your scapegoat.

“Ha...” I let out a deep sigh.

Then I started with what I had to do.

Mister's party had yet to enter the duel. This was an opportunity to set up a barrier in advance. All the challengers who were with me were Hell's Difficulty challengers. At the same time, they were also apostles of the gods.

As long as the gods were with them, it would confirm my victory. Even the power shown by Mister in the Tournament and the power that converted people's lives to death would definitely be meaningless in front of the gods' powers. All I had to do was buy time. If I bought 30 seconds or so, it would be my victory. If not, it would be my defeat.

I built a series of barriers. The challengers who had prepared for this moment, spread out everywhere, waiting for his entry.

At the moment when I really felt that I had done all the preparations I could, a portal in the corner of the stadium, began to shine. Mister's party had arrived.

The Hatchling, whom I first met at the Tournament, was seen. I could not help but be nervous. Mister's clone was holding the Hatchling.

There were two giants standing behind the party. The large bodies of the giants, each emitting intense heat and coldness, made me feel overwhelmed.

Finally, there was Mister smiling pleasantly, standing in front of the party. It was a face that I had seen many times on TV, and through my cloned self. I, myself, had met and talked to him yesterday. However, Mister who was facing me as an enemy gave off a completely different feeling than before.

It was time to make a choice. I opened my mouth, in the hopes that my voice wouldn't tremble.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

It was a strange feeling. I had wanted to come here for a really, really long time.

I felt strangely content. A sense of accomplishment that I'd finally made it, as a sense of freedom took over me, indicating that all my waiting was over. And the pride that came from the fact that Lee Yeon-hee had finally reached this point.

Lee Yeon-hee stood alone in the midst of the huge stadium.

Even with countless helpers, it seemed as if she were standing alone. She didn't look well either.

She looked like a ghost, with that white face and bloodless lips. Along with her anxious eyes, Lee Yeon-hee showed the typical image of a confused human being. I wish I could tell her to show more confidence.

"Are you the rulers of the volcano and the snow mountain of the 61st floor?" Lee Yeon-hee asked, pointing to the old man and old lady behind me.

They looked at Lee Yeon-hee, as if they were observing her. "Yes."

Why did she ask that?

Lee Yeon-hee remained silent for a while.

"Mister..."

"Yes."

Lee Yeon-hee could not immediately say what she wanted to.

Are you hesitating now?

I had expected an attack from Lee Yeon-hee as soon as I arrived. That was why I had entered the portal a step later than Lee Yeon-hee. I didn't expect her to talk to me with such hesitation.

"I have something to say..."

This was not a very good development.

Are you going to talk about what you've been upset about?

I felt sorry for what I did to her. I also thought I would apologize for it. But not right now.

Conversing with Lee Yeon-hee came later. I felt apologetic, but now was the time to fight with each other. Instead of waiting for her to continue, I opened my mouth first and uttered a word.

“Barus.”

Barus was the trigger of the suppressor planted on Lee Yeon-hee’s necklace. Of course, Lee Yeon-hee was no longer wearing the necklace, but nevertheless, as soon as she heard me say Barus, she reacted instantly, as if she had been splashed by hot oil.

At first, the barriers that had been piled up in the air appeared as if they were about to hit us. Spirits clung to my body from every side. Among them was a spirit that was shaped like a chain.

I left the barriers and spirits alone. It was clear that their intention was to waste time rather than attacking me. Yong-yong would protect everyone on his own.

Lee Yeon-hee had a look of surprise on her face, after reflexively summoning the barriers and spirits. Were there any more ways to bind her?

Lee Yeon-hee’s helpers began to appear around her. In an instant, the vast stadium was filled with people.

They were Hell’s Difficulty challengers from different universes. I could tell the moment I saw them.

There were over two thousand apostles. This would not simply be considered as a gathering of the apostles. If the apostles were here, it meant that their gods were also here.

Soon, the challengers felt a strong surge of powers in their bodies. The gods were on their way. Two thousand gods.

This was enough. I looked around for familiar gods among the gods who were here.

Most of the gods of the Temple, who used to be in charge of Earth's servers, seemed to have not participated much since all I saw were unfamiliar gods. But among them, there was a very familiar power. From the apostle standing right next to Lee Yeon-hee, I could feel the power of a being whom I had actually met before.

“Long time no see, man with a funny name.”

It was an unexpected god. Because when we had met before, she was definitely not a god.

“Godmother?”

Chapter 284

Tutorial 61st Floor (5)

“...Godmother?”

“You remember me.”

Of course I remember.

The meeting with Godmother had been a big shock to me. Her mana was strong enough to make the surrounding air flicker with a huge fox's appearance. To protect her species, she used curses and ghosts to kill people while asleep, and her status was an apostle of the God of Devotion. Godmother was the divine being who had remembered our first encounter.

Her ability at that time seemed god-like enough to me. Then again, I had tried to attack her with a knife. Admittedly, I had been out of my mind.

“How did you become a god if you were on that stage?”

“Because I've been outside.”

I couldn't believe she'd been outside from the start. It was challenging to comprehend.

“What's your name?”

Before inquiring more, I asked the identity of Godmother, who was now a god. If you wanted to know about a god, you must get to know his or her name. A god's name spoke for his or her identity.

“Sacrifice.”

As expected, I was glad that I'd asked for her name. I could figure out a lot just by hearing Godmother's name.

"I thought the God of Devotion designed the 61st floor."

"He was involved on the 19th floor—the place where you and I met. No, wait, there's a catch. It's where you and my remnants met."

The remnants of a disaster.

Instead of transforming and becoming a god, did you throw away impurities and achieve godhood?

The Godmother I had met was training to become an apostle.

Perhaps, somewhere on the 19th-floor stage, there was still a Godmother who was training and intending to become an apostle, in repeated time; however, Godmother's body had gone beyond that of an apostle and ascended the throne of godhood. She described her past self as a remnant.

The Godmother on the 19th floor was abandoned, bound there for eternity. The main body was left in its useful position, like a foothold for higher goals.

"Isn't it fun?"

"Fun?"

"Your situation. Doesn't it resemble mine? This stage was originally designed to be like that. You and this woman are the first challengers to go through the same process as me. The winner goes up, and the loser stays here forever," the Godmother said with a smile, in a calm tone.

She pointed at Lee Yeon-hee, who was standing next to her.

Because of the presence of a god standing right next to her, Lee Yeon-hee kept feeling uncomfortable. Maybe she saw my relationship with Godmother's remnants and thought of worse outcomes.

“Don’t be so angry. I mean nothing to you. I’m also a Pre-Vaccine god, so I know how crazy you are. Like the other gods, I won’t get involved in this either. I just wanted to watch,” she said amusedly.

“This situation?”

“Yes. I wanted to see who the winner would be.”

Sacrifice.

It may sound meek, but it was risking a loss to acquire something.

Even if the sacrifice that Godmother meant was someone else’s sacrifice.

She wouldn’t consider other people’s feelings or positions.

She was such a god.

“The God of Devotion will be sad.”

“Haha, it can’t be helped. What can I do? This is also a part of being a god.”

The gods were like psychopaths. It hadn’t been many days, but the God of Sacrifice was a bit extreme.

She was a god who preferred sociopaths.

She wasn’t a god who was beneficial to mental health.

Let’s stop with this topic.

“It’s coming soon.”

After Lee Yeon-hee and the God of Sacrifice, the other gods were wrapping up the scene.

It was quite slow compared to the God of Sacrifice.

Gods could wield considerable autonomy in a place where their influence and power prevail, like the God of Hope, who reversed the stage's goal.

If the God of Sacrifice designed this place, it was no wonder that she spoke to me one step ahead of the others.

"Now, it's time for me to leave."

The God of Sacrifice spoke with regret.

I felt sorry, too.

"Why? Stay a bit longer."

"Haha. Do you think I'm a fool?"

As soon as the God of Sacrifice said that, she was gone.

Her apostle remained but only stood dazed.

Damn it.

She's quick-witted.

The God of Sacrifice referred to the Pre-Vaccine gods.

There seemed to be a difference in information between the Pre-Vaccine gods and the Pantheon gods.

They were gods bound by all kinds of restrictions.

If Pre-Vaccine gods wanted to get involved in a place beyond their dimension, there would be costs for collecting information.

I'll have to ask later.

As soon as the God of Sacrifice disappeared, the power of the new gods filled the space.

One by one, the gods began to move.

A single god could make you feel a ridiculous amount of pressure.

The gods' pressure began to build up, and the air felt painful because of the weight of it.

If you were an ordinary person, your skin would burn just by touching the air while inhaling it into your lungs would make your body a mess.

When the number of gods summoned exceeded 100, the floor we were standing on began to crumble.

Lee Yeon-hee was lying down and working on something.

Her top priority was to survive as long as possible.

I turned around and looked at my party.

Yong-yong was working hard in earnest, so there was little damage.

I looked at it as if it were a fantastic sight.

Only Seregia was relaxed, and the rest of them were on alert with nervous eyes.

[Hey, isn't this a little dangerous?] asked Hochi, his tone laced with uneasiness.

However, I had a lot of worries. The faster the gods grew, the noisier the stadium became. The gods were beings who talked even while putting pressure on us. Two thousand of them were renewed almost simultaneously, but none of them were extras. They all regarded themselves as the main characters.

Naturally, it became noisier.

No matter how heavy their presence was and how confident they were, there was nothing to say.

Because I couldn't even hear them.

But the gods didn't stop talking.

They weren't even speaking quietly, and instead, they tried to carry out their voice and will, making it echo all over the place, and in the end, nothing could be heard correctly.

I thought that the Pre-Vaccine or the Pantheon gods' Temple would be this chaotic and noisy.

There might be many purposes for the gods to be here. Some may be interested in me like the God of Sacrifice was, while others may want me as a new apostle. But several wanted to see the strength I had shown in the tournament, to take it, and to figure out how to be outside the scrutiny of the system and the gods.

There would be various purposes. Whatever they wanted, they only thought of me as a target of exploitation. That's why they'd been here all this time.

"I have a proposition for you."

"It's even more amazing to see you in person."

"Why don't you resist?"

"Tell me!"

"My apostle..."

"Are you scared?"

I tried to concentrate on what the gods were talking about, but there was nothing worthwhile. They were just snorting like pigs.

Meanwhile, Lee Yeon-hee had her hands tightly closed on her ears. It was difficult to withstand this pressure with her ability.

“Shut up.”

There was no need to wait any longer. I’d already waited too long.

I released the power that had been sealed away.

* * *

“Shut up and listen to me.”

The noisy area quickly became silent.

It didn’t matter that they were gods. They were behaving like chatty humans.

I had the power here.

“I’m here.”

Let them listen to me.

“I can see this world and hear all the voices.”

It was a declaration that had been delayed for a long time. I didn’t know that this moment would be this perfect. I thanked Lee Yeon-hee once again.

“My will is the will of this world, and my presence proves it. Now that I am here, this world will be my sanctuary.”

I asked the gods, who kept their mouths shut, “You know what this means, don’t you?”

But no one answered because I didn't allow it.

“Get the hell out of my house, you pigs.”

I forced teleportation. Even the gods from different universes could not disobey the order.

Here, my will was the truth and the law.

The gods were lifted and teleported to where they were initially supposed to be. Now the ones left behind were not 2,000 gods but 2,000 apostles.

The connection with the gods was forcibly torn apart, and the apostles began to go crazy. There was one who cried out in pain, one who was about to go mad for power, and one who ran for me. They were only moths rushing towards death.

Forced to lose the most precious thing of life, they began to run in different directions, searching for their only remaining light: death.

Of course, I didn't want them to be freed through suicide.

The shadows of the apostles running wild shook.

The shadows moved independently as if they were living creatures.

The shadows, which rose with an appearance of mud, began to devour the apostles.

They broke out of their lock and cut off the arms and legs of their own master.

One cut off the tongue of an apostle trying to chant a spell and then cut a hole in their Adam's apple.

Broken joints and castrated vital points. Blood and flesh splattered everywhere. But no screams were heard.

“Ahhhhhh!”

Who was the one who just screamed?

When I turned my head, I noticed that it came from the God of Sacrifice’s apostle. Oh, he must have been hit when the gods were summoned back. He was more relaxed than the others, so he was resisting the shadows.

I spoke while putting some more shadows on him, “Don’t worry too much. I’m not gonna kill you.”

Why would I kill them? All of them were my precious assets. They were of great use.

Firstly, they could be used to negotiate with the gods who came here.

How far can I tear them apart in exchange for the power of apostles and gods left in their bodies?

Just the thought satisfied me.

“Oh, of course, if your god refuses to make a deal, the story will be different. But to be honest, either instance works for me.”

Soon all the apostles sank into the shadows.

When all were swallowed up, I checked the strength, and a satisfied smile rose on my face. This was a fantastic power. The power that the gods had left behind in their apostles without being able to retrieve them.

[It’s not dangerous, is it?] asked Hochi. [Can’t you tell me that in advance? I wouldn’t have been worried.]

Hochi was still grumpy.

Yong-yong was dismantling his barriers. Although they were barriers that could be recalled at once if prepared in advance, dismantling them was not that easy. It'd take some time.

I approached Lee Yeon-hee, who was lying down. There was still something left to talk about.

“Get up.”

Lee Yeon-hee's body, which had been half-dead, recovered quickly, and she jumped up.

Lee Yeon-hee looked at herself in a bewildered manner and opened her mouth.

“Surrender.”

Quick judgment. Quick choice.

She was a disciple whom I had taught a lot. A portal appeared at her feet, with the message.

[Failed to clear the stage.]

[Before we move to the residential area, we'll finish talking, Lee Yeon-hee.]

The portal that appeared under her feet moved far away. Again, she put on a look of bewilderment.

“You're done for. I adjusted the message and the portal.”

That was what happened when I waited for a capable disciple but didn't want to let her die. I gave her an offer.

“You have three options.”

While listening to me, Lee Yeon-hee's eyes widened, and she asked, "If you could send me up, you would still clear the Tutorial."

"Huh, no."

"Yes, I'm sure you can. You would have told me earlier."

Lee Yeon-hee looked at me with her eyes dripping with tears.

Of course, I knew there was such a method, but there were chances that I couldn't do it.

"What kind of options are those? Please tell me."

She looked quite calm, unlike her earlier stressed appearance. She was still trembling, but she looked better.

"You didn't kill me, and you talked about an offer. At least, I won't die. You've been locked up on the 60th floor for a long time, but you won't kill me, right?"

Once you've survived, you'd have finished the hardest part.

She was right.

I responded positively to her question.

Lee Yeon-hee was greatly relieved that she had confirmed her safety.

"There are three options. One is waiting for a new challenger on the 60th floor as I did, but I don't recommend it. The second is to get out of the 60th floor through negotiations with the gods. I don't recommend this either."

It was too dangerous to recommend to Lee Yeon-hee. Above all, there was no reason for the gods to do so. The use of spying on me was gone. In the past, we could have come out with all gods' consent in the Hundred Gods Temple, but it was hard as long as the Pantheon Gods also intervened.

The thoughts of 10,100 beings were bound to be different.

“The last offer is to be my apostle.”

Lee Yeon-hee remained silent for a while.

It was a critical moment, so I decided to wait for a while.

After thinking about it, she asked in a monotonous tone. “If I refuse, you’ll kill me, right?”

“Yes.”

Answering so naturally made me feel slightly guilty since she had asked me calmly.

[Really? Hello? Where’d your conscience go?] asked Ho Chi.

I didn’t know what to say. If Lee Yeon-hee didn’t become an apostle, the 60th and 61st floors were exposed to the gods. I’d have no choice but to kill her.

“I’ll do that.”

I gave my power to the accepted apostle. There was no need to be formal. I made her an apostle.

“Is it done?”

“Yes.”

“Now... what should I do? Do I just spend time on the 60th floor? Forever?”

“Go back for now. You remember my room, right? There are things I have left for you. What you need to do will be written there. You’ll be quite busy, so hurry up.”

Lee Yeon-hee nodded.

Even after being able to get out of the Tutorial, I had no choice but to wait for her because my sanctuary, the 60th and 61st floors, remained. I needed someone to protect the place. So I waited for her.

“Mister.”

“Uh, yes?”

“Nothing...”

Lee Yeon-hee seemed to have something to say, but she soon shut up.

She had a lot to say.

I also knew why I couldn’t talk right away. Later, when time had passed, there’d be a chance to speak again. Lee Yeon-hee climbed onto the portal.

I finally spoke to her without saying any greetings, “You’ve had a hard time. Good job, Yeon-Hee.”

I didn’t know how comforting my words would be, but Lee Yeon-hee quietly nodded and moved to the 60th floor.

“It’s over.”

“I know,” said Hochi, who had come to my side before I knew it.

It was over.

It’d been a long time.

When I came up to the 60th floor, I knew the wait would block my way.

I didn't know it would be this long.

After entering the Tutorial, I'd been through all sorts of hardships.

But in fact, it wasn't so painful.

I was rather excited and happy.

The only thing that always bothered me was the helplessness that came from waiting, and the loneliness that came from isolation. For each of these two things, I turned my gaze and avoided it each time I was confronted. I didn't have the confidence to endure it or overcome it.

For me, the 60th floor forced me to face what I had always wanted to avoid.

In the end, we had reached this moment.

Now, A god could even compare me to a sword.

It was hard to call me a sword before.

I was an arrow back then.

I had already been shot and was flying.

I hoped to hit the target, but it was too far away.

I was an arrow that ran out of power, got blocked by a wall, and then splintered.

I was not perfect now.

The limits of my ability still existed.

My emotions still swayed them.

I didn't have as mature a personality as I had strength.

My behavior was inconsistent.

If Hochi, Yong-Yong, and the others disappeared from my side right now, I might not withstand it and return to the past.

I'd make many mistakes in the past, but I was still not finished blundering.

But as I kept learning, I changed.

And when I looked back, I was sure I was getting better than before.

I was growing.

That was what was important.

That was how it happened, and we were finally over the threshold of the 61st floor.

"Are you going straight to Earth?"

"No."

Before going to Earth, there was a place to stop by.

"I have a friend to meet before I go out. I promised to grant your wish."

I stood on the portal. Hochi and Yong-yong also stood on top of the portal. The old man and the old lady couldn't stand on it, so they put their fingers together.

The portal's light brightened the view.

When the white-colored vision gradually began to regain color, I could see the green fields spread out under the blue sky and a rabbit smiling clearly.

“KiriKiri.”

Chapter 285

Tutorial 17th Floor (?)

[Lee Hyung-jin]

[Lee Hyung-jin, 16th floor: Can I do it?]

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Of course you can. There isn't a big difference between you and me. Don't fret over it.]

I re-read the conversation that took place quite a while ago.

I kept reading.

Hyung firmly believed that I could clear the 17th floor without any problems.

The basis of our faith varied.

It depended on the presence of magic. At the time of the 17th floor, Hyung said that he couldn't use magic. This difference was huge.

Magic skills didn't determine everything, but an opponent who didn't know about magic was less responsive.

It was better to stop magic attacks smartly than to be strong or swift.

Next, there was also a difference in items. The only items held by the mirage were a long sword, two daggers, and a small, medium-sized shield.

Of course, I heard that there were a variety of potions, but the items were of no use to me, who had more of them than anyone else.

Hyung didn't like using the items, saying that it stunted your skill growth, but the items had always shown to be more effective than what I had expected.

Finally, there was also the difference between the basic stats. Hyung told me about his stats and compared them to mine. Our physical stats were almost identical, but his muscular stats were far ahead of mine. And in the case of agility, his was almost twice as much as mine.

The massive difference in agility also meant that I could not win without a wide gap in skills.

The difference in agility made a difference in ability since basic body movements and speed were different.

For those reasons, Hyung was positive about my victory, but I myself wasn't.

I'd been preparing for a long time.

17th-floor stage.

Ever since Hyung cleared the 17th floor and told me about it, I'd been thinking about this stage.

Not once had I expected a victory on the 17th-floor stage.

"Can I start?" I spoke aloud, not by message, but by voice.

The person I spoke to was, of course, Kirikiri.

"Sure."

When I asked about the 17th floor, Kirikiri would always answer that she didn't know. That was when I had first heard about the 17th floor. Even now, she stayed silent.

It may be possible that she didn't reply as an act to refrain from informing me of some results.

I took out the monster ball that I always carried and held it tightly in my hand. This monster ball always reassured me. Somedays, when I felt like I couldn't make it, I was comforted that this would be my lifeline.

The monster ball had made me come all the way here.

I was quietly looking at the monster ball when a pale hand snatched it away. It was Kirikiri. Kirikiri had run away swiftly to the other side, taking the monster ball from my hand.

Shocked and bewildered, my body froze for a moment.

Anxiety, anger, and fear that Kirikiri might really take it away came crashing on me.

The next moment, I started running after Kirikiri, who was faster than I thought.

When I felt a sense of urgency beyond impatience, I managed to catch up with Kirikiri.

I lifted her by the scruff of her neck.

“Keeyek.” As soon as Kirikiri was caught, she stopped moving and dangled in the air, flailing like a cat.

“What are you doing!?” I shouted at her, taking back the monster ball from Kirikiri with my other free hand.

I was anxious because I thought I was too rough, but I calmed down when I took back the monster ball.

“I told you before. You’re going to die because of that ball,” said Kirikiri, still hanging in the air, looking at me in the eye.

It felt even more embarrassing when she said it so calmly as if it were natural.

Not long after returning from the Tournament, Kirikiri had mentioned it when she saw me holding the monster ball. I didn't know why Kirikiri was so negative about the monster ball.

I asked for the reason several times, but she never answered.

First of all, I dropped Kirikiri and apologized. It was not right to treat her carelessly.

“Can I use this?”

“I’ve told you before. You can’t send it to another level of difficulty.”

“Then, you can send it to Hyung.”

Kirikiri shook her head with a hard, grim look.

“I suggest you don’t.”

“...Why so?”

Kirikiri never answered again. In the end, I had to infer the answer for myself.

I came to two possibilities. First, I had been neglected.

Hyung’s protection was essential for me to survive on the stage that came after the 60th floor. If Hyung neglected me, the odds of me surviving on my own wouldn’t be high.

Second, I was going to die because of Hyung.

With that eccentric personality, he could try to stop me in anger at the fact that I’d been running away. He had pulled out John Overton’s arm because he was drinking and crying in a Tournament.

Of course, he wouldn’t really try to kill me, but it was another matter whether I actually died or not.

“It’s still the same. No matter how it goes, there won’t be a good ending.”

* * *

[Kirikiri]

“So loathsome,” I murmured quietly, sitting alone in the field.

There was a reply to my murmur.

[But you’re worse. Why didn’t you just let me go?]

“...You keep saying that because you know I can’t let you go. You even hide the fact that it’s ‘new’. It’s loathsome.”

The voice laughed. [Thanks, anyway. Because of you, I had a lot of fun.]

The voice hid its presence in the field at the end of those words.

I mumbled once again, “So loathsome.”

* * *

[Lee Hyung-jin, 17th floor: I’m going in now.]

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Yeah. Be careful. Don’t talk to the mirage, just in case. Ignore anything it says.]

[Lee Hyung-jin, 17th floor: Yes.]

Hyung had repeatedly stressed not to talk to the mirage.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: No matter how tough the opponent, the mirage can only find a way out through dialogue. Just don’t hold a conversation.]

[Lee Hyung-jin, 17th floor: Okay. I got it]

[Entering the stage on the 17th floor]

The monster ball, which had been made into a necklace and was hung around my neck, was once again held tightly by hand.

Thanks to this monster ball, I was able to come all the way here. In my despair, this monster ball was like a ray of hope to me. It gave me a moment of optimism and a chance for me to breathe.

As soon as I entered the stage, I looked around. The peculiar thing was that the interior was hard to see.

Beyond that, I could see Hyung's mirage, and there was a transparent wall separating me from the mirage.

[After 30 seconds, the 17th-floor stage will start.]

Damn it. Give me a little more time.

As soon as I saw the message, I squatted on the floor and drew a magic circle.

I didn't know the principle, but it was a magic circle that was often used because of its excellent effects.

I worked hard to complete the magic circle in 30 seconds until someone talked to me in a calm voice.

"What is that?"

"This is..."

A familiar voice asked me in a monotonous manner, and I almost answered without realizing it.

When I looked up in amazement, it was the mirage that had come right in front of me. He had squatted down and was staring at me intensely.

“What is it?”

I instantly thought of a crow.

Once in a while, when I walked along the street, some cats and crows stared at people.

They never attacked people, and I knew it was not dangerous to attack them, but sometimes I got nervous and scared.

It felt like that.

I knew he couldn't attack me right now because the wall was blocking him, but I felt like he would rush at me right away.

It was as if a knife was being pointed at me, in front of my eyes. I couldn't turn away.

Like a stone statue, he was sturdy, and unmoving, but was also vigilant.

[After 15 seconds, the stage will start.]

* * *

I finally came to my senses at the message and bowed my head.

When I avoided his gaze, I immediately broke out of my shock.

For the rest of the time, I diligently urged my hands to complete the magic team.

“Wow. So you're ignoring me to finish that?”

I could feel the hairs on my arms rise. I wondered if it was possible. Possible for it to be so much like a human, and at the same time, a monster.

Even monsters didn't go around like that.

[The 17th-floor stage starts.]

After a short period, the transparent wall disappeared. The mirage began to move as soon as the wall vanished.

Bang!

The mirage flew and crashed into me. I couldn't even see the movement properly, but I knew what technique it was: Blink.

It was the technique that Hyung had used as his primary attack at that time. Blink was a way to cross a distance at a very high speed.

Of course, I had my defense ready. I had prepared an item that automatically created a mana barrier whenever there was a strong attack.

The mirage that hit the barrier, and not me, would get a shock.

I took a sword out of the inventory and swung it so as not to miss the opportunity.

The mirage's neck had been very close, but the mirage still managed to escape the sword very narrowly.

My attack had missed, but I continued to take the initiative. It was possible to disorientate the mirage by continuing my attacks.

The difference in speed made it easier. The mirage generally held off on attacking as well.

However, he was not able to completely block all attacks. Little by little, the wounds on the mirage's body increased one by one. The word victory flashed through my mind.

If only I could maintain this advantage without messing up.

Boom!

The mirage stomped on my foot.

For a split second, I had thought he was about to use Blink again and prepared myself. Instead of using Blink, the mirage made me take a half a step forward when I wanted to attack.

And instead of attacking, he stomped on my foot.

The barrier was not activated.

I swung the sword to strike back at the mirage, who had stomped on my foot, but he was too fast for me to block or change the course of my sword.

The mirage hit me on the chin with an uppercut.

Once again, a barrier was made. Bang! The mirage's attack was blocked. However, my center of gravity shifted to the back. On top of that, the mirage pushed his body straight towards me, and my body fell back.

My ankle that had been stepped on broke and a resounding crack was heard. If I fell to the floor like this, I'd get forced into a mount position.

Death.

I had to escape.

I hurriedly shouted a trigger with my hand in the direction of the welcome face.

Boom!

An explosion occurred in my hand with the short trigger. My body shifted backward.

It was an evasion method that combined short distance teleportation with an explosion that ruined vision. Now was the time for the mirage to be distracted by the explosion in front of him.

I activated the pre-prepared magic circle. "Electric Field!"

Puck!

As soon as I muttered the words, I flew back because of a strong impact.

What just happened?

The mirage caught me off-guard by launching an attack on me and broke through the barrier before the Electric Field developed.

I could tell that my ribs were dislocated. I was struggling to breathe right now.

I grasped my chest and looked at the mirage.

Thank God.

The mirage had managed to get in an attack, but he couldn't get out of the electric field. The mirage was bound by an electrical stream that paralyzed his whole body.

"You son of a b*tch... You're gonna die when this is over. You'll die right away!"

He repeatedly said that I would die, staring at me like a madman, even though an electric shock bound him.

His behaviour gave me goosebumps. Now, I doubted if he was really a person.

I felt a sharp pain in my chest, but I forced myself to stand up. I had to finish off the mirage before the electric field discharged.

Holding a knife in my still-intact right hand, I rushed to the mirage.

When I was about to strike the sword at his heart, the mirage moved.

He, who should not budge even a finger, held up his left hand to block the incoming blade's stroke. The blade penetrated his palm, but not his heart.

I twisted the blade reflexively, slicing the mirage's hand into half and aimed for his heart again.

The body of the mirage shook. He moved his upper body half a foot ahead—a very short distance.

He came near my neck, sinking his teeth into my flesh, taking a large bite, disrupting my concentration.

My vision went black. I heard a brief ringing in my ears, and soon, nothing was heard.

When my vision came back, I was lying on the floor, and the mirage was looking down at me. He was holding a piece of flesh in his mouth, that seemed to be a part of my neck.

My vision disappeared again after he spat it out.

* * *

“Hey, are you up?”

I heard a voice. I was not dead yet.

“Open your eyes if you are awake.”

I didn't open my eyes. I needed to figure out what was going on.

“Ahhhhhh!”

I screamed instantly when I felt a sharp pain on the lower part of my body.

“It hurts, doesn’t it? Everyone who pretends to be dead screams when they get hit here.” The mirage, who was calmly talking, was sitting on top of me.

He was pressing down on a vital point near my pelvic bone with one hand and had a dagger pointed at my neck with his other hand.

“Save me, save me. Hyung...”

I didn’t want to die. I didn’t want to die in vain here.

“Of course, I’ll save you. Why would I kill you, Hyung-jin? There’s so much I need to ask,” said the mirage.

Hope rose again at his words. Hyung at this time knew me, too. If he saw and recognized me, he wouldn’t kill me.

“Hyung. Hyung... let me explain. I can explain.” My voice shook. I could feel that I had been healed using something, be it Elixir or Potion.

It was hard to convince the mirage that this was a stage, but I had to do it.

This was the only option.

“Okay. Let’s start with the magic circle you used earlier.”

“No. Hyung, that doesn’t matter... Argh!”

“I decide what’s important, Hyung-jin.”

Eventually, I was able to start talking only after sharing all the magic I knew.

At first, the mirage didn't believe me and doubted me. The mirage thought he was real and that he was challenging to the 17th floor.

Contrary to Kirikiri's advice, he thought it strange that the difficulty level of the 17th floor was high, but he seemed to think this stage was better than a bland stage.

Besides, he had memories of the 16th floor, which was just before, so he couldn't believe what I was saying anymore.

He thought it was a stage that featured an enemy who was close to him.

The clear goal was to get rid of the enemy at the last minute. I had to persuade him very carefully.

The words available for use were also limited. Under the system's restrictions, I had to make him turn around, be suspicious of the situation, and infer the answer.

"Fake, huh?"

"I understand you suspect me because the whole floor is like a doppelganger. But if you listen calmly, you'll know I'm right, Hyung."

The mirage listened to my explanation for a long time, then asked again, "I'm a fake?"

I felt a strange feeling when I saw the mirage asking the same question again.

I ignored the strange feeling and continued the conversation.

"There's a way out of here. You and I can go up. Using this ball, Hyung. Hyung?"

The mirage was looking at me with an indifferent expression similar to the one from before. But unlike before, when he acted as if my story was interesting, the mirage seemed to be angry at something.

“Hyung...”?

“Hyung-jin.”

“...Yes, Hyung.”

“I’m not a fake.”

I nodded unconsciously as I saw him speak.

“Right? I’m not a fake. I’m not fake. I’m not.” The mirage, who muttered quietly to himself, raised his hand which held the dagger.

A spark of light flashed at the tip of the dagger.

[God of Hope smiles at you]

Looking at the dagger that began to descend, I foresaw my death.

And on the other hand, I expected the message regarding the God of Hope, which had appeared at the last moment, to save me.

All kinds of thoughts flooded my mind in a split second, and the dagger fell without any hesitation.

[God of Hope smiles at you]

Chapter 286

Seoul (1)

“I’m back.”

“Good. Now come and take a look at this.”

He acted as if he was just meeting a friend on an errand to the convenience store.

“...Would it bother you to tell me that I’ve done a good job on my trip?”

“Ah, well done. Joon-suk, look at this.”

Lee Joon-suk frowned at his insincere attitude. But, as far as he knew, Kim Min-hyuk was a kind and considerate person, and so, instead of being annoyed, he calmly received the note from Kim Min-hyuk.

“It’s from a guy who came out a few days ago. I heard that Ho-jae’s clone did something during the Tournament. He met a hostile challenger from a different planet. They talked for a few minutes. Black smoke appeared, and then, the opponent was found dead.”

Black smoke appeared, and the opponent died. The results were clearly stated, but the cause was vague.

“Is something omitted? Or maybe he didn’t see it right.”

“I don’t think so. This is information from the Order of the Vigilance.”

“...the Order of the Vigilance?”

The Order of the Vigilance knew how difficult it was to communicate from outside and inside the Tutorial.

There were months when people often got deficient and distorted information, and sometimes, the news didn't come in at all.

The Order of the Vigilance members, who were well aware of these facts, had always meticulously written down the information they knew.

Most of all, Lee Joon-suk didn't think Park Jung-ah, who was strict about news like this, would have sent out such inadequate information.

"I don't think they know what's going on either. That's why they sent it."

If they added a personal opinion, it could make the wrong information real.

Kim Min-hyuk asked Lee Joon-suk again, "What do you think?"

"Well, I think I can do something about it."

Kim Min-hyuk was surprised when he asked, "You can do it too?"

"No... I mean, Ho-jae can do it. He used to be obsessed with invisible techniques. He's done it before. I'm not surprised, I guess. Wouldn't you die if a hole was poked in your heart or something?"

It was a valid opinion.

"He said there was no apparent wound. And since the opponent is a Hell Difficulty's challenger, would he die instantly on the spot just because he had a hole in his heart?"

"It could be a mixed attack. If you had a high fever, there would be no blood flow to some affected areas, and as soon as you penetrate a vital point, you'll collapse, so the impact would be enough to make you die suddenly. Of course, it's a different matter to keep it out of sight, but it's Ho-jae we're talking about here. Do you think it's impossible?"

Kim Min-hyuk murmured, "I think it's possible."

Kim Min-hyuk had cleared the Tutorial's Normal Difficulty level and had plenty of experience, but he could not estimate Lee Joon-suk or Lee Ho-jae's abilities.

Whenever common sense, which he understood, was denied by others; he felt wronged.

"How strong would he be now?"

"He's going to be very strong, I guess," Lee Joon-suk answered naturally.

It was an answer that Kim Min-hyuk had heard several times before. When Kim Min-hyuk last saw Lee Ho-jae, he already had unrivaled power. More than a decade had passed since then. It was hard for Kim Min-hyuk to guess how powerful he was now.

"I heard Lee Yeon-hee reached the 60th floor. Are you tense?"

"Have you seen the article?"

"Yes, I saw it as soon as I got off at the airport."

Lee Yeon-hee had eventually reached the 60th floor of the Hell Difficulty's level. The whole world was talking about this fact, and the media was going wild.

It was no wonder, considering the Awakened status these days and the symbolism of Hell Difficulty.

The problem was that news about such Tutorial challengers had been spread around. That kind of atmosphere was formed around the time developed countries gradually emerged victorious from the threat of monsters and gates.

The stakes were high on which challenger would be the first to pass the Hell difficulty level, or which floor they'd arrive at. On TV shows, they had made numerous documentaries about Hell Difficulty.

In the U.S., they were idolizing and characterizing them. In the past, the U.S. and Korean servers were chosen for the challenge. In the case of the United States, they had the most significant number of Hell Difficulty challengers.

There was an irregular challenger named Lee Ho-jae on the Korean server.

The media had turned the two servers into a competitive structure. It had been making hot bets on what country would produce the first Hell Difficulty level's awakening, or what country would recruit that Awakened and would take a new form of leadership in the world.

Until a few years ago, the U.S's Hell Difficulty had as many as ten 30th-floor challengers. The media predicted that it would be possible for them to clear faster than the Korean server.

Challengers of the U.S. server, who were being targeted by multiple people simultaneously, would not be blocked on the 60th floor where party play was forced.

(T/N: 'Targeted' here refers to how Ho-jae made Yeon-hee his target.)

But it wasn't the 60th floor that blocked them, but the 30th floor. Years had passed since the American challengers reached the 30th floor, but the highest floor they breached was still only the 33rd floor. They had not taken a step forward ever since five challengers died on the 34th floor.

Meanwhile, Lee Yeon-hee's advance began. Lee Yeon-hee slowly and steadily surpassed the 30th-floor mark while the U.S. server's challengers were left behind.

After reaching the 40th floor, her speed seemed to have slowed down, but recently, it had increased dramatically. Every time Lee Yeon-hee's floor numbers were revealed, people went wild.

And then, Lee Yeon-hee finally arrived on the 60th floor. Naturally, the media was excited about the Hell Difficulty attack.

They predicted Lee Ho-jae and Lee Yeon-hee's post-clearing moves or talked about their past once again.

They had been talking all day long about the Awakened world's perceptual changes that would begin with their clearing the Tutorial. In a way, people's enthusiastic support may be called natural.

Major cities were now somewhat free from the monsters' threat, but they were still not completely free yet.

There was still a chance of being attacked by monsters while walking the streets at night, and there was still some amount of traffic caused by the occasional spawning of gates. Even at this moment, in areas occupied by monsters, the population of monsters was growing exponentially.

Moreover, most people shared the experience of losing close friends due to the aftermath of the cataclysmic upheaval that occurred more than a decade ago.

Kim Min-hyuk was also aware of their expectations and hopes for the Awakened from Hell difficulty level.

The problem is that he's not what you expect him to be.

Lee Ho-jae, whom Kim Min-hyuk knew, was like a monk who was uninterested in the world. He always did what he wanted to do and what he thought was right. Above all, regardless of what he wanted to do or didn't want to do, he hated the fact that someone made him do something.

In short, he was crazy.

Whatever people expected from him, Lee Ho-jae was likely to ignore those expectations. Kim Min-hyuk didn't know about Lee Yeon-hee, but he knew there was only one person who could clear the 61st floor. And between Lee Ho-jae and Lee Yeon-hee, Lee Ho-jae had a very high probability of clearing the 61st floor.

"But didn't we originally decide not to do this? I think she was supposed to report only to the 59th floor and notify you later that she went up to the 60th floor," Lee Joon-suk asked.

As far as he knew, Kim Min-hyuk had agreed with the South Korean government to bury the information for a while, as soon as he obtained information that Lee Yeon-hee had gone up to the 60th floor.

“The government has gone off-track.”

Thanks to that, Kim Min-hyuk’s headache was getting worse day by day. Kim Min-hyuk wanted to keep this fact hidden for a little longer. Before Lee Ho-jae came out, he had to prepare more.

But now that it had already been reported, preparations would be even more difficult.

“The one who leaked must’ve been a civil servant.”

Unlike Lee Joon-suk, who talked calmly about this, Kim Min-hyuk wanted to visit the person who leaked the information, grab him by the collar and shake him.

Fortunately, it wasn’t too bad. It was not too late to complete the building of the summoning portal.

The challengers who had cleared the Tutorial would be summoned to the center of each nation’s capital’s main streets. In Korea, it was in front of Seoul Station. Naturally, the place had become a landmark.

Every time the news of someone clearing out came out, the media camped out in front of it. As soon as the Awakened came out, they pointed the camera at them.

Sometimes, when the weather was good, people gathered in front of Seoul Station to wait for them. Whenever that happened, the broadcasting company’s ratings soared, and the buzz and business near the Seoul Station, where people gathered, rose along with it.

For them, the summoning of the Awakened was a festival.

Even though some liked the situation where people interviewed them as soon as they came out of the Tutorial world, most didn’t like it. Most were locked up in the Tutorial for years or a decade at the most. Their return to Earth made their feelings complicated.

They could be happy, but on the contrary, they could also be afraid. It was never a good thing to draw attention, recite cheers, and hand over a microphone to the confused Awakened.

In Kim Min-hyuk's opinion, ordinary Awakened people would not be able to withstand Lee Ho-jae's anger and irritation. Kim Min-hyuk had made a building around the summon portal in front of the Seoul Station.

Despite a lot of opposition, the building was completed early this month with the aid of Human Rights groups and the Awakened that he drew to the World Association of the Awakened.

The reporters would camp in front of the building for an interview, and the audience would remain the same, but the Awakened would at least be able to prepare their minds to face them.

The final problem was that the building was under the jurisdiction of the government. Given the government's recent behavior, they could not be sure what would happen if they let Lee Ho-jae meet with government officials.

The Korean government was already in full swing due to the leak of the news of the Awakened and the power struggle amidst groups. There was no telling what those crazy officials would do.

"I have to discuss this with them."

"It's going to be a pain to deal with the government."

"Well, there's nothing else I can do but tolerate it."

The damned government may disappear if something went wrong. Kim Min-hyuk intended to win concessions from the government even if he had to give up quite a few things.

If an agreement was not reached, he would be the one to meet Lee Ho-jae first, even if he had to mobilize his association's members to occupy the Seoul Station on the same day.

Of course, that was the last resort, and perhaps, a condition of handing over or returning some of the association's interest to the government would satisfy them.

"You'll be busy again for a while. Oh, right, what happened to your business trip?"

"You finally remembered," Lee Joon-suk replied with a big smile.

"As a courtesy, could you at least give me tea and snacks? I just got back from Antarctica."

* * *

Lee Joon-suk said while munching on a piece of chocolate pie, "There's so much to be said about how the G-class monsters were hunted around in the U.S... The most plausible theory is that the U.S. military used nuclear weapons, but their radiation level was low. I think it's better to contemplate more about the theory."

One of the G-class monsters that existed on Earth had settled on the United States' eastern coast. Since then, any attempt to hunt a G-class monster has failed.

When Lee Joon-suk came out of the Tutorial, the first thing he did was hunt that G-class monster.

In fact, he attempted to hunt it with the World Association, but at the last minute, he gave up hunting and returned to Korea. Criticism was poured on Lee Joon-suk, but he did not change his decision.

Lee Joon-suk thought it would be better to kill other monsters scattered worldwide than to suffer damage from killing a G-class monster that didn't even move in its territory.

"This is the last trip you were going to take, to Antarctica, right?"

"Yes, I've scouted all the G-class monsters."

"How was it?"

Even if he couldn't kill the G-class monsters right away, Kim Min-hyuk wanted to know their power.

Lee Joon-suk checked on the G-class, who were spread worldwide to confirm the possible attacks.

“Bad. I can't touch them.” He gave a firm answer.

A G-class monster had been successfully hunted under the leadership of the United States nearly a decade ago. It was still challenging to get ahead of them because they couldn't recover the power of the Awakened who were lost at the time.

Lee Joon-suk wedged Kim Min-hyuk, who was doubtful.

“I don't think Ho-jae would be able to take out the G-class monsters.”

Note/s from Imagine:

I remember briefly when Ho-Jae killed that other hell challenger, he had bracelets on his arm which disappeared before he used his powers, the fact that he had braceletS to hold back his powers is quite cool and something I didn't catch the first time I read through it.

Chapter 287

Tutorial 71st Floor (1)

[You have cleared the 71st floor.]

* * *

“Hey!”

“Hi!”

Kirikiri and Yong-yong, who had run towards each other shouting the same greeting, grabbed each other’s hands and began to spin around.

How long will they be like that?

The two had been sticking to such a greeting whenever we cleared a floor. It was pleasant to see at first, but now it felt a little strange.

I watched Kirikiri and Yong-yong play for a while, then glanced back. As soon as Hochi came out of the stage, he took out a novel and started reading it.

The old lady and the old man were resting in a small space while Seregia was sprawled on the floor.

Her limbs flung out in different directions. Her figure resembled a discarded doll, rather than a man resting.

“Seregia, lie down straight and rest.”

As usual, Seregia ignored me. I sighed at her, who seemed to suddenly be deaf and didn't react at all.

"Do you want a futon to lie on?"

"Yes, please." She was good at answering questions like this. I laid down the futon, and Seregia crawled into it. Then, she stopped moving again.

I thought that she'd been living too long as an inanimate object. I was thinking about setting up a tent for her, but now that I thought about it... Nah.

It was obvious that she wouldn't care anyway.

I walked to Kirikiri. Yong-yong rolled with Kirikiri for a while and then ran away to catch the butterfly Kirikiri had summoned. It seemed that Yong-Yong loved everything he saw for the first time.

"You didn't summon anything like that back then."

"Do you like butterflies?" Kirikiri asked.

Of course I didn't like butterflies.

"You don't even like them."

"I don't like them, but still," I said curtly. It felt like my heart was aching.

Actually, having that heartache wasn't entirely false. Whenever Kirikiri showed me something I didn't know about, I felt discomfort, even at the insignificant act of summoning butterflies.

Maybe it was because of the strange power I felt from her. When I cleared the 61st floor and met Kirikiri again, I thought I could get a glimpse at her strength.

It was a miscalculation. Kirikiri had too complicated of a power to see at just a glance.

“If I had brought in butterflies before, you would have killed them,” Kirikiri said in a playful tone.

There was nothing for me to refute. If there were butterflies like that in Kirikiri’s field, I would have thought of catching and dissecting them while she was sleeping or eating cakes. In those days, it wouldn’t have been strange for me to do anything to butterflies.

“The stage was fine, wasn’t it?”

I nodded at her question. The Tutorial stage had been fine. To keep me entertained, at least.

Kirikiri had stopped me from returning to Earth immediately after our reunion, and I was recommended to clear all the stages and return home normally.

It was a result of Kirikiri’s position as a manager who had to manage the Tutorial.

Instead, Kirikiri told me what I could obtain by clearing the stages: stage information, the Tutorial’s stage-clearing compensations, and Kirikiri’s advice.

All of these were rewards that would help me. I asked the others for their understanding and decided to clear the Tutorial before going out.

There was no hurry to go back to Earth.

The 61st floor, which I wanted to escape from, had already been cleared out. Moreover, as long as I cleared the 61st floor, there was no reason to be reluctant since no other gods could watch my surroundings.

Instead, it was good that Hochi and Yong-yong had had time to adjust to a new world before we went back to Earth.

Even if I got stuck in a unique stage like the 61st floor, I could just leave anytime. Kirikiri told me that a situation like the 61st floor would not happen anymore.

Above all, targeting the Tutorial stage itself was fine. It felt weird to have come up this far. I was clearing the stages out as if I were taking a walk in an amusement park without any hardships.

Yong-yong, who was happily chasing butterflies over there, was the evidence. Yong-yong enjoyed visiting the Tutorial stages. Even on a stage that could give a mental shock, Yong-yong just laughed at it and finished it.

Somehow, I felt betrayed by that sight.

“They were meant to be hard for human beings.”

“Because it wasn’t a level of difficulty designed for humans in the first place.”

However, it was a difficulty level that humans could choose. It was the level of difficulty that didn’t consider the human being who came in. It was a level of difficulty where even a more powerful being than a human would suffer.

“Well, most gods don’t care about humans.”

Yet, the gods were worshipped by humans.

It would be the same even if there were a God of Philanthropy or Love.

“Correction. There’s no such god that cares about humans.”

There’s no such god, huh? At least there was no such god in the Pantheon.

Kirikiri looked at me all of a sudden. “Oh, that reminds me. You cried a long time ago because it’d been a long time since you saw one.”

Talk about changing the subject. Why was Kirikiri suddenly talking about me crying when we were talking about gods?

At that moment, someone cut in.

“Crying? Who?” asked Hochi, who had just arrived.

Kirikiri pointed at me with her finger.

“Him?”

“Yes.”

Hochi looked at me and muttered, “This guy cried? Why don’t I remember anything like that?” A shocked expression was plastered on his face. Hochi looked as though he had peeped into the secret of his birth.

Why? I didn’t put it in his memories, so he couldn’t have known about it.

“Kirikiri, would you like some cake?”

“I want to eat cake!”

I bought a cake.

Kirikiri ignored Hochi and rushed toward the cake. Hochi soon went to Kirikiri, who was eating a cake, having lost interest in the question of his memories.

“Can I have some too?”

“No!” Kirikiri exclaimed indignantly.

Hochi made a deal to share his fork in exchange for lending it, and Kirikiri accepted the agreement on the condition that he would not touch the only cherry on the cake.

Soon, Yong-yong joined forces and ate the cake, while the cherry which Kirikiri had treasured, crept into Seregia's mouth, who had crawled there with blankets around her body.

Kirikiri was in tears and asked me to buy her another cake, but I didn't buy her one.

* * *

"The gods are going crazy. Who would have expected a new personality to pop out of the Tutorial. There's a movement to make Tutorials in other Hundred Gods Temple' dimensions, and there's a rumor that they're going to make each Tutorial have only one difficulty: Hell."

It was a mess. The Tutorial, to which the Earth belonged, was limited to the dimensions managed by the Hundred Gods Temple. Therefore, the Hundred Gods Temple participated in the design of the Tutorial and shared the right to participate.

That was until the other gods of the Pantheon intervened.

"What happened to the Hundred Gods Temple?"

"Nothing bad happened. The Pantheon Gods compensated the Hundred Gods Temple," she said lightly.

It probably costs a considerable amount of money to act beyond the interference of the system and constraints. All the Pantheon Gods who crawled onto the 61st floor must have paid the Hundred Gods Temple, the original owners of the Tutorial.

I didn't know the price, but it wouldn't have been less than the apostles I had captured on the 61st floor.

Damn, this makes me mad. Are there any possible incentives?

I had quenched my curiosity, but there were still two questions left. I decided to ask the first question.

“Tell me the exact difference between the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon Gods. They seem the same, and sometimes, different.”

The concept of the Pantheon Gods itself appeared after I was trapped on the 60th floor.

It was the Pantheon Gods who had contacted Lee Yeon-hee after I was isolated on the 60th floor. Of course, I didn't know much about them. I just thought they were gods from a different dimension.

“You can say that the Pantheon is a complete gathering of all the gods under the system. There are hundreds of groups under the Pantheon.”

“Do all these gods belong to Hundred Gods Temple as well?”

“No, there are more gods who belong only to the Pantheon.” Kirikiri added that there were only a few gods in the Hundred Gods Temple.

The Pantheon itself was a restraint that bound the gods with system constraints. There was another restraint called Hundred Gods Temple.

I wondered if the Hundred Gods Temple's concept was not a private organization of gods, but a secondary restraint by bringing together exceptionally dangerous gods. It was all the more so because the gods who made up the Hundred Gods Temple had completely different personalities, let alone similar tendencies.

The presence felt by most of the Pantheon Gods on the 61st floor was quite different from that of the Hundred Gods Temple.

It was time for my second question. The gods of the Pantheon had confirmed that I had achieved a level of divinity almost comparable to theirs.

“There's a movement to make a new Tutorial after they found out about my powers?”

It sounded like they wanted to find a new personality by making a Tutorial. It was hard to understand, considering that the reason the gods wanted a Tutorial challenger was usually to get the apostles.

“They can still get apostles with the lure of making them a subordinate-god ^[1]. If it doesn’t work, the apostles will be forced to eat dog-shit.”

Is that so?

The words ‘eat dog-shit’ instantly made sense. The gods must be rejoicing. If they put ordinary humans in there and even one god came out of every 10,000 people, they might think it’s worth the try.

The gods, in general, wanted power.

When the source first appeared, they heard that it helped me achieve my powers. Even those who had already achieved their own wanted to gain more power from my source.

In the stage where the source appeared, the stage ended with the involvement of the Hundred Gods Temple. Perhaps the dispatched god was meant to retrieve the power of the source.

There was no way that the gods, who were so covetous of the source, would not covet other people’s divinity.

“It’s going to be a brutal struggle.”

“I suppose so.”

However, the Earth’s Tutorial aimed to help humans through Easy, Normal, and Hard Difficulty to solve the Earth’s crisis. However, if the challenger’s only purpose were to achieve his or her prestige, the story would be different.

Every challenger summoned as a Tutorial Challenger would be forced to face a hellish situation.

“Even the species with powerful powers from the beginning, unlike humans, will face such difficulties that they cannot easily break away with their abilities. You’re the only successful one we’ve had so far.”

And I had gained divinity by breaking through a difficulty that was generally never cleared. The challenge of the new Tutorial would only have one level of difficulty, and that was Hell.

No matter how powerful it was, it was difficult to clear it. It was someone else's business, but it wasn't beneficial for me either.

"I don't feel very good."

Kirikiri nodded. "There are still gods who are looking for you. Of course, I can't deliver their message directly to you, but they keep asking if I can arrange a conversation."

"I don't want to talk to them, so ignore it all."

I didn't want to be another God's apostle now. There was nothing to gain, not even experience.

"Have you asked all your questions?"

I nodded at Kirikiri's question.

Kirikiri said she would grant my wish as promised when I cleared the 61st floor, and we reunited. I told her to give me some time. The wish that Kirikiri had promised had come to mind after a long time.

I'd really thought about what to ask for. But for the last time, I wanted to think about it a little more.

I wanted to clear the stages, check some more information for Kirikiri, and tell her my wish. Then, I'd clear the 71st floor.

Ten more floors were cleared to earn information, and all necessary information had been grasped by it.

"What wish should I grant?"

Somehow Kirikiri, who was pretending to be serious, felt like a mountain god. A rabbit and a mountain god, it was a combination that didn't make sense.

But she could grant my wishes, I who was something akin to a god.

“End this Tutorial.”

Note from Imagine:

[1] Subordinate-God most likely means something like becoming a Saint (however this is just my theory on what it means, feel free to interpret it anyway you want to for now as i doubt we'll get an explanation on what exactly it means)

Chapter 288

Tutorial 71st Floor (2)

“Are you thinking of making another wish?”

“Not at all.”

“Do you have any intention of taking back your wish?” Kirikiri asked.

Of course, I have no such intention.

“I could give you more power than what you have right now. I could give you the means to win the gods’ support, or I could bring your friends here from different stages, or I could call them to Earth.”

Kirikiri’s proposals would be of great help to me: power and support of the gods, even reuniting me with people I’d met in the past. But that wasn’t what I wanted right now.

“I just want this Tutorial to stop. Don’t let the stages that are currently repeating continue to repeat over and over again.”

I could achieve my goals and keep my promises on my own. What I wanted from Kirikiri was to put a stop to the stages that were repeating at this moment, so that one day, they flowed along to a new present, and not a recurring past.

That was all.

“Ugh...” Kirikiri pretended to groan for a long time, but I had no intention of changing my wish. Of course, I knew that stopping the Tutorial stage was meaningless as a result.

Nevertheless, I wanted it.

“Promise me one thing!” exclaimed Kirikiri, raising one hand.

“What promise?”

“You’ll be sure to clear all the Tutorial stages before you go out.”

Uhh...

Kirikiri stressed that I had to clear all the stages. The biggest reason why I’d remained in the Tutorial was to think about the wish I’d ask from her. Of course, I could wish for information on the stage and clear compensation, but honestly, they weren’t that appealing. Likewise, there was no reason to rush to Earth.

“If you promise me that, I’ll stop all stages right now except the ones you’re going to target. All the challengers will be sent to the waiting room or a nearby residential area.”

I couldn’t help shout out, “Cool, sounds good.”

I never thought this wish would come true so easily. I was a little dumbfounded, but Kirikiri accepted my wish without a hitch.

I had no choice but to question the smooth acceptance. “Are you okay with that?” It was strange to ask if it was okay after saying that it was my wish, but I still asked.

Kirikiri nodded. “It’s alright,” was what Kirikiri said, but I wondered how it was possible to stop the Tutorial at her disposal.

“The Tutorial’s management is entirely in the hands of managers. Of course, we have to pay for it, but it’s possible to shut it down temporarily.”

The control was in the hands of the managers. It didn’t make any sense.

“The system accepts that?”

Kirikiri grinned at my question. She displayed a mischievous smile. “I have no choice but to be forgiven. The system just regulates us when we act beyond the constraints. With our power...”

“Anything is possible.”

Just how the gods usually do within their sphere of influence. So far, the system was faithful to its role as a constraint. However, it was not understandable that the Tutorial’s halting was possible just because all the managers agreed.

“And the Hundred Gods Temple?”

“The selection of the manager was with all the Hundred Gods Temple. It’s them who set our authority along with responsibilities by majority vote. As always, they can’t change what had already been decided at that time. If they’re going to overturn our decision, they would lose all of us and vote for re-election as a manager. Pick up candidates, drop someone, put someone up. Then they’ll adjust the responsibilities and authority given to the manager. By majority vote on top of all that. It’ll probably take a year. Even if you don’t like it, you’ll have to be satisfied, because that’s how much we had to pay.”

After hearing Kirikiri’s explanation, I thought she still had too much authority as a manager. If managers came together, they could monopolize the Tutorial. What had the Hundred Gods Temple’ planned by giving managers such authority?

“In fact, in general cases, the managers’ opinions are not unified.”

“Why?”

“We’re at odds with each other.”

I could understand that a little. I had seen many times when the Hundred Gods Temple were unable to unify their opinions. Even if something was decided through voting, there was always a dissenting vote. Unity was indeed a rare sight.

The reason was obvious. Gods cannot compromise since their egos were huge. That’s what all the gods did. Maybe that’s why they were gods.

The God of Light does not prefer dark over light. It would go against his identity to choose dark. The God of Duel does not tolerate cowardice. The God of Devotion does not feel joy in the sight of someone suffering. It was not a matter of preference, but a matter of feasibility.

Moreover, apart from the issue of voting, relations between the gods would significantly affect the vote. The manager would, too. It would be impossible for them to unify their opinions if they had collected the opposites. If there was a condition that the opinions must be unified to give authority to the manager, the authority becomes virtually ineffective.

They had once already handed over the responsibilities and authority to the managers. It would be difficult for the gods to re-decide new ones.

It was a convincing process.

“But this time it’s different. We all know your goal. And I hope you achieve your goal. Each of us has a slightly different wish, but we all agreed to grant your wish for it anyway. Some oppose, and some agree with our decision, but they can’t argue with our final decision.”

Kirikiri had made it clear that she supported my goal, and so did other managers. I remembered what the God of Hope once told me. I felt uncomfortable as I recalled what the God of Hope had said.

* * *

As Kirikiri said, I had decided to clear the Tutorial stages to the end, but questions still remained. Why had she recommended me to clear the stages so much?

“First, information points. Second, clearing rewards. I told you last time,” Kirikiri answered grumpily, possibly because I had questioned her advice. Clearing rewards was manageable. But was there still any more information I needed to gather?

We had to clear the stage.

“There still is,” Kirikiri said with a grim look.

I couldn’t understand it right away, and I couldn’t ask more because of the lack of information points, but I decided to move on. The advice Kirikiri gave had always been beneficial and would continue to be.

“You’re going to go now, right?”

“No, I’m planning to stay a little longer.”

When Kirikiri asked if I was going to leave, I answered no. Kirikiri sounded surprised at my answer.

“Huh?”

Typically, I moved on to the next stage as soon as I heard all the advice, so Kirikiri had a strange look on her face when I said I would leave a little later.

I pointed to the side where Seregia and Yong-yong were. Seregia was lying still on the bed. Yong-yong had been playing by himself. As soon as Kirikiri and I began to talk seriously, he wandered around and dozed off next to Seregia. Once they both lay down, they didn’t get up easily, so I decided to let them take a little rest and then start off.

“I see you still have a soft spot,” Kirikiri remarked.

Of course. How could I have survived this long if I didn’t? Of course, there’d been many crises.

“It’s all thanks to me.” Hochi chimed in with self-praise.

I was going to say something to him, but Kirikiri spoke to Hochi first. “That’s right, Hochi deog-iyang.”

(T/N: I’m not quite sure what the author was trying to imply... Either way, Deog/Deok refers to virtue/moral, and yang meaning sheep...)

Kirikiri's smile and her answer left me with a bad feeling. It was not because of her actions, but because of Hochi's name, which had been pronounced by Kirikiri.

"How did you just pronounce his name?"

"Huh?"

She pronounced my name as Hoo-ouh-woo, stretching it out, unlike when she called Hochi. Somehow I felt disappointed.

"Oh, right. Kirikiri, I have a question."

Hochi had met Kirikiri for the first time after leaving the 61st floor, but he was comfortable with Kirikiri. Perhaps it was because of his memories.

Kirikiri treated Hochi as if she knew him for a long time. To be fair, Kirikiri would do that no matter whom she met.

"What on earth does Ho-jae mean? Why does everyone laugh when they hear it?"

At Hochi's question, Kirikiri tilted her head. "I've answered this before."

"Really? Why don't I remember?"

Why? Because I didn't put it in.

"No way, what do you mean? You even touched my memories?" asked Hochi, glancing at me.

That's right. I didn't think I needed to put all my memories into Hochi. If I had put all the shameful memories in, neither Hochi nor I would have felt comfortable.

"Heng, do you want me to tell you?"

“Oh, tell me. What does it mean?”

Kirikiri and Hochi whispered softly as if they were plotting something dangerous. It was necessary to stop them.

“Oh, you shouldn’t try to invade other people’s privacy.”

The meaning of my name was strictly personal. This had been confirmed long ago.

“You know, that privacy may or may not apply to Hochi. Ahahaha!”

“Right! I’m your clone. I’m you in a way. Privacy’s nothing. Hurry up and tell me what it means.”

Hochi tried to find my name’s meaning, arguing that he and I were the same person, having thrown away his identity. Extra measures needed to be taken and quick.

“Kirikiri, would you like another cake?”

* * *

[The 80th-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: A source has been drifting in outer space on a planet whose name is unknown. It recently crashed onto it. The source quickly devoured everything in the area, and the planet was destroyed.

The Hundred Gods Temple’s investigator reported something dubious about the source, unlike the usual ones. The Hundred Gods Temple wants to send you to retrieve the source and find out what is unique about the source.

-Clear Conditions:

1. Eliminate the Source.
2. Investigate the source.

When Seregia and Yong-yong woke up, I headed for the 80th floor with my party. The 80th-floor stage was set in a plain wasteland. I could see the source in front of the summoned place.

“It’s a different stage than usual,” Hochi mumbled.

I thought the same. It was easy to see the strength of that centipede-like creature from its strange appearance.

The clear condition was the killing and investigation of the source. Perhaps after killing the source, something worth investigating would come out.

“I’ll do it!” Yong-yong stepped up with enthusiasm.

In fact, there was no one but Yong-yong ready to deal with the source. The old man and the old lady had little interest in the stages. The same went for Seregia. Actually, I was the same as well.

After leaving the 61st floor, Hochi and Yong-yong took charge of the stages, and I rarely did anything. All I did was give advice from time to time. It was the same this time.

So even when Yong-yong stepped up, I just told him to do what he felt was right. The problem occurred shortly after Yong-yong fired his mana at the source.

A bright energy barrier was wriggling near the source. It was an energy barrier made to protect itself.

And the mana that Yong-yong had fired destroyed the source’s protective layer, and the body of the source was reduced to powders.

[Stage failed.]

[Returning to the waiting room.]

...What the heck, man? They told me to kill the source, so I killed it.
Why did I fail?

Chapter 289

Tutorial 80th Floor (1)

Kirikiri granted the wish and attached the condition that I should clear all the Tutorial stages.

I was reluctant. The biggest reason I'd remained in the Tutorial was to think about the wish I'd ask of her. But Kirikiri advised that I still had a lot more to gain from the Tutorial.

Of course, I decided to finish the Tutorial stages as she advised. Kirikiri's advice was generally correct, and there was nothing to lose by accepting her help. It had always been like that, and it would continue to be so.

Stage clearing was easy. Although Yong-yong and Hochi were entirely in charge of the attack, they were clearing five or six stages a day. We did so even though I was not in such a hurry to attack.

Yong-yong enjoyed clearing the stages. He took excitement in seeing the worlds of various stages as if he were at a theme park. The old man and old lady weren't particularly interested in the stages, and neither was Seregia.

I was a little uncomfortable this time. The 70th-floor stage had a consistent concept, and a native god appeared on every stage. Those gods crashed and created a hellish environment.

The challenger had to either evacuate and protect people from the Hundred Gods Temple or survive until a new divine being of the Hundred Gods Temple appeared.

It was different from the other stages. I felt like I was experiencing propaganda rather than a stage.

It was as if they were showing how horrible the power of uncontrolled gods could be, and by doing that, they seemed to be praising the Hundred Gods Temple gods. It was as if the system was necessary for the Hundred Gods Temple gods to exert their influence.

However, it was contradictory that most Hundred Gods Temple gods who had designed the stage wanted to get out of the system. I had to find out more about the relationship between the gods and the system.

I hadn't gotten all the information yet, and I couldn't even ask Kirikiri. Before entering the 60th floor, I spent all the information points I had. To ask new questions, I had to clear the stage and earn them again. Maybe Kirikiri's remark that I needed to clear the stage also meant that she wanted me to gather more information.

* * *

[The 80th-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: A source has been drifting in outer space towards a planet whose name is unknown. It recently crashed into the planet, quickly devoured everything in the area, and destroyed the planet.

The Hundred Gods Temple's investigator reported something dubious about the source, unlike the usual ones. The Hundred Gods Temple wants to send you to retrieve the source and discover what is unique about it.

-Clear Conditions:

1. Eliminate the Source.
2. Investigate the source.

"It's a different stage than usual," Hochi mumbled.

It was different. Perhaps the concept had changed once we arrived at the 80th floor. Unlike the 70th floor, which mainly displayed the gods, the 80th-floor's theme focuses on the source.

First of all, it was unusual that the source had reappeared. The 80th floor was set in the wilderness.

I could see the source in front of the summoned place. The power emitted and the appearance of a centipede gave away the fact that it was a source.

"What should we do?" asked Hochi, looking back at me.

If Yong-yong's job was to use his strength to clear the stage, Hochi's job was to plan the attacks. But Hochi asked me for advice every time he saw something for the first time, or whenever he had to deduce something.

The reason was simple. Hochi had no enthusiasm to spend his time in deep thought to clear a stage. Like Yong-yong, he enjoyed clearing the stage and experiencing new worlds, but he was much less motivated.

"Just kill it for now."

"Just kill it? They want us to investigate."

There were two clear conditions for the 80th floor: eliminating the source and investigating it.

The important thing here was that the first condition was killing, and the second condition was an investigation. The sequence of clear conditions was not random.

Perhaps it was only after the source got eradicated that a proper investigation could be carried out. Some abnormalities about the body needed to be investigated only after killing the source.

"Then, I'll do it!" Yong-yong raised his hand.

Hochi smiled and told him to do so. Yong-yong fired his power at the source. The source was just as explosive as the power was.

[Stage failed.]

[Returning to the waiting room.]

The next moment, we returned to the waiting room. What the heck, man? They told me to kill the source, so I got rid of it, but why did I fail?

I was puzzled. I merely followed instructions, but I was taken to the waiting room without notice.

Before entering the 80th floor, Kirikiri had not explained the stage. Yong-yong looked at me with perplexed eyes, wondering what he'd done wrong, while Hochi was waiting for an explanation.

I didn't understand the situation, so there was only one thing I could say. "Let's do it again."

Through the portal, we entered the 80th floor again.

[The 80th-floor stage begins.]

Explanation: A source has been drifting in outer space on a planet whose name is unknown. It recently crashed onto it. The source quickly devoured everything in the area and the planet...

I skimmed through the explanation. The clear conditions remained the same.

“Hey, explain it to me.”

“Um... it’s...”

Hochi asked me for an explanation, but to be honest, I didn’t understand the situation either; however, I didn’t want to reveal my cluelessness.

“Are you in a situation you can’t figure out?”

“No, it’s not that... The...”

I needed time to organize my thoughts. Damn it. I’ll just think about it while spouting bullshit.

I began to speak slowly so I could think a little more. “First of all, there are two possibilities.”

“Oh, what are they?”

“One is that this may not be the source.”

This case was not very likely. The only source I could see around here was that giant centipede. That centipede and my party were the only beings alive on this planet.

“Second...”

“Second?”

Yong-yong had made an overly powerful attack. Normally, considering the 80th floor’s difficulty level, the average challenger could never produce that much power. Because of that, the system could have suffered an error.

I was afraid that was the case since I couldn’t think of anything else.

“Then I’ll try to attack it gently,” Hochi replied, after hearing my explanation.

But that wasn't easy either. That source had an unusual energy barrier around it. The source was sucking in and absorbing all the powers around it.

The fact that the planet's ground was a dry wasteland and no signs of life may be due to the centipede's unique ability.

It was not just absorbing the life force of the planet but the life force of everything nearby. Just getting close to it would make the challenger look like a lifeless mummy. Even if a long-range attack was launched, the centipede would be difficult to attack.

If you attacked that source with a half-hearted move, it would be absorbed and used as nourishment. The source had been decimated because Yong-yong had made the source explode with a single blow.

But it was strange. To ignore the absorbing ability of the source and make it explode at once was difficult enough. A typical challenger on the 80th floor wouldn't even be able to deal a significant blow to that source.

"Oh, now I get it."

The first clear condition was a fraud. It gave the condition of killing, and let the challenger attack the source. The source absorbed the power of the challenger, and then the challenger would die.

It was a clear condition, but it was not surprising that it was confusing, considering the design of the Hell Difficulty's Stages, which wanted to f*ck the challengers over.

"Then what should we do?"

"Just attack it. Let it absorb energy quickly and grow."

Yong-yong understood me and began to attack again at the source. It wasn't an explosive attack that killed the source in one-go. A more primitive and basic attack—a fireball the size of a soccer ball—headed to the source.

The source trembled, absorbing more energy every time Yong-yong hit a fireball towards it. It was unsettling to see him shudder every time it got hit. It was all the more so because it resembled a giant centipede.

Unlike me, Yong-yong liked seeing the centipede wriggling. “Cute!” Now, Yong-yong’s aesthetic tastes were being questioned.

When Hochi and I called Yong-yong cute, did he think that the word cute was an all-around compliment that could be applied to all situations? If he believed that the centipede was cute, the situation was a little serious.

Yong-yong fired a fireball at the centipede. He was having too much fun and completely disregarded my anxieties.

The centipede ate the fireball, which was an action akin to a child throwing fish feed to a goldfish. Of course, Yong-yong was the child, but the centipede wasn’t a goldfish either.

I glanced at Hochi to ask him what he thought of the situation. But rather than worrying about Yong-yong, Hochi was preparing a small fireball to shoot at the centipede.

Hochi was a little shy, but he still sent his fireball to the centipede. He pretended to be calm on the surface, but he looked excited from having made a fireball.

Come to think of it, Hochi was no less of a child than Yong-yong. After Yong-yong and Hochi entertained themselves by shooting fireballs for a few minutes, the centipede’s wriggling reached its peak.

It expanded so much that the ground it was standing on trembled. And it wasn’t just that. Something was awakening inside the centipede.

[Clear conditions have changed]

Description: Despite the desperate efforts of the investigators, they failed to eliminate the source.

The Hundred Gods Temple confirmed the source's abnormal behavior through investigators and decided to send a new apostle to stop it.

Due to the unexpected situation, it'll take a considerable amount of time for the apostles to arrive at the scene.

Survive from the source until the apostles arrive.

-Clear Conditions:

1. Survive until the apostles arrive.
2. Eliminate the Source.

It was expected. There had been cases like this before. When the source first appeared, the stages were held in the same way. It was similar to the 40th floor.

The source had now stopped shaking. All its movements had halted, including its quivering. It now resembled a stone statue or a pupa.

There was no sign of change outwardly, but I knew what was going on in there because I'd been through it before.

"Then, that's it, right?"

"Yeah, that's it," I answered Hochi's question.

It was 'that'. I couldn't explain it in a word, but the source was evolving.

The source's host's most prominent characteristic was that its own power ate it upon the source's evolution.

The cost of taking on a source will only eat away everything visible to gain more power.

Becoming a monster that had lost reason and only thinking about eating the enemy in front was the source I'd seen. But that centipede was on edge, resisting the source's devouring power.

It was trying to get rid of its primal desires. Its sense of reason, which had already been eaten up by the source, was about to awaken again.

"Wiggley, you can do it!" Yong-yong called out in support of the struggling centipede.

When did you even name it?

After a while, a new Wiggley was born in the body of the centipede. Inside the entirely still centipede, something was crawling out of the centipede's shell.

Our eyes were concentrated on the figure. Hochi and Yong-yong were curious about what would come out from there. I was also curious about it.

What would a person who had changed to a source look like when they had just regained their sense of reason? Would they look like how they were before they became the source? Was it the same centipede monster? Were they a completely different monster? Or, as I did, could it change itself?

I was excited and curious after a long time.

"Wiggley!" It was not until Yong-yong broke the centipede's shell and shouted aloud in an enthusiastic voice that it responded to Yong-yong.

"Kyeeeak!"

It was an ordinary monster. I sighed in disappointment, and I clenched my hand into a fist.

[You have cleared the 80th floor.]

Perhaps because I killed the centipede monster, Yong-yong looked a little depressed. Did he really think the centipede was cute?

Hochi was soothing Yong-yong.

The stage had already been cleared, and the portal had appeared, but Yong-yong would not move until he was feeling better. I felt sorry for killing the centipede and watched Hochi and Yong-yong. Suddenly, a message came.

It was Park Jung-ah.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: We're in trouble!]

Big trouble? Well, maybe there was another day of great harmony. I hoped so.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: The stage is blocked. No matter what I do, I can't get into the stage. Now all the challengers are stuck in the waiting room and the residential area.]

Oh, that's what she meant. Come to think of it, I didn't tell Park Jung-ah in advance.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: No information was pre-announced by managers. No clues. I can't even meet the managers because I can't get on a stage. Do you know anything?]

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: That's because of me.]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor:... Uh, what?]

Chapter 290

Tutorial 80th Floor (2)

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: When did you reach the 80th floor? You came out from the 60th floor just a few days ago.]

I came out a few days ago, but the 80th-floor journey was still slow enough. It would not have taken this long if Yong-yong and Hochi hadn't spent time having a reunion with Kirikiri agonizing over their wishes.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: No... Aside from that, what do you mean by stopping the Tutorial? Is that possible?]

If I asked myself if it was possible to stop it, I'd say it was impossible. It was nothing but Kirikiri granting my wish that stopped me from saying it was impossible.

I explained this to Park Jung-ah. I stopped the Tutorial stages using a wish I had been promised by the manager before. At this point, I gave a general explanation of the reason for the suspension and what would happen.

It was something I had known the gist of, but I had never explained it in detail.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Yeah... Well, let's say the reason is not understandable at all. What about me?]

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: Huh?]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: I won't be able to leave like this.]

It was obvious. Without entering the stage, Park Jung-ah couldn't clear the 100th floor and go outside.

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: I'm going to ask you for a favor regarding that. I want you to stay here for a few more years, and it's okay if you give me a hard time. I need to take care of the floors left and need someone to take care of Lee Yeon-hee.]

I didn't tell Park Jung-ah in advance because of this very request.

Just in case I left first, Lee Yeon-hee had been appointed as my apostle, and the 60th and 61st floors were fully protected against external attacks. But I was still worried. I needed someone to take care of Lee Yeon-hee's mental state for a while.

Of course, Park Jung-ah didn't approve of my plan. She didn't like it.

"Daddy, what are you doing?" Yong-yong approached me.

I guessed that Hochi had to comfort him a lot because of the death of Wiggley.

I raised my hand to cover Yong-yong's eyes since the message window was filled with swearing. It wasn't vocabulary that I wanted to show my child.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: You're determined to make me die an old maid, aren't you?]

That's not true. A challenger neither grows old nor dies easily, in the Tutorial. And I didn't intend to leave Park Jung-ah here long enough to die of old age in the Tutorial.

Hochi peered over my shoulder at the message window and took Yong Yong away. They seemed to be going to see the body of the centipede.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Then there won't be any more Awakened, what about that?]

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: It's okay because I'll be out.]

Upon seeing my words, Park Jung-ah became even more irritated. But what could we do if that was the truth? As long as I went out, we didn't need a new Awakened.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Let's not tell anyone about this. We should keep it between ourselves and explain it to the others in another way. No one else will find out anyway. They can't even ask the managers because they can't get into the stage.]

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: I don't mind telling them.]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: I'M NOT OKAY WITH IT! SO YOU WILL STAY SILENT, GOT IT?]

[Lee Ho-Jae, 80th floor: Yep.]

As Park Jung-ah said, we decided not to let others know. We could just tell Kim Min-hyuk later.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Now that I've rested enough, I'm going to go work again. Damn you.]

[Lee Ho-jae, 80th floor: Please work a little harder. Above all else, please take good care of Lee Yeon-hee, as you did for me before.]

We had kept in touch every day, fighting and swearing. Although we argued with each other over useless things, Park Jung-ah always kept in touch. I didn't give up either and tried to talk to her every time.

At that time, arguing with Park Jung-ah was my only conversation with others.

Thanks to you, I realized time was flowing, and I confirmed that I was still alive. You made me realize I was still important to someone. That someone would take time out of their day to talk to me... Even if most conversations ended up in fights.

Without you, I wouldn't have been able to endure those difficult times. Truly, thank you for everything... Jung-Ah.

Park Jung-ah spoke ill of me for a long time, but in the end, she promised to take care of Lee Yeon-hee as I instructed.

Unlike in the past, her language had become harsh and had a hysterical irritation. But some parts were not different from the past.

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: I don't owe you anything after this. Not a single thing. I've paid it all back.]

That debt had long been settled.

I replied to her.

* * *

"Huh?"

"Huh?" Kirikiri looked at me with curious eyes.

"What?"

"You never dismantled it? Not even conducted any experiments?"

"I didn't."

"...Huh?"

Why are you looking at me like that? It was not surprising that I didn't dissect the monster's body.

"Huh... I thought you'd do it for sure," said Kirikiri, scratching her nose.

Truthfully, I'd even thought about taking care of the source's body, but what I felt on the body was so insignificant.

After hearing what I said, Kirikiri nodded with a convincing look. "It could be. It's an imitation, and to add to that, a failure."

What are you talking about? I asked her to explain.

“You know that everything on the stage was real, right?”

Of course, I knew. I nodded.

“The 80th floor is a bit unusual. It’s all normal until the monster stops moving.”

In other words, something changed when the monster stopped moving and broke its shell.

“What broke through the shell of a monster was different from what happened. It couldn’t be brought in or replaced by making a plausible imitation.”

Couldn’t replace it. That was unexpected.

“Then, what was that being that came out of the monster?”

The Hundred Gods Temple, who made the Tutorial, couldn’t even copy them? These were the gods who kept different worlds in every stage. It was not easy to accept that their designs had limitations.

“The thing that popped out of it was the same case as yours. Albeit a bit different.” Kirikiri used me as an example.

“You regained your sanity when you overcame your source and began to wield a leagues’ power above what it was before. You jumped a whole class at one go.”

I could understand Kirikiri’s words to some extent. The Spirit King had said that he could reach godhood through a source. When you get your source, you obtain a considerable power, but the moment you overcome it, you gain full control and not just power. If so, I could understand why the Hundred Gods Temple neither reproduced nor imitated the monster.

The monster that appeared on the 80th-floor stage would eventually be closer to a god. If it were possible to create it as an imitation, the Hundred Gods Temple would produce gods like manufacturing products.

“What’s the difference?”

“Huh?”

Kirikiri responded to my question with a blank look. I had asked too straightforwardly. Kirikiri wasn’t used to me asking such crude questions.

It was more comfortable for her to read my thoughts and answer them on her own. But now Kirikiri could no longer look into my thoughts. It was a good thing, but there were also inconveniences.

“You told me it was like me. That monster. But it’s not like there were no differences at all.”

“Heng, right. There was a difference.” Kirikiri smiled and explained what was different. “In your case, you overcame the desire of the source. The monster on the 80th floor was released from desire only after eating a few planets. There’s a difference. Even if you let go of desires, the reason for that desire still exists. Thus it’s control over the power would be worse.”

Indeed, the quality was worse. There was no choice but for it to be like that. Free from the source’s desire, but the purpose was the same as before, just with more power, stronger abilities, and reason.

I hadn’t thought much of the monster. I had never felt a sense of crisis from it since, in my views, the source was prey that the gods were hunting to gain strength. It was all because the monster couldn’t keep its sanity.

An enemy not in his senses cannot be above a prey’s level no matter how strong he was. But if it had its sanity...

“How come it had that low a level of intelligence?”

“The source was part of a civilization. A fairly advanced civilization.

You can say that the civilization is of the same level compared to where the Tutorial stages have appeared.”

Well, that’s the worst.

“Now you know why I said you had to clear the stage and get out?” asked Kirikiri while humming.

She must have been a little disappointed that I didn’t take her advice.

“Yes, thanks to you, I know it’s important. Now here, have some cake.”

I bought a cake for Kirikiri. I bought her a bigger cake than usual, considering that Yong-yong and Hochi, who played next to her, would join her. Naturally, Yong-yong and Hochi approached. Kirikiri turned down Yong-yong and Hochi’s request to share the cake.

Of course, Yong-yong and Hochi started eating cake regardless of whether Kirikiri refused or not. Kirikiri was forced to eat the whipped cream cake without a fork since Yong-Yong and Hochi had taken it.

I watched the scene for a while and organized my thoughts. The information I had found this time was essential. There were people who had overcome the source and achieved a high level. There was someone who was moving with their senses intact at the top of the monsters.

I thought that it was strange. One day, monsters suddenly appeared on Earth, and then the fights began. Monsters who ran wild without any reason appeared all of a sudden in groups. Even strange ones that seemed to come in groups.

The monsters sometimes showed an organized appearance. There were countless hypotheses for such monsters. A few things came to mind right now.

‘The gate connected to the monsters’ home opened, causing the monsters to burst into Earth, causing chaos suddenly.’

‘Even monsters have some level of cognition.’

‘At a primitive level, communication with them is possible.’

‘It’s just that humans haven’t figured it out. Plus, these monsters breed through mating.’

‘Where do the monsters hatch?’

There were various hypotheses, but a certain fact could convince quite a few. The monster, who had similarly overcome the source as I, was training and directing the monsters.

When I turned my head, I saw Kirikiri, Yong-yong, and Hochi stuck together, busy eating the cake. Rather than being peaceful and friendly, there was a competitive and intense atmosphere. They were squeezing each other’s cake into their mouths to take another bite.

There was more I wanted to ask, but first, I decided to wait for Kirikiri to finish the cake.

* * *

“They usually call them the Completers or by their self-proclaimed title, Ruler.”

“Self-proclaimed?”

“Self-proclaimed.”

It was an ominous title. The monsters who had regained their sense of self after consuming an innumerable amount of lives who were once controlled by the source’s desire were hard to count.

“What about the gods? They left it alone?”

“Yes...” Kirikiri nodded somberly.

I asked for an explanation.

“Because of the wide range of activities, it’s hard to find. The gods bound to realms don’t move without any reason. Most of all, even if they encountered each other like that, they can’t guarantee victory, so it’s even more problematic.”

Kirikiri’s explanation left me speechless for a moment. For a moment, I thought I had heard wrong.

“Can’t guarantee a victory? The gods? How is that possible?”

“Because it has become a god, too,” Kirikiri replied.

It also became a god. What was the most necessary thing required to be a god? It was faith through the identity of a god, self-discipline, and believers’ support and trust.

There were so many conditions, but there was one that was more important than the others: overwhelming power.

I was able to draw faith from people on the 57th floor and 61st floor because I had power. Otherwise, I would have been just a nobody to them. Power alone became the fundamental base of gaining faith.

Monsters who wanted more power and ate everything visible may draw faith from others for more strength. They would have the reason, knowledge, strength, and class to do so.

Suddenly, an idea crossed my mind. I asked Kirikiri, hoping it wasn’t true.

“Is it not a part of the Pantheon?”

“Yes.”

Damn it.

“What about the Hundred Gods Temple?”

“Yes.”

This situation was very messed up.

Chapter 291

Seoul (2)

“Hey, this isn’t a prank, right? It’s not something you planned out, is it?”

Secretly, Kim Min-hyuk desperately wanted Lee Joon-suk to laugh and say, “It’s just a joke.”

Of course, Kim Min-hyuk would be mad if he said that, but it was much better than admitting that this difficult situation was a reality.

“I’m serious. It’s not just the Korean server that’s facing this.” Lee Joon-suk’s words felt like a court sentence. Whatever it was, things were going to get very ugly.

All challengers were expected to come out on the same day. But of course, the date and time of the exit depended on when the challenger cleared the Tutorial’s 100th floor. Long story short, the challengers may return to Earth at any time.

However, it’d already been over a decade since a challenger of the Tutorial had shown up. There were several new regulations regarding the Tutorial, and one of them was about the return of the Awakened.

The Awakened people who returned to Earth unannounced and disappeared quietly were sometimes considered more dangerous than monsters. The government wanted to put a leash on the Awakened, even though they can’t completely control all of them.

Whenever a challenger completed the Tutorial, they had to report it, scan their fingerprints, and be issued a new identification card. Such processes allowed the government to estimate how many Awakened people there were and provided a way to contact them. These regulations had been firmly established over the years.

Just as predicted, some of them ignored the regulations. For example, there were Awakened who hated being in the spotlight, had their reasons to step out of the Tutorial as soon as possible, or hid in shadows before being identified. There were many other various cases.

However, in most cases, the Tutorial should've been cleared on the designated day. But none of them had shown up at Seoul Station yesterday, which was supposed to be their return.

Kim Min-hyuk had thought it wasn't that big of an issue and brushed it off. Even though the survival rate had increased rapidly, about 100 people were entering the Tutorial each month.

Even though the number was limited, some months, around 10 of the Awakened would pop up, while there would be no one showing up in other months.

Because of that, Kim Min-hyuk was able to convince himself by saying, "It seems like we have bad luck this time."

However, in Beijing and Tokyo, the Awakened had not returned. The same thing happened not only in Korea but also in other countries.

Kim Min-hyuk had hurriedly dispatched Lee Joon-suk to check the situation in other countries.

And the result was..."No one cleared the Tutorial this time. No one in the whole world."

If it was something that happened around the world, it could no longer be regarded as a coincidence. Something went wrong inside the Tutorial.

"At this point, it's not that they didn't clear the Tutorial. They couldn't clear it."

"I can't say that for sure."

The variable that may be the cause of this situation flashed immediately. It was the Tournament. Kim Min-hyuk heard that the recent Tournament had just been held. Not to mention, it was also the reason several representatives from different servers met and had some talks.

“What if there was an agreement between the Tutorial challengers?”

“Come on, that’s a bit... If they did, they wouldn’t be able to get a chance to advance to the next stage.”

His words made sense.

“They won’t get any benefits by not clearing a floor or saying anything about it. It’s their loss. Above all, the leaders can’t stop the other challenger from clearing a floor.”

It was not an easy task to force another challenger in the Tutorial to do something because they lived in a physically isolated space.

The challengers who were in the residential area on the 90th floor or higher couldn’t violate such liberty by any means. Of course, they could blackmail or conciliate with others, but most of the Tutorial leaders had lost their power.

The only power the Awakened had was outside the Tutorial. Those who stayed in the Tutorial and took care of the challengers were now only treated as NPCs or losers.

“Wow, what’s this? In South Korea alone, there were four people scheduled to show up for this month. But unexpectedly, all of them failed to clear?”

That was ridiculous. The challengers who nearly cleared the 100th floor must’ve met the target. The probability of failure should not have been very high, as it almost followed the same approach and attack.

“And there’s one more thing to note.”

“What?”

“It’s time for Ho-jae to come out.”

Lee Yeon-hee had arrived on the 60th floor. That meant Lee Ho-jae, who had long been on the 60th floor, would start climbing the stage again.

“What a pain. That means he might not be able to make it.”

Kim Min-hyuk had prepared many things, thinking that Ho-jae would be able to exit. It all became meaningless.

No, something is not right. Is it true that Lee Ho-jae could not come out like the other challengers because of this situation?

Kim Min-hyuk couldn’t help but be suspicious. As far as he knew, Lee Ho-jae was someone who caused problems, not someone who got entangled in issues. Of course, Kim Min-hyuk had to handle the problem every time.

If he’s involved in this, then...

Kim Min-hyuk’s head reviewed the facts repeatedly.

“I don’t know anymore, damn it. I need some information to speculate on this. I don’t know what happened or how to interfere inside the Tutorial. There’s nothing I think we can do.”

He gave up.

“Yes. Unless we have any way to contact the gods or managers, we have to let the insiders solve the inner problem,” Joon-suk calmly responded.

Kim Min-hyuk always hated that aloof attitude, but this time was an exception. It strangely reassured him.

“Let’s do what we can. Take this opportunity to bring Seoul Station under our wing.”

“Is it going to work? I think this situation is just going to make it harder.”

“No, it’s the opposite. You have to insist that under dangerous circumstances, our presence is required here.”

The way to persuade the government was simple. Either give them what they’d want, or they’d force the government. Everyone will be damned if the government didn’t follow their advice.

No one knew what happened in the Tutorial, and no one knew what may happen to the portal in Seoul Station. It could be argued that the Awakened should be on standby in case of an emergency.

“But first, I have to contact Jong-sik.”

“What are you going to say?”

“Cancel the dispatch to Japan. From now on, everyone who is A-class and above must get ready in Korea.”

* * *

TTTTH IS BACK

“Three rolls of cheese kimbap, please.”

On his way back to the association, Park Min stopped by a kimbap restaurant and ordered cheese kimbap. There was no particular reason. He was just a little hungry, and kimbap had been his favorite dish in the Tutorial.

Park Min was from the first batch of Awakened. As soon as the Tutorial and monsters appeared in this world, he was summoned to the Tutorial’s first floor. Even now, the early stages of the Tutorial were the talk of the town.

At that time, there were various problems, but he clearly remembered the food problem. The only free meal offered in the Tutorial was beef jerky, and only on the first floor. From the moment the challengers cleared the first floor and went up to the second floor, they had to purchase all meals with points.

Park Min didn't know what it was like now, but when he was in the Tutorial, he had to save more points to buy a potion. Most of the challengers had to get through with beef jerky or biscuits.

On rare occasions, such as his birthday, he collected presents from other challengers and bought Kimchi stew, the only luxury he could obtain.

Of course, Park Min was quite rich in the Tutorial. After all, he was a member of the Order of Vigilance. Although he had more points than others, Park Min did not invest lots of points into food.

Buying a roll of kimbap every time he cleared a stage was the only luxury he could have afforded. Kimbap was also the first food that Park Min searched for when he returned to Earth after clearing the Tutorial.

He didn't know why either. He ate it every time he cleared a stage, so maybe his subconsciousness thought that he had to eat it, even after he'd cleared the Tutorial. It was like a reminder of his achievements.

Funnily enough, Park Min often bought and ate kimbap since then, and every time, he had an odd feeling. He had the impression that no matter how expensive the food he eats, he couldn't quite taste it.

In those difficult times, he wasn't aware that such food became his reward. He hadn't even thought about it.

Park Min took the wrapped kimbap and asked, "If I'm not mistaken, I only ordered three. Am I wrong?"

There were more than five or six rolls of kimbap in the plastic bag. The lady who handed over the bag smiled and told him that she added more as a bonus. She had such a warm smile.

She didn't even charge for the extra kimbap, so Park Min ended up returning to the association with free kimbap.

My uniform looks good. Park Min looked down at his costume to check.

In the past, Awakened were supposed to wear costumes that would be worn by Batman or Superman. As time passed, the regulations relaxed, and they didn't have to wear them anymore. What Park Min was wearing right now was not a costume but a jumper reminiscent of a subway public service worker. But people still recognized him in those clothes, even though it was dull and unseemly.

Park Min felt good for the first time in a while. It wasn't because he got free Kimbap. The moment he faced people with good intentions and kindness like the kimbap lady, his mood brightened.

When Park Min cleared the Tutorial and appeared at Seoul Station, he was treated like a hero. It felt amazing because he was the first Awakened in Korea.

Back then, it had been such a hectic day. He spent years like that.

In fact, he had spent more time in front of a camera and microphone rather than monsters. However, it wasn't pointless. Through the interviews and broadcasts, Park Min reassured people and inspired them.

At that time, Park Min was a hero, but those glory days were over for him.

He used a private elevator and headed for the president's office. After accepting the greetings from the people he encountered on the way to the office, he arrived at the office and opened a kimbap wrap.

* * *

"Is that Kimbap?"

Park Min nodded. "Try it. It's too much to eat alone."

"Okay then, if you insist."

The team leader, Lee Song-eun, nodded and reached out for the kimbap. But it seemed like he had to wait for a while to put kimbap in his mouth. His mouth had other things to do.

“With everything going on, the association will crumble apart, President. The foundation of this association is the Awakened, after all. It would be nice if this odd phenomenon were to end as soon as possible.”

Lee Song-eun talked about the possibility of the association’s influence decreasing.

“If this situation, in which the Awakened are not returning, lasts for more than a few months, it will be fatal to the association. And if the Awakened never arrive at Earth, we will face the worst situation ever.”

“I think differently.” Park Min disagreed with Lee Song-eun’s opinion.

“This situation might bring favor to us.”

“Pardon?”

Park Min had always thought about this. There were too many Awakened.

“The Awakened’s influence cannot be diminished easily unless the monsters in this world are gone instantly. No, even if they do, the status of the Awakened will remain unchanged.”

It was rather the opposite. The status of the Awakened would soar if the monsters disappeared. The government would likely try to take the Awakened’s privileges by saying they were useless, but it wouldn’t happen.

The Awakened were already at the top of society. The Awakened who had worked under a company or government now owned the company and sat in government positions in each country and had extensive connections.

Only then, when Awakened showed up, the land value increased, and people began to gather. Because of them, the flow of money became smooth and people were guaranteed safety.

A powerful Awakened could even snatch the role of the state. If the monsters were gone, the Awakened's position of the hero would ascend to the ruler.

Of course, it was a different matter whether the Awakened have the qualifications and abilities to do so. But the Awakened wouldn't give a damn.

No one can stop them. They would do anything in their power to satisfy their greed. "The problem is not of the probability of the Awakened's influence decreasing."

Instead, the other Awakened who were not part of the association were the problem. Korea's Awakened were originally divided into two groups: the association and the government.

Both sides did not dominate the other side because of the extreme outflow of Awakened. But a few years ago, things changed.

When Kim Min-hyuk came out of the Tutorial, he established a guild: a guild that resembled one from an online game. It brought together the Korean Awakened that were scattered all over the world.

Since then, it has become the largest Awakened community in East Asia. In Korea, most of the A-class or higher Awakened from the Hard difficulty level were in Kim Min-hyuk's guild.

In Park Min's eyes, it was hard to figure out how Kim Min-hyuk had coaxed so many Awakened.

When Park Min exited the Tutorial, many hard-level challengers could not pass the 50th floor. Park Min knew little about the bond between Kim Min-hyuk and the hard difficulty level challengers. One thing was for sure, Kim Min-hyuk's guild posed a threat to both the association and the government.

Even if all the Awakened members of the association and the government were put together, it could not match the guild's size.

If the Tutorial was closed and the Awakened's status increased just like how Park Min predicted, the credit would fall to the guild, not the association. And that was the problem.

"We need to create a bigger issue. I need to change how things are going."

"You already have something on your mind?" the team leader asked as she set her eyes on him. It was the team leader's job to come up with such a plan. Park Min looked at the team leader, who was worried about being criticized as incompetent, and pointed to a place on the map.

Where he pointed to was near Pyongyang, North Korea, which had quickly fallen to ruin after the monsters' invasion. They were no longer maintaining a country. It was more like a warlord's area than a country.

The military units near the border were all that remained from North Korea. Beyond that, it collapsed from the invasion of monsters and was practically treated like a wasteland.

Pyongyang, which Park Min pointed out, used to be the capital of North Korea, but now it was just a wasteland occupied by monsters.

Pointing to it, Park Min questioned Lee Song-eun. "What if there were G-class monsters here?"

Chapter 292

Tutorial 89th floor (1)

I couldn't get all the information about who and how many beings there were in the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon from Kirikiri.

It was obvious. Kirikiri would only tell me a certain amount of information, depending on the information points I'd collected. To get more information points, we had to clear the stages again.

I thought it would be better if these information points could be expressed in numbers. I'd pondered this many times before, but I didn't know that I'd think the same after clearing the 60th floor.

"Heng."

"What kind of response is that? Just tell me about the next stage."

Kirikiri grinned. Perhaps she was satisfied with the situation in which I was anxiously waiting for my answer. "The next stage is what you wanted."

"Wanted?"

"It's a little unusual. Usually, the challenger is a member of the Hundred Gods Temple. But this time it's the opposite."

Are you saying that the stage is being held from the opposite side of the Hundred Gods Temple?

It was certainly interesting. If I had reached Earth without going through this stage, I would have been disappointed.

"Am I going to become a source and complete myself? Devour everything in sight?”

There were two ways to complete oneself after being swallowed by the source: to regain one’s mind by controlling one’s desires or regain one’s mind after devouring whatever they desired. Of course, the difference between the two methods was huge.

“No, it’s not like that. It’s the role of the servant.”

A servant?

“You’d better take your time and attack.” That’s all Kirikiri’s advice was.

More than that had to be checked after I’d enter the stage.

* * *

[You’ve entered the 89th floor’s stage.]

The 89th-floor stage was a large stone chamber. There was a rough patch of discarded furniture, and the floor was filled with broken wood, making it challenging to move around.

“This is a place that reminds me of the old days,” Hochi mumbled.

Hochi explained to Yong-yong, who looked at him in a confused manner, “My house resembled this once upon a time. ”

Oh, that’s what you were talking about. I could feel my conscience hurt at that moment.

Hochi’s ‘house’ was the 60th-floor residential area that I had made a mess out of. Surely, it was a similar situation back then.

Hochi had spent years on the messed-up 60th floor. I would have said it was short, but for Hochi, who was newly born, it would be clearly imprinted in his memories. It was embarrassing.

While I was coughing in vain, a message about the stage appeared just in time. It was indeed fortunate.

[The 89th floor's stage begins.]

Explanation: One day, you, who was living a normal life, was summoned into an unknown community.

The being that summoned you promised to make your wish come true if you used the extractor inside the cavity to extract the target's energy.

You are yet to decide whether the promise will be to return home or get a new life.

But one thing is for sure. You must obey the orders of the being that summoned you.

For the sake of your wishes that have not been determined yet, and to survive on your own.

You can collect energy through an extractor.

You can also purchase manpower and traps with the energy collected to protect the extractor.

Prevent the invasion of various enemies and observe the extractor to gather energy from the target.

-Clear Conditions:

Protect the extractor.

Use an extractor to collect energy.

Somehow, I felt a sense of déjà vu from the description of the stage. It was a story that I'd seen a lot somewhere.

Being summoned endlessly. Wanting to buy traps and soldiers to stop the enemy.

It seemed like a standard defense game. The stage description focused on a thing called 'extractor'. I quickly found out what the extractor was.

A man-sized mechanical device was seen in the middle of the planks of wood on the floor. Looking at its bottom, it seemed to be embedded into the floor.

I approached the extractor. There were several words marked with holograms.

[Dungeon Status]

[Dungeon Management]

[Energy Status]

[Purchase and sale]

I could tell by looking at them.

"This is a dungeon," Hochi, who came to my side, murmured. It was so obvious that even Hochi noticed. This extractor was the core of the dungeon, and the primary goal was to protect it.

A game of defense and management strategy that acquired energy through an extractor to block enemies.

I asked Hochi, whose eyes glistened beside me, "Would you like to try?”

“Can I?”

Of course he could. Recently, both Hochi and Yong-yong had been targeting the stage. Kirikiri had also advised me to not clear it up quickly, and as such, I decided I wouldn't be the one to clear it.

I wasn't interested in this dungeon, so I asked Hochi, who was pressing the hologram windows of the extractor one by one and excitedly calling Yong-yong to do the same.

“Looking at the dungeon's condition, it seems pretty spacious. We can build a lot of traps. Small fries will get taken care of by the traps, and Yong-yong and I will only have to deal with enemies who manage to reach the last room.”

I nodded at Hochi's words. It was a well-thought-out strategy.

If I were my old self and had risked my life to go up one floor after another, I would have rushed and wiped out all the enemies that existed here and sought to conquer the area. Now, there was no need to do so. I just had to make sure nothing went wrong while I watched over Hochi and Yong-yong.

* * *

“No, Yong-yong. We've got to set up more traps rather than buy more manpower. The traps would be more helpful.”

“But I prefer having a lot of soldiers.”

There were more conflicts in opinion than I'd thought there'd be. Hochi preferred a trap-oriented attack, and Yong-yong just liked to have a lot of soldiers.

The dungeon was attacked one or two times a day: sometimes adventurers, sometimes soldiers. There were various kinds of enemies. There were even visitors who took the wrong way and entered the dungeon and those who wanted to join the dungeon for the sake of personal desires.

In that way, I blocked the visitors and coaxed them into making them my subordinate, while Hochi and Yong-Yong developed the dungeon. Maybe because they were on the same level, they sometimes argued with each other, as if they were playing a game together.

They looked happy. I even thought about making a game like this myself. Of course, I was not talking about computer games. In fact, I wanted to design spaces, put people in, and play around with them.
[1]

Of course, if I made it myself, it would be a little dangerous for ordinary people to do it. Nevertheless, it occurred to me that there must be someone who wanted to do it.

It had already been three days since the 89th-floor stage had begun. Kirikiri had asked me to take it easy, but it took longer than I thought.

Hochi and Yong-yong poured all the energy coming into the extractor in the dungeon's defense and interior upgrades, even though they didn't even care about the need to collect energy from the target. At this rate, I couldn't guarantee when this stage would end.

I liked it when Hochi and Yong-yong were having fun, but honestly, it was a bit boring. So I thought about what Kirikiri had said. I could get information from the stage.

I had a rough idea of what information it was. She said the stage would be carried out as a servant. In other words, the challenger had been summoned here and the being who owned the extractor were considered a complete source with the energy produced through this extractor.

The energy was being pulled from deep underground by the extractor. The power felt in this energy was similar to the source. Of course, it wasn't exactly the same.

I didn't know if it was the limit of the extractor or because it's a fake source as always. In any case, it was clear that the identity of the energy was closely related to source power.

“That’s strange.”

“What is?”

“I thought the power of the source came from a person.”

Just like faith. Of course, I’d heard several times that it was influenced by the level of civilization. Even so, I didn’t think it could get it this way. It felt like my common sense was being destroyed in many ways.

If you had the equipment, you could get power similar to the source easily.

“I think it’s plausible,” Hochi remarked.

I left the hologram window to Yong-yong and Hochi approached me.

“It’s the land. It’s home to the people who live here. Maybe...” Hochi trailed off.

I asked hastily, “Maybe, what?”

“Maybe this land is the whole world for those living on this planet. It’s like in ancient history, if you travelled far enough you’d reach the end of the world? Kinda like that.”

It certainly was. In fact, there was no need to go back to the old days. Before confirming that the Earth was round and thinking that there might be different civilizations and creatures in the endless space outside the Earth, people thought Earth was everything in the world.

Because for them, Earth was everything. Because whatever occurred beyond the universe would not reach them, and their world would be limited only to the Earth.

“The feelings people harbor for their land, for their hometown, and for their world is as good as faith. Maybe that’s related to the source. At least, that’s what I think.”

Is that so?

Hochi spoke in a pretty confident manner, but I didn't particularly agree.

"I suppose so. You wouldn't know since you don't have any attachment to your hometown."

It was funny. Hochi, who was born in the Tutorial, was telling me about his feelings about home.

But it was true. As Hochi had said, I didn't have much attachment to my hometown whether it be Korea or Earth.

"Don't be so on the edge. Someday, you'll know everything." Hochi said and went back to Yong-yong.

"Who's on edge?"

I belatedly opened my mouth to give an excuse, but Hochi refused to listen to me. The words that had lost its way hovered around me with nowhere to go.

* * *

"You're bored, aren't you?"

"Mhm."

Hochi came to talk to me. It'd already been 15 days since the stage began, but I felt like I was going to die due to boredom.

"Get out."

"Get out?"

Wow, am I being kicked out now?

I felt like I was being kicked out of a house that was in my name on my wife's command. It was unfair.

"You don't have to be upset again. I'm telling you to go out if you're bored. I just happened to have to go out and do something," Hochi looked at me and said with a tired look on his face.

First, I asked what was going on.

"What is it?"

"This." Hochi offered me a purple jewel.

"It's a token," said Hochi.

"If you use it, your soldiers will appear. Usually, it's standard for them to defend the dungeon, but they can also attack. I need to release soldiers outside, so I have to be near the village situated outside the dungeon."

So, the plan was to create a disturbance outside to distract the attackers a little. There was so much to it.

"If you use this, are those soldiers summoned just to make a disturbance?"

"No, I heard it's like a package full of soldiers. If you use it, you'll have a subspace, and your men will multiply little by little inside the space. Then, when the area is filled with people, I'll send a certain number of men outside to attack the surrounding area."

It was more complicated than I thought. "But if you get rid of the space, your soldiers will be exterminated."

"The subspace doesn't disappear unless you break the nucleus(core) deep inside the subspace."

It was so difficult to use that I wondered if this was necessary. It'd be better just to release some monsters instead of making it so tough.

“But the soldiers continue to reproduce unless you close the subspace. If the enemy is not capable of killing all the men in the subspace, the soldiers will attack the enemy endlessly. It’s perfect to draw the enemy’s attention from the dungeon. But most importantly, animals ‘change’ when around the subspace.”

“Change?”

“Wild animals will become ferocious and turn into monsters.”

The source monster I met on the 40th floor had a similar ability: to turn the surrounding creatures into monsters. It seemed as if that was the same as entering the subspace and hiding its identity.

Had the monster become the motif of the token? As Hochi said, I approached the village outside the dungeon and used a token.

I would get to know immediately after using it what it was. And what information did Kirikiri say I needed to find out on this stage?

“This is the gate.”

The subspace that showed up in the place where the token was used, had a very similar appearance to the gates that had appeared on Earth.

Note/s from Imagine:

[1]: Sounds Awfully like a certain place Hojae was stuck in for a long time, I wonder what that place is called, I can’t remember.

Chapter 293

Tutorial 89th floor (2)

The gate had been created. However, it was quiet for now. After a while, the number of monsters created in the subspace inside that gate would exceed a specific amount, and they'd rush out from this gate.

If no one found the gate before the time, the nearby village would suffer significant damage. No, the village's fate may not change much, even if someone discovered it beforehand.

It was still debatable if the villagers could enter the subspace, kill all the monsters created inside, and then close the gate by breaking the nucleus(core) deep inside the subspace.

I checked the gate once again and then went back to the dungeon. When I arrived, there was a group of people outside the dungeon.

They looked like soldiers. However, they were only waiting nearby and didn't enter the dungeon. Ignoring them, I entered the dungeon.

Every turn I took, I ran into some beasts. Some of them greeted me, and some of them barked at me, possibly because of their low intelligence.

Passing through the dungeon's twisting maze, I headed to the deepest part of the dungeon and to the last place where the extractor stayed.

When I reached the place, I overheard a conversation. One of the two voices was very familiar, but the other was a new voice.

"Who?" As soon as I entered the room, I asked Hochi.

"Dad's here!"

“Oh, you’ve come back.” Yong-yong and Hochi welcomed me.

I hugged Yong-yong, who rushed at me. He pointed his chin to the stranger in the last room.

“Ah, this mister is from a kingdom near the dungeon... or something. Anyway, he is an aristocrat.”

So he was an informant.

* * *

Apparently, the soldiers I saw outside the dungeon were the aristocracy’s soldiers who came to the last room.

The nobleman took his sweet time as he spoke to Hochi, then bowed politely and left the room.

Something came to my mind when I was looking at the back of the nobleman walking down the dungeon hallway along with a monster trailing behind, acting as a guide.

“Care to explain again where and when you found such a guy?” I asked Hochi to explain.

Hochi said it began with the capture of that nobleman’s soldier who happened to enter the dungeon. Since then, they had been sharing information and trading adequately.

“This time, the number of cases increases a little bit too much. They’re preparing to send massive troops soon. It’ll be tough to stop, but things afterward would be much easier if we get past this. Knowing the airstrikes in advance will increase the chances of stopping them.”

Sweet, he was a useful informant.

“If you cooperate with him, what will you get?”

Hochi shrugged at my question. “Well, this and that. I can take out what I want from the stolen goods, or the captured captives if I want it. It just exchanges money moderately, and releases monsters in the competition's territory."

It turned out that Hochi was no less useful than that mister. He had been doing a lot of things in less than a month.

One might think that he's been managing the dungeon for about ten years. He was meant for this job.

"What, are you jealous? Want to do it, too? Do you want me to let you in now?"

Forget what I said. What was I gonna say?

The mixed feeling I had wasn't due to childish jealousy. It was more akin to irritation, frustration, and patheticness.

"Such a guy is left on Earth."

And that guy wouldn't be so stupid or pathetic, but the clever one. A guy like him would do everything to get what he wanted. I couldn't rebuke such an act.

I was a selfish person, discussing others' morality. But still, a sigh came out of my mouth.

"How many are there?"

I hoped there were not too many. It was the only thing I wanted from the people outside.

* * *

"Is it wrong?"

"Yeah."

Kirikiri's answer was unexpected. It was hard to believe it.

“I am serious. What you saw on the 89th floor is the source’s extractor. However, no god in the Pantheon nor the Hundred Gods Temple extracts their source like that.”

